A Decision Time. Children's Day is a specially good time for the entrance of the young people into church membership. Nature is making its appeal, God's voice can be easily heard, for the heart and life are open. One pastor addressed a letter to some seventy of his Sunday School members several weeks in advance of Children's Day, asking for a personal talk looking toward their uniting with the church on that day. Over half of those receiving the letter replied, saw the pastor, and joined the church.

BLUE STREAKS
TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

THE Fast Mail does not travel zig-zag. The straight line route is the shortest, fastest and most efficient. Therefore, the most economical.

IT is more economical for you to buy bicycle tires that come direct to your dealer. Thus you save paying needless profits.

Goodyear Sells Direct to the Dealer

Result: Better Bicycle Tires Cheaper

WHEN you buy bicycle tires you want good tires at a fair price. Not poor tires at high prices. ¶ It used to be difficult to buy tires this way. Goodyear Blue Streaks have made it easy. For only $3.25 each you may now buy a really good tire. ¶ There's an interesting reason why: ¶ Goodyear found out that tires were too high priced and not good enough because manufacturers employed expensive ways of selling. Also, they made too many brands. ¶ So Goodyear cuts out the needless profits between the factory and the rider by selling direct to the dealer. This saves extra cost of handling and brings down retail prices. You benefit. ¶ Also, Goodyear makes only one bicycle tire—the Blue Streak. By this single standard of production, factory costs are cut down. You get better tires cheaper. ¶ Every bicycle rider can profit by this Goodyear square deal way of making and selling tires. The Goodyear dealer in your town can supply you. Ride around and get acquainted.

Buy Tires for Long Wear

You don't need tire money so often when you ride on Goodyear Blue Streaks. These tires have a strong two-ply body of rugged fabric. The treads are tough and long wearing with two reinforcing strips of fabric beneath This means durability and economy.

Lively Tires Help Your Speed

Goodyear Blue Streaks are not only durable but they are springy and resilient. High grade fabric, strong but light, gives this quality. The two-ply tire body is laid in lively rubber. It's easy to push a bicycle on Goodyear Blue Streaks.

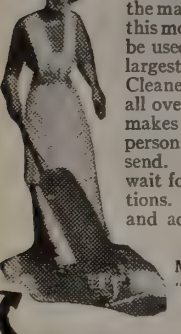
Forget Side Slipping on Goodyear Non-Skids

You can test the Goodyear Blue Streak tread with your thumb. Press on the sharp-edged blocks of rugged rubber. Feel how they "bite" your hand. That is the way they hold the ground under your weight in riding. You needn't worry about side-slipping with these non-skid treads.

Good-Looking Tires Dress Up Your Wheel

We've made Goodyear Blue Streaks smart-appearing with a clean-cut Blue Streak on each side of the tread. You will be proud to ride anywhere on Goodyear Blue Streaks. Visit your Goodyear Dealer or write The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio, for his address.

GOODYEAR
AKRON



We Pay $2 Cash
For every name you send us of persons who are considering the purchase of an Electric
Vacuum Cleaner

Provided we sell them any make of electric Vacuum Cleaner on the market. Any one can make this money. Your name will not be used in any way. We are the largest dealers in Vacuum Cleaners in the world. We sell all over the United States so it makes no difference where the persons live whose names you send. Don't send names now—wait for particulars and instructions. Just send your name and address on postal to NAMES DEPT. 52,
MUENZEN SPECIALTY CO.,
"Vacuum Cleaner Specialists"
131 West 42nd St., N. Y. C.

For 60 years Babies have thrived on "Eagle Brand." Easy to prepare. Follow directions on the can.
Gail Borden
EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK
THE ORIGINAL

WEAR
OLD GLORY 4¢
In Your Buttonhole
—as a sign of your allegiance. Send for this handsome buttonhole emblem. It represents a draped American flag, in substantial metal, enameled in red, white and blue. Shown here in actual size. Mailed to you, postage prepaid on receipt of 4c. A special offer—and only one to a customer. Write today.
LYNN & CO., 48 Bond Street, New York

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE
Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, and cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Ask for
Daisy Fly Killer
Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express, prepaid, $1.00.
HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Return of the Lord Jesus
By R. A. TORREY, D.D.
Sets forth very clearly what the Bible teaches in relation to the personal visible return of Jesus. Shows His return to be the only possible solution of the present disturbed and unsatisfactory world conditions. Shows that Jesus Himself is the only One who can usher in that glorious Golden Millenial Day that the world is looking so eagerly forward to. A BOOK YOU NEED TO READ JUST NOW.
PAPER, 25c; CLOTH, 50c; POSTPAID.
The Biola Book Room BIBLE INSTITUTE LOS ANGELES, CAL.
Send 25c additional and receive a splendid assortment of Tracts and Booklets

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

PROBABLY USED THE LEAVES. He was praising the new kind of salad and his wife said, "I'm glad you like it. I made it from a book." "Why, how clever of you!" he said, his eyes twinkling. "There is a big box of old books at the office; maybe you could make salads of them, and cut the cost of living."

NOT ONE OF THE SHALLOW KIND. Aunt Hannah's life had been hard and full of trouble, and she did not forget the fact. One day a cheery young niece came into the room, and noting the old lady's doleful countenance, said: "Aunt Hannah, why don't you forget your troubles for just five minutes, and take a good hearty laugh?" The old lady looked at her in amazement. "Me take a hearty laugh, indeed!" she said. "I want to tell you I ain't one o' these shallow kind o' folks that don't know how to appreciate their troubles."

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

H. A. S., Lamoni, Iowa. I have been much interested in the Mail-Bag department. Some time ago one asked about I John 3 : 9, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." I have heard the suggestion that the probable true rendering of this is, "Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin . . . and he cannot continue in sin, because he is born of God."

The last-named rendering is a variant. Another rendering conveys the meaning that such a one does not commit sin, not because he is incapable of sin, but because the natural man, being now under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, is armed against temptation, and sin has lost its power over him. He is under the dominion of the higher nature, that which is begotten of God, and which, in so far as its control is complete, excludes sin. It should not be forgotten, however, that all our life is a battle, and that there are unguarded moments in which the tempter sees his advantage and uses it. These are the times when, if we do not instantly get under the protection of the divine defenses, our own feeble efforts are quickly beaten down. We cannot stand against the enemy in our own strength. You remember when Christian, in Bunyan's story, was in the Valley of Humiliation, hard beset by Apollyon, and beginning to despair, succor came at once when he appealed to God's promises in his divine word for protection and guidance. And he did not fail to give God praise for his deliverance.

Mrs. S. E. L., McMullen, Va. Please explain John 3 : 5.

This passage has given rise to much controversy, and theologians are by no means agreed as to its meaning. Our opinion is that Christ had reference to the topic then agitating such men as the one he was addressing. They had a ceremony by which the Gentile was admitted to the privileges of Judaism, part of which was baptism, which signified purification from the sins of the old life. To the astonishment of the Pharisees, John the Baptist had insisted that even they were in need of baptism, just as the proselyte was. But, as John intimated, that was not enough. There was One coming who would baptize with the Holy Spirit. Therefore it is reasonable to suppose that Nicodemus would understand Christ's meaning, when he spoke of being born of water and of the Spirit. In the new birth, it was necessary that a man be purified in heart, his past sins blotted out (which was symbolized by the water), and that he must be quickened to a new life, which was done by the Spirit. These changes are called, in theological terms, justification and sanctification. This element of water and the operation of the Spirit are the subject of prediction in Ezek. 36 : 25–27. Your other question is controversial, in a way; still we can say about it that, since God is no Moloch, there is no reason to believe that he will let any unbaptized child suffer because of its not being baptized.

N. E. O., Springfield, Ohio. 1. In I Cor. 11 : 5 Paul was speaking of purely local and contemporary matters. The Jews and also the Gentiles of his day were very much concerned with externals and non-essentials, and Paul had to meet their views. One of these externals was the manner in which a person attired himself for worship and prayer. The heathen priest of Rome officiated with covered head, the Jew prayed with the tallith, or veil, over the head, while the Greek priests prayed with uncovered heads. The apostle now argues that if the man cover his head while praying, much more should the woman do so, whom custom had decreed to be veiled and covered. But all this is of the past. Christ came to free us, among other things, from all formalism and outward show. Ours should be a worship of the heart, and He who sees the heart does not care whether we pray covered or uncovered. 2. Sanctification is the work of the Holy Spirit, in which he calls us through the Gospel, enlightens us by his gifts, sanctifies and preserves us in the true faith, and moves us to works pleasing to God. Sanctification is a continuing process. It commences with regeneration or the new birth, and continues throughout life, as we become more and more perfect in well-doing and holy living. But as all progress is marked by ups and downs, you should not worry because you seem to lose temporarily the feeling of happiness which comes with the first realization of the new life. See John 5 : 6. 3. Your third question is fully and explicitly answered in our "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered."

Christian, Hyattstown, Md. 1. The sin against the Holy Ghost is generally held to have been attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to Satanic agency. 2. The passage in Eph. 4 : 5 shows the means and the way of salvation. Those of the faith have one and the same Lord, one and the same faith, and, in addition, have one and the same outward and external sign and seal of faith, namely, baptism, by which, as Alford says, the members of Christ are outwardly and visibly stamped with his name. 3. There was an order of priesthood apart from that to which the sons of Levi belonged, namely, that of Melchizedek, which Abraham recognized (Gen. 14 : 20) by paying him tithes. To this order Christ belonged, as the psalmist had predicted (Ps. 110 : 4). Your other questions are controversial.

G. T. L., Minneapolis, Minn. A railroad man and reader of the Christian Herald writes concerning the few opportunities enjoyed by regular railroad men of hearing the Gospel. He says: "I do not believe many railroad men are in line for Christian influence and instruction; in fact I know they are not, as their working hours and conditions allow them no intercourse with the community as compared to the average citizen. Dearly as I love to attend church, I have to be content with a visit to church only occasionally. Freight men are so run that they are home perhaps two or three days a week, and then for sleep. Many times have I gone to church when I had been up the whole night and part of the day before, and very tired, besides being sleepy. If those that love the church of Jesus Christ have to make sacrifices to be in attendance at church, how about those thousands of other railroad men that are not converted, and never will be, under the system that works them long hours and little time given for rest? When men who are on local way-freight runs are so exhausted from the week's work that they have to remain in bed on the Sabbath to recuperate for the next week, then I feel that we have a condition in our land that should be remedied. Can you see anything more vital than that 400,000 railroad men be given the opportunity to live as we see others live? If we have to stop work in order to try and secure our demands, is that a crime?"

Our correspondent makes a strong presentation of the railroad men's situation from a practical viewpoint. Surely, with so many railroad men outside of Gospel privileges, there is room here for railroad evangelism.

Connecticut. Please explain II Thess. 2 : 4, 7, 8.

The prediction of Daniel (11 : 36) is in almost identical terms. There is a question whether or not an actual Antichrist is here meant. Some have held that the reference was to the common practice of deifying the Roman emperors, or to the attempt of Caligula to place his statue in the temple. But the passages have no doubt a deeper meaning and significance. They foretell and warn against the inevitable coming of a man-made Christ—an Antichrist—one who "exalts himself." Just as the types of Christ went before Christ, so the shadows of the Antichrist precede his true followers. But being forewarned is forearmed, and the apostle tells his hearers and readers in verse 8 that the Lord Jesus shall destroy this enemy. This is told the church by way of consolation, or denoting the ease with which Omnipotence accomplishes its object.

R. H. R., Philadelphia, Pa. The great question of immortality was one of which the ancient races had only a dim foreshadowing, although they were by no means ignorant of it, as numerous passages show. Thus it was written of Enoch that, because he had lived a pious life, God took him, so that he was no more among men. Paul, speaking of Jacob, says he regarded life as a journey, and that all the patriarchs looked forward to a life after death (see Heb. 11 : 13–16). In the Bible it is stated that Christ came to bring life and immortality to light. See II Tim. 1 : 10; Rom. 2 : 7; John 6 : 27, 54; 10 : 28; 17 : 3; I Tim. 6 : 16; Rom. 6 : 23; I John 1 : 2; 2 : 25; Jude 1 : 21.

Mrs. J. M. R., Lipscomb, Texas. Matt. 18 : 8, 25; 25 : 46, clearly foretell an everlasting punishment. What it will be and to what degree it will be carried out, has been wisely and charitably withheld from us. But that it will be punitive is indicated in the parable relating to Lazarus and Dives, where our Lord pictures Dives suffering for want of even a drop of water (Luke 16 : 24). None of this, we are assured, will apply to those who are holding to the faith in Jesus and living a pure life. Regarding the unpardonable sin, we have repeatedly stated in this column, that one who is grieving about it has not committed it, for if he had, he would now be indifferent about his soul's salvation. Your further question as to whether every one is born with the same chances for salvation is fully answered by Christ, Matt. 18 : 11, "The Son of Man is come to save that which was lost." Further, we are assured that "Whosoever will, may come" and that no one who comes in sincere repentance and asks forgiveness, through Christ, will be denied.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank inserted, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THIS BLANK.

The subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books. The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35. The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David, $2.50; Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings, $2.50; Luther in Light of Recent Research, $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $3.50; with Genuine Morocco Binding, $4.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Dr. Charles H. Cook, Natick, Mass., referring to the Letter from A. B. King, on Page 342 of the March 21 issue of the Christian Herald, informs us that he has in his possession a printed copy of a sermon preached November 24, 1854, in the appendix of which is a letter published in the Vermont Chronicle of August 10, 1842, which says that a Sunday school was held in June, 1814, in Greensboro, Vermont. A Sabbath School Union was formed of eight towns, and at a general examination 400 young people were gathered—probably the first Sunday school celebration anywhere—and the gathering was followed by a powerful revival of religion. This date, June, 1814, is one year before that of the Sunday school mentioned in Mr. King's letter.

E. S., Detroit, Ohio. The words of our Lord, "For ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh" (Matt. 25 : 13), seem plain enough. It has ever been the belief of the church, and is today, that God has his well-defined reason for not disclosing the time of the Second Coming. Our duty is to "watch and pray" (Mark 13 : 33), and thus be in the right attitude of preparation.

An Inquirer. 1. Both ways are correct. 2. James 1 : 27 is to be taken literally and more so. We must ever read into the Gospel the spirit thereof. No kind of religious work is of greater importance than charity. The fatherless and widowed are mentioned as examples of the afflicted, but we are to have an open hand and heart for all God's people and also for those outside of the circle of believers. If we would follow our Master, we must endeavor to do the work he did. His was a life not only of preaching and teaching but of service to the oppressed and the afflicted. If we are at first somewhat timid about obtruding ourselves, we shall soon learn that true charity may enter where all else is forbidden. A clasp of the hand, a cheery word, an encouraging smile, have helped many a one over a hard piece of road. Try them, and see how much good you will do.

Mrs. W. W. E., Ensley, Ala. Please explain Luke 23 : 43.

The promise to the thief on the cross implies, first of all, the assurance on the part of Jesus that their common suffering should not be for longer than that day, and that then they should both pass to the same place, namely, Paradise. This word Paradise meant to a Jew everything that was opposed to Gehenna or hell, the place of disembodied spirits; hence, by reassuring the repentant thief, Jesus meant just what he said: that, having put his faith in him, he would receive the reward of the believer.

A. V. M., Utica, N. Y. What is the meaning of the word "gringo," used in Mexico as a nickname for the people of the United States? I have been told that the word was an imitation of the first words of a song popular at the time of the Mexican war, commencing "Green grow the willows."

The word "gringo" is a Spanish epithet applied to all foreigners, and in Mexico especially to the people of the United States. It has nothing to do with the words of the popular song mentioned, but is a corruption of the Spanish word "Griego," "Greek," which was applied by the uneducated classes in Spain to all persons of foreign speech.

An Author's Search for God

IT is not to be expected of a celebrated writer of fiction that he should produce a profound and correct theory of God and religion. Mr. H. G. Wells, the English novelist, has essayed to do it, however, and the result is at least interesting. He presents, under the title, "God, the Invisible King," what he calls the "renascent religion," as he believes the modern world begins to see it. Apparently he is voicing a very profound movement of the religious feeling which is stirring the heart of Great Britain—with war striking down husbands and sons and friends by hundreds of thousands—as it has never been stirred before.

The author is confessedly "neither atheist nor Buddhist nor Mohammedan nor Christian." He makes no pretense to impartiality and detachment. He says he has found his faith growing up within himself and has found it, or something very like it, growing independently in the minds of men and women he has met everywhere and of all classes and creeds.

MR. WELLS denies God, as accepted of all Christian churches, and he even denies the divinity of Christ. But it is a peculiarity of theological iconoclasts and even of avowed atheists, agnostics and infidels that, having denied God under the name of God, they must admit him under some other name. Thus, to this author the Creator is not God, but the "Veiled Being."

Having renamed to his own liking the Creator, this author proceeds to reconstruct another and separate God, the Saviour. This God is "personal," for, "though he does not exist in matter or space, he exists in time as a current of thought may do." It is a finite and a growing God. "He changes and becomes more even as a man's purpose gathers itself together; somewhere in the dawning of mankind he had a beginning, an awakening, and as mankind grows he grows. With our eyes he looks out upon the universe he invades; with our hands he lays hands upon it. All our truth, all our intentions and achievements, he gathers to himself. He is the undying human memory, the increasing human will. But this, you may object,"—the author graciously admits—"is no more than saying that God is the collective mind and purpose of the human race. You may declare that this is no God, but merely the sum of mankind. But those who believe in the new ideas very steadfastly deny that. God is, they say, not an aggregate but a synthesis. He is not merely the best of all of us, but a Being in himself, composed of that but more than that, as a temple is more than a gathering of stones, or a regiment is more than an accumulation of men. * * * And so we think of God as a synthetic reality, though he has neither body nor material parts. And so, too, we may obey him and listen to him, though we think but lightly of the men whose hands or voices he sometimes uses. And we may think of him as having moods and aspects, as a man has, and a consistency we call his character."

MR. WELLS'S conception of the Creator is very hazy indeed and his recognition of Christ is extremely limited; and yet there is not a line in his book worth while that is not founded in and inspired by the established belief in God, the Father, and Christ, the Son.

Indeed, it may be observed here that hardly in any other way does the virile power of the Gospel more strikingly assert itself than in the very writings of those who profess to disavow it. At every difficult problem there is the constant recourse to orthodox thought, phrase and metaphor. It is as if the wilful child, at every perplexity and defeat, returns to the mother for comfort and guidance.

The tendency of this new religion, he writes, "goes far beyond the alleged communism of the early Christians and far beyond the tithes of the scribes and Pharisees. God takes all. He takes you, blood and bones and house and acres, he takes skill and influence and expectations. For all the rest of your life you are nothing but God's agent. If you are not prepared for so complete a surrender, then you are infinitely remote from God. You must go your way. Here you are merely a curious interloper."

Mr. Wells's religion means a patriotism, a communism, that demands the utmost fealty and the smallest action of the humblest individual. "The Invisible God" is King and all mankind is a common brotherhood; man owes nothing to himself, but owes all to the common good. He says: "And that idea of God as the Invisible King of the whole world means not merely that God is to be made and declared the head of the world, but that the kingdom of God is to be present throughout the whole fabric of the world; that the Kingdom of God is to be in the teaching at the village school, in the planning of the railway siding of the market town, in the mixing of the mortar at the building of the workman's house. It means that ultimately no effigy of intrusive king or emperor is to disfigure our coins and stamps any more; God himself and no delegate is to be represented wherever men buy or sell, on our letters and our receipts, a perpetual witness, a perpetual reminder. There is no act altogether without significance, no power so humble, that it may not be used for or against God, no life but can orient itself to him. To realize God in one's heart is to be filled with the desire to serve him, and the way of his service is neither to pull up one's life by the roots nor to continue it in all its essentials unchanged, but to turn it about, to turn everything that there is in it round into his way. . . . We can no more serve God without blunders and setbacks than we can win battles without losing men. But the less of such loss the better. The servant of God must keep his mind as wide and sound and his motives as clean as he can, just as an operating surgeon must keep his nerves and muscles as fit and his hands as clean as he can. Neither may righteously evade exercise and regular washing—of mind as of hands. An incessant watchfulness of one's self and the soundness of one's thoughts; cleanliness, clearness, a wariness against indolence and prejudice, careful truth, habitual frankness, fitness and steadfast work; these are the daily fundamental duties that every one who truly comes to God will, as a matter of course, set before himself."

THUS Mr. Wells has accepted and exploits many beautiful things of long-established religion, very much as a child might pick up and show in delight a little handful of the glistening shells of the boundless beach of the seas. He brings finished literary workmanship to his task, and the pity is that so artistic an architect should have been so negligent as to his foundations. It must be said in general of his book that what is true is old and what is new is untrue. Yet it has value, for, if it throws no new light upon religion, it does throw a new light upon mankind encompassed by the woes and despairs of war. The sore-beset are reaching out for God and religion. There are doubtless many who, like Mr. Wells, are trying to find God by processes that are purely intellectual. They refuse to accept the only way, which is the way of simple faith. Theology can be learned from others, but living faith, which alone satisfies the soul of man, must be a matter of personal experience. The fullest revelation of God is that which has come to the world in the life work and teachings of Jesus, the Reconciler and Redeemer, "through whom we have access to the Father." To have the faith which saves, we must come to Him, not by reasonings of the intellect but drawn by love and trust, as little children. To such faith God will respond, and He will instruct the soul that places its trust in Him.

◆

So small is man's heart,
That the point of a pin can still it;
When from sin we part,
It will take God himself to fill it.

If it hasn't this Red Woven Label

MADE FOR THE
B.V.D.
BEST RETAIL TRADE

It isn't B.V.D. Underwear

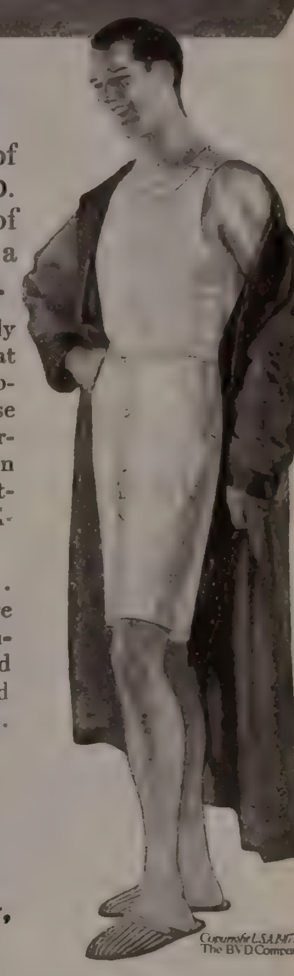
FORM the habit of looking for the B.V.D. Label. A Summer of comfort is worth a few seconds of time.

In our own modernly equipped Cotton Mills at Lexington, N. C., the fabric from which these Loose Fitting B.V.D. Undergarments are made, is woven from specially selected cotton. This assures durability in wear and wash.

In our own B. V. D. Factories the garments are skilfully cut, evenly stitched and accurately finished—to fit and to be cool and comfortable all day long.

B. V. D. Coat Cut Undershirts and Knee Length Drawers, 50 cents the Garment. B. V. D. Closed Crotch Union Suits (Pat. U. S. A.) $1.00 the Suit.

The B. V. D. Company,
New York.



Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

No Trouble to Kill Rats

They Die Outdoors

Rats can't resist Rat Bis-Kit. They seek it, eat it, and go outside to die.

Rat Bis-Kit

beats a dog, a cat, a gun or a trap. No fuss or bother. Just crumble and scatter where they run—that's all. 25c and 15c. All druggists or general stores.

The Rat Biscuit Co.
Springfield, Ohio
U. S. A.

For roaches and water bugs use Rat Bis-Kit Paste in Tubes—25c

AGENTS BIG PROFITS

Three-in-one. Shoe Brush, Polish, Dauber and Polisher all in one. Costs only one-sixth of a cent a shine. Agents coining money. Aker sold dozen first day. Hunter averaging 60 a week. Every man, woman and child a possible sale. Write quick for territory and free pocket sample.
Fountain Brush Co., 4524 Gay St., Dayton, Ohio

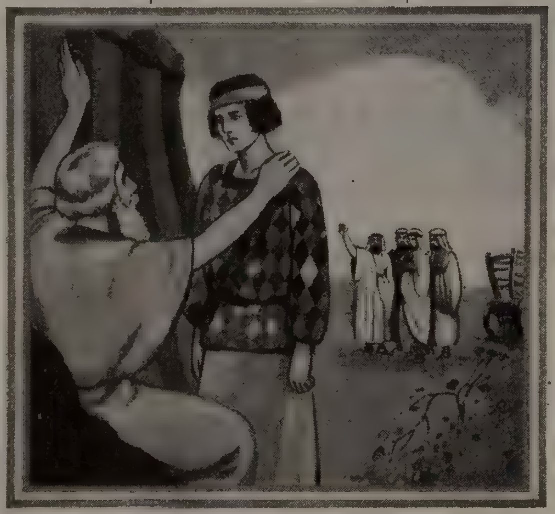
PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

LAST BIBLE STUDY PICTURES TO-DAY!

But You Have Until June 27 to Answer Them

Secure All Pictures and the Complete Outfit NOW!

Picture No. 57



A SPECIAL OFFER TO ALL

"Pearls from the Bible"
Answer Book
All 60 Pictures At Once
(This is the complete Bible Picture Study Outfit.)

WITH

Christian Herald
for six months—new subscription or extension of an old subscription.

FOR $$1^{25}$

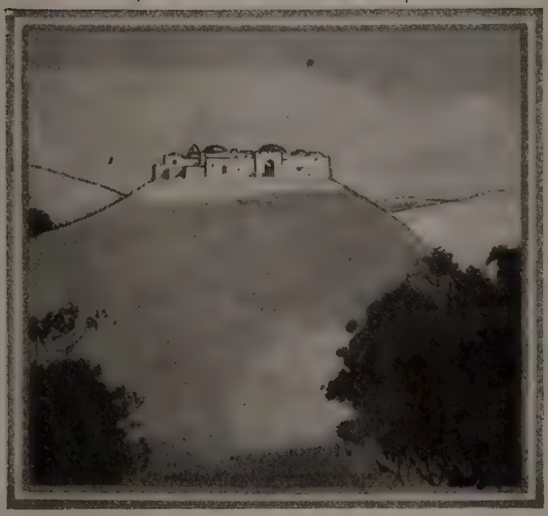
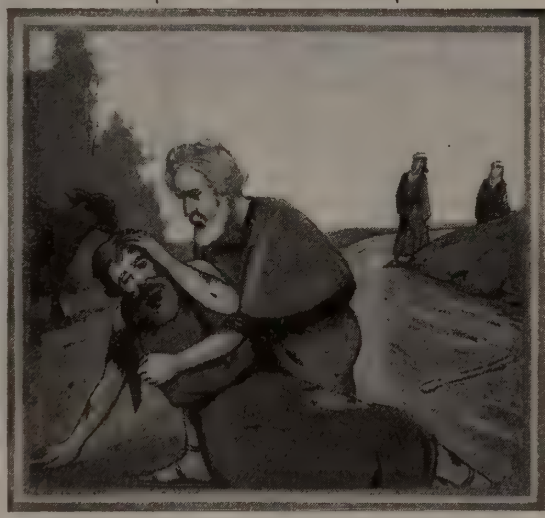
NOTE: You may have the Christian Herald sent to some friend as a gift, if you desire, and the Outfit sent to yourself.

Picture No. 59



Picture No. 58

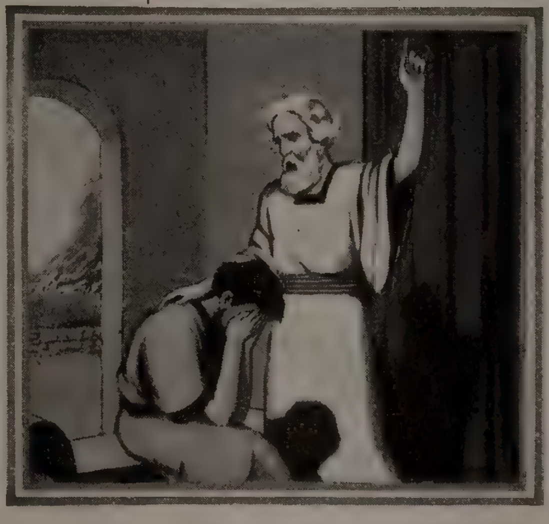


There Is Time

OUR Special Offer above holds good only until June 18, but you have until June 27 to send in your selected verses for the pictures. That is, you do not have to mail your chosen verses until June 27. Verses postmarked on that final day will be accepted.

So hurry in—and give yourself an interesting, a pleasant, a busy month of home entertainment. You will be astonished to find how fascinating the Picture Study will be; you will soon be "wrapped up"—absorbed—in its simple yet enchanting course. While matching verses to the pictures you will be gaining, almost unconsciously, a wider, deeper knowledge of the Bible. And you may also be gaining a great cash reward!

Picture No. 60



1000 CASH REWARDS

First		$1,000.00 in Gold
Second		800.00 in Gold
Third		600.00 in Gold
Fourth		400.00 in Gold
5th Reward		200.00
6th Reward		100.00
7th Reward		75.00
8th and 9th Rewards, each	$50.00	100.00
10th to 15th Rewards, each	25.00	150.00
16th to 18th Rewards, each	20.00	60.00
19th to 21st Rewards, each	15.00	45.00
22nd to 31st Rewards, each	10.00	100.00
32nd to 51st Rewards, each	5.00	100.00
52nd to 1000th Rewards, each	2.00	1,898.00

In the event of a tie for any reward, the full reward tied for will be paid each tying participant.

COUPON FOR EVERYBODY

This Offer is Open to Subscribers and Non-Subscribers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

I enclose $1.25. Please {enter renew} a six-months subscription to:

Name ....

Address ....

....

Send the complete Bible Picture Study OUTFIT ("Pearls from the Bible," Answer Book, all 60 pictures, rules, etc.) to:

Name ....

Address ....

....

An Opportunity Without Parallel—for You!

HOW many opportunities have you had in your whole life to learn so pleasantly about the Bible, by the picture method, and to earn a large cash sum at home?

Can you remember one instance when you have had an opportunity to qualify for a large cash sum, within one month's time?

Think over these things. You have until June 27 to choose from the short list of verses those you think fit the pictures best. Secure the pictures and the complete Outfit and do so. You will never accomplish it by postponement. Do not put this off until a later day. Order NOW—make out the coupon, and send it in NOW!

A Simple Entertainment

THE Bible Picture Study consists of 60 pictures; the last four appear on this page.

Participants look over the pictures carefully, and then read through a short list of Bible verses, seeking the verses that best fit or describe the pictures.

They write these chosen verses in an Answer Book, and send the book in to us.

Those who select the 1,000 best sets of verses for the pictures will be given the 1,000 cash rewards listed to the left.

There are over 31,000 verses in the Bible, while the short list from which you will make your selections comprises but 2,000 verses. This list is called "Pearls from the Bible," and is printed as an attractive booklet which you will wish to keep for your library table. You will find it a well-selected treasury of some of the most beautiful Bible verses, and thus it will always have an intrinsic value, long after its use as the official reference book of the Bible Picture Study shall have passed.

You Must Enter

WHERE so much is at stake—Bible knowledge, pleasure, a financial prize—you cannot hold back. Enter now, and make the next month a REWARD MONTH. It will reward you mentally and spiritually; it will reward you in entertainment and relaxation; it will reward you in greater knowledge and understanding of the Bible; and it may very possibly reward you with a large cash prize.

Every one will compete in this competition on equal terms absolutely. Those who have a good knowledge of the Bible will have no advantage over those less erudite. You, whoever you are, will but look over the short list of 2,000 verses, and your common-sense judgment will tell you which fits or describes the pictures best. No one will be able to do more. The test is one of good judgment, not of theological knowledge. All can compete without expense, as stated in the rules, sent to every one without charge. We ask you, however, to consider the Special $1.25 Offer made here, and to take advantage of it at once if you wish the 60 pictures, "Pearls from the Bible," the Answer Book—all by return mail!

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

WE talk much about the power of prayer. We see the prayer of Daniel seal the mouths of lions; we see the prayer of Christ bring hosts of ministering angels; we see the prayer of David foil the enmity of Saul; we see the prayer of Saul, who became Paul, break the fetters and open the doors of a prison; and we know that prayer has power, yet for ourselves we fear, in spite of the promise of the Master that "if two shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father."

There came to the Prayer League this week a letter from a member of the league now living in Lincoln, Nebraska, telling us of a wonderful answer to prayer. This brother has been a traveling salesman for over a quarter of a century, and at the time of this answer he was living at Santa Ana, California. While in the northern part of the state on his regular trip, he was taken very ill and hurried home, writing, en route, to a sister in Indiana, and asking her prayers. Reaching home, he found his wife away on a visit. The family physician ordered him to a hospital, sent a message to his wife, and demanded the address of a son for whom he wished to wire. Every test made by the physician showed typhoid fever in a virulent form, and two days' tests told the same story, while the temperature of the patient ranged around 102, and his head was splitting with pain.

Always a believer in direct answer to prayer, he kept his petition constantly before the heavenly throne. His sister received the letter requesting prayer on a Thursday, went to her room at once, fell on her knees, and prayed that her brother might be cured. At that same hour he himself was also praying that the fever might leave him instantly. The temperature was at 102, where it had been for two days. There was an immediate response. The nurse came in to take his temperature, found it normal, and thought he had taken a drink of ice water. Finding he had not, she took his temperature again and was greatly frightened to find it still normal, thinking that the sudden drop of temperature portended the final event. But the patient said, "Nurse, a greater Physician than any earthly physician has been at work," and told her about his prayer. The next morning he told the doctor, who said, "Typhoid always works like that. You will find the fever will climb up again to-day." But there was no more fever, and this brother was at home again in a week fully restored. He is a daily reader of the Bible, and while he had faith before, he now has full assurance in the power of prayer to bring the power of God to bear upon things human.

The same mail brought a letter from Mrs. W. A. S., praising God for the conversion in answer to prayer of her husband, who has joined the church, and whose life has been marvelously changed.

An anxious mother again asks prayer for her wayward boy.

A friend who signs himself "a Son of Israel" asks prayers that he may see the light. He says:

"I can hardly understand why I have been drawn to Jesus. I am of orthodox Jewish parentage and have never had an opportunity of hearing or reading of the Saviour. Somehow I have grown to love him. As each day passes in this terrible war, something seems to draw me to Jesus. I can almost see him as the Saviour of my people. I began to read about him in the different Christian publications, and I grew to love him more and more. I believe that God has a hand in my change of faith. Often I pray to God mentioning his Son's name. I have never gone to church, but I have read about him, and sometimes I have been wondering whether or not Jesus was really the Messiah who our prophets told us would redeem my people, and would enter the hearts of so many people. I dare not tell my father or any of my people what my convictions may be, but if I do accept him, which I am sure will be the case, I will love him in silence and will often think of him, and try to follow his beautiful teachings. I can see him a noble Son of Israel, a good Jewish boy who studied the Talmud, just as we boys did when we went to our Hebrew school. I firmly believe that my people are not lost. I know that the God of Israel will yet restore them to his love and care and once again take them under his wings. I can only ask you to earnestly pray for me, asking our Father to hasten the day when his kingdom will be established on earth."

The Prayer League will earnestly pray for our dear brother, that he may have grace to confess the Saviour before men, remembering the promise of Jesus, "Him will I also confess before my Father which is in heaven."

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Shelburne, Vt.; North Hadley, Mass.; Golden, Ill. (that Sunday school may be revived); Hartford, Conn. (in the Baptist Church); Fairbury, Ill. (for a nation-wide movement to keep His Holy Day); Edwards, Mich.; Haverhill, Mass.; Pine Bluff, Ark.; Kirkwood, Mo.; Harrison, Me.; Lott, Texas; Gainesville, Fla. (for national prohibition).

Four parents ask prayer for the restoration of their sons' minds; a Reader, that husband's mind may be restored; another Reader, that mother's mind may be restored; nineteen friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

M. W. C. asks prayer that son's sight may be restored; Mrs. E. C. C., that daughter's and own sight may be restored; Mrs. D. W. A., that husband's sight may be restored; S. F. H., that an aged lady's sight may be restored; eighteen friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives or themselves.

Twelve readers ask prayer for special blessings for others.

One hundred and sixteen ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including M. M. C., that daughter may be cured without an operation; P. N., that sister may be healed without an operation; E. M., that mother may be restored to health without an operation; Mrs. T. E., that nephew may pass safely through an operation; ninety-five friends ask prayer for healing for themselves; including Mrs. H. C. G., that health may be restored without an operation; and Mrs. L. D., that the use of limbs may be restored.

Forty friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Forty-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including M. A. B. and Mrs. M. M. P., who ask prayer for World Peace; Miss L. H., for the daily use of the Bible in the public schools of America and elsewhere; Mrs. D. D., that we may have a good crop all over the United States this summer.

Fifteen friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing for themselves and others.

Fifty-five friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Ten parents ask prayer that their sons may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. J. M. G., Mrs. G. A., Mrs. E. K. H., Mrs. P. E. A. and Mrs. D. W. A., that husbands may be cured of the liquor habit; a Friend, that a friend may be cured of the liquor habit and return to his wife; ten friends, that relatives and friends may be cured of the liquor habit.

Mrs. R. C. asks prayer for deliverance from the snuff habit; Mrs. E. S., that brother may be cured of the drug habit; Mrs. F. G. B., to overcome the morphine habit.

Forty parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-four wives, their husbands; including Mrs. G. A., that husband may be saved and return home; sixty-two, for other relatives or friends.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. M. T. S., Sumner, Tenn.; Mrs. J. B. E., Morven, N. C.; Mrs. H. W. G., Palmyra, N. Y.; E. M., Flat Top, Colo.; Mrs. W. C., Dallas, Texas; M. V., Cook, Ohio; Mrs. L. J. A., Oxford, Ala.; Mrs. K. E. H., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. E. R. G., Wooster, Ohio; Mrs. L. E. U., Nantucket, Mass.; F. E. C., Marion, Mich.; C. M., Red Oak, Iowa; A. L. B., Providence, R. I.; Mother, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. O. S., Leasburg Mo.; Mrs. O. S. T., Farmington, Me.; M. E. M., London, Tenn.; H. M., Joppa, Tenn.

Champion Toledo
CHAMPION

Dependable Spark Plugs

Champion dependability is proverbial.

That is why virtually every motor fire wagon in the country is Champion equipped.

Champions are depended upon to get the nation's fire apparatus to the scenes of action.

And then after they get there to pump the water.

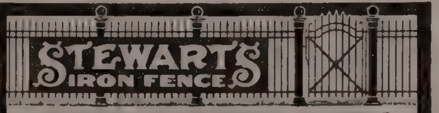
Champions must "produce"—and they do—hour after hour—under the most trying conditions.

And they will be just as dependable, just as efficient in your motor.

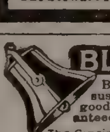
You can get Champions everywhere. Look for the name "CHAMPION" on the porcelain.

CHAMPION SPARK PLUG COMPANY
Toledo, Ohio

THE ORIGINAL
MALTED MILK
Rich milk, malted grain extract, in powder.
For Infants, Invalids and growing children.
Pure nutrition, upbuilding the whole body.
Invigorates nursing mothers and the aged.
The Food-Drink for all Ages
More nutritious than tea, coffee, etc.
Substitutes cost YOU Same Price



IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.



BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

Rider Agents Wanted
Everywhere to ride and exhibit the new Ranger "Motorbike" completely equipped with electric light and horn, carrier, stand, tool tank, coaster-brake, mud guards and anti-skid tires. Choice of 44 other styles, colors and sizes in the famous "Ranger" line of bicycles.
DELIVERED FREE on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL. Send for big free catalog and particulars of our Factory-direct-to-Rider marvelous offers and terms.
TIRES Lamps, Horns, Wheels, Sundries, and parts for all bicycles—at half usual prices.
SEND NO MONEY but tell us exactly what you need Do not buy until you get our prices, terms and the big FREE catalog
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY Dept. G-71, CHICAGO

Runs on Kerosene
Alcohol, Gasolene or Gas
A most remarkable invention
No electricity, wires or springs. 1917 Improved patented Models. Runs 8 hours for a cent on kerosene. Quiet—convenient. Brings genuine comfort and satisfaction. Ideal for the sick. A proved success. The Wonder Fan. 2 Models. 8 Sizes.
A { 12-in. $16.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
16-in. $18.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
B { 16-in. $19.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
21-in. $22.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
F. O. B. Chicago. Cash with order only.
KEEP COOL
LAKE BREEZE MOTOR. 571 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
40 designs—all steel. Handsome, costs less than wood, more durable. We can save you money. Write for free catalog and special prices.
KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
499 North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

NEW LIGHT ON PROPHECY

GREAT SERIES OF ARTICLES BY AMERICA'S FOREMOST EXPOSITOR OF PROPHECY

THE first of the series of articles on Prophecy, entitled "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," by Professor James M. Gray, Dean of the Moody Institute, and a foremost authority on Revelation, will appear in the June 6 issue of the Christian Herald. Here is Dr. Gray's letter accompanying the first article:

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago
Office of the Dean

May three
Nineteen seventeen

Editor, the Christian Herald:

Herewith find the first two of the series on The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy.

There will (I think) be eight in the series and if you wish to announce the list, here it is.

1. The Seed of the Woman, or The First Promise of Redemption
2. God's Covenant with Noah, or Why He Chose Israel
3. God's Covenant with David, or the Kingdom to Come
4. The Times of the Gentiles, or The Judgments to Come
5. Israel Restored and Renewed
6. The Place of the Church in the Plan of Redemption
7. The Anti-Christ, Who He Is, and When He Will Arise.
8. The Day of the Lord, When It Comes, and What It Means

I think it desirable to have them appear as near together as possible.

Yours sincerely,
James M Gray

Among earnest Christian people everywhere, there is a growing conviction that we are living in an age of wonderful events that need spiritual interpretation. One of the ablest thinkers in England, H. G. Wells, whose writings on the war have been widely read on both sides of the Atlantic, in a new book just issued, boldly declares that organized Christianity is unable even to influence, much less to settle, the world's quarrels. He proclaims the conviction that nothing short of "the world's Kingdom of God" can do it, and that the time is drawing near. Dr. Gray's articles turn the Bible Searchlight on the great prophetic mysteries, and give the spiritual interpretation needed.

Dr. Gray will show that we are indeed living in the days of prophetic fulfilment. His articles will shed light on the world's great problems and will be among the outstanding events of the coming months. They will be welcomed by all Bible lovers. Do not miss even one of these contributions, as they are priceless.

Tell Your Friends of Professor Gray's Series of Articles and Call Their Attention to Our

INTRODUCTORY FOUR MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION 50c

Introductory Four Months' Subscription Coupon

CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: For the enclosed 50 cents, send the Christian Herald for 4 months, beginning with the June 6 issue, containing the first of Professor Gray's Series of Articles on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy."

Name ....

Address ....

....

Young People's Topics for June 10

Sins of the Mind

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Rom. 8 : 1-11

THROUGH all the ages the body and the soul have been in conflict. The lusts of the flesh, the carnal affections of the animal in man, have constantly dragged humanity down toward the level of the beast. The hunger of the soul for knowledge of the spiritual life has pulled away from sordidness and has fought to preserve in mankind that likeness to the Creator with which he endowed it when he breathed into senseless clay the breath of life. In this struggle the mind has held a neutral place. It has been the battleground where lust and sin fought faith and spiritual power, and as the mind went, so went the battle. To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. There can be no compromise. We cannot think evil and be good. We cannot permit our minds to harbor unworthy thoughts and retain that fellowship with the Saviour which our hearts crave, and through which we receive power to live clean lives among the temptations and allurements of a carnal world. As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. Whosoever looketh and lusteth hath committed sin already, even though no act should follow. Whatsoever things are pure, of good report, honest, think on these things, and sin will have no room in the mind and no power over the flesh.

The High Grace of Loyalty

Epworth League Topic. I Sam. 20 : 12-17; Luke 23 : 50-52

WHAT is loyalty? Jonathan was loyal to David; David in turn was loyal to Jonathan. Jonathan's loyalty included willingness to risk the displeasure of his father the king, with the chance that his own life might pay the forfeit which the king sought of David's. Joseph of Arimathea was willing to risk the loss of his official position in order that he might pay the last tribute to the Teacher in whom he had believed. Loyalty to our friends includes the willingness to share their hardships, to suffer their privations, to risk our lives for theirs, as well as to rejoice with them in prosperity and to share their happiness. Friendship often breaks upon this rock. Many hearts are bitter because sorrow and loss have been borne alone. Yet usually some friend remains. Real nobility stands forth in times of stress and struggle. But whatever other friends we may have or lose, we may be sure of the friendship and loyal help and counsel of the Saviour of men. Today the flags are waving from Maine to California, and everywhere men are being called by their country to the last supreme sacrifice of loyal citizenship. We have rejoiced with the nation in her prosperity, we have shared the education, the opportunities, which free government has made possible; shall we count life too high a price for loyalty?

A Message from Pastor Wagner

THE Christian Herald Family through the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund have been relieving untold misery in all the countries which have felt the heavy hand of war. We have been fortunate in the committees which have performed the work for us, especially fortunate in France where Pastor Charles Wagner, the famous Gospel preacher of Paris and author of "The Simple Life," has been the chairman of the Christian Herald War Widows and Orphans Relief Committee in the French capital. He writes the following letter concerning the relief situation there:

"My dear Editor: I received on April 21 your letter of March 28, containing a remittance of $5,000 from the Relief Fund. I thank your committee for this touching liberality toward the widows and orphans of France.

"I have been sick all winter with palpitation of the heart, caused by worry and overwork, but am now better. Our relief committee is called to meet on April 27, to review the work done in recent months. The calamities suffered in the districts where the war has been most severe have left the unfortunate population in great need of our attention.

"As there are several Protestant centers which are suffering, we interest ourselves principally in the Protestants, yet without excluding the Catholics. We aim to make the resources you supply last as long as possible.

"I could tell you of several pastors' families who have suffered horribly. We help them where we can. Soon I hope to give your readers an idea of all the good that has been accomplished with their money.

"I desire that you express our gratitude to the Christian Herald and all its readers. May God bless your nation and your activities in every part of the world. CH. WAGNER."

This letter barely suggests the misery which the committee faces daily, but it breathes the appreciation and thankfulness of all those whose hearts have been gladdened and whose lives have been lengthened and strengthened through the sacrificial giving of members of the Christian Herald Family. This is one field and only one, and in each the need increases constantly and will increase until long after the clash of contending armies has been stilled, and the nations at war have returned to the arts of peace. The call is still to sacrifice.

Please address all gifts to War Widows and Orphans Relief Work, Room 93, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Miss Emma Warren	$2.00
Primary Class, Lincoln S S, Oregon, Mo	2.00
Mrs Sullivan	2.00
——, Princeton, Ind	2.00
James W Phillips	2.00
Friend, Willow Lake, S Dak	2.00
Mrs Browne	2.00
Mrs Mc Williams	2.00
Mrs R B Ludington	2.00
Mrs W E Davis	2.00
Mrs L Neumann	2.00
Friend, Manitou, Okla	2.00
Mrs C C A L John	2.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Atcheson	2.00
Mrs Mary J Luther	2.00
J F Andrews	2.00
C M Cotton	2.00
Mrs A A Kelso	2.00
Mrs C F H	2.00
Mrs Rector	$2.00
Nellie L Chase	2.00
Ellen C Souödericker	2.00
H B E	2.00
Sister E	2.00
L M Drake	2.00
L C Porter	2.00
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	2.00
Chas N Hockaday	2.00
Mrs Wm G Arthur	2.00
Miss Wilhelmina D Stephens	2.00
"Duty fulfilled," Gr Rapids, Mich	2.00
C R W	2.00
Elizabeth Groat & Family	2.00
——, Lexington, Ky	2.00
Olga & Mildred	2.00
Mrs H B C	2.00
R A Whitcomb	2.00
——, Dayton, Ohio	1.50
Mrs S Ballard	$1.50
Mrs Melissa Miller	1.50
M D Webster	1.50
E S L	1.50
P F Hughes	1.50
Thomas A Martin	1.50
Mrs Geo M Newhouse	1.50
Mrs M L Matheny	1.50
Myrtle Lecky	1.50
Mrs Fred Stahler	1.50
Mrs A J Earnest	1.00
"Sad Heart," Pen Argyle, Pa	1.00
P L Miller	1.00
Mrs Benj Rankin	1.00
Mrs Sundin	1.00
Ida Anderson	1.00
Emley Sundin	1.00
A E Brooks	1.00
John L Hoffman	1.00
Mrs M Unger	1.00
Mrs E H Boyce	1.00
R G Ardrey	1.00
Hannah Ardrey	1.00
Anna Patton	1.00
Miss Albertina Christ	$1.00
John M Pool	1.00
Mrs W H Fry	1.00
L E B	1.00
Mrs J W Morgan	1.00
Harold B Smith	1.00
Clarence C Smith	1.00
Dorcas Band, Meth Ch, Dalton, Mass	1.00
"M M M"	1.00
Friend, Verona Sta, N Y	1.00
Mary E Richardson	1.00
Mrs S S Nelson	1.00
L Augenstein	1.00
Mrs Sarah E Chambler	1.00
Mrs W H Lawrance	1.00
Mrs J W Hiday	1.00
C Heninger	1.00
Reader, St Paul, Minn	1.00
Mrs E G Graham	1.00
Mrs John Myers	1.00
Mrs E J Stetson	1.00

Cradle Roll Babies, Union S S, Pierrepont Manor, N Y	$1.00
Orrin H Glazier	1.00
J F Butler	1.00
Mrs Julia Kraus	1.00
Mrs E D Stivers	1.00
Marjorie Robinson	1.00
——, Coffeyville, Kans	1.00
Friend, Cleveland, O	1.00
Mrs J C Wells	1.00
Friend, Holland Patent, N Y	1.00
Mary E Davis	1.00
Friend, Charlotte, N Car	1.00
Mrs A E Ormsby	.50
J A Wright	.50
A E MacFarlane	.50
Julia M Webster	.50
Mrs C A Grover	.50
A J Phillips	.50
Mrs Nellie K Moore	.50
Wm Everett	.50
Mrs M Gouger	.50
J. F. Gouger	.50
Sanford Robison	.50
Wm Kirkland	.50
Mrs L M Wilson	.25
A R F	.25
Mrs Noel	.25
Mrs E G Rydell	.25
Joseph Doerr	.25
N C H	.25
Mrs J H Westfall	1.00
Mrs H C Wangerin	1.00
Mrs Anna & Marjorie Courtice	1.00
Friend, Paterson, N J	1.00
C Parsly	1.00
Miss P Brightbell	1.00
Alice Stewart	1.00
Mrs A L Moon	1.00
L E H	1.00
Mrs Allen	1.00
S A M	1.00
Mrs Mary G Martin	1.00
Friend, Butler, N J	1.00
Ruth Mason	1.00
S V Wallace	1.00
Miss Lydia A Fancy	1.00
W S T Metzger	1.00
G W Burner, M D	1.00
Lovina Bryant	1.00
Friend, Monhegan, Me	1.00
——, Uxbridge, Mass	1.00
D J Griffiths	1.00
Mrs L C E	1.00
Mrs J H Summers	1.00
Mrs A R Stephen	1.00
Mrs J P Hoag	1.00
Mrs E L Fowler	1.00
Chris Ellingsen	1.00
Melia Cox	1.00
Mrs C H Seaman	1.00
Burbank Ladies Aid, New London, Minn	1.00
Friend, Lyndonville, N Y	1.00
Gladys Engebretson	1.00
C L Chandler	1.00
Ira L Dickerson	1.00
Mrs Emma E Urquhart	1.00
Miss Laura A Past	1.00
Mrs W W Shorts & L L McCoy	1.00
Mary M Farmer	1.00
Mrs S A Watts	1.00
Alice Alcorn	1.00
Widow, Jersey City, N J	1.00
Mrs S W Schmid	1.00
Mr & Mrs John Clark	1.00
F Shannon	1.00
Y D B	1.00
Mrs O G Wilson	1.00
Henrietta Horn	1.00
H K Powell	1.00
L T Lankford	1.00
M E	1.00
Friend, Phoenix, Ariz	1.00
Widow, Grand Chain, Ill	1.00
M J Seaman	1.00
Miss Jennie Lees	1.00
Hettie Wood	1.00
L M Austin	1.00
Mrs D Shenton	1.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Crisman	1.00
Mrs E Barny	1.00
——, Line Lexington, Pa	1.00
——, N Tarrytown, N Y	1.00
George Hunter	1.00
5th St Meth Jr Miss'y Soc, Meridan, Miss	1.00
Brother & Sister, Jonesboro, Ill	1.00
J P V	1.00
Carrie C Durland	1.00
Grace Carter	1.00
Mrs J H Meadows	1.00
Soren Skeie	1.00
Mary E Kimber	1.00
Mrs R M Hooker	1.00
E C	1.00
D Meyer	1.00
G E Perkins	1.00
Mrs Dunn	1.00
Elizabeth Beier	1.00
Mrs E A Young	1.00
Friend, Charles City, Iowa	1.00
Letitia Shannon	1.00
Friend Brookville, Ohio	$1.00
Mrs Annie Hartley	1.00
Dortha Younglove	1.00
Mrs Josephine Jones	1.00
Mrs Julia S Peck	1.00
Misses Jessie & Clotile Graham	1.00
L Edwards	1.00
In His Name, Middletown, R I	1.00
A G Carter	1.00
Mary J Hensley	.50
J A O'Dell	.50
V J O'Dell	.50
G C Hughes	.50
B A Wisemon	.50
Mrs Geo McMeans	.50
Mrs John Kruger	.50
Friend, Indiantown, Va	.50
——, Scranton, Pa	.50
Mrs W H Buchanan	.50
J H Wells	.50
Friend, Clarkson, N Y	.50
Mrs W M McCarthy	.50
Friend, Atlantic, Iowa	.50
G F	.50
"In Jesus Name," Long Branch, N J	.25
T A Hughes	.25
Anetta Hughes	.25
J J Reynolds	.25
Mrs S N Dawson	.25
Mrs D Maran	.25
Mrs L P Maple	.25
J R Hoover	.25
Laura Blythe	.25
Mr & Mrs M A Finfrock	13.00
Union Thanksgiving Cong, N Liberty, Ia	9.37
Mrs Geo W Manter and Children	12.00
Cong S S, S Royalton, Vt	6.51
Free Meth S S, Watertown, N Y	14.25
Mrs Bertha Wendt	13.00
Mrs F A Johnson	6.00
Brick Chapel S S, Iowa City Ia	6.25
G D Moore	.75
In Memory of Helen	3.25
Meth Ch, Duvall, Wash	4.70
S S, South Wales, N Y	5.50
Friends, Sidney, O	2.70
S S, Fairwater, Wisc	9.25
Mrs J D Washburn	4.00
Southview S S, Conway, Mo	.60
First United Brethren Bible Sch, Canton, O	115.00
Mr Fred R Thorne and Mary C Hoyt	30.00
Mrs J E Hughes	1.25
Primary Dept Brethren S S, Beaverton, Mich	8.00
Union Bazaar, Ansonville, Pa	26.00
Free Meth Ch, Spring Arbor, Mich	42.29
Christmas Offering, Wisc Vet Home	38.00
Wisc Vet Home S S	12.00
J O C Class, M E, S S, Shenandoah, Ia	7.00
Wm R Haselbarth	.10
Church, Pine Grove, W Va	17.60
Raymond Evan Ch, Lockport, N Y	4.00
Friends, S S, Mooreland, Ind	5.25
Friends, Petoskey, Mich	21.50
Center Ch, Fayetteville, N Car	17.90
Christmas Offering, Concord Tenn	2.25
Friends, Marinette, Wisc	13.07
Brethren Ch, Parker Ford, Pa	21.63
In His Name... Walkersville, Md	4.00
Curtis School, Curtis, Mich	6.00
Mrs C H Johnston	16.00
B B Phillips	4.00
Mrs Abe Greensides	6.80
S S, Bapt Ch, Masonville, N Y	16.25
Swedish Bapt Ch, Stanchfield, Minn	10.37
Adna Colburn	$1.20
Andrew Chapel S S, Montross, Va	10.76
Dry Creek S S, Barnard, Kans	7.50
School Children, Wahoo, Nebr	6.00
Mont Deaconess Sch, Helena, Mont	35.00
Citizens, Minco, Okla	32.75
Fairview Park Ch, Lake Minnetonka, Minn	19.37
Two Friends, Salerno, Fla	2.25
Keystone M E S S, Manchester, Kans	6.35
Neal McClanahan	11.00
Porters Union S S, Porters Sideling, Pa	9.25
Presby S S, Covode, Pa	8.50
Meth Epis Ch, Joseph, Ore	23.45
Watson Corner School, Oak Harbor, Wash	8.00
Mrs C B Sawards	1.35
Llano Charge, Castell, Tex	8.50
Friend, Elizabeth, N J	4.00
I E Stroble	17.00
Free Meth S S, Wessington Spr'g, S D	8.60
United Brethren S S, Orangeville, N Y	8.66
S S, Spangle, Wash	3.61
Mrs J C Pohlman	13.50
C D Williams	30.00
S S Class & Teacher, West Point, Miss	10.25
Men's S S Class, Pleasant Grove Ch, N English, Ia	8.30
Sunbeam Class, Pleasant Grove Ch, N English, Ia	4.02
H D Montgomery	4.00
S S, Lake Kerr, Fla	3.35
Meth S S, Beavton, Ore	13.29
Bible Cl No 2, Zion's Ch S S, near Tenney, S D	5.25
Union S S, Phelps City, Mo	7.00
Sunshine Mission S S, Cedar Rapids, Ia	10.50
Jr. Christian Workers, Ch of Brethren, Cedar Rapids, Ia	8.80
C E S, Rutland Cong Ch, Watertown, N Y	8.98
S S, Rutland Cong Ch, Watertown, N Y	3.35
Miss Eudora Bullock	6.00
Congl Ch, Ruggles, O	9.55
Thanksgiving Service, Cherry Valley, Ill	1.35
——, Cedars, Ont. Can	40.00
Adult Bible Cl, Kensington Bapt S S, Brighton, Mich	4.50
K W Class, Kensington Bapt S S, Brightton, Mich	2.25
Clara Johnson	2.60
J P Sweitzer	1.10
Mother & Son, Hancock, Mich	7.50
J E Young	4.00
E E L	.20
S S First Bapt Ch, Pasco, Wash	3.50
Sunday Schools, Cong & Meth Chs, Richfield, O	12.00
S S, Calvary Presby Ch, York, Pa	11.25
10th Ave Bapt Ch, Columbus, O	6.25
S S Class, Deer Park, Wash	6.75
United Presby Ch, Winfield, Ia	15.50
James C Snyder	60.00
Friends, Greenville, O	20.96
Public Schools, Kendrick, Ida	18.55
Class No 20, First Bapt Ch, Marietta, O	25.50
Presby S S, Veto, Ohio	5.30
Mrs S A R	$2.70
Swedish Cong Ch, Woodstock, Conn	35.00
Presby S S, Greenup, Ky	5.82
Whitfield Chg, Henry, Ill	3.50
Union Meeting, Presby&Meth People, Hunter, N Y	6.77
Mrs H J Stiles	30.00
H H Hill	30.00
Presby S S, Monticello, Ga	12.16
Christ M P Ch, Atlantic City, N J	6.00
Jasper S S, Heber, Calif	20.55
Mr & Mrs A T Baird	50.00
I Jayne	50.00
Friend, Passaic, N J	50.00
Big Island, Va., Lodge No 230, A F A M	25.00
Mark Marston	25.00
F A Grote	25.00
——, La Grange, Ga	25.00
Richard Glover	25.00
Mrs C Wiklung	20.00
Friend, Elizabeth, N J	20.00
——, Denver, Colo	20.00
St Paul's S S, Trail Run, O	20.00
Sarah Blakely	20.00
Friend, Dearlock, Ont, Can	15.00
Rev Julius Lincoln	15.00
Mrs Ellen M Winship	15.00
L G Lathrop	15.00
Bapt Ch & S S, Salisbury, N Y	10.00
Mrs G J & Bernice Woodburn	10.00
Jonah Williams	10.00
Cong Ch, Somersville, Conn	10.00
J J Dunn	10.00
B B Harris	10.00
J E Myers	10.00
Mrs Sarah A Strong	10.00
One in Sympathy	10.00
Mr & Mrs Ben L Baker	10.00
A W Miller & Family	10.00
E W Farnham	10.00
Parent Teacher Ass'n, Nasil, Wash	10.00
Subscriber, Davenport, Wash	10.00
Mrs J B Caverly	10.00
Mrs Geo Horlocker	10.00
Friends, First Bapt Ch, Almond, Wisc	10.00
Friends, S S, Wash, D C	10.00
Rosalind Sohns	10.00
Mrs T M Riffle	10.00
Mary M Clark	10.00
Mr & Mrs C E Robinson	10.00
Laura T Benson	10.00
Amelia Charlton	10.00
E J Currier, Jr	10.00
C M Thorpe	10.00
Mrs Arthur Andrews	10.00
Adelbert Hill	10.00
Mrs Irving St John	10.00
Chas Woehrle	10.00
M E Ch, Fairdale, Ill	10.00
Alice B Hope	10.00
E L Brodmarkle	10.00
C F Styer	10.00
Z Z Dodds	10.00
G T Getman	10.00
Vernon M E S S, Kinsman, O	10.00
Eva Sackett	10.00
Frank Garner	10.00
Cedarhome Bapt S S, E Stanwood, Wash	10.00
Miss Vanette Barrett	10.00
Mr & Mrs R L Denner	10.00
W S Williams	5.00
Friend, Stout, Iowa	5.00
D M Boynton	5.00
Mrs Samuel Geary	5.00
Mr & Mrs O C Trumbull	5.00
——, Echo, Minn	5.00
Mrs C B O'Neill	5.00
Mrs Etta Aldrich	5.00
A D Swimelar	5.00
Ella M Quimby	5.00
Friends, Ft Collins, Colo	5.00
——, N Y C	5.00
T A Garland	5.00
——, Olathe, Kans	5.00
Miss F A Boyd	5.00
N E B	5.00
Miss R Ella Chamberlin	5.00
——, Trenton, Ky	5.00
Mr Samuel Baldridge	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

BUT-LET GOLD DUST DISSOLVE THE GREASE
BUT-LET GOLD DISSOLVE THE GOLD DUST THE GREASE
GOLD DUST THE GREASE

Morning—Noon—Night

If the daily round of dishwashing sometimes discourages you, take heart! It needn't be such hard work. It needn't take so long.

You can easily follow the example of millions of your fellow home-makers—and let a tablespoonful of Gold Dust in the dishwater be your helper, too.

For Gold Dust quickly dissolves the troublesome grease from meat platter, from buttery plates and from knives and forks.

Even if you have to leave the dishes for a while and the grease gets cold and hard on the dishes, you can still be sure Gold Dust will "do the dishes" quickly—and make them absolutely clean for you.

Order a package of Gold Dust from your grocer and see how much dishwashing time it saves for you. But to be sure of Gold Dust results, be sure it is actually Gold Dust you get. 5c and larger packages.

GOLD DUST

The Busy Cleaner

Gold Dust is a saponaceous powder with unusual cleansing properties. As Gold Dust contains no gritty substance, it dissolves thoroughly in either hot or cold water.

GOLD DUST
GOLD DUST

THE N.K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
MAKERS

Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work.

Quickly
Cuts
Spattered
Burned-In Grease
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

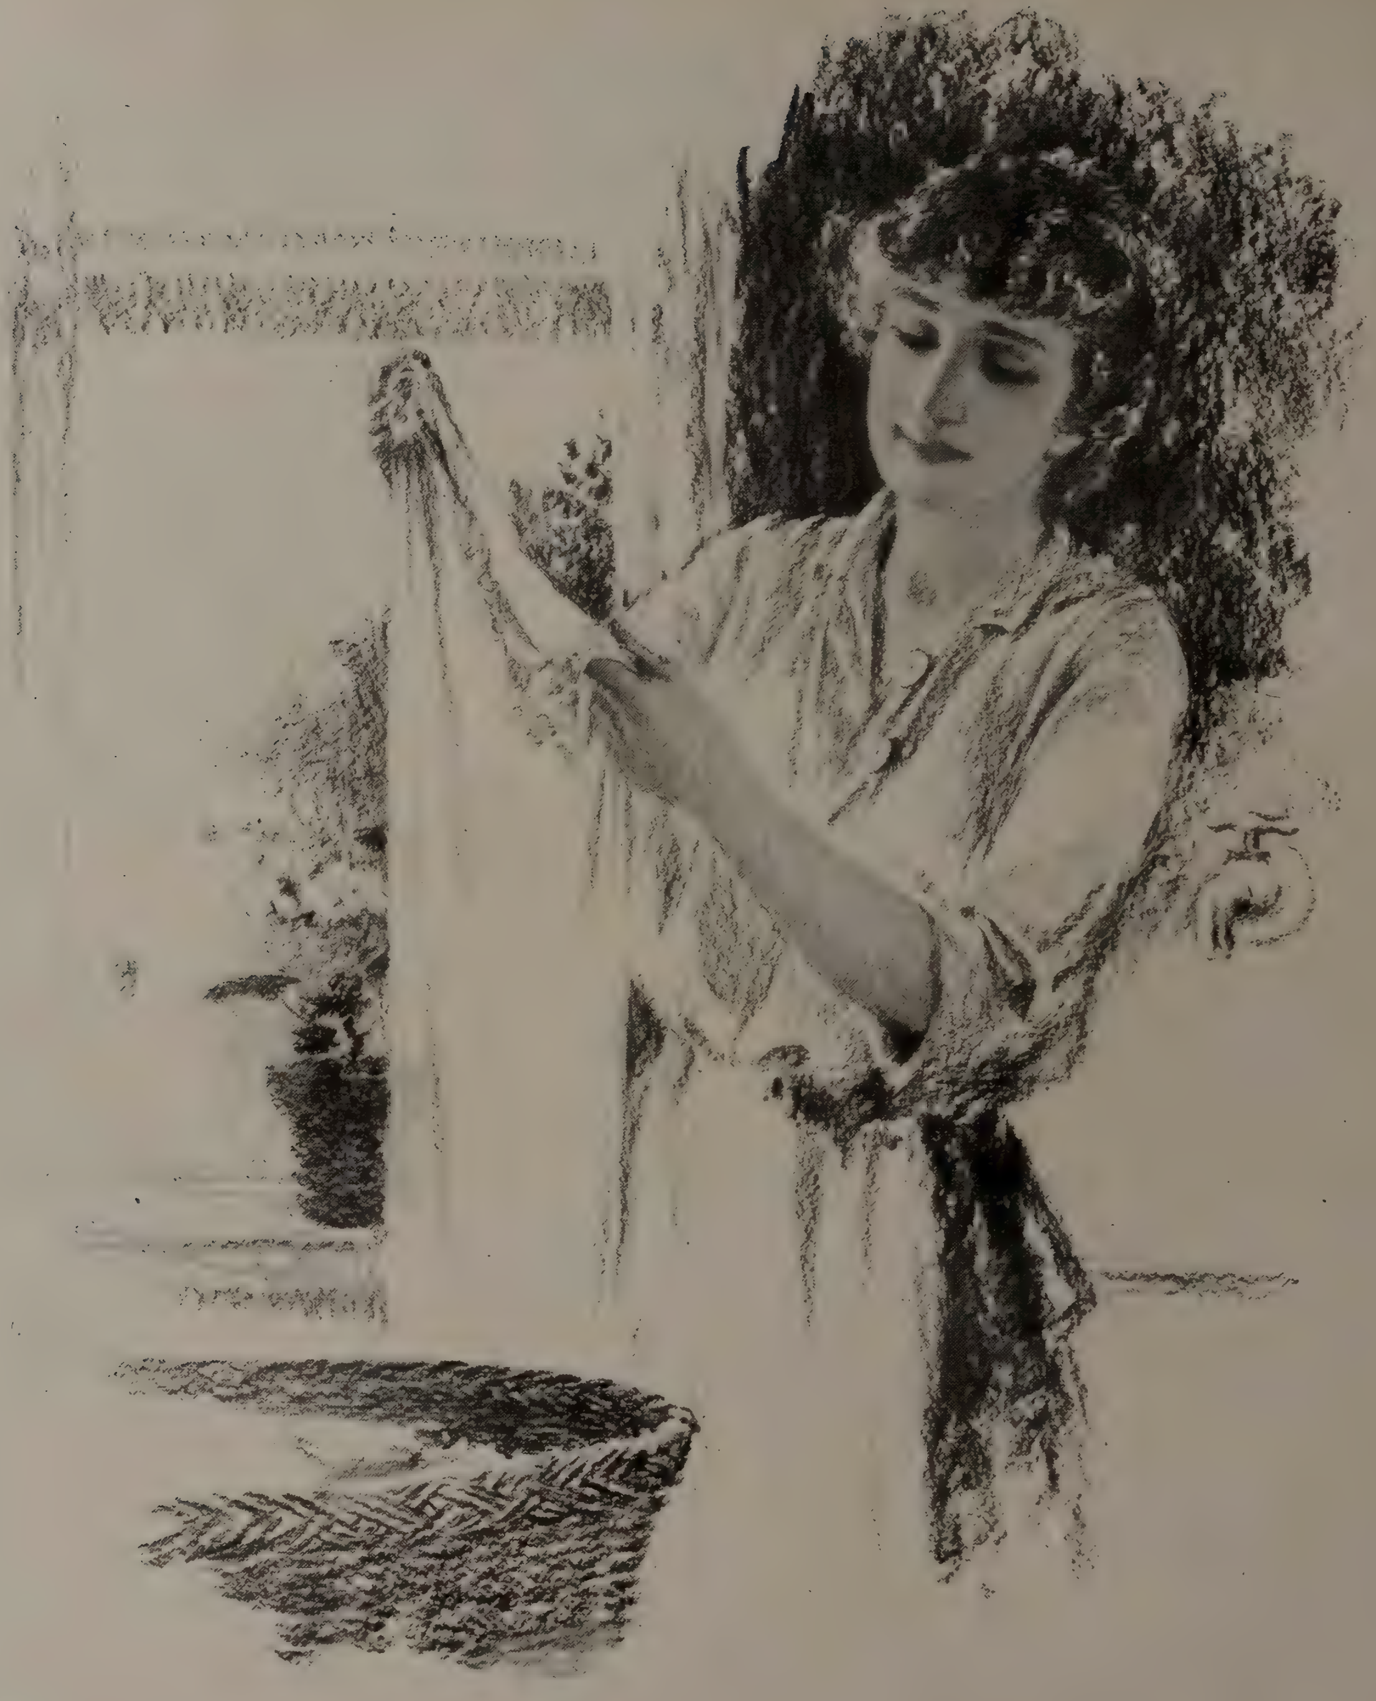
SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 6, 1917

VOL. 40 NO. 23. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photo by John Kabel

Summer comes when earth is waiting with a smile upon her face,
When the skies are touched with turquoise and the fields are trimmed with lace.



THERE are white clothes that are really white and there are white clothes of the same material that seem white until placed beside perfectly laundered garments. Assuming that the handling has been equally good in both cases and that the sun has shone the same on both, there is but one reason for the difference in color—the soap.

Ivory Soap, because of its rich thick suds, removes every particle of dirt from white clothes. It rinses so easily that none of it remains in the fabric. Its own whiteness enables it to wash the snowiest pieces without leaving even a suggestion of discoloration. And, most important, it is so pure and mild that it permits this thorough washing of the most delicate linens, silks, laces, and all other dainty materials without affecting the weave or finish in the slightest degree.

Simply follow these four general rules and your white clothes will be your pride:

1st. Wash one piece at a time.
2nd. Use lukewarm water.
3rd. Wash by working garment up and down in suds; do not rub garment on a washboard nor rub soap on the garment.
4th. Use Ivory Soap—nothing else.

IVORY SOAP . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}$% PURE

IVORY
IT FLOATS

COPYRIGHT 1917 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Emiliano Zapata, on his white horse, and some of his soldiers who fight for liberty and land

THE MOUNTAIN MAN OF MORELOS

MY EXPERIENCES WITH EMILIANO ZAPATA THE IDOL OF THE MEXICAN PEONS

BY EDWARD S. O'REILLY

[That new and vigorous writer of facts that are stranger than fiction, Edward S. O'Reilly, here lifts the veil that has hidden the real personality of Mexico's mysterious leader, Emiliano Zapata. Americans have been led to believe Zapata the bandit leader of outlaws as dangerous and vindictive as himself. Mr. O'Reilly, writing from personal knowledge, shows him as a liberator of the oppressed peons, a land reformer and a daring military genius, thrice conqueror of the Mexican capital. It is well to know the truth about Mexico and its people.]

MEXICO CITY, usually gay and colorful despite continuous revolutions, was like a graveyard. The streets were deserted and the silence of terror stilled the accustomed clamor of the markets. General Zapata and his horde of sandal-shod soldiers were coming into the city.

For years the Mexican capital had been fed with stories of Zapata's savagery and ruthlessness. It was the general belief that the "mountain men" from Morelos would loot the city and inaugurate a reign of terror.

By thousands the Zapatistas marched through the streets and deployed into the plaza before the national palace. That morning Zapata issued two proclamations. One was a prohibition edict closing the saloons; the other, a command for the bankers of the city to assemble for a conference.

The bankers attended the meeting. They went in fear, dreading confiscation of their deposits. Only a few days before, the armies of General Carranza had collected a "forced loan" of ten million pesos from the banks. What mercy could be expected of the bandit leader? Zapata's speech was short and to the point.

"Caballeros," he said, "my men are hungry. I want fifty thousand pesos to feed them for a few days. You will pay this. I promise you protection. You may carry on your business without molestation as long as you do not aid the enemy. You may go when you sign the order for the money."

Thankful to escape with such a modest demand, the bankers did as they were ordered. Zapata kept his part of the bargain and for months the city was better policed than it has ever been since Porfirio Diaz was driven from Mexico. But this is the strange part of the story—strange to one who knows the system of confiscation which has bled the business men of the country:

Ten days later Zapata paid back the fifty thousand pesos, and from that time on never took a dollar from the commercial houses of the capital.

BECAUSE Zapata has operated far south of our border, and has had no seaport, he is the least known of all Mexican revolutionary leaders to the American people. It was my fortune to be with him for several months, accompanying his army on several campaigns. As far as I have knowledge, I was the only American with the Zapata forces.

Who is this half-breed Indian who for six years has ruled a territory larger than the state of Illinois? Pancho Villa is well known to American newspaper readers. Carranza holds daily audiences with foreign correspondents. Zapata alone has held himself aloof and mysterious.

To understand the Zapata movement one must first know something of the state of Morelos, where he rules. Morelos is a mountainous country crisscrossed by valleys of great fertility. It is an agricultural state. The population is nine-tenths full-blood Indian. One statement will show the reason for a rebellion.

The entire state was owned, every acre of it, by eleven families. The natives were peon laborers on the farms of the landlords.

Emiliano Zapata was an outlaw before the outbreak of the Madero insurrection, six years ago. The Mexican peons love an outlaw. A man who lives in defiance of the law which enslaves them is always a hero in their eyes.

When the news swept through Mexico that Francisco Madero had taken the field against Diaz, Zapata saw his opportunity. Recruiting a small company, he moved back and forth across Morelos and into the state of Guerrero, calling upon the people to revolt. As in the north, his plan was for free land and schools.

His army grew rapidly and three months after the outbreak of the revolt he captured Cuernavaca, the capital of Morelos. He seized the immense estates of the hacendados, the absentee landlords, and parceled the land out among the peons. As the law of the conquered territory he proclaimed the "Plan of Ayala," a program which dealt mainly with the communistic ownership of the soil.

WHEN Madero was made president, he called upon Zapata to "come in and be good." Zapata demanded that his "Plan of Ayala" first be accepted. Madero replied that that was a question for the national congress to settle.

The Zapatistas refused to trust the assembly. They were not interested in the affairs of other sections of Mexico, but they had freed themselves from bondage and would continue to manage their own state.

That was the beginning. For six years Zapata and his peons have controlled Morelos. They have whipped every army that has been sent against them. At times they have swept out into other states; but outside of Morelos, they have always met with defeat. They have captured Mexico City three times, and at the present time their camp-fires may be seen on the hills surrounding the national capital.

My first experience with the Zapatista leaders was in Aguascalientes. Delegates from all factions gathered there in convention after the defeat of General Huerta. The Zapata representatives came by roundabout trails from their mountain strongholds.

That day a delegate of the Villa faction came to me and said: "We want to meet the Zapatistas but do not want to make the first advances. They feel the same. You are a neutral and a foreigner. If you will invite some of their leaders to a dinner, and also invite our friends, I will pay for the dinner."

I assented to this peculiar proposition and became the host at a most interesting feast. At that dinner the foundation for the future alliance of Villa and Zapata was laid. An introduction to some of the leaders will show that there are brains as well as bullets behind the Zapata movement.

ANTONIO SOTO Y GAME was the leader of the delegation. He is one of the best known Spanish writers, and at one time was a teacher in the University of Barcelona, Spain. He is a Socialist and has worked for that cause in many South American countries.

General Alfredo Serratos was a former lawyer, who had made a good record as a soldier. It will surprise Americans to learn that he was at one time a servant of Mark Hanna, the noted politician of Ohio. His history is a romantic one. As a homeless waif he was taken to the United States by an American, who promised to give him an education. In Cleveland, Ohio, the American died and young Serratos was left stranded. For three years he worked at the home of Senator Hanna, mowing lawns and caring for horses. Later the young Mexican returned to Mexico and studied law. He speaks three languages fluently. In the convention cabinet he was elected Secretary of War. These were some of the men who were Zapata's lieutenants and advisers.

When the convention disbanded and Villa's soldiers marched on Mexico City, I had an opportunity to visit General Zapata himself in Cuernavaca. As we journeyed up the canyons and mountain trails, I had my first contact with the Army of the South. It was night and every foot of the road was guarded. As we proceeded, I could hear cow-horns echoing back and forth in the mountains, signaling our arrival. This cow-horn system of wireless is in common use among the Indians.

We met Zapata in the old palace which had been built as a summer home by Cortez, the Spanish conqueror of Mexico. I found him a slight, wiry little man half extinguished by an enormous sombrero. I was impressed by the penetrating gaze of his eyes and his impatient gestures. He seemed to throw his open hand in the face of his listener as he talked.

General Zapata and his big sombrero

"You Americans have liberty, I am told," he said. "You can vote. You can own land. You can send your children to school. We cannot. Where few people own the land and many must work for them, there is no freedom. First the land must go back to the people. Other things will follow. You cannot talk laws to a man who has been hungry every day since he was a little boy.

"Our soldiers fight for liberty. They do not fight for money. My men are the only soldiers in Mexico who fight without pay. When I was a boy, I went into debt at the hacienda store for my first pair of overalls. For ten years I worked to pay for those overalls, but always I was in debt. For ten years I did not see one centavo of wages. So I ran away and they called me a bandit! They sent soldiers to kill me. But we have driven them away, the rurales, the soldiers, the jefes politicos who made us slaves to the land. We will all die before we will let them come back."

His boast that his army fought without pay was true. They are the only soldiers in Mexico who receive no pay.

During my short stay in Cuernavaca I learned other things that surprised me. The army is a democracy. Its officers are elected by the private soldiers, and may be recalled by a vote from the ranks. Zapata himself remains the master because he has the absolute confidence and loyalty of his followers.

ONE of Zapata's chief lieutenants is General Genevevo de la O. He bore a sinister reputation and was accused of having instigated several massacres. On my second day in Cuernavaca I met him. He was a short, dark, pock-marked man of pure Indian blood. His face had an expression of savage ferocity, and I could well believe the tales that had been told about him. When I met him he was dressed only in the cotton shirt and drawers of the peon and his feet were bound with rawhide sandals. I was told that he refused to wear any other uniform.

For a time we talked of the insurrection as I had seen it in other states. He told me that he was a Socialist. His ideas of Socialism seemed to be a general destruction of the ruling class and the unrestrained liberty of the workers. I told him that the Socialist movement was strong in other countries.

"Yes, I know," he growled. "Every man who has a good heart believes in giving justice to the poor. But what do they know? They must learn to hate, not to talk. Do you know how they must learn? As I have learned."

As he spoke he leaped excitedly to his feet and tore open his shirt. His back was a network of welts and scars.

"Three times I have been tied to a post and beaten because I would not work. When you have felt the lash on your back, you will know that there is but one meeting-place for master and slave. That is the battlefield."

THE delegates who had accompanied me to Cuernavaca arranged for a joint occupation of Mexico City with the Villa forces. Every one who witnessed the entry of Zapata's troops was astonished at the discipline shown by the mountain Indians. Within an hour order had been restored and business was resumed. The great city was a place of wonders to the ignorant peons and several amusing incidents occurred.

The afternoon of the occupation, a fire broke out on Calle San Francisco. A hose-cart came dashing down the street, crowded with brass-helmeted firemen. Seeing this strange outfit bearing down upon them, a company of Zapata soldiers lay down in a line across the street and opened fire. Twelve of the firemen were killed before an officer explained to the Zapatistas the fire apparatus was not some new device for their destruction.

When the Zapatistas took possession, the city was lawless. Murders and robberies occurred on every

Continued on page 644

THE MOUNTAIN PEAKS OF PROPHECY

THE SEED OF THE WOMAN, OR THE FIRST PROMISE OF REDEMPTION

BY REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

THIS is the first of our studies of the "Mountain Peaks of Prophecy."

From the beginning let us keep in mind that the Bible is not a history of creation, nor a history of the world, nor of the human race, but a history of redemption—the redemption of the race and of the earth on which it dwells. This history begins to be recorded at the moment the necessity for redemption appears; that is, when man first fell into sin, as indicated in Genesis 3. At the fifteenth verse of that chapter God is pronouncing his curse upon the serpent, who represented Satan, and says:

"I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."

This verse is the first promise of redemption, and has sometimes been called the protevangelium, a Greek word, meaning the earliest proclamation of the Gospel.

When God says, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman," "thee" refers primarily to the serpent, and yet the context shows that some one other than the serpent is ultimately in mind

That one is Satan, as we gather from Rev. 12 : 9 and 20 : 2, where the serpent is introduced again and identified with "the devil and Satan." Thus, at the very beginning of his attempt upon man, Satan is frustrated in his plan. He thought he had entered into a harmonious and perpetual and successful compact with man against God, but finds that it is broken ere it begins to work. It is enmity and not friendship that shall exist. Happy are we if we appreciate this enmity, and in our daily conduct find daily conflict!

The enmity is to be not only between the serpent and the woman, let it be observed, but "between thy seed and her seed."

The "seed" of the serpent is the generation of evil men in all the days, as John's words in Matt. 3 : 7, and those of Jesus in Matt. 13 : 38; 23 : 33 and John 8 : 44 firmly establish. Compare also Acts 13 : 10 and 1 John 3 : 8.

In like manner the "seed" of the woman is the generation of the righteous, as we may gather from Ps. 22 : 30 and elsewhere, although its stricter application is to the person of Jesus Christ. The emphasis on the word "woman" in the text suggests his virgin birth; but whether or not, the whole story of the Bible, and hence the whole story of redemption, gathers around this "seed." We find it referred to in the call of Abraham and the founding of the nation of Israel, Gen. 12 : 3; 15 : 5, and elsewhere. Isaac, the son of Sarah, was the immediate realization of the promise, and yet he was only the type of the true Isaac who was to come. This is proven by Paul's words to the Galatians (3 : 16), where he says: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ."

It was this seed to whom the prophet Nathan referred in revealing the divine promise to David that his son should sit upon his throne and that his kingdom should be established forever (II Sam. 7 : 12, compared with Ps. 132 : 11).

It was this seed that Isaiah prophesied of (7 : 14), and Jeremiah, and Micah, and Malachi. Indeed "to Him bear all the prophets witness."

II

BUT the text continues: "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."

Satan and his seed, considered as one totality, succeeded in bruising the Saviour's heel all through his earthly career, from the murderous antipathy of Herod to the expiring groan on the cross. But after all it was only a bruising of the heel; it was not deadly, nor destructive either of the Saviour himself or the great purpose of redemption for which he came into the world.

On the other hand, the Saviour bruised Satan's head, a type of the deadly final overcoming power of Christ.

This bruising of Satan's head may be said to have begun when Christ overcame him in the wilderness. Another stage of it was reached in his resurrection, when he spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in the cross (Col. 2 : 15). Another will be reached when, at his second coming, Satan shall be bound in the bottomless pit for a thousand years (Rev. 20 : 2). But the final stage will be reached when, after the millennial age, he shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone and be "tormented day and night forever and ever" (Rev. 20 : 10).

It is of the deepest interest to true believers to note that the Holy Spirit, through Paul, unites Christ and them in one totality so far as the bruising of Satan's head is concerned. In Rom. 16 : 20 it is promised that the God of peace shall bruise Satan under our feet shortly. Long has he tormented us, and more especially from the beginning of our Christian life has he shown himself the adversary of our souls; but, as Bishop Moule says: "Let us meet his inroads and attacks in the name of Him who has made peace for us and works peace in us, and his afflictions will soon be over."

III

AFTER this first promise of redemption, God leaves man to himself, as it were, for a period of 1,500 years, more or less. There is no further promise, prophecy or prediction till we come to the days of Noah. All this time man has an opportunity to return to God if he will, and no doubt in the fullest fellowship and blessing, on the basis of that first promise of redemption through a personal Redeemer.

But the result is well known. At the end of that period, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thought of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth" (Gen. 6 : 5–7). The deluge followed, and only "Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord."

But the deluge did not change man's nature, evidence of which is soon seen thereafter in the drunkenness of Noah and the licentiousness of his son Ham (Gen. 9 : 19–25). Practically the same conditions maintained in the whole race as before that awful judgment, and issued at length in what with truth has been called "an organized political and religious revolt against God." This refers to the event of the tower of Babel (Gen. 11).

As men again multiplied on the face of the earth, union and consolidation for some reason came to be considered of prime importance. And on the plain of Shinar they said, "Come, let us build us a city, and a tower, whose top may reach to heaven, and let us make us a name; lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth" (Gen. 11 : 4).

The attempt was a failure. "The Lord came down to see the city and the tower," language of sublime simplicity suited to the early mind of man, and expressive of the interposing providence of God. This was a providence of judgment, but, as always, judgment tempered with mercy. Their language was confounded and their union dissipated, but they themselves were not destroyed.

Nevertheless they were abandoned to their own evil ways. "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools." "As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind" (Rom. 1 : 18–32), and "the loathsome moral condition of Sodom and Gomorrah is a miniature picture of the debasing corruption that followed."

It now looked as though God's name and God's truth would be forgotten in the earth. It now looked as though that first promise of redemption would come to nought. It now looked as though the seed of the serpent had prevailed. But the next study will teach us differently. Our next mountain peak will present us with a clearer vision of the sweep and purpose of God's grace.

Uncle Sam's New Bread-Basket

Where Orchards Spring from Swamps and Sugar Cane Is King

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

(Copyright, 1917, Frank G. Carpenter)

A BIG part of our food for the future will come from the low, wet lands along the Mexican Gulf.

I motored through a 7,000-acre plantation, which has risen from the bed of a swamp. This great farm is within five miles of New Orleans and in the very heart of the Mississippi delta. Five years ago it was covered with water, and it adjoins a territory which is more dreary than the darkest parts of the Dismal Swamp of Virginia. On one side of it is Lake Pontchartrain, and on another are forests of cypress rising out of marshes and swamps. The water, the marsh and the trees have all disappeared, and the soil is so smooth that it crumbles to dust in your hand. There is hardly a stone or pebble in the whole 7,000 acres, and its fertility is such that it surpasses that of the valleys of the Euphrates, the Nile or the Ganges. The tract has been cut up into small farms, and tens of thousands of orange trees are growing upon it. Between the rows, crops of various kinds have been planted, and an army of negroes and whites is working the fields.

My visit to this farm was to investigate the potential bread-basket that Uncle Sam has way down here at the mouth of the Mississippi. Our war with the Germans and the high prices of grain and meat demand that the food lands of the United States be increased. Before the troubles in Europe began we were already importing corn and beef from Argentina and mutton from Australia. Our population has been growing faster than our food supply, and the great American stomach had already surpassed in size the materials needed to fill it. With the new immigration from Europe at the close of the war, the demand will be larger than ever, and it is absolutely necessary that we increase our agricultural empire to the fullest extent.

WE are doing something toward this by reclaiming the dry lands of the West, but their possibilities are nothing in comparison with the potential food wealth now lying in the swamps of the South, and especially in the Mississippi delta.

According to the scientists of the geological survey, there are in the neighborhood of 80,000,000 acres of good land in the United States which is more or less covered with water. This, at the lowest calculation, represents a country bigger than Great Britain and Ireland. It is equal to the three states of Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, and it is ten times as big as that little garden patch which we know as Holland. The soil of our swamps is also ten times as rich as that of the Netherlands. Nevertheless, Holland is now feeding almost six million people, and at the same ratio our swamps could feed sixty millions, or ten millions more than half of all the people in the country today.

A great part of these swamps lies in the South, and vast drainage projects are under way to reclaim them. I know of one little tract in North Carolina. A few years ago it was celebrated as the largest lake of that state. Its name was Lake Mattamuskeet. It covered fifty thousand acres, and almost every part of it had water deep enough to have drowned the Cardiff Giant if stood upright within it. Today a colony on that land has the title of New Holland. The tract has been divided up into farms, and one of the biggest pumping stations of the world keeps it as dry as is needed for cotton, tobacco and corn. The surplus water is carried off into the Atlantic Ocean through Pamlico Sound.

A part of the dredging fleet that is turning muck and swamp into corn land

OTHER big drainage projects are going on in North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida. The lower part of Florida, which is three hundred miles long and almost as big as Indiana, is made up of lowlands covered with water. These are being drained by private parties and by the state. The Everglades, containing something like four million acres, are a drowned prairie of wonderful fertility. They are being drained by the state, and they will eventually be turned into a semi-tropical garden patch for feeding the North.

More important than all, however, are the swamp lands of the Mississippi Valley, which contain altogether something like twenty million acres of the richest soil upon earth. I am told there are nearly ten million acres in southern Louisiana alone, and that vast tracts, easily reclaimable, lie in Mississippi and the other states farther north.

Under these swamps is the cream of the soil of the United States. The Mississippi-Missouri, the longest river of the world, is one of the greatest robbers on earth. For countless ages, year after year, it has been tearing down and carrying away the soil of the vast Mississippi basin and dropping it down here on the ancient bed of the sea.

There are now something like twenty-five companies at work draining the swamps not far from New Orleans. The projects are of various sizes, and they cover upwards of a half million acres. Some of the tracts are devoted to small farms, others to orchards and others to grain, corn and cotton. They are now working on one tract of 16,000 acres, which is to be given over to ranching and stock-raising. I am told that many thousands of acres are involved in the plans of the companies at work, and that a large part of the money invested is that of the bankers and other capitalists here at New Orleans.

In connection with this subject I have had a talk with Walter Parker, the general manager of the New Orleans Association of Commerce. He tells me that 5,000 acres forms the most economic unit for drainage, and he estimates that it costs about $35 an acre to put in levees, canals and pumping plants. This cannot include the clearing of the land of trees and stumps, which is no small matter.

I asked Mr. Parker as to the prices of land. He replied:

"Swamp land is worth from $5 to $25 per acre, and drained lands can be bought for from $100 to $300 an acre. It depends very much on the location and the surroundings. This is low in comparison with the lands of Egypt and Holland. In the valley of the Nile farms bring as much as $750 an acre, and in Holland from $600 to $1,000 is paid for good land.

"In Holland the cost of reclamation is much greater than here. The dikes there have to hold back the sea, with its daily tide of thirty-one feet. I understand that 38 per cent. of the cultivated lands of the Dutch kingdom are below the level of the sea at high tide. On the basis of the population of the reclaimed lands of Europe, the territory about New Orleans, if it were drained, would support a population of ten or fifteen million people, and on the basis of Holland alone it would furnish homes and farms for more than seven million souls."

I WILL now give you a peep into Uncle Sam's sugar-bowl. It is full enough now, though the prices are kissing the skies. It will be different if the war is prolonged, and we may yet have our sweetening doled out by the nation at so much per head. Sugar is vitally connected with all work that requires great endurance. It has been found that the soldiers in the trenches require much more sugar than they do at home, and from this standpoint the American army will consume more per capita than any other body of soldiers on earth.

The largest sugar refinery in the world is located at Chalmette, La., on the Mississippi River, near New Orleans. The refinery is a mighty sweetmeat

Continued on page 649

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

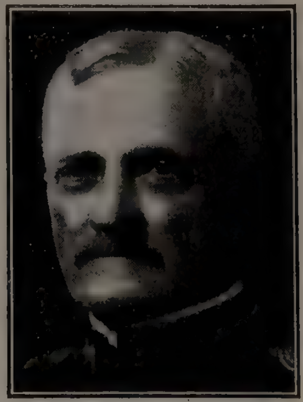
Senor Jose Gutierre Guerra
President-elect of Bolivia

A. F. Kerenski
New Russian War Minister

© Underwood & Underwood

Prince George E. Lvoff
Premier of Russia

Col. Charles A. Doyen
To command Marines in France



Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing
To head American force abroad

PUSHING THE LIBERTY LOAN. Banks, business houses, manufacturers, as well as every agency of the government, are working to insure a nation-wide response to the first offer of $2,000,000,000 of the $5,000,000,000 Liberty Loan. In the state of Iowa plans have been made to organize by counties, asking each county to sell a minimum of $100,000 worth. Secretary McAdoo has suggested that this plan might well be adopted throughout the country. Department stores in all the cities have opened subscription booths on their main floors, every state and national bank is receiving subscriptions, and every day large subscriptions by men of wealth and by great corporations are being announced. In New York 500 bond salesmen were mobilized, instructed and sent out on Monday, May 21, to canvass the city, block by block. They began their canvass with a parade headed by the Seventh Regiment band. Advertising in newspapers, billboard advertising, and every other recognized form of publicity is also being mobilized in the interest of the nation's greatest financial effort. The Treasury Department announced on May 21 that savings-bank depositors who wished to buy liberty bonds might make the first payments in checks dated not later than July 5, thus insuring them against loss of interest. A tabulation of the amount expected to be sold in the different states, based on the bank deposits and population of the states, shows that the state of New York should take $555,000,000, or a little more than one-quarter of the total offering, and that the Eastern reserve districts with headquarters at New York, Boston and Philadelphia might reasonably be expected to take 49 per cent. of the loan. Twenty-two thousand credit men of the country are being organized to present the loan to a million merchants with whom they are in touch, and no avenue of approach to possible investors is being overlooked. The bonds offered are to bear interest at three and one-half per cent., are to run thirty years, and to be redeemable at the option of the United States after fifteen years. Bearer bonds will be issued in amounts of $50, $100, $500, and $1000, registered bonds in amounts of $100, $500, $1000, $5,000, $10,000, $50,000 and $100,000. Partial payments will be permitted as follows: 2 per cent. on application, 18 per cent. June 28, 20 per cent. July 30, 30 per cent. August 15, 30 per cent. August 30. Interest will be payable June 15 and December 15 each year. Subscriptions will be closed June 15. Holders of the bonds will have the right to exchange them for bonds of a higher rate of interest if such be issued by the government later. Bonds are exempt from all Federal, state and local taxation, except estate and inheritance taxes.

ITALIAN AIR-POST. An air postal service was inaugurated on May 22 between Turin and Rome. An airplane left Turin with 600 pounds of mail and arrived safely at Rome in four hours and fifteen minutes.

FIRE SWEEPS ATLANTA. A fire which started on May 21 swept through the residential districts of the city of Atlanta, Ga., destroying 1,563 buildings and making homeless from 10,000 to 15,000 persons.

TO FEED AND CLOTHE THE NATION. Mr. Herbert Hoover has suggested that the nation's motto during the life of the present emergency should be "Eat plenty, wisely, without waste." President Wilson on May 19 defined in a formal statement the food control problem and the program under consideration for conserving and stimulating the supply of everything requisite to the nation and its allies, and on May 22 Chairman Lever of the House Agricultural Committee introduced the Administration Food Bill in Congress. The bill, which embodies the recommendation of the executive, is summarized by the Associated Press as follows: It declares the production, manufacture, storage, distribution and sale of necessaries to be affected with a public interest, and makes it unlawful to commit or permit preventable waste or deterioration, or to restrict supply or distribution, or to enhance prices to excessive levels. The bill authorizes the President to establish standards and grades of foods, to license the manufacture, storage and distribution or to prevent uneconomical manufacture or inequitable distribution. The President is empowered to direct the disposition of hoarded stocks. If necessary the government may prevent hoarding, monopolization or the taking of excessive profits by manufacturing or dealing in necessaries. The government may take over factories or plants, may prescribe rules for the conduct of exchanges or boards of trade or close them; it may fix minimum prices to the producer, may authorize import duties if importation is threatened, to reduce prices below the fixed minimum, and the government itself may purchase at minimum prices for itself and for its allies. Maximum prices may be fixed to prevent hoarding and to break up food corners, and the changing of milling grades or the mixing of grains in flour is authorized. The President is also authorized to restrict the use of food-stuffs in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. The bill applies to foods, feeds, shoes, clothing, fuel and other necessaries of life and articles required for their production. The bill as presented to the House would practically make the President the world's food controller. There is a strong movement in Congress for prohibiting the use of grain in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages during the war. It is asserted that the Senate is certain to forbid the making of whisky.

MUST RE-ARGUE TRUST CASES. The Supreme Court of the United States on May 21 ordered that the anti-trust suits against the United States Steel Corporation, the International Harvester Company, the United Shoe Machinery Company, and the Lehigh Valley and Reading Railroads and their affiliated coal companies must be re-argued. As the final adjournment of the court was set for June 11 and the time for re-argument could not be given before that date, this operated to throw the litigation over to the next term of the court. The court, which had already upheld the Workmen's Compensation Law of New York State, declared that it did not apply to workmen injured while employed on navigable waters, since they were covered by the general and Federal maritime laws. New Jersey's Workmen's Compensation Law, which was non-compulsory, was declared unconstitutional. The law of the state of Missouri forbidding higher freight rates for short than for long hauls was upheld.

NURSES DIE ON ARMED LINFR. By a peculiar accident during target practice on the American armed liner Mongolia as she was leaving an American port on May 21, two members of the Red Cross party bound for war duty in France were killed and a third was wounded. A brass cup used to close the powder case was reported to have been deflected back toward the ship by a wave. It struck a stanchion, breaking in pieces, the pieces striking among a party of Red Cross nurses who were watching the gun practice from the after-deck. Naval officers were unable to explain the accident, but it was announced that this was not the first accident which had occurred since the arming of the liners, the ammunition supplied to the St. Louis and the St. Paul having been found defective, premature explosion of shells having ruined the rifling of guns on both vessels. Some of the shells were taken from stores made up during the Spanish War in 1898. Tests made since the accidents have shown all shells and fuses manufactured since the year 1900 to be satisfactory. The Mongolia put back to port after the accident and a thorough inquiry was made by the naval authorities. The type of shell fired in the Mongolia's guns has been safely used in the navy for many years.

FOR IRISH CONVENTION. Premier Lloyd George laid before the House of Commons on May 21 a plan for an Irish convention which it was hoped would be able to propose a workable plan for the government in the Emerald Isle. The plan for the convention has been approved by John Redmond and his party. At this writing it has not yet been approved by the representatives from Ulster. The Sinn Feiners are said to oppose any convention on home rule.

MODIFYING THE MAIL RATES. After a proposal for a flat two-cents-a-pound rate on newspapers and periodicals had been defeated by a vote of 80–166 the House Ways and Means Committee on May 22 offered a committee amendment proposing three schedules of rates, effective July 1, November 1 and March 1, by which increased rates would be approached gradually. The July 1 rate would run from one and one-sixth cents a pound in the first zone to two and two-thirds cents in the eighth. After March 1, 1918, the proposed rate would be one and one-half cents in the first zone and six cents in the eighth. Representative Mann appealed to the House to eliminate the entire second-class section on the ground that it was an unwise tax on education. The bill was passed by the House May 23 by a vote of 329 to 76, carrying the postal rates proposed in the committee's substitute as given above. The bill as drawn is expected to produce an annual revenue of $1,800,000,000. The proposed tax on street-car and billboard advertising was eliminated, and the tax on express shipments was reduced from ten to six per cent. The other provisions of the bill were as previously reported in the Christian Herald. The bill then went to the Senate. The Senate Finance Committee immediately voted against the excessive postage rates on newspapers and periodicals. The committee unanimously struck out the "Zone" postal rate system and substituted a direct tax on advertising, including newspapers and magazines, billboards, posters and street cars, a two per cent. tax being favored. The Senate committee also struck out of the House measure the retroactive tax on incomes, the horizontal tariff of ten per cent. ad valorum on articles now on the free list, and for the special tax on corporations adopted the British system based on average profits for five years prior to the war. The Senate

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City, Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City, Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.--For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.--It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION. The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

S^T BRIEUC
PONTIVY

© Underwood & Underwood

Boys of France, born in 1898, now called to the colors committee's report, if adopted by the Senate, will go again to conference.

Creating an Army. Coincidentally with the President's proclamation of conscription, an order was signed calling into the service of the nation the whole of the National Guard, which is to be mobilized and recruited to war strength beginning July 15. There are now 60,000 national guardsmen in the Federal service and 100,000 not yet in service. About 340,000 men are needed to bring the guard to the authorized war strength. The new army which is to be created by the draft will be organized in sixteen divisions to consist of about 28,000 men each and will be mobilized in sixteen concentration camps. It is to be officially known as the National Army to distinguish it from the Regular Army and the National Guard. Persons expecting to claim exemption from the draft will be required to state the basis for their claim on registration. It is expected that the first 500,000 men called to service under the draft will be mobilized for instruction on September 1. The Senate amended the Navy and Army Deficiency Bill, attaching a provision which would end conscription four months after the conclusion of peace. Thirty-two huge camps will be created for the mobilization and training of the new divisions to be created from the existing Federal and National Guard Armies. Each camp will be a complete town, and will cover about a square mile.

Record War Budget. The Senate on May 19 passed the Army and Navy Urgency Appropriation Bill after adding $515,000,000 to the aggregate appropriation provided by the bill as it left the House. The total appropriation authorized by the Senate was $3,342,000,000. The chief item in the bill is one of $750,000,000, which is provided for the taking over of the ship-building facilities of the country, power also being given to the President to purchase ships being built in the United States for foreign owners.

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE British official report of the operations of the submarines for the week ending Sunday, May 20, was given out on Wednesday, May 23. According to this statement there were sunk, during this period, eighteen steamers of over 1,600 tons and nine under that tonnage, besides three fishing vessels. This is a small increase over last week's figures. Lord Beresford's speech on May 1 at the Baltic Exchange in London shows why the figures given out by the British government are open to criticism.

"Our life and death," he says, "depend upon our mercantile marine. I have been finding fault with the government returns because they are misleading and delusive. Nobody can say that the returns are not true, but they are most certainly misleading. We all know what our losses are. On April 22 we read that the arrivals and departures are 5,205 vessels. Underneath we see that the losses are 52 vessels. Reading that casually, we might conclude that these figures represented roughly about 1 per cent. loss—which we could afford to lose. But in the arrivals, neutral vessels bringing food, etc., to this country, are included. Their losses are not stated. Owing to the enormous strain on our own ships to carry war material, neutral vessels bringing food to this country really represent about 80 per cent. of the arrivals. That is why the government returns are elusive. We must have the tonnage. Without it, we do not know what our losses are. Also in the arrivals are included coasting vessels which may touch three ports on their journey."

DURING the week we have been informed of the sinking of several transports in the Mediterranean at various dates in April and May. Among these were two British, the former Anchor Line steamers, the Cameronia and the Transylvania, the first of about 10,000 tons and the second of 13,000. About 400 men went down with the Transylvania. The French also lost two transports, the Colbert and the Sanyat. The Colbert was crossing from Algiers to Marseilles, and the Sanyat was returning from Salonica. The loss of life in neither case was very large.

China's prime minister has been dismissed from office by the President and a new cabinet is to be formed, with Wu Ting Fang (former minister to the United States) as premier. This is expected by some to result in a declaration of war by China against Germany, but the chances of this action bringing about a civil war in China seem equally good. It will be remembered that the Chinese House of Representatives refused on May 10 to pass such a declaration.

On Friday, May 18, there was quite a brush in the Adriatic, where Austrian light cruisers and destroyers made a raid on the mine-laying and sweeping fleet of the Allies and sank fourteen of them. British and Italian warships came to their rescue, whereupon the Austrians departed. In the running fight which ensued the British cruiser Dartmouth was struck by a torpedo, but managed to reach port. The Austrians got into Cattaro with one cruiser damaged, according to the British admiral's report, while the Italian aviators reported another cruiser had taken fire and was towed into Cattaro in a sinking condition.

Canada is to adopt conscription, with the selective system, and expects to raise in this manner certainly 50,000 and probably 100,000 men. A bill to that effect will shortly be introduced in the Canadian Parliament.

THE Russian situation still remains of vital interest and at the same time exceedingly obscure. There has been no absolute confirmation of the new ministry of the provisional government, though a tentative list was published ten days ago. A congress of the important political parties of Finland passed the following resolution: "The Finnish people have progressed so far in culture and political development that Finland is entitled to make a demand to take her place as an independent state among the number of sovereign nations." The claim of cultural and political development is a true one. Politically, Finland, since the treaty of Fredrikshamn, by which it was ceded to the Emperor of Russia, has enjoyed continuously a constitutional form of government, and has a one-chambered legislature elected by universal suffrage, women as well as men voting; and has also possessed a ministry of its own, responsible to the Diet as well as to the Czar. There never has been any political fusion between the government of Finland and the government of Russia, the only connecting link between the two countries being the fact that the Czar of Russia was also Grand Duke of Finland. This régime has resulted in the Finns being as a people trained in politics, and also in their being, as far as education and material prosperity go, greatly in advance of the Russians.

Reports from various places outside of Petrograd indicate that the interior disorganization in Russia is still very great and that separatist movements of the Ukranians, Georgians, etc., are rapidly developing. There are also rumors of disorder in various centers of population. An attempt to assassinate the minister of war on May 21 was not successful.

On the Austro-Italian front, hard fighting has taken place in the Pasunio region. There are some indications that the Austrians may attempt another offensive on a large scale on this front, repeating their last year's effort. On the Isonzo front, the Italians report that they captured Hill 363, east of Playa, extended their positions on Vodice, and repulsed Austrian attacks on Monte Santo. The Austrians, however, assert that the Italians were driven from the heights of Vodice, and never succeeded in making an assault on Monte Santo, their attacking column being broken up by the Austrian artillery.

ON the western front, the fighting during the week has not been as severe as usual lately. The principal event, and the only one involving any change of positions of importance on the British portion of the active part of their front, took place on May 20, when the British succeeded in establishing themselves on a front about a mile long, between Fontaine-les-Croisilles and Bullecourt, after fierce fighting which continued all day and part of the night of May 20.

On the French active front, from the great angle of the line east to Auberive in Champagne, there has been constant but minor infantry fighting with occasional intense artillery activity at points on this line. Most of the infantry fighting took place at the extreme west of the line in and around the mill of Laffaux, though there were also clashes on the Chemin des Dames in the region of Craonne, and between Rheims and Auberive. Each side lays claim to successes in these battles.

The French government estimates of its general expenditures for the third quarter of the year are 10,857,000,000 francs. In peace times (1913) the expenditures for the whole year were 4,738,603,534 francs, or less than one-half of the present expenditures for three months.

Some Choice Bits Coming

THE age of romance is not dead; and not all, nor the best, of true romance is to be found in fiction. It is even in the ministry. How a young Iowa preacher in a prairie town, through a published sermon, has been called to the pastorate of City Temple, London, the leading pulpit of Britain, makes a story of inspiring interest. Dr. Joseph Fort Newton, of the Liberal Christian Church, Cedar Rapids, is the minister called abroad, and a character sketch of him by A. P. Vaughn will appear in the next issue of the Christian Herald.

Another of Maynard Owen Williams's illuminating Travel Stories of the Philippines will also appear next week. Mr. Williams brings us closer and into deeper sympathy with the natives.

The Sermon next week is by Dr. Junius B. Remensnyder, on "Heroes Unknown to Fame."

Also Billy Sunday's Leading Sermon of the Week, selected by himself for the readers of the Christian Herald.

THE LIBERTY OF THE GLORY

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—Rom. 8:21. "The liberty of the glory of the children of God."

THIS letter has travailed from darkness and bondage into light and liberty. And in this text we are standing upon a great mountain height of spiritual attainment and glory.

When I had read again these earlier chapters, climbing from height to height, my mind reverted to Whymper's account of his first ascent of the Matterhorn. "The last doubt vanished! The Matterhorn was ours! . . . The atmosphere was perfectly still, and free from all clouds or vapors. Mountains fifty—nay, a hundred—miles off looked sharp and near. All their details, ridge and crag, snow and glacier, stood out in faultless definition; all were revealed; not one of the principal peaks of the Alps was hidden. . . . Ten thousand feet beneath us were the green fields of Zermatt, dotted with chalets, from which blue smoke rose lazily. Eight thousand feet below, on the other side, were the pastures of Breuil. There were forests black and gloomy, and mountains bright and lively, bounding waterfalls and tranquil lakes, fertile lands and savage wastes."

All of which presented itself to me as a symbol of the apostle's outlook as he stands upon this spiritual altitude in this eighth chapter of Romans. For here, too, the atmosphere is luminous, and great peaks are clear and definite, and in holy grace he discerns the mind of God. "The liberty of the glory of the children of God."

WHAT is this glory? It is a glory revealed unto us in Jesus Christ our Lord. "We beheld his glory," says the apostle John, "full of grace and truth." It is a glory not of condition, but of character; not of worldly majesty, but of spiritual brilliancy. "We beheld his glory," as he hailed from Nazareth, emerging from a carpenter's house, choosing fishermen as his friends, seeking the outcasts whom even outcasts had cast out. And John names two great characteristics of that glory, grace and truth.

But what is grace? I shall make no attempt to define it, no more than I should attempt to define the stellar spaces, where innumerable worlds, seen and unseen, are rolling in their appointed course. But what we may not attempt to define we may endeavor to describe. And for my present purpose it may be stated thus: Grace is energy; it is holy energy. It is holy energy engaged in a ministry of love. It is holy energy visiting the unlovely in order that it may convert the unlovely into its own loveliness.

Is not this the very grace of Jesus? His grace was just love-energy, going where it was not wanted, where it was not welcomed, where it was not sought. "God commended his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

And the glory, being full of grace, is also full of truth. All its expressions are perfectly true. There is nothing subtly concealed, nothing crooked, nothing double. Big things are scrupulously right. There is faithfulness in that which is least. Every lineament of the outer life of Christ expressed with unspeakable fidelity the holiness within.

NOW, everywhere and always, Jesus incarnated this glory of the eternal God. As much of that glory as can be expressed in mortal condition was manifested in him. But by the very limitations of the incarnation the glory was restrained and tempered and subdued. "He emptied himself." Behind the human manifestation of the divine glory, there was the undimmed effulgence of the eternal God.

> "The spirits that surround thy throne
>   May bear the burning bliss;
> But that is surely theirs alone,
> Since they have never, never known
>   A fallen world like this."

But into that glory, "full of grace and truth," and revealed to us in the Lord Jesus, it is our gracious inheritance to be born, and by it to be glorified.

How is the glory to become ours? We may find the answer in another great word of the apostle Paul. "We all, with unveiled face, reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image, from glory to glory." And therefore we may say two things about this glory in its reference to the children of men. First, it is transmitted; and second, the transmission is progressive. The order of the transmission is surely as follows: Before we can reflect a thing we must receive it. Before light can be reflected it must be received. And how is the reception made possible? Here is an object, and here is a mirror which is to receive the impression of the object. What, then, is required? Without any technicalities we may say that two things are needed—the right angle and the prepared surface. Unless the mirror is placed in right relationship with the object, and unless the surface is sensitive, no impression can be received.

And it is even so with the soul and the glory of the Lord. The soul must first of all assume the right angle to the Lord. And what is that angle? "We are justified by faith." It is faith that puts the soul at the proper pose, at the needful inclination toward things divine. Faith operates in this way on the purely human plane. In my relationship to a teacher, if I am to receive the true impression of his mind, I must assume the posture of faith. The attitude of suspicion or uncertainty would never really apprehend the deeper things in the teacher's life. It is equally so in the world of art. There must be the right angle before there can be esthetic perception. And faith is the same powerful minister in the realm of the Highest. Faith adjusts the soul to the right angle, and puts me into a position for receiving the rays divine.

TO A BELGIAN FIELD FLOWER

By W. J. LAMPTON

AH, little field flower,
  Your name unknown,
Into this blood and ruin sown
By the winds alone,
  For no other hand
Could flower this broken, deflowered land—
With your face as fair
  And your smile as sweet
As though you had come from the soil to meet
Only the sunshine and the rain
To bring you to bud and to blossom again—
What do you know of the dead around
So close to your feet in the bloody ground?
Skeleton walls and chimneys gaunt,
That shadow the byways which you haunt,
Mean nothing to you, you blossom fair,
Though devastation be everywhere.
What do you know of War that sweeps
All else but you from the plains and steeps,
Leaving your cheery and unafraid
In the color and fragrance of peace arrayed?
Dear little field flower
  You smile from the sod,
And the wasted and heart-sore
  See you and thank God.

BUT with the right angle, there must also be a prepared surface. And what does prepare the requisite mental surface except humility and docility? It has recently been said of one of the greatest scholars of the last generation that the marvelous absorbency of his mind was explained by his conspicuous humility and docility. He would learn of everybody, and he got rays of light from quarters regarded by smaller people as the hiding-places of gloom. And I must bring the same prepared surface to the Lord Christ. Unless I am humble and docile, I can never receive the glory of the Lord.

And this glory, entering into human life, transfigures it. And here the image of the mirror entirely fails. For the impression of the mirror is purely superficial, and there is no transfiguring or transforming of the substance of the mirror. But when the glory of the Lord falls upon the soul the very being of the receiver is changed. It is as though some black, stagnant pool received the inflow of some glorious crystal flood from the heights. It is as though some close, fusty room received a glorious inrush of air, washed clean by its passage over trackless seas.

When the energy of divine glory falls upon the soul the soul is clarified, purified, transfigured. His grace enters into our ungraciousness and makes us gracious. His holiness enters into our uncleanness and makes us pure. His love enters into our unloveliness and makes us lovely. His truth enters into our unfaithfulness and makes us straight. We become "partakers of the glory." And partaking of it we reflect it. It shines out from us as a reflected light from a glowing mirror. And the reception is progressive. It is "from glory to glory." There is always a brighter manifestation still to be. "A partaker of the glory that shall be!" "We rejoice in the hope of the glory of God."

AND with the glory there comes liberty. Instinctively we feel and know that if we possess this glory we shall be lifted into glorious liberty. Two great deliverances would at any rate be effected; we should be emancipated from self and sin. We should be lifted out of "the bondage of corruption." And we should have "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize."

And this liberty is to be shared by the whole creation. In some mysterious way creation is waiting for man to put on his beautiful garments before she herself can stand revealed in all her appointed glory. In some mysterious way nature is restrained and imprisoned because man is not full-grown.

There are amazing potencies in the natural world which will lie dormant until we become better men. Unknown beauties will troop out when we become the children of God. There is an unspeakable kinship between spirit and matter, between man and nature; the evolution of one awaits the unfolding of the other. As man becomes glorious nature herself is glorified.

---

* Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Prayer Answered, But . . .

SUNDAY, June 10. Rom. 1 : 10. "Making request that . . . I might come unto you." The apostle Paul had a great longing to visit Rome. He coveted the privilege of preaching the Gospel in the metropolis of the world. From Rome the story of grace might be radiated along the great highways to the ends of the earth. "After that I must visit Rome." "I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are in Rome also!" And so he prayed that his burning desire might be granted. And his prayer was answered, but in such a startlingly unexpected way. "When we came to Rome the centurion delivered the prisoners," and Paul was among them! He hoped to enter the imperial city an ambassador in glorious freedom; he entered it in bonds.

And so the prayer was answered, but it was answered in a very surprising way. The apostle arrived in Rome, but such an arrival had never entered into his dreams. He was a prisoner in bonds, but the word of God was not bound; and I suppose that if Paul had never been taken to Rome we should never have had the epistles of the captivity. The epistle to the Philippians, with all its mellow maturity of spiritual fruits, was born in bondage. And Colossians, with its glorious proclamation of the sole headship and mediatorship of Jesus Christ, was born in the same gloomy servitude. And what rare treasures there are in these and other letters, which we might never have known, had the inspired writer always been free! "In my distress Thou hast enlarged me." The experience of the psalmist was surely the experience of the apostle, and we enjoy the splendid fruit of his enlargement. Paul entered Rome in bonds, but in his bondage he sent forth letters which have enriched the world with infinite blessedness.

So that God may answer our prayers, but the answer may come in a quite extraordinary way. We get where we desire to be, but by God's own path. It might seem as though it would have been better for everybody if Paul had been in Rome and also been perfectly free. Yes, but I am not so sure that we should have had those immortal letters. What a life Paul would have lived had he been free to do whatever he pleased, and to go wherever he liked! It is notorious that when a man is made a bishop his days become so crowded that it is a rare thing for him to produce his greatest books! And who knows but that if this great apostle had had more temporary freedom we might have had less permanent fruit. Sometimes the Lord permits our seclusion in order that we may do a larger work. His merciful sight has long range, and that is why our immediate circumstances are often so contradictory to our aspiration and prayer. The Lord looks beyond the temporary bondage to the ultimate freedom.

"The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower." J. H. J.

The Constraint of Love

MONDAY, June 11. II Cor. 5 : 14. "For the love of Christ constraineth us." Next to a moral ideal, we need a spiritual uplift, a constant impulse prompting us to approach that ideal. Christianity affords provision for both these fundamental needs. In Jesus, "behold the Man." And as to the motive, the inward energy, the power not ourselves which we may make our own, whose operation in our lives brings us nearer and nearer daily to the mark of our high calling, is it not the love of Christ? This phrase has a threefold meaning: the love of Christ for us, our love for him, and his love in us. This it is that constraineth us. Constraint, however, is not coercion. It depends upon whether the constraining power be from without or from within. If the force be external we may resist it, but if it be a moral energy within ourselves we may gladly yield. Hunger constrains us to eat, but we do not need to be driven to the breakfast table. Love constrains a mother to minister to her household, and she becomes a willing servant all her days. Yet she is never so free as when she is serving those she loves. We sometimes speak of being "in duty bound" to do such and such things. Duty, conscience, faith, gratitude, affection, all bind us to do God's will. We are "captive, yet divinely free." C. C. A.

Freedom from Sin

TUESDAY, June 12. John 8 : 36. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." These words of Christ were spoken to correct a wrong meaning which the Jews had connected with his previous statement: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The Lord had not spoken of political liberty, as the Jews had wrongly understood him, but of essential liberty, a liberty that really is liberty. That is what the words in the original signify.

The freedom of which Jesus speaks is the freedom of the perfect man in Christ. The person who is not in bondage to ignorance, to passion, to lust, whose every power can exert itself in accordance with the great purposes for which it was bestowed by the Creator, and who in the exercise of his God-given knowledge, skill, strength of character, and love, freely chooses to serve God and his fellow man—he, he only is the truly free man. You may take away his physical liberty and throw him into a prison for speaking God's truth, as was done to the Christian martyrs; you may take away his social and political liberty, as was done to many a Christian slave in the early days of Christianity; but you cannot take away his essential liberty. His thought, the worship of his soul, his faith, cannot be chained and incarcerated. Freely his believing heart communicates with God and mingles its prayers with the myriad prayers of God's children the world over. That is a freedom worth having and striving for.

One hundred and forty-one years ago the founders of the North American Republic declared their independence from foreign rule and established a government on the basis of political liberty and equality. It was a noble act, worthy to be remembered for generations. It is proper that the event is commemorated every year. But even the freedom that was proclaimed from Liberty Hall must be hallowed to all its possessors by the greater freedom which only Jesus, the great Liberator of the race from its worst foes, sin, death, and the devil, can bestow. The happiest American is he who traces his liberty not only to the Declaration of Independence but also to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. W. H. T. D.

The Power of Choice

WEDNESDAY, June 13. Ruth 1 : 16. "Entreat me not to leave thee." Ruth, the loving daughter, clings to her mother-in-law Naomi because she is fascinated and charmed with a holy affection for the God of heaven and the people of his kingdom, whom Naomi has so devotedly represented in her life. Though a Moabitess, she forsook her own people for the worship of the God of Israel. She was called out of the Gentile world to enter the line of Christ's ancestry. Ruth and Naomi are thus united to each other closer than by family ties, becoming devoted lovers, like David and Jonathan.

When Boaz married Ruth, Naomi found a home for herself with the wealthy farmer. They are happy again together in one family. The baby, Obed, is to become the father of Jesse, and Jesse the father of King David, and Ruth becomes the ancestress of Christ; so that through her act of self-denial and devotion all the families of the earth are blessed.

How little we understand of the immense significance of a single, apparently unimportant decision. By Ruth's saying, "Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God," unspeakable joys came upon her own spirit and a world of wealth to posterity. Is it not so when we leave the company of evil persons and unite ourselves to the children of God? Think of the heirship to the wealth of heaven, of the citizenship of the saints in light. Let us then come out from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of Christ.

Is not the power of choice, next to the glory of existence, the greatest blessing heaven has conferred upon mortals? Every soul stands at the parting of the way, going upward or downward. How long halt we when we know the immense interests hanging in the balance of decision! E. W. C.

The Image of the Heavenly

THURSDAY, June 14. I Cor. 15 : 49. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Man is not what he was designed to be. Possibly we should say, man is not yet all he was designed to be. Whatever image we started with, something has happened to mar it, to deface the likeness. We still bear the image of the earthy. The mortal lies heavily upon us. The celestial likeness is thickly overlaid with terrestrial dust. The progress of the soul is by the elimination of the things which conceal the heavenly image, by the release of imprisoned spiritual faculties. The process of spiritual growth is really a process of sculpture, a carving, a consenting to be separated from some characteristics in order to acquire others. "As the marble wastes the statue grows." The strokes that shape us into the image of the heavenly, however much pain they cause us, are the strokes which release the imprisoned angel within us.

It makes all the difference in the world whether the strokes which cause us pain be those of blind chance, of hard and heartless fate, or of a heavenly hand which seeks to beautify the life it touches. A tree may well shrink from the blows of the ruthless woodsman, but welcome the pruning instruments of the trained forester. The late Bishop Warren in speaking of Francis Asbury once said, "In our eyes humanity is made up of so many rough blocks. In God's eyes there is an angel in each rough block, and it is the passion of Jesus Christ to bring that angel forth."
C. C. A.

Restored to Favor

FRIDAY, June 15. Hos. 14 : 4–6. "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him. I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon." Hours of penitence are rendered extremely bitter by the reflection that much that was good and beautiful in us has been irreparably lost by our sinning. This reflection ought not to subdue our joy over the pardon which our heavenly Father offers the returning sinner in his Gospel; for to be restored to God's favor is so great a blessing that all the ills which a man may have to suffer for his past sins cannot depreciate it. Still, the prospect of a blasted future may subdue the joy of the pardoned sinner and diminish his appreciation of the pardon. How cheering, then, must a text like this be to the penitent. God here promises not only forgiveness but restoration. He views apostasy as a physician does a disease: he proposes to heal it. Out of the old corruptions amid which the sinner had been decaying there shall spring a purity, beauty, fruitfulness, that is comparable to the chaste lily, a vigor, a perennial freshness that must be likened to the most valuable plant in the garden of an Israelite, the olive tree. The life of the sinner shall be made to exhale once more a fragrance like that which the delighted traveler breathes as he walks among the stately cedars on the heights of Lebanon. God will bring this great change about by the influences of his Holy Spirit and his sanctifying grace. He declares not only that he will freely love the returning sinner but that he will be as dew upon his sterile heart. The returning prodigal was not only forgiven but reinstated as a son on his father's estate. W. H. T. D.

The Love That Endures

SATURDAY, June 16. Phil. 1 : 7. "I have you in my heart." What a beautiful dwelling-place is a heart full of love! It is the holy of holies of friendship, fellowship and the rapturous tenderness and oneness of two souls. Loved ones gone away are enshrined in our hearts, and in the inner room are written the words, "Sacred to the memory of ——." Here we hold communion during the long period of separation. Paul thus wrote to his Philippian followers, having heard from them through Epaphroditus, who had come to visit him in the Roman prison. Love for one another, inspired by the love of Christ, is the holiest union of souls in God's family. True love never forgets, never forsakes, never surrenders the lover to enemies, whether it be the love of a patriot for his country, of a husband for his wife, of a child for a parent, of a minister for his flock, of a Saviour for his redeemed children. Loving remembrance often breaks out in holy song of thanksgiving to God because of hearts wedded together by his spirit. Love bears a world up to the throne of grace on the wings of prayer, that their love may abound more and more unto the coming of Jesus Christ. Love has telephonic powers, flashing messages and voices from soul to soul in an instant of time. Love means purity, sincerity, holiness and happiness forever.

What fruits of love grow on the Tree of Life in the human heart! Faith and hope blossom here. No wonder we love to hide in hearts; it is a pavilion of splendor, a secret place, under the shadow of wings. Hearts that can say "I have the Saviour in my soul" are a refuge for the friendship of others.
E. W. C.

Waiting Upon God

IN these days of stress and struggle, when all the world is in turmoil and the burdens of life press very heavily, the weary heart finds refreshment and solace in waiting upon God. His word is rich with promise for those who "trust" in him. Perhaps the most precious of the promises at such times as these we are now passing through is the promise of the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, who will be with us "always" and will abide with us and in us. I would urge all of the Christian Herald Family Circle to be much with God these days, that they may be strengthened to do his work and to receive the blessing that comes from the presence of the Comforter. F. A. M.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The Christian Herald in Congress

IN COMMON with many other reputable publications, the Christian Herald, for the last few weeks, has been using its influence with Senators and Congressmen trying to persuade them not to enact legislation which would so increase the cost of production that many publications would literally be put out of business. We refer, of course, to the just announced increase in the Second-Class mailing rate, which for many years has been one cent a pound for papers delivered to any part of the United States. It has been enacted by the House of Representatives that the Christian Herald, in common with these other publications, shall pay a rate based on a zone system which, instead of one cent a pound in all parts of the country, will range from 1⅛ cents a pound in the first zone to 6 cents a pound in the eighth zone.

Inasmuch as the business of publications having a national circulation has been predicated on one cent, and as the mailing cost of sending such publications through the mail is already thousands of dollars a year each, it will be clearly seen how this tremendous raise will literally confiscate many reputable publications. Some of the big ones like the Christian Herald may survive, but many of the smaller ones will be unable to do so. The Christian Herald itself now costs $39,000.00 a year to mail. If the new rate is approved by the Senate and becomes a law, it will cost the Christian Herald at least $127,750.00 to mail the publication, a prohibitory rate which we would be unable to stand unless we asked our subscribers to pay an extra price for their subscriptions.

Not all of the Congressmen were in favor of such a raise and the Christian Herald, in particular, was made the subject of much speechmaking on the floor of the House of Representatives both by those members who wished to class it as an ordinary publication, and by those who felt that its inspirational character and its influence for good entitled it to special consideration.

Congressmen Henry T. Rainey of Illinois, in the course of using it as an illustration of why rates should be raised, spoke of it as follows:

"It carries valuable matter to all parts of the United States. It carries some advertising; not as much as a paper of its standing ought to carry; but if the culture and the morality and the patriotism of the people of this country are what I think they are and that they ought to be in this hour of national peril, if this company does not feel like giving up its profits and reorganizing this paper on a basis not for profit, I believe the people of this country would be willing to pay for a paper of this character and standing more than they now pay. The Christian Herald is an institution in the land. People are willing to pay what it costs to bring it to their homes, and those people who are unwilling to pay that do not reach to the Christian standard which the readers of a paper of this character ought to attain."

This is all very well, but Congressman Rainey apparently does not know that our people have already been asked to pay more on account of the higher cost of paper, and he does not know that, in spite of that raise in the subscription price, the Christian Herald has not managed more than to come out even in the last eight months.

By Congressman Rainey's own admission, the Christian Herald is "an institution in the land" which, in the opinion of all fair-minded persons, ought to be fostered and helped in its endeavor to bring spiritual solace to the members of the Christian Herald Family, and physical comfort to the suffering peoples of the world. This last function was very pointedly called to the attention of the Committee on Finance of the U. S. Senate by Prof. James W. Linn of Chicago University at a special hearing on May 15th, when he said:

"I am not going to say more than a word about the tremendous amount of real information, real education that the magazines and newspapers give. Shut off the farm journals, as these proposed rates would shut them off, and you decrease the productive power of this country by millions of dollars. Shut off the trade journals and you decrease the manufacturing power of this country by many more millions. Shut off such a journal as the Christian Herald and you shut off an agency that has raised over $4,000,000 for charitable and religious organizations in ten years, and that in so doing has enormously increased the interest of the people in giving, which is one of the things that democracy absolutely has to learn the value of."

Of course the bill is not yet a law. It has passed the House of Representatives but it must pass the Senate before it is made final. At the present time it is in charge of the Senate Finance Committee, which is considering whether it shall be recommended to the Senate as formulated in the House, or whether there shall be modifications, or whether the Christian Herald shall be continued at the same postage rate which it has enjoyed since it was founded.

It is absolutely vital that the Senators be impressed with the necessity for not increasing the present postal rate for the Christian Herald. Write the two Senators from your own State and tell them what the Christian Herald means to you. If you do not know their names, ask the editor of your local paper, who will also acquaint you with facts similar to the above which affect his own paper. Do this at once, addressing your two Senators care of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C. If the bill goes through as now proposed by the House, the Christian Herald will, in very self-defense, be forced to raise its subscription price, not once but several times, for the increases in the present bill are to be made in three sections; the first to go into effect July 1st, the second to go into effect November 1st, and the third to go into effect March 1, 1918. Write to-day. There is no time to lose.

The Liberty Loan

IN THE Liberty Loan the government has opened a way by which the wage-earners can bear their share of the burden of financing the war without feeling the duty an oppressive one. Liberty Loan bonds can be bought of banks, department stores, express companies, and in a wide variety of places. You can purchase them either for cash down or on the instalment plan. All that is needed is to fill out a subscription blank and pay for a $50 bond $1 down, then four instalments during July and August, making up the total. For a $100 bond instalments are double. The bonds themselves are delivered to the purchaser when the last instalment is paid. They bear 3½ per cent. interest, and are exempt from all taxes, except inheritance. In order that the Liberty Loan may be made available to all classes, it is planned to issue bonds in denominations as low as $10, which will be placed on sale in department stores and other places of similar character.

Every holder of a Liberty bond is a creditor of the United States, and he or she has the satisfaction of knowing that the security is the soundest to be found anywhere in the world. Liberty bondholders are receiving practically savings-bank interest for their money, and, moreover, they are "doing their bit" toward financing the war and directly helping the government.

It is perhaps true, as some have claimed, that the loan would have found far more takers in the business community at the outset if Congress, in making up its war tax schedules, had imposed a somewhat lighter burden on business than it did. Even so conservative a journal as the New York Evening Post has pointed out that while such a policy may have appealed to sentiment, nevertheless if it threatened to endanger other fiscal operations and to impair our capacity to finance the war effectively, it was unwise. But the Liberty Loan, apart from all other considerations, is essentially the loan of the common people.

Democracy in Ireland

THE AMERICAN demand for world-wide democracy has its sudden if not surprising first result in Ireland. Timely pressure from Washington, no less than other exigencies of the war conditions, has led the British government to make to Ireland the greatest concession ever known in the history of that long-suffering people.

What is offered to Ireland is nothing short of a constitution of Ireland's own making. To this end a convention of Irishmen is to be held at once. All sections, classes, parties, factions and creeds, with clergymen and laymen and even revolutionists, are invited to take part. If there is or can be such a thing as a united Ireland, its demands will soon be known.

David Lloyd George, the British Prime Minister, in announcing to the House of Commons this convention call, declared that if Irishmen are able to agree upon any scheme for the administration of their country, every effort will be made by the British government to enact it into legislation without delay.

There has been one thing common to the failure of all attempts to arrive at a settlement of the Irish question, as Mr. Lloyd George pointed out—that the proposals had emanated from a British government. Hitherto Great Britain has undertaken all the construction and Ireland all the criticism. Once Irishmen are confronted with the problem, they will give due weight to the obstacles and difficulties.

The world will rejoice with an Ireland free to determine its own government. It will still further rejoice if Ireland demonstrates her ability to govern herself with wisdom, justice, peace and happiness.

The Big Drive Against Alcohol

HOPEFUL progress is being made in the national fight to abolish alcohol during the war. On all sides there is a lining up of the forces of temperance. In New York, pastors of all denominations chose Sunday, June 3, to signalize the participation of the churches in a state-wide anti-liquor movement, with sermons calculated to stimulate the churchgoing public to use their influence in behalf of rigid temperance legislation. Preachers in other states not yet in the "dry" column are following their example. Petitions signed by thousands are pouring into Congress, urging the passage of a prohibitory law to the end of the war, both to conserve food products now used in the manufacture of alcoholic drinks, including beer, and for the sake of morals and efficiency in the army and navy. One of the most significant indications of the narrowing territory in which "booze" has now the right of way is found in an official bulletin issued by the Postmaster-General, which indicates the states and parts of states in which, after certain dates next year, no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of intoxicating liquors will be sent through the mails, without subjecting the publisher, or the liquor dealer or his agent, to criminal prosecution and making the offender punishable by $1,000 fine and a term of imprisonment. The list shows that liquor advertising and solicitation by mail are absolutely unlawful in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia. The prohibition also applies to two counties in Delaware and considerably more than 100 towns in Connecticut. The same law becomes effective in Utah in August next, and in Indiana, Michigan, Montana and New Hampshire in 1918. Added to these states are four others, Rhode Island, Texas, Maryland and Ohio, which are also measurably dry, although the data are incomplete. As was anticipated, the brewers and distillers are making a stubborn fight, but they evidently feel that it is a forlorn hope. Congress has it within its power to perform a great national service by making a clean job of it.

Politeness Pays

WE ARE too apt to regard politeness as a mere veneer. The pleasant smile, the spirit of helpfulness, the ready sacrifice, are not of the exterior alone.

A good manner, like the good-nature that is a part of it, is not a thing to be thrown on and off with a dress coat or a fine gown. It is of the man or woman, as the aroma is of the rose.

The polite man is at a tremendous advantage. He can win favor and fortune under circumstances where the loose-mannered and slovenly-spirited is left to grumble in failure. It is not altogether because of the surface politeness; it is chiefly because of the sterling character that lies back of it and gives it force and effect.

Politeness is good capital in any business. A Cleveland street-car conductor has proved it so, and so has every other man who ever made good manners a permanent part of his equipment. This conductor gave a little better service than he was supposed to be paid for. He was careful of the safety and comfort of the children, the women, the old men and the cripples who rode on his car. He met querulous complaints with pleasant smiles and kindly words. He collected no more fares for the company than any other conductor; he was no more efficient and faithful in other respects, perhaps, than hundreds of his fellows. But, somehow, that one advantage was sufficient to distinguish him above others. He came to be selected for special runs where courtesy was of particular importance. And now he has been made a claim-adjuster, and his politeness is at a heavy premium. His kindness to others was unconscious kindness to himself.

Politeness pays. It attracts friends and good fortune. It is a well-spring of good wishes. It creates about a man an atmosphere in which "luck" likes to linger.

Many a man who is afraid of a jackrabbit by moonlight thinks he was cut out for a lion-slayer.

How discouraged Satan would be if the majority of Christians were as consecrated and loyal as are a few!

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Friend of Indians Dead

IN the removal by death of Bishop William D. Walker of the Diocese of Western New York, recently, the Protestant Episcopal Church loses one of its best leaders and the American Indians one of their truest friends. For thirteen years, Bishop Walker was a home missionary in the West, and in his frontier work he built churches and organized societies for Indians exclusively. To the study of the various tribes he devoted much time, and on account of his work for their uplift President Cleveland appointed him one of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and Theodore Roosevelt, when governor, appointed him to investigate the condition of the Indians of New York State. During his Western service, Bishop Walker conceived the idea of his famous "cathedral car," a railway vehicle fitted with sanctuary appointments and equipped with seats for seventy-five persons. Since that time his idea has been in vogue in all parts of the world where missionary work is done. Oxford University conferred the degree of D.D. and Trinity College, Dublin, that of LL.D. upon Bishop Walker. And yet his highest honor was the general recognition of his services in behalf of those who need the Gospel most, and especially in behalf of the defrauded and oppressed red man. Vestments and imposing religious services and official authority are mockeries, unless there be in them this simple, sincere love for the poor and neglected, and the soul-consuming desire to bring them to Christ. College degrees and ecclesiastical authority, though well enough in their place, are trifling when compared with the divine decoration that awaits the one who has turned many to righteousness, and who now "shines as the stars forever and ever." What the apostle said of another can be said of the one who has been translated: he was "a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord." (Eph. 6 : 21.)

A Baby Parade

THE other day there was a baby's parade on the East Side of New York, in the interest of the physical betterment of babies. The babies rode in state as befitted their station. One banner demanded that the sun be kept out of baby's eyes, and another cried, "Give baby Grade A milk." One group of babies followed a banner which read, "We are Bellevue Babies." The parade traversed many of the streets of the East Side, and was headed by a division of little girls from eight to twelve years of age, dressed as Red Cross nurses. A push cart carrying a Japanese, an Italian and one or two other babies was covered by a Japanese umbrella bearing around its edge pendent mottoes in Italian. There were many perambulators in the procession. What wonderful progress has been made in the care of child-life! Until recently, the physical condition of the young of the lower animals was more carefully guarded than that of the babies and the boys and girls. Our national and state governments bestowed more money and time on finding cures for the diseases of pigs, lambs, calves and colts, and on the kind of food and housing best for them, than on the health or growth or comfort of the child. What splendid improvements have been made in the tenement house laws compelling more light and air, better water and sewerage, and in the boards of health requiring pure milk for babies and pure food for the older children! The Greeks and Romans in the period of their greatest enlightenment sought out the weak and defective babies and children who could not make good soldiers, and put them to death, sometimes by leaving them to be destroyed by the weather or by beasts, and sometimes by the more merciful method of taking them by the heels and dashing their brains out against a tree. At this time there still are millions in heathen lands who count girl babies as worthless, and the mothers wonder what awful sin they have committed that they should be cursed with the birth of a girl. Jewish law gave the child an honored place in the family and society. It was Christ who revolutionized the thought of the world on the treatment of children. One of the most eloquent scenes ever enacted on this planet is that in which he took a poor helpless little child in his arms of love and pressed it to his heart as he said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." (Mark 10 : 14.)

Life of Chain Lengthened

BESIDES the screeching noise of an iron chain worked in a pulley in lifting or lowering heavy articles, there is the cutting of the chain to pieces rapidly by the friction of the process. It has been found, recently, that this trouble can be greatly lessened by twining a hemp rope in and out of the links; this will lengthen the life of the chain 70 per cent. After paying the cost of the hemp rope used, there will be a saving from one-fifth to one-third of the price of a new iron chain. It is the friction of human life that cuts it short. It is its worries and heavy burdens that grind the links of the chain and break it. Worry kills more people than work, which, in reason, is wholesome; but overwork grinds the links thin and snaps them. A strong will and a cool philosophy will help some. Jesus alone can remedy the difficulty. He has come to wrap the iron links with the softer cord of love, to reduce the worries and overburdens of earth to a minimum. When fortune flies and the mistress of the mansion suddenly becomes the scrubwoman of the hovel; when father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister or sweet child goes away from us because God and the angels wanted them, we would have collapsed and possibly died had not Christ covered the screeching links of the iron chain with the soft twine of his love. This magical cord never can be broken, not even by the rude hand of death. This comfort and this immortality are taught in these words: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions." (John 14 : 1, 2.)

Enormous Coal Supply

FROM authentic statistics just reported, it is learned that the United States furnishes nearly one-half of the annual production of coal in the world. Of the 1,500,000,000 tons produced in the average year, the United States furnishes 38 per cent., Great Britain 21 per cent., Germany 20 per cent., Austria, Hungary, France, Russia, Italy, Belgium and Japan producing the other 12 per cent. Most all other nations exercise government control of the coal trade. Great Britain only recently took charge of the coal mines and their product. In 1913 the United States produced 570,000,000 short tons; in 1914, 513,000,000 tons; in 1915, 517,000,000, and in 1916, estimation by the Coal Trade Journal at 608,000,000, the greatest in its history. In the estimation of the available world supply of coal the United States stands first, and nearly equal to all the rest of the nations put together, at 3,538,500,000,000 tons out of a total of 7,397,533,000,000 for the whole world, China coming next in available supply at 1,500,000,000,000 tons. What a provident Creator to lay up in storehouse these beds of coal with their heat- and light-producing energy for the use of future generations! And how prodigal he has been in the supply of coal and every other needed mineral with our own beloved nation for its usefulness and happiness, and for the establishment of the Kingdom of his Son! And what corresponding obligations are on us individuals, as citizens of the commonwealth and members of the church! The coal fields of the world are vegetable deposits. They once grew as grass and trees and other plants, and God pressed them down and packed them away for his children for future generations. The Hebrews used the vegetation out of which coal is made in the dry grass and sticks of wood for fuel for heating their ovens and for other purposes. God's providence in storing up the coal-fields, and the heating property of the vegetation from which he made them, are included in this statement of Christ: "Wherefore, if God so clothes the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" (Matt. 6 : 30.)

Fresh Sea Water

THERE are springs of fresh water in the bottom of the ocean. There are some on the coast of France that send the stream up to the surface and the fishermen dip it into barrels. The island of Moharek, in the Persian Gulf, gets its drinking-water supply from similar springs. Divers plunge into the ocean, fill goatskin bags with the fresh water, and empty it into casks. Water is the symbol of life. Fresh drinking-water Christ thus used as a type of his saving love: "But the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." (John 4 : 14.)

House Built of Straw

A LOGAN County, Colorado, farmer has literally built a house of straw, but built it in so substantial a manner that it makes a very comfortable home for himself and family. Bales of cement-covered straw were laid like blocks of stone for the walls, with concrete on the inside and out. The house is 48 by 18 feet in size, has six rooms, and bears the appearance of a concrete building. Spaces were left in the thick walls for windows. The inside walls and ceiling are plastered, and the house has a shingle roof. It cost but $270, exclusive of labor, and furnishes a comfortable habitation. The ancients used straw mixed with clay in the manufacture of building material. It was one of the principal complaints of the children of Israel against the Egyptians that they were compelled to make bricks without straw—a necessary ingredient in a durable product. This it was that broke the patience of the Hebrews and led to the Exodus. This imperial order was the "last straw" that did the work: "Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore." (Ex. 5 : 7.)

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER X—Continued

By Advice of Counsel

IT was in this softened, exalted state of mind that Helen rose the next morning and proceeded to begin the carrying-out of her vows, by essaying the almost hopeless task (with Bridget's not over-cheerful assistance) of putting into spotless order the entire apartment.

At two o'clock, when Burke's letter came, she was utterly weary and almost sick; but she was still in the softened, exalted state of the early morning.

With a wondering, half-frightened little cry at sight of the familiar writing, she began to read. John Denby's check for ten thousand dollars had fallen into her lap unnoticed.

"MY dear Helen [she read]: First let me apologize for flying off the handle the way I did last night. I shouldn't have done it. But, do you know, I believe I'm glad I did—for it's taught me something. Maybe you've discovered it, too. It's this: you and I have been getting on each other's nerves, lately. We need a rest from each other.

"Now, don't bristle up and take it wrong, my dear. Just be sensible and think. How many times a day do we snap and snarl at each other? You're tired and half sick with the work and the baby. I'm tired and half sick with my work, and we're always rubbing each other the wrong way. That's why I think we need a vacation from each other. And dad has made it possible for us to take one. He wants me to go to Alaska with him on a little trip. I want to go, of course. Then, too, I think I ought to go. Dad needs me. Not that he is old, but he is just getting over an illness, and his head bothers him a lot. I can be of real use to him.

"At his own suggestion he is sending you the enclosed check. He wants you to accept it with his best wishes for a pleasant vacation. He suggests—and I echo him—that it would be a fine idea if you should take the baby and go back to your home town for a visit. I know your father and mother are not living; but there must be some one there whom you would like to visit. Or, better yet, now that you have the means, you would probably prefer a good hotel for headquarters, and then make short visits to all your friends. It would do you worlds of good, and Baby, too.

"And now—I'm writing this instead of coming to tell it face to face, because I believe it's the best way. I'll be frank. After last night, we might say things when we first met that we'd be sorry for. And I don't want that to happen. So I'm going to stay up here for a day or two.

"Let me see—today is Friday. We are due to leave next Wednesday. I'll be down the first of the week to say good-by and pick up my traps. Meanwhile, chicken, you'll be all right with Bridget there; and just you put your wits to work and go to planning out that vacation of yours, and how you're going to spend the money. Then you can be ready to tell me all about it when I come down.

"Your affectionate husband, Burke."

HELEN'S first feeling, upon finishing the note, was one of utter stupefaction. With a dazed frown and a low ejaculation she turned the letter over and began to read it again—more slowly. This time she understood. But her thoughts were still in a whirl of surprised disbelief. Then, gradually, came a measure of conviction.

Fresh from her vigils of the night before, with its self-accusations and its heroic resolutions, she was so chastened and softened that there was more of grief than of anger in her first outburst.

She began to cry a little wildly.

Burke was going away. He wanted to go. He said they—they got on each other's nerves. He said they needed a vacation from each other. Needed one! As if they did! It wasn't that. It was his father's idea. She knew it. It was all his fault! But he was going—Burke was. He said he was. There would not be any chance now to show him the daintily gowned wife welcoming her husband home to a well-kept house. There would not be any chance to show how she had changed. There would not be——

But there would be—after he came back.

Helen stopped sobbing, and caught her breath with a new hope in her eyes. Dorothy Elizabeth began to cry, and Helen picked her up and commenced to rock her.

Of course there would be time after he came back. And, after all, might it not be the wisest thing, to be away from each other for a time? Why, even this little while—a single night of Burke's being gone—had shown her where she stood!—had shown her where it was all leading to! Of course it was the best way, and Burke had seen it. It was right that he should go. And had they not provided for her? She was to go—There was a check somewhere——

Burrowing in her lap under Dorothy Elizabeth's warm little body, Helen dragged forth an oblong bit of crumpled paper. Carefully she spread it flat. The next moment her eyes flew wide open.

One thousand dollars! No, ten thousand! It couldn't be! But it was. Ten thousand dollars! And she had been scolding and blaming them, when all the time they had been so generous! And it really was the best way, too, that they should be apart for a while. It would give her a chance to adjust herself and practice—and it would need some practice if she were really going to be that daintily gowned young wife welcoming her husband to a well-kept home! And with ten thousand dollars! What couldn't they get with ten thousand dollars?

Dorothy Elizabeth, at that moment, emitted a sharp, frightened cry. For how was Dorothy Elizabeth both to know that the spasmodic pressure that so hurt her was really only a ten-thousand-dollar hug of joy?

IN less than half an hour, Helen, leaving the baby with Bridget, had sought Mrs. Cobb. She could keep her good news no longer.

"I came to tell you. I'm going away—Baby and I," she announced joyously. "We're going next week."

"You don't say so! But you don't mean you're goin' away ter live?"

"Oh, no. Just for a visit to my old home town where I was born—only 'twill be a good long one. You see, we need a rest and a change so much—Baby and I do." There was a shade of importance in voice and manner.

"That you do!" exclaimed Mrs. Cobb, with emphasis. "An' I'm glad you're goin'. But, sakes alive, I'm goin' to miss ye, child!"

"I shall miss you, too," beamed Helen cordially.

"How long you goin' ter be gone?"

"I don't know, exactly. It'll depend, some, on Burke—I mean Mr. Denby—when he wants me to come back."

"Oh, ain't he goin', too?" An indefinable change came to Mrs. Cobb's voice.

"Oh, no, not with us," smiled Helen. "He's going to Alaska."

"To—Alaska! An', pray, what's he chasin' off to a heathen country like that for?"

"'Tisn't heathen—Alaska isn't," flashed Helen, vaguely irritated without knowing why. "Heathen countries are—are always hot. Alaska's cold. Isn't Alaska up north—to the pole, 'most? It used to be, when I went to school."

"Maybe 'tis; but that ain't sayin' why he's goin' there, instead of with you," retorted Mrs. Cobb. In spite of the bantering tone in which this was uttered, disapproval was plainly evident in Mrs. Cobb's voice.

"He's going with his father," answered Helen, with some dignity.

"His father! Humph!"

This time the disapproval was so unmistakably evident that Helen flamed into prompt defense, in righteous, wifely indignation.

"I don't know why you speak like that, Mrs. Cobb. Hasn't he got a right to go with his father, if he wants to? Besides, his father needs him. Burke says he does."

"And you don't need him, I s'pose," flamed Mrs. Cobb, in her turn, nettled that her sympathetic interest should meet with so poor a welcome. "Of course it's none of my business, Mis' Denby, but it seems a shame to me for him ter let you an' the baby go off alone like this, an' so I spoke right out. I always speak right out—what I think."

HELEN flushed angrily. However much she might find fault with her husband herself, she suddenly discovered a strong disinclination to allowing any one else to do so. Besides, now, when he and his father had been so kind and generous—! She had not meant to tell Mrs. Cobb of the ten-thousand-dollar check, lest it lead to unpleasant questioning as to why it was sent. But now, in the face of Mrs. Cobb's unjust criticism, she flung caution aside.

"You're very kind," she began, a bit haughtily; "but, you see, this time you have made a slight mistake. I don't think it's a shame at all for him to go away with his father who needs him; and you won't, when you know what they've sent me. They sent me a check this afternoon for ten thousand dollars."

"Ten—thousand—dollars!"

"Yes," bowed Helen, with a triumphant "I-told-you-so" air, as Mrs. Cobb's eyes seemed almost to pop out of her head. "They sent it this very afternoon."

"For the land's sake!" breathed Mrs. Cobb. Then, as her dazed wits began to collect themselves, a new look came to her eyes. "They sent it?" she cried.

"By special messenger—yes," bowed Helen, again importantly.

"But how funny to send it, instead of bringing it himself—your husband, I mean."

Too late Helen saw her mistake. In a panic, now, lest unpleasant truths be discovered, she assumed an especially light, cheerful manner.

"Oh, no, I don't think it was funny a bit. He—he wanted it a surprise, I guess. And he wrote—a letter, you know. A lovely letter, all about what a good time Baby and I could have with the money."

THE suspicion in Mrs. Cobb's eyes became swift conviction. An angry red stained her cheeks—but it was not anger at Helen. That was clearly to be seen.

"Look-a-here, Mis' Denby," she began resolutely, "I'm a plain woman, an' I always speak right out. An' I'm your friend, too, an' I ain't goin' ter stand by an' see you made a fool of, an' not try ter lift a hand ter help. There's somethin' wrong here. If you don't know it, it's time you did. If you do know it, an' are tryin' ter keep it from me, you might just as well stop right now, an' turn round and tell me all about it. As I said before, I'm your friend, an'—if it's what I think it is—you'll need a friend, you poor little thing! Now, what is it?"

Helen shook her head feebly. Her face went from white to red, and back again to white. Still determined to keep her secret if possible, she made a brave attempt to regain her old airiness of manner.

"Why, Mrs. Cobb, it's nothing—nothing at all!"

Mrs. Cobb exploded into voluble wrath.

"Nothin', is it?—when a man goes kitin' off ter Alaska, an' sendin' his wife ten thousand dollars ter go somewheres else in the opposite direction! Maybe you think I don't know what that means. But I do! And he's tryin' ter play a mean, snivelin' trick on ye, an' I ain't goin' ter stand for it. I never did like him, with all his fine, lordly airs, a-thinkin' himself better than anybody else what walked the earth. But if I can help it, I ain't goin' ter see you cheated out of your just deserts."

"Mrs. Cobb!" expostulated the dismayed, dumbfounded wife; but Mrs. Cobb had yet more to say.

"I tell you they're rich—them Denbys be—rich as mud; an' as for pokin' you off with a measly ten thousand dollars, they shan't—an' you with a baby ter try ter bring up an' edyercate. The idea of your standin' for a separation with only ten thousand——"

"Separation!" interrupted Helen indignantly, as soon as she could find her voice. "It isn't a separation. Why, we never thought of such a thing;—not for—for always, the way you mean it."

"What is it, then?"

"Why, it's just a—a playday," stammered Helen, still trying to cling to the remnant of her secret. "He said it was a playday—that I was to go off and have a good time with Baby."

"If it's just a playday, why didn't he give it to you ter take it tergether, then? Tell me that!"

"Why, he—he's going with his father."

"You bet he is," retorted Mrs. Cobb grimly. "An' he's goin' ter keep with his father, too."

"What do you mean?" Helen's lips were very white.

Mrs. Cobb gave an impatient gesture.

"Look a-here, child, do you think I'm blind? Don't ye s'pose I know how you folks have been gettin' along tergether?—or, rather, not gettin' along tergether? Don't ye s'pose I know how he acts as if you wasn't the same breed o' cats with him?"

"Then you've seen—I mean, you think he's—ashamed of me?" faltered Helen.

"Think it! I know it," snapped Mrs. Cobb, ruthlessly freeing her mind, regardless of the very evident suffering on her listener's face; "an' it's just made my blood boil. Time an' again I've thought of speakin' up an' tellin' ye I jest wouldn't stand it, if I was you. But I didn't. I ain't no hand ter butt in where it don't concern me. But ter see you so plumb fooled with that ten thousand dollars I jest can't stand it no longer. I had ter speak up. Turnin' you off with a beggarly ten thousand dollars—an' them with all that money! Bah!"

"But, Mrs. Cobb, maybe he's coming back," stammered Helen faintly, with white lips.

"Pshaw! So maybe the sun'll rise in the west termorrer," scoffed Mrs. Cobb; "but I ain't pullin' down my winder shades for it yet. No, he won't come back—ter you, Mis' Denby."

"But he—he don't say it's for—for all time."

"'Course he don't. But, ye see, he thinks he's lettin' ye down easy—a-sendin' ye that big check, an' tellin' ye ter take a playday. He don't want ye

Continued on page 647

How to Be Less Than a Man

A Sermon by Evangelist W. A. Sunday. Preached in the Big Tabernacle, New York, May 27, 1917 *

TEXT—Joshua 24 : 15. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

I MIGHT have named my sermon, "It's Up to You," for that's exactly what the words of my text mean. Choice determines almost everything in your life. If the devil is more powerful, serve him. If you would rather serve him than God, choose him and go to hell. When God puts the proposition up to you, choose whether you'll be a man or a mutt.

These words of my text are the words of Joshua, the successor to Moses. Moses was a great man. Moses was a great leader. He led the horde of Jews out of Egypt, where for years they had made bricks without straw and had bared their backs to the lash of the taskmasters, and with pillar of fire by night and of cloud by day, he led them to the promised land.

Moses was the great lawgiver and the precepts he handed down are the basis for the jurisprudence of every civilized nation on the face of the globe. He was a great organizer and has never been excelled; but God wouldn't let him go into the land of Canaan because he disobeyed when he struck the rock.

Joshua was his successor. His life was almost over when he called the people to him and rehearsed to them what God had done for them and said: "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Choose whether you will serve God, who has done so much by feeding you manna, going before you in a cloud and in a pillar of fire and who has made your sandals and garments not to wear out, or whether you will worship the golden idols of other nations.

And right here I'd like to appeal to your manhood, whether you will worship God or the devil, or some little nonentity of earth. Man has been defined as a "rational animal." I don't know about this. Let me dig down through the rubbish and beer bottles and find that in a man which has not been defiled by sin.

Man doesn't surely reason when he refuses to accept Christ. A man is a moral idiot to refuse to see that it is a reasonable thing to do right and that it is unreasonable to do wrong; that it is unreasonable to get drunk and reasonable to be sober; unreasonable to cuss and reasonable to pray. Man uses his reason when he accepts that which will get him to heaven, and he doesn't when he goes to hell. I want to appeal to your reason, men.

YOU can't define man. Avoirdupois doesn't make a man. He is not a man because he weighs two hundred pounds and stands six feet two. Some men remind me of the signs you see in a butcher shop: "Dressed Pork" and "Dressed Beef," great, big, hoggy fellows, so fat they can hardly walk. No, sir! It takes something more than avoirdupois to make a man.

Alexander H. Stephens, ex-vice-president of the Confederacy, was noted for his keen wit in debate. There wasn't a man in the Senate but what hated the thought of crossing Stephens in debate. During his last term he had to be wheeled to and from the Senate in a chair. One day Bob Toombs, of Georgia, was on the opposite side of the question, and Stephens said something which Toombs didn't like, and Toombs came over and leaning over his chair said: "Stephens, I could eat you alive." Quick as a flash Stephens retorted: "If you did, you'd have more brains in your belly than you ever had in your head." Then old Bob tried to hedge, and he said: "I haven't had the opportunities that you have had. I'm a self-made man." Stephens came back with: "Then that relieves God of a wonderful responsibility."

Jesus Christ came to reveal God to man and to reveal man to man. Jesus came to show what kind of a man He wants you to be. Only as you strive to reach the high ideals will you be a man. To try to live in his teachings is reasonable. To shut your eyes is foolishness. If you want an introduction to yourself as God wants you to be, look to Jesus.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

MOST any man can give an excuse for not being a Christian, but I have never met one yet who could give a reason. A reason is suitable grounds to prove your side of it, and an excuse is just saying something. An excuse will not save your soul from hell, and no one can give a reason.

The nearest any one ever came to giving me a reason was a young man in Troy, N. Y. I asked him if he was a Christian and he said he was not. I asked him if he believed in God. He said yes. He said he believed in God, in the Word of God, in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, in salvation for those who will repent, in a heaven for the saved and a hell for the lost, and that if a person didn't repent he would go to hell. I asked him then why he wasn't a Christian. He said: "Bill, I'll tell you. I'm not man enough to be a Christian."

Do you know why a lot of you haven't been down here? You're not man enough. I throw it in your teeth; you're not man enough! You haven't the nerve to go home and say to your wife: "I've given my heart to Christ." You're not man enough to go home and call the children to you and let them hear your voice in prayer. You're not man enough to go home and ask the blessing. You're not man enough to go to your clerks and tell them you have given your heart to Jesus Christ.

You haven't the nerve to go to that girl you have asked to be your wife, and who, God permitting, will be the mother of your children, and to put your arm around her and say: "I've given my heart to Christ and we'll lock arms and go to glory together." You're not man enough to take your stand and go home and send a telegram to your old mother, if she is in a distant city, reading: "Your prayers have been answered."

You're not man enough to go tell the members of your lodge you have taken Christ. You're not man enough to be a Christian. I hurl it in your dirty teeth. You're not man enough to be a Christian. No man can be a man unless he is a Christian. If you want to be a man be a Christian. You're not a man just because you wear whiskers and breeches.

Therefore, if you want to be less than a man, go to hell. If you want to be a man, go to heaven. No man can be saved unless he is a man. No man can be a Christian unless he is a man, and no man is a man unless he is a Christian. So if you would be a man, serve the Lord.

BUT one said: "Bill, I'd like to be a Christian, but then they would laugh at me." I'll admit some people will laugh at you. But listen. Any one that would laugh at a man for wanting to be a Christian, any man that would laugh at a man after he was a Christian, any man that would sneer to prevent a man from being a Christian is so unmanly and damnable and lowdown that I wouldn't speak to him. He's not deserving of the name of a man. And a man that is a man will tell you it is the manliest thing you ever did.

There are queer ideas of manhood. Some think that physical strength makes a man. Look at old Samson; he could carry away the gates of Gaza and could slay the Philistines with the jawbone of an ass, but he laid his head on the lap of that miserable woman and was shorn of all his strength.

She was on the limited express that swept him to ruin. You are not a man if you crawl into the arms of a wicked woman. I tell you, physical strength doesn't make a man.

Intelligence doesn't make a man. Bacon in all of his intelligence was led down the hill in the debtors' chains. He accepted a bribe of £400 to decide a case when he was Lord Chancellor. Intelligence doesn't make a man.

Look at Aaron Burr. He passed the examination and became a member of the sophomore class at Princeton when he was only thirteen years old. At sixteen he was a graduate and was the valedictorian of his class. Look at him. He just missed being President by one vote, and was Vice-President. Yet he died friendless.

Fast living doesn't make a man. Don't think that you are a man because you can drink all the others under the table and take the collars off more mugs of beer than any other in the crowd. That doesn't make you a man.

"I EXPECT to be a Christian some day." Some think it is manly to put it off. Some men cherish the idea that they can keep their lives under their own control until the last moment and then think they can take one sip of the water of life and swing into glory. They think they can drain the cup of life to the last dregs and then present their dirty carcasses to God. They think they can live their lives for the devil and just before death have a preacher slip them through to glory.

Is that your idea of manhood? It's not mine. I say: "God, I'll do my best now." And those that wait this way will be disappointed.

I suppose there are some men who have been so busy all of their lives that they have never taken the time to think and meditate over these things. If they had they would have accepted. Then when they are on their deathbed they have time to meditate and accept Christ.

If you haven't been to church in years, if you have never been inside of church and never prayed, you will get enough light out of this one sermon to damn you if you don't accept.

I don't care how you look at it: it pays to trot square with God Almighty.

A newspaper containing one of Moody's sermons fell into the hands of a hardened old burglar and safe cracker once. He read something in it he didn't like, and threw it down. He picked it up again, interested, and when he read the sermon through, he fell on his knees and gave his heart to Christ. That man was Valentine Burke, who, from the time he got out till the time of his death, did great good telling the story of his experiences.

Sam Jones had been billed to speak in St. Louis once, but he had been taken ill suddenly, and the ministers of the committee were tearing their hair to try to find a substitute. They sent for Burke, and his stories of his early life and of his conversion thrilled them through and through.

Just before Burke was released from his last prison term the officials seemed to doubt his conversion, and the sheriff said one day: "Double the guard; he's going to work the piety dodge and beat it."

Yet, when Burke died, millionaires, city, county and state officials attended his funeral.

THERE was a hunter who had a whistle which imitated the cry of the fawn. He blew it and a beautiful doe sprang out from the bushes and stood facing the man. She stopped with her instinctive fear of man as her enemy. But he did not shoot. He was so impressed with the mother-love, that the deer would face death to come to the fawn she thought was in distress, that he threw away his gun and clapped his hands and cried: "Sh-h-h!" And she bounded back into the bushes.

But what should be the thought of men? Do you think because God has been patient that he will always be patient? Some of you men have been putting it off until there isn't a hair between you and hell. Don't think that because God has been merciful in the past he will always be. Don't trifle with God's mercy.

I believe in God's great mercy, but I also believe that God is giving some of you men your last chance.

The church of God needs men. Men need the church. The Chicago Record-Herald once put reporters outside of every church in the city to count the people who went in them Sunday morning. They counted 219,000 entering the Catholic churches, and 166,000 the Protestant churches. But where was the rest of the population? Chicago had 1,250,000 people then.

If your children ever grow up in virtue and in happiness it will be due to the influence of the church. If the church don't get them the devil will. If they don't go to heaven they will go to hell. You ought to throw your influence to the one thing that helps them to grow up into men and women—the church.

When my time comes to pass away—and it may not be long—I don't know—but when I am called, I will be satisfied to have my children left in Christian society and see them in the church. Oh, what a comfort for you to know that your life has been under the shadow of the church! Some lives will be torn apart by misfortune. You'll need the church when the mortgage on your soul is foreclosed. You'll need comfort in Christianity when your daughter, just blossoming into womanhood, staggers and falls into that sleep that knows no awaking.

MEN of New York, I throw the doors of the church wide open, from wall to wall. Come! We'll sing you a song, we'll preach you a sermon, we'll pray you a prayer. All other institutions are doomed to fall, but the Church of God is built on the Rock of Ages. Its dividend is heaven. Its President is God.

The Church of God needs men who are in the saloon. Men, whom do you find in the gambling houses? Men, whom do you find in the houses of ill-fame? Men, whom do you find in the jails? Men, whom do you find in the penitentiaries? Men! Seventy-two per cent. of the church members are women. It's a shame and a disgrace and an insult to your manhood, to your American citizenship, that places of sin are filled with men, while the churches are made up of women.

All some of you men have done for the good of your city has been to buy some goods, put them on a shelf and then beat a path between your store and your home. About the only time you turn aside is to go into some booze joint. I say to you, you're harming your wife and children, the man sitting by your side, your clerks, your neighbors and the community when you don't take a stand for Jesus Christ.

You are just as much obligated to be a Christian as I am. If anybody can show me—and I'll give you a chance right now—how I am under any more obligation to be a Christian than you are, I'll quit. If you're a physician you're just as much obligated to tell a patient how to die as to diagnose his malady and prescribe a medicine.

I think I'd rather be a pauper, I'd rather lose my eyesight, I'd rather lose my reason and not know my wife and children, than to be alone in the world without Jesus Christ. He's a blessing to me in this life, and even if I knew this life was all, I'd still live the way I am now. Oh, I'd rather walk to heaven over a stony road, with torn and bleeding feet, than to ride to hell in a Pullman palace car.

I ADMIRE the man with courage, the man who is brave enough to take his stand for Jesus Christ. Bob Ingersoll

---

*In delivering this sermon, which was furnished to the Christian Herald by Robert Matthews, secretary to Mr. Sunday, the evangelist introduced a number of variations, suited to his audience and conditions at the moment.

Cheerfulness in a Tin—with a sifter top

"Be good and you'll be happy"—if your feet don't hurt.

It's true, you know.

All the wealth and good things in the world won't make you cheerful when something hurts.

If it's a definite, locatable pain,—you can most generally fix it. But it is the "fidgets" that you can't exactly locate, that make you utterly miserable in the face of every circumstance.

"Fidgets" more than likely come from skin irritation somewhere—just pure mechanics, like a dry bearing in a motor car.

Dousing with Mennen's after your bath is as good for you as it is for baby. And it's as soothing to your disposition as it is to his.

If your husband is crotchety sometimes (as husbands occasionally are—especially in hot weather) get him to try it.

And if he says it's too ladylike, remind him that the soldiers of Uncle Sam shake thousands of tins into their shoes to make marching easier.

Of the hundreds of Talcum Powders on the market, maybe two or three are as good as Mennen's. But it's so easy to be sure. Just say Mennen's to the druggist; ask him to give you the new large tin.

"Smile Powder" somebody called it, and that's what it really is.

William Gerhard Mennen

MENNEN'S

BORATED TALCUM

TRADEMARK

MENNEN'S
BORATED

Now in the new large size economical can

MENNEN'S TALCUMS—all with the original borated formula that has never been bettered—include a variety to satisfy every need; Borated, Violet, Sen Yang with a delicate Oriental perfume; Flesh Tint and Cream Tint, each charmingly perfumed; and the new Talcum for Men, a boon after shaving, with a neutral color that leaves the face free from the pallor of a pure white powder. Send 5 cents for a trial can of any one brand, or 25 cents for any five.

GERHARD MENNEN CHEMICAL CO.

Laboratories
926 Orange Street, Newark, New Jersey
Canadian Factory, Montreal, Quebec
Sales Agents for Canada:
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

was nothing but a mouthful of sweetened wind and painted echoes. He was a wrecker, pure and simple. He handcuffed us with golden cuffs to rotten, dirty unbelief.

Bob Ingersoll delighted in shaking a mother's faith in meeting her husband or her sons in glory. And by his infidelity he lost the senatorship of Illinois, the governorship, yes, and even the presidency of these United States. I believe there hasn't been a President in Washington in the last thirty years, with due respect to every one of them, who surpassed Bob Ingersoll in intellectual brilliance; yet with all his opportunities he developed jailbirds and libertines and made a failure of his life.

When Moody's brother died friends heaped his grave full of flowers. Moody leaned over and said these words: O death! Where is they sting? O grave! Where is thy victory?" And how true! I like to see in my mind Jesus Christ standing at my side and saying, "Bill, he that believeth in me shall have everlasting life."

"Choose ye this day who ye will serve." Boys, what's your answer? Get up and come down here. Come on, boys! Come on and give me your paw!

(Copyright, Wm. A. Sunday)

Miss Gamlin of the Sunday Party

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

MANY people, though vitally interested in the William A. Sunday campaign, do not realize that there is an efficient, clever, brilliant organization behind the popular evangelist and his work. Many people think that the Sunday brand of religion begins in the tabernacle—and ends there. Many people have never been able to see past the athletic "Billy," and the singing Rodeheaver, and the sawdust trail, to the group (not such a small group, either) of men and women who have swept into our greatest city and are winning victories in every corner of it for Christ. Miss Alice Miriam Gamlin is one of this group.

Miss Gamlin works especially with the boys and girls—children who range in age from six years to perhaps sixteen. On the same day she often speaks in three or four different districts, darting from the slums to the Bronx, from Brooklyn to Hoboken and back again. She speaks to audiences of very small children, and to audiences of schoolboys, and to audiences of mothers. She conducts executive meetings in the Metropolitan Tower, and "get-together" meetings at the Tabernacle. She prays fervently—and she lives her prayers.

I had the privilege of attending three of Miss Gamlin's meetings. One was a meeting for small children at the Five Points Mission, one was a parents' meeting at the Harlem Presbyterian Church, and one was a board meeting at the offices of the Sunday party. These three meetings, so very different from each other in character, gave me a glimpse, I think, into the heart of one of the most thorough and sincere members of the Sunday organization.

THE Five Points Mission House, very old it is, is situated on Worth and Center Streets. "Five Points" is a name that has often appeared on the police blotter, for in earlier days there were notorious gangs in that section of the city, and crime often crept stealthily through alley and street. Although pale sunlight flickered through the windows, the meeting-room was rather bare, and the children, products of a difficult place, were pale, poorly clothed little mites with world-old faces. When they sang the hymn, "Brighten the Corner Where You Are," the sobs rose up, unchecked, in my throat.

Miss Gamlin talked to those children very simply, for some of them could not have been older than five, I think; and the largest child might have been fourteen. She told them, in the plainest possible words, the story of the loaves and the fishes; and how they listened to her!

"It was," she told them, "like a picnic. Ever been on a picnic?"

Pitifully few of the children raised their hands.

"It was like a picnic," she went on, "and the people grew hungry. You've been hungry, and—" A gaunt child in the front row was absorbed in the story. But I saw his head nod half-unconsciously in wistful assent. . . .

Perhaps Miss Gamlin talked to those children for more than half an hour. I don't know—I lost track of the time. And they, children of a nervous, restive slum, sat quietly and drank in her words. Some of them saw the Vision, I think, for one small boy, after the service, came shyly though manfully up to the platform and asked Miss Gamlin how he might be a Christian.

THE Harlem Presbyterian Church is a pleasant, light building. I arrived rather late at the meeting, and sank into a back row. Miss Gamlin was addressing an audience of women—young, middle-aged, and old women—the mothers of our coming generation.

"Pray with your children," Miss Gamlin was advising the women. "Pray with your children. . . . I knew a mother who had always let her small son pray by himself. Moved by a sudden impulse one night, she knelt down beside the boy and prayed with him. When she had finished the little fellow looked at her with tears in his eyes, and said:

"'Oh, mother—I never knew that you could talk like that!'

"You, parents, take care of your children—you dress them, feed them, send them to school. You make them have an education. But do you ever put any religion into their lives? No. You don't even give them a good example—the example of seeing you read the Bible and pray!"

WHEN I walked into the board meeting at the offices of the Sunday Party the small group of people were praying. They were praying for the population of this our city; for the Sunday Campaign; for the children and their mothers and fathers. After the prayers Miss Gamlin very informally heard reports and gave suggestions to her fellow workers. The suggestions showed the clear business sense that is so necessary to any leader of people. She talked of the way to invite folk to know the Saviour, of the proper time to ask them to join a church—of the method of finding out whether they are really Christians. In a ten-minute talk she dipped into the real psychology of religion. When she had finished, we who were listening felt a stir of inspiration and enthusiasm. Miss Gamlin is that sort of a talker.

SOME one, not many days ago, asked me a question.

"Do you," said this Someone, "think that Miss Gamlin's work with the boys and girls is the sort of work that lasts?"

Miss Gamlin herself, quite unconsciously, answered the question for me that very afternoon.

We were riding up from the East Side, toward the Bible House, in the car, and I turned to her rather abruptly.

"Miss Gamlin," I ventured, "have you been in this work a long while?"

"I was doing Sunday school work," Miss Gamlin answered, "long ago, when I first came to New York. That was before I went into this evangelistic work. I had a class of boys. I must tell you"—she smiled at me—"of a strange thing that happened while we were in Paterson.

"A man came up to me at one of the meetings. He must have been an engineer on the railroad, from his dress.

"'Miss Gamlin,' he asked, 'do you remember me?'

"'Why, no; I don't remember you,' I answered.

"'I was one of your Sunday school boys,' the man told me, 'long ago. You made me a Christian, Miss Gamlin. Now I'm married, and my wife's a Christian, and my children are Christians. I thought that you'd like to know, because it was your talks that—that started me!'"

And so the question was answered.

Knox Sparkling Lemon Jelly Dessert

Soak 1 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine in 1 cup cold water 5 minutes and dissolve in 2 cups boiling water. Add ¾ cup sugar and stir until dissolved. Then add ½ cup lemon juice Strain into molds first dipped in cold water and chill. Add dates, nuts, berries, oranges, bananas, fresh fruit—or canned fruit.

If fruit is added to the jelly it may be served as a salad on crisp lettuce leaves, accompanying with mayonnaise or any salad dressing.

I KNOW every woman wants distinctive clothes and hats. Every woman should want distinctive table dainties. By using Knox Sparkling Gelatine you can combine your own personal ideas with our tested recipes.

When you serve Knox Sparkling Gelatine to your family or guests you are complimenting and pleasing them with something that is your own creation.

With either package of Knox Plain Sparkling Gelatine or Knox Sparkling Acidulated Gelatine (Lemon Flavor) you can make four pints of jelly. Besides jellies you can show originality in making Salads, Puddings, Candies and other good things.

Mrs. Charles B. Knox.
President.

Recipe Book Free

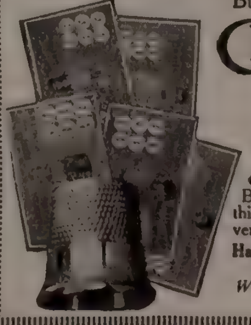
Our book "Dainty Desserts for Dainty People" sent on receipt of your grocer's name. If you wish a pint sample enclose 4c in stamps.

CHARLES B. KNOX GELATINE CO., Inc.
455 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.

KNOX SPARKLING GELATINE

Send 2c For This Fine Button Game

Great for rainy days. Complete with 6 Chalmers Pearl Buttons, the color-perfect, satisfactory button for every pearl button purpose. Quality "A" 5c to 10c a card. Quality "B," less. Dealers everywhere. Send 2c and your dealer's name for this Button Game.



Chalmers Pearls

Sterling Thimble for Five Cards

Only 5 empty Chalmers Button Cards and 5c for this handsome Sterling silver thimble, any size.

Harvey Chalmers & Son
Amsterdam, N. Y.

We make 7000 buttons a minute

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER, St. Albans, W. Va. A distinguished writer says: "Regeneration can occur but once in the experience of the same soul." He adds: "Conversion may be like that of King Saul, when he took his place among the prophets of Jehovah, or like Simon the sorcerer." The question is: When a man has been regenerated, and falls into gross sin, and then is restored to the favor of God, what is the difference between the second work in this man's heart, and the first?

Regeneration, as has frequently been explained in the Mail-Bag, is a receptive work. In conversion, the sinner is active and turns to Him; in regeneration, we receive from Him. It is a work of God's grace (Eph. 3 : 8) through the Holy Spirit. It is a complete and perfect work, "for," as one expositor explains, "there can be no medium between life and death." Herein it differs from sanctification, which is progressive. Regeneration, being a work perfect in its operation, changes the whole man. (I Cor. 2 : 17; Eph. 2 : 4, 5; John 3 : 14; I Peter 1 : 8; I John 3 : 14.) Being a definite and completed work, it can occur but once in the same individual. It creates or produces a new state of mind, changing the moral faculties, giving the regenerated one a new appreciation of and joy in the things of the Spirit, with a disposition to holiness. It is the answer to the prayer of the convert: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Converts may backslide and fall into sin, but the heart which has been regenerated so that the man is, spiritually speaking, a new creature (Gal. 5 : 6; I John 5 : 1–5) is more strongly fortified against temptation. A relapse into sin, in such a case, is far more difficult to overcome (see I Tim. 2 : 4; John 14 : 17–29). It is a sin against the Holy Spirit. Such sinners, having received "full knowledge" of the truth, and having been "enlightened" and tasted a measure of grace, sin presumptuously and deliberately, crucifying Christ anew. Yet we have the evidence (as in the case of Peter's sin) that the divine mercy can make the restoration of even such a one possible. Although to human minds the offense may seem beyond forgiveness, God in his infinite pity and goodness can find a way to bring the repentant one back.

J. R., Chicago, Ill. 1. The statistical outcome of the present revival wave, thus far, and the "Great Awakening" during the first half of the eighteenth century, can hardly be compared. At that time (1720–1750) the population of the New England colonies was considerably less than 400,000; yet the addition to the Christian churches through the long-continued revival were estimated at 25,000 to 50,000, or about 7 per cent. All the leading denominations of those days shared about equally in additions to their membership. The revival also quickened work along missionary and educational lines. 2. Some of the greatest revivalists of the past have been Daniel Baker, who in his evangelistic work, chiefly among men, is said to have led 20,000 to Christ; Charles G. Finney, who is believed to have had not less than 100,000 converts; and Jacob Knapp, who is said to have given up reckoning professed conversions under his ministry after the 100,000 mark had been reached. Edward Norris Kirk, Peter Cartwright, James Caughey, William Taylor and others were among the most successful revivalists of the next period. The far-reaching evangelism of Moody, and that of Chapman, Torrey, Sunday and others of our own day, has a wider field than in any previous age, and has enjoyed facilities that were formerly unknown. Yet all the evidence shows that there were "mighty men" in the Lord's work then as now, and that the harvest of souls was abundant.

Mrs. C. L., Hopkins, Mo. What is your idea concerning the future life of the unenlightened? I heard a minister say he thought if they had never heard of God and the Saviour, they would be saved. If so, why do we need send missionaries to convert them?

We send missionaries to preach the Gospel to all peoples in obedience to Christ's specific command (see Matt. 28 : 19). The greatest thinkers and writers on religion have discussed the fate of those who have died without ever hearing the Gospel. Justin Martyr and Clement held that they were called, justified and saved by their philosophy and their virtuous lives under natural law. We have no warrant for asserting that the heathen who died in ignorance of Christ are beyond the reach of divine mercy. In all ages and everywhere throughout the globe God has had his witnesses in righteous men and women who lived pure, upright lives and who were a blessing to all around them. We dare not assert that such are not acceptable. See Matt. 11 : 20-24; Rom. 2 : 14, 26, 27; Acts 10 : 35. God will judge all and not unjustly, every one being judged according to the light he has had and the life he has lived in that light. We are not forgetful, however, that the Gospel teaching is that there is no way of attaining eternal life except through Christ, and this makes it all the more imperative that we should see that the world gets the message.

M. S., Tamara, Neb. There are five Marys spoken of in the New Testament: Mary the mother of Christ, Mary Magdalene, Mary the sister of Lazarus, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary the mother of John (Acts 12: 12).

Mrs. J. I. M., Shady, N. Y., and A. X., Dubois, Idaho. We cannot undertake, in the limited space allotted to this department, to discuss prophetic references to the present war.

Mrs. N. D. L., Jacksonville, Ill. Fifty-nine boards, representing the various evangelical denominations, have 13,441 missionaries in the home mission field. The 1916 appropriations for all purposes by all the boards represented in the Home Missions Council amount to $10,114,323.46. The amount for Sunday schools in 1916 was $214,426.26. The report does not give the number of children in home mission schools, nor the grades or classes of those schools, nor the increase in membership of churches.

Reader, Detroit, Mich. Only such verses as are contained in "Pearls from the Bible" are accepted in the Second Bible Picture Contest.

Mrs. C. K. Y., Muncie, Ind. The passage in Rev. 20 : 5, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished," is not found in the Coptic and the Vulgate MSS. Andreas of Cappadocia, a hearer of John and associate of Polycarp, also omits it. Compare I Cor. 15 : 23.

Old Subscriber, Kerkhouse, Minn. Cards are the implements of the gambler, and while some may regard them as an innocent pastime when actual gambling is eliminated, it is well for the professing Christian to shun them, for the sake of his influence on others. We are distinctly told to avoid even "the appearance of evil."

Mrs. C. M., Clancey, Mont. The present head of the Salvation Army is Bramwell Booth, the American branch being under Evangeline Booth. We have no data to answer your other question, but regard your estimate as probably correct.

E. M. T., Hackensack, N. J. While there is no passage in the Bible which explicitly gives the status of the souls of believers immediately after death, there are several from which an inference may be drawn. Thus we have the assurance of Jesus to the repentant thief on the cross (Luke 23 : 43), the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke 16 : 19–31), and Paul's expression of the desire to depart and be with Christ (Phil. 1 : 23). The orthodox proposition is that when the body of the righteous returns to the earth, the spirit returns to God who gave it. To all such, death becomes the gateway leading to the eternal life. Much has been written concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection, but no one can go beyind what is disclosed in Scripture without entering the realm of speculation.

F. J. K., Hillsdale, Mich., has this to say regarding Evangelist Sunday's campaign against sin in New York: "The church has turned its cheek too often to vice, and this is why she has lost her hold on sensible people Christ was from above and his Kingdom was not of this world, but we are down here, and our kingdom or republic is of this world. We are not in heaven yet, and even in heaven there was once a war. We believe Billy Sunday is right in the main, and old New York City will find out what a fight for God and holy living is before you are through with him. Our nation is in the right, and sensible people know it, too. Jesus Christ could use a cat-o'-nine-tails on the thieves in the temple, and tip the tables over, too. The Bible draws sharp lines between right and wrong, and woe unto the man who calls good evil or evil good. You hear William Sunday and your backbone will be stiffened up a little. He is the modern 'son of thunder.'"

D. E. T., Scenery Hill, Pa., writes: "I want to say that the Christian Herald is a wonderful help to those who are making an effort to walk in the straight path. I am sure I have been encouraged by wise words, fitly spoken, on more than one occasion."

Turning Magnitude Into Mileage

These great Goodyear factories here in Akron mean nothing to you that is not expressed in the Goodyear Tire you buy.

Every economy that can be affected by reason of great size—savings in buying, savings in manufacture, savings in distribution—is turned back into the product, to make it better.

The result is a tire which is unflawed and uncompromised in quality, and yet can be sold at a moderate price—the Goodyear Tire.

A tire that will outserve, outlast and outvalue tires built under less favorable conditions.

The motoring public generally has come to appreciate the superior worth and usefulness of Goodyear Tires.

More of them are sold in America than of any other brand.

And the chances are that you, too, soon will be enjoying their advantages in mileage, comfort and economy.

For the margin of Goodyear leadership is growing every day.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

WALL OF DEFENSE

FIVE U.S. GALLONS NET
HAVOLINE
OIL
"IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE"
MEDIUM
INDIAN REFINING CO.
NEW YORK CITY

TOURING and its troubles are sharply parted by the wall of defense that comes to you in the form of

HAVOLINE OIL
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

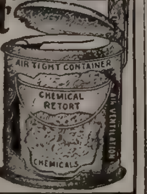
"It makes a difference"

The Havoline "difference" is the difference between big repair bills and little repair bills, quick depreciation and slow depreciation, more cash value and less cash value when trading-in time arrives.

Buying Havoline in the sealed can is your proof of uniform quality, no waste, no dirt, no impurities, full quantity, and all-Havoline.

Indian Refining Company
Incorporated
NEW YORK
Producers, Refiners and Distributors of Petroleum

Comfort Indoor Closet



Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Can be placed anywhere in home. A guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions.

SWAT FLY BREEDING PRIVY

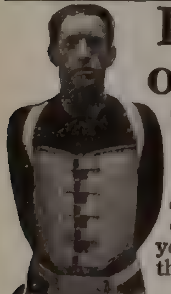
Have city conveniences. Germ-life killed instantly by chemicals. Emptied once a month. Need no other attention. Boards of Health endorse. Write for literature.

Agents wanted—exclusive territory.
COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
546 Factories Bldg., TOLEDO, OHIO

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Deformities of the Back



Greatly benefited or entirely cured by the Philo Burt Method.

The 25,000 cases successfully treated in our experience of over fifteen years is absolute proof of this statement.

No matter how serious your deformity, no matter what treatments you have tried, think of the thousands of sufferers this method has made well and happy. We will prove the value of the Philo Burt Method in your own case.

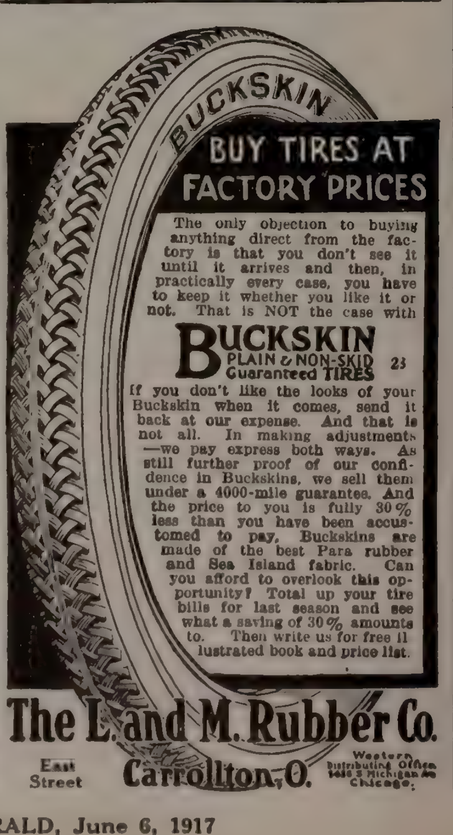
The Philo Burt Appliance on 30 Days' Trial

Since you run no risk there is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once.

The photographs here show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturing plaster, leather or steel jackets. To weakened or deformed spines it brings almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases. You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe the nature and condition of your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
1120 Odd Fellows Bldg., Jamestown, N.Y.



BUY TIRES AT FACTORY PRICES

The only objection to buying anything direct from the factory is that you don't see it until it arrives and then, in practically every case, you have to keep it whether you like it or not. That is NOT the case with

BUCKSKIN
PLAIN & NON-SKID
Guaranteed TIRES 23

If you don't like the looks of your Buckskin when it comes, send it back at our expense. And that is not all. In making adjustments—we pay express both ways. As still further proof of our confidence in Buckskins, we sell them under a 4000-mile guarantee. And the price to you is fully 30% less than you have been accustomed to pay. Buckskins are made of the best Para rubber and Sea Island fabric. Can you afford to overlook this opportunity? Total up your tire bills for last season and see what a saving of 30% amounts to. Then write us for free illustrated book and price list.

The L. and M. Rubber Co.
East Street Carrollton, O.
Western Distributing Office 1486 S Michigan Av. Chicago.

The Mountain Man of Morelos

Continued from page 632

street. Zapata proceeded to restore order by executing the criminals.

One day I chanced to pass the Fourth Comisario, or police station. Three bodies were exposed for public view. Written signs above the bodies announced the reasons for the executions. One sign read, "This man was killed for being a thief." Another read, "This man was killed for printing counterfeit money." The third stated, "This man was killed by mistake!"

LIKE all Mexicans, Zapata has a love for the dramatic. In dealing out punishment to his men he always made the punishment fit the crime. While stationed in the town of Cuatla, a soldier killed another in a drunken brawl and was sentenced to die before a firing squad.

"My chief, it is just that I should die for what I have done when the mescal made me mad," said the soldier; "but I do not like to die like a calf before the guns of my friends. You know that I have fought many times against the mochos of Huerta. Let me die killing soldiers."

"It shall be done as you wish," replied Zapata.

The prisoner was ordered removed to Xochimilco, near Mexico City, where the soldiers of Huerta were entrenched. He was led opposite one of the trenches and given a machete—a long-bladed knife used in cutting sugar-cane. Pointing to the barricades of the government soldiers, the condemned man was ordered to charge.

Singing a wordless chant the prisoner trotted forward into the open. Immediately he drew the fire from a score of guns.

He stumbled and fell to his knees, but again he staggered to his feet and went on. A hundred soldiers were shooting at him now, and it seemed a miracle that he was not riddled by bullets. At last he fell and lay still in the dust of the field. He had had his wish and died facing the enemy.

It is often asked where Zapata gets the guns and ammunition to carry on his campaigns. He has no outlet to the American border, where the foreign munition brokers keep the other insurgent factions supplied. A great part of his supplies have been captured from the enemy. He has also bought much ammunition from the enemy. This may seem unbelievable to Americans; but it is a fact that large quantities of munitions of war have been sold to the Zapatistas by the officers of both Huerta's and Carranza's armies.

ZAPATA is the only revolutionary leader who has refused to issue the fiat money—the "bilimbiques" which have ruined the credit of the country. He has many ways of raising money. One instance will show one of his methods:

A French company owns large sugar plantations in Morelos and conducts a sugar mill. Zapata sent for the manager.

"You now pay no taxes to the federal government," he said. "So you will pay me one thousand pesos a month. You can still make a profit."

For four years that sugar company has continued operations, and according to the manager himself, has made a fair profit. Each month he has paid his tax and been given protection.

Zapata has confiscated several gold and silver mines. These are operated for the benefit of the cause.

Charges have been made that Zapata is savagely cruel in warfare and executes all prisoners. This is true. It is also true of the Carranzistas, the Villistas, and every other faction, federal or revolutionary, in Mexico. Killing prisoners is a time-honored custom.

Some months after the outbreak of the European war, Zapata said:

"They say that I do not make civilized warfare. I can take some lessons from the German and English. How can war be civilized? War and injustice go together. Only with peace and justice is there civilization."

Zapata's remarkable control over his men astonishes every one who is familiar with the mob spirit which dominates most of the revolutionary factions. His Indians obey the word of "Don Emiliano" with a reverence almost amounting to worship.

On one occasion an officer stole a sack of silver pesos. He fled into the state of Guerrero. Zapata sent for a young officer of his staff and said:

"You will follow this traitor night and day, and never rest until you find him. You must not kill him, but bring him back to me alive. I will hang him in the plaza before all the people, as one who has been false to his trust."

Without remark, the young officer left the headquarters and started the pursuit. For weeks he trailed the fugitive back and forth through hostile country. At last he captured him and brought him, bound hand and foot, into a room where Zapata was holding a conference.

"Mi general, I obeyed your orders," reported the young officer. "Here is the man you sent me to catch."

Zapata's face turned ashen in anger. Jumping to his feet, and speaking in the low, hissing tone he used when excited, he said:

"So, the dog thought that he could be an eagle. You are worse than a pelon. You are a traitor. You were trusted and you stole the money which was to buy food and ammunition for your comrades. Because of this you must die like a dog and a traitor."

White-faced and trembling, the young officer who had captured the fugitive and obeyed orders so well, stepped up to the table and touched his hat.

"Mi general," he said huskily, "you told me to capture him without injury and bring him before you. I have done so. Now I want to ask one favor. Let me die in his place and set him free."

"What fool is this?" cried Zapata in amazement. "Why do you, an honorable soldier, want to die to set free this traitor?"

"He is my youngest brother," replied the officer. "I obeyed your order because you are my chief, but if my brother dies because of me, I would not want to live."

For a moment Zapata gazed from the cringing prisoner to the pale-faced officer standing rigidly at attention.

"Listen to me!" he finally exclaimed, pointing his finger in the prisoner's face. "Your brother has proved that he is a man! So I will grant his request. This is my sentence: you will be stripped of your rank and you will work as your brother's mozo. You will do woman's work and cook for him, and serve him as a slave. Nevermore will you carry a gun in the company of free men. Go."

WHEN it is considered that Zapata is a half-breed Indian, scarcely able to read and write, it must be admitted that he is somewhat of a philosopher. I believe that this peon chieftain is the one leader in Mexico who has no ambitions to be a dictator of his country. As long as he can rule his native state and keep the landlords out, he is content. He sees only one thing—the land question; but he sees that very clearly. His "Plan of Ayala," as far as it applies to the common ownership of land, has worked. At least it has worked to the satisfaction of the poor laborers.

Carranza is still carrying on war against him, but Zapata is holding his own. His army is an elastic one. At times it shrinks to a few thousand men, when the peons go back to till their fields. When a campaign is begun, his forces swell to many thousands.

One thing is sure. He can get as many recruits as he has guns.

Whatever the solution of the Mexican problem may be, Zapata and his half-million loyal followers must be considered. He will quit fighting only when his "Plan of Ayala" is made part of the law of the nation.

Of all the insurgent leaders who have battled for supremacy the last six years in Mexico, he is the one chief who has remained true to his followers. His peons know what they are fighting for. They are battling for land and Don Emiliano Zapata.

SAVE THE FRUIT CROP

We said this LAST YEAR—
We say it again

This is a year for thrift and service. We must feed not only our own people, but also millions in Europe. The frightful waste of fruit is a national reproach. Help stop this unpardonable extravagance. The fruit we waste would feed Belgium.

THE United States Government urges preserving as a home duty. Preserved fruits are energizing and nourishing. They vary your menus. They reduce the cost of your table.

America's canning and preserving industries are models for the world. Their products are pure, appetizing and wholesome. Support them.

If you preserve at home, put up more fruit than ever before. Get jars and glasses, bottles and crocks ready to save the fruit crop. Put away dried vegetables. The American housewife who practices thrift places herself in the ranks of those who serve their country.

You can show your thrift in no more convincing way than by combating the national tendency to squander this country's wonderful fruit crop. Whether you buy preserved fruits from your grocer or preserve at home you perform a service to your own family and to the Nation.

American Sugar Refining Company

5 lbs.
Domino
Cane Sugar
Granulated
American Sugar Refining Company
10 lbs.
Domino
Cane Sugar
Granulated
American Sugar Refining Company of New York
Raspberry Jam
Very Best

"Sweeten it with Domino"

Granulated, Tablet, Powdered, Confectioners, Brown

Domino Granulated Sugar is sold in convenient-sized bags and cartons

The increased cost of preserving because of the higher price of sugar is less than the increased cost of most other foods

Gillette

Do You Sunburn?

TRY a smooth, cool shave with the Gillette Safety Razor this summer.

Your beard grows its fastest in the summer. Your face is more sensitive. The sun burns your skin; the wind cracks it. Dust and perspiration settle down around the roots of the beard.

Hot weather is the time a man most appreciates the Gillette Safety Razor. It shaves cool, smooth and close—no pulling or irritation. A very grateful comfort, especially to the man with a wiry beard or tender skin.

We venture to say there is not a man living with a beard to shave, no matter how tender his skin, but can shave better with the Gillette—if used correctly.

Write for the New Gillette Catalogue. See the thirty styles of Gillette Safety Razors, $5 to $50. Gillette Dealers everywhere.

If you live in Canada—write the Gillette Safety Razor Company of Canada, Ltd., 73 St. Alexander Street, Montreal, for Canadian Catalogue and Prices.

No Stropping
No Honing

Milady Décolleté is the dainty little Gillette used by the well-groomed woman to keep the underarm white and smooth.

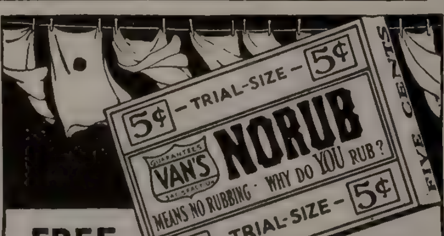
GILLETTE SAFETY RAZOR CO.
BOSTON, U. S. A.

Beautifully Curly, Wavy Hair Like "Nature's Own"

In three hours you can have just the prettiest curls and waves! And they remain a long time, when Liquid Silmerine is used before rolling the hair in curlers.

Liquid Silmerine

is perfectly harmless. Easily applied with brush. Hair is nice and fluffy when combed out. Silmerine is also a splendid dressing. Keeps hair fine and glossy. Directions with bottle. At your druggist's



FREE PACKAGE

Let us prove to you that Van's NORUB washes clothes clean without rubbing or injury. Write for above Free package, sending us your dealer's name and address, if he cannot supply you.

VAN ZILE CO., Dept. C, West Hoboken, N. J.

Don't Break Your Back struggling behind a lawn-mower that balks, sticks, jerks. Use reason and 3-in-One Oil. The big reason for using is this: It is a pure light oil of high viscosity. Never gums or collects dirt, as heavy lubricants do. It makes lawn-mowers, large and small, run like—well, almost without effort.

3-in-One Oil

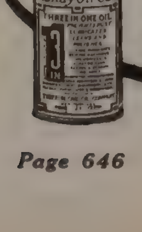
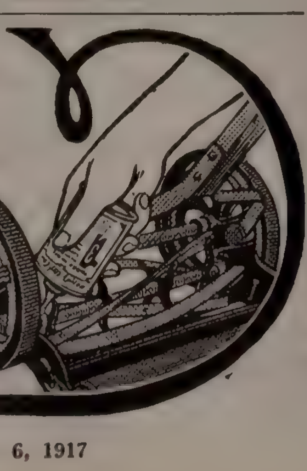
Try 3-in-One on other light mechanisms—bicycles, typewriters, fishing reels, sewing machines, guns—anything around house or office that needs lubricating. Sold at all stores in the Handy Oil Can, 25c, and in 10c (Trial Size), 25c and 50c bottles. Write for FREE SAMPLE of 3-in-One Oil and Dictionary of Uses.

3-in-One Oil Co. 165 CM. Broadway, N.Y.





The Risen Lord

International Sunday School Lesson for June 17

John 20 :1-18

The Events of the First Lord's Day

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

IT WAS the conviction of the power of the Risen Lord that sent the apostles forth with faith and confidence to build on earth the Kingdom of God. Peter stated what we all feel now, when he faced the crowd on the day of Pentecost with the declaration of the resurrection of Jesus: "It was not possible for death to hold Him." Jesus and death are contradictory terms. In him was life, and we are sure that that life is eternal. He could not die.

The account of the way in which Peter and the others came to this conviction is very fragmentary. We may be sure that they were utterly depressed and disillusioned when Jesus was placed in the tomb. Something happened to transport them with joy and enthusiasm. What was it?

A number of people reported that they had seen the Risen Lord! In I Cor. 15 :1-8 Paul makes a list of these appearances. In varying ways the four Gospels tell the story. The comparison and study of these furnish one of the hardest problems the Christian Bible student can undertake.

Let us rather spend our time on the text of our lesson in John, without trying to fit and explain the other incidents. Let us find the life-lessons for us today, and not simply recount the experience of long ago. For we too must be convinced that he lives now, and that because he lives we shall live also.

Peter and John Find an Empty Tomb

The twentieth of John is a vivid chapter. Things happen fast. Mary Magdalene going early to the tomb of Jesus sees the stone has been rolled away and rushes back to the city to tell Peter and "the other disciple whom Jesus loved" (we take it for granted this was John). They are astonished at the news and wonder what has happened. They run all the way, the younger man reaching the place first and finding it empty. Peter, when he comes, enters the grotto and sees the graveclothes neatly folded. Then the other disciple follows Peter's example and looks wonderingly about.

Now, John's Gospel tells us that the empty tomb was the first basis of their belief in the resurrection. They did not arrive at it from the study of Scripture (verse 9). They had not yet been granted a vision of the Triumphant Lord. But when they found he was not there, they leaped to the glad conclusion, "He is risen!"

When We Feel Like Peter and John

There are times when the very emptiness and desolation of the grave give us a spirit of faith, just as Peter and John immediately felt that Jesus lived. I know a man whose only child was taken sick in a distant city and died before the father could reach his side. When he heard the news, this man—a Christian minister—was overwhelmed with a sense of despair. He could not believe in any immortal hope. Yet when he stood beside the little body and touched the cold hands he said, "He is not here; he is risen."

Just because he was gone, what was left counted but little. The beloved spirit was surely alive still. Nothing else is possible, credible, to a child of God, in God's world.

Yet doubtless they were full of questionings. The brooding John and the talkative Peter must have had a heart-searching day of it at home. How could it be? What did it mean? What was involved for them? So we feel. We believe in the resurrection life, but many questions come to our minds.

Better be like the two and wait for Jesus to give more light. He knows, and all is well.

It was Mary who brought the first report of having seen the Master once more. She who had been the first to visit the grave, who had brought back the first word of an unusual occurrence, was standing weeping when she had a vision of angels where the body of Jesus had lain.

Then in the morning light a figure drew near who she thought must be the gardener. Sobbing, she began to ask where they had taken the body of her Lord. Jesus saith unto her, "Mary." She turned toward him and said, in Hebrew, "Rabboni," which is to say, "My Master." Then he gave her the reassuring message that he was about to ascend to the Father, his and ours equally. So the overjoyed woman again returned to the little band with her great message.

The Messenger of Peace

The third adventure narrated in the chapter came to all the disciples as they were met together behind shut doors. Suddenly Jesus came and stood in the midst, saying, "Peace be unto you." It was a hallowing experience for all. There they were, fearful, almost despairing, yet strangely agitated by the message of the Magdalene,. perhaps eagerly questioning her. Then there comes upon them the blessed conviction that they have not been forgotten. He is with them again. He will speak to them as well as to her.

Peace Despite Suffering

When he had said, "Peace be unto you," he showed them his hands and his side. To prove that he was the same Jesus who had been crucified, no doubt. But there is more here to a thoughtful mind. Christ had been in agony on the tree, yet he could still breathe the benediction of a peaceful spirit. The shame and agony had not been able to exhaust the resources of his soul.

We can be like him. His peace he gives to us. Yes, even in the midst of pain and conflict we can manifest the inner serenity which is the marvel of the world. I know a woman who has been for years unable so much as to feed herself, and she has suffered seasons of excruciating pain. Yet her spirit is calm, her faith beautiful, her ministry to all who know her an inspiration. By manifesting peace when hands are torn and side is bleeding we illustrate what the poet meant when he wrote "They also serve who only stand and wait."

Besides this there is a true sense in which we, like the Master, come to peace and the power of peacegiving only through suffering. It was because he had been through it all that he could so marvelously reassure them. Those timid ones could become bold as lions and could go forth to suffer for him now. They were secure, for his peace had become theirs.

Again he said, "Peace be unto you," and this time he added, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." He exalted them to his own place and mission after him. He solemnly dedicated them to take up the task. The sense of a sublime commission was to be their source of confidence and calm. They needed not to be anxious and troubled with his seal upon their work.

When Mary's Experience Is Ours

Mary has not been the only one who out of the mist of tears and grief has caught a vision of angels, declaring that all is well.

Angels of God, the Bible says, were all around the embattled Elisha in the mountain (II Kings 6); Jacob at Bethel found them ascending and descending upon the desert bed of a lonely sinner; Peter in prison and Paul on the doomed ship discerned the angel of the Lord "standing by." In keeping with the whole spirit of Bible optimism is the vision of Mary, God's angels even at the grave of a rejected Messiah.

Whether we see them or not, ministering angels are here, even by the side of the tomb. They ask us wonderingly, "Why weepest thou?" when our best-beloved have been delivered from pain and death and all earth's burden and frailty, to the presence of the Eternal Father in fulness of joy.

Mary sought a dead body and was worried when it was not to be seen. She found, when she finally came to a realization of the meaning of her experience, a living Spirit still abounding in inspiration for her soul.

Mary thought she saw a mere caretaker of burial vaults, but she found instead the Redeemer of life and the Conqueror of death itself.

Mary sought to touch and to hold the beloved hands of the Christ; instead, she was given the great message he had for his burdened, sorrowing brethren. So we cling to the physical; we would touch and keep the things of earth, when for us, as for her, the real values are in personality and love and the unseen eternities.

The First Message of the Risen One

The transfigured immortal one has his first word of suggestion and courage for those he calls "my brethren." His brothers still, however he be glorified. Still his own. Then he sends the message of complete identification with them. He goes to his Father, who is also our Father, to be forever with his God, who is also our God. My resurrection assures yours, he would say. My victory is not mine only, but was won for you. And more gracious yet, If ye suffer with me ye shall also reign with me. "Whosoever will confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father."

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 640

ter suspect, yet, an' make a fuss. He's countin' on bein' miles away when ye do wake up an' start somethin'. That's why I'm a-talkin' to ye now—ter put ye wise ter things. I ain't goin' ter stand by an' see you bamboozled. Now do you go an' put on your things an' march up there straight. I'll take care of the baby, an' be glad to, if you don't want ter leave her with Bridget."

"I go up there?" Helen's voice was full of dismayed protest.

"Sure! You brace right up to 'em, an' tell 'em you've caught on ter their little scheme, an' you ain't goin' ter stand for no such nonsense. If he wants ter git rid of you an' the baby, all well an' good. That is, I'm takin' it for granted that you wouldn't fight it—the divorce, I mean."

"Divorce!" almost shrieked Helen.

"But that he's got ter treat ye fair an' square, an' give ye somewheres near what's due ye," went on Mrs. Cobb, without apparently noticing Helen's horrified exclamation. "Now don't cry; an', above all things, don't let 'em think they've scared ye. Just brace right up an' tell 'em what's what."

"Oh, but, Mrs. Cobb, I—I——" With a choking sob and a hysterical shake of her head, Helen turned and fled down the hall to her own door. Once inside her apartment she stumbled over to the crib and caught the sleeping Dorothy Elizabeth into her arms.

"Oh, Baby, Baby, it's all over—all over," she moaned. "I can't ever be a daintily gowned wife welcoming him to a well-kept home now. Never—never! I can't welcome him at all. He isn't coming back. He doesn't want to come back. He's ashamed of us, Baby—ashamed of us!"

Dorothy Elizabeth, roused from her nap and convulsively clutched in a pair of nervous hands, began to whimper restlessly.

"No, no, Baby, not of you," sobbed Helen, rocking the child back and forth in her arms. "It was me—just me he was ashamed of. What shall I do, what shall I do?

"And I thought it was just as he said," she went on chokingly, after a moment's pause. "I thought it was a vacation he wanted us to take, 'cause we—we got on each other's nerves. But it wasn't, Baby,—it wasn't; and I see it now. He's ashamed of me. He's always been ashamed of me, 'way back when Dr. Gleason first came—he was ashamed of me then, Baby. He was. I know he was. And now he wants to get away—quite away, and never come back. And he calls it a vacation! And he says I'm to have one, too, and I must tell him all about it when he comes down next week. Maybe he thinks I will. Maybe he thinks I will!

"We won't be here, Baby,—we won't! We'll go somewhere—somewhere—anywhere!—before he gets here," she raved, burying her face in the baby's neck and sobbing hysterically.

ONCE again Helen passed a sleepless night. Never questioning now Mrs. Cobb's interpretation of her husband's conduct, there remained only a decision as to her own course of action. That she could not be there when her husband came to make ready for his journey, she was convinced. She told herself fiercely that she would take herself and the baby away—quite away out of his sight. He should not be shamed again by the sight of her. But she knew in her heart that she was fleeing because she dared not go through that last meeting with her husband, lest she should break down. And she did not want to break down. If Burke did not want her, was it likely she was going to cry and whine, and let him know that she did want him? Certainly not!

Helen's lips came together in a thin, straight line, in spite of her trembling chin. Between her hurt love and her wounded pride, Helen was in just that state of hysterics and heroics to do almost anything—except something sane and sober.

First, to get away. On that she was determined. But where to go—that was the question. As for going back to the old home town—as Burke had suggested—that she would not do—now. Did they think, then, that she was going back there among her old friends to be laughed at, and gibed at? What if she did have ten thousand dollars to spend on frills and finery to dazzle their eyes? How long would it be before the whole town found out, as had Mrs. Cobb, that that ten thousand dollars was the price Burke Denby had paid for his freedom from his wife he was ashamed of? Never! She would not go there. But where could she go?

It was then that a plan came to her—a plan so wild and dazzling that even her frenzied aspiration scouted it at first as impossible. But it came again and again; and before long her fancy was playing with it, and turning it about with a wistful "Of course, if I could!" which in time became a hesitating "And maybe, after all, I could do it," only to settle at last into a breathlessly triumphant "I will!"

AFTER that things moved very swiftly in the little Denby flat. It was Saturday morning, and there was no time to lose.

First, Helen gathered all the cash she had in the house, not forgetting the baby's bank (which yielded the biggest sum of all), and counted it. She had nineteen dollars and seventeen cents. Then she rummaged among her husband's letters and papers until she found a letter from Dr. Gleason bearing his Boston address. Next, with Bridget to help her, she flung into her trunk everything belonging to herself and the baby that it was possible to crowd in, save the garments laid out to wear. By three o'clock Bridget was paid and dismissed, and Helen, with Dorothy Elizabeth, was waiting for the carriage to take them to the railroad station.

With the same tearless exaltation that had carried her through the prodigious tasks of the morning, Helen picked up her bag and Dorothy Elizabeth, and followed her trunk down the stairs and out to the street. She gave not one backward glance to the little home, and she carefully avoided anything but an airy "good-by" to the watching Mrs. Cobb in the window on the other side. Not until the wheels began to turn, and the journey was really begun, did Helen's tearless exaltation become the frightened anxiety of one who finds herself adrift on an uncharted sea.

Then Helen began to cry.

To be continued

FISK
TUBE
WEEK
June 11 to 16

HOW long has it been since you examined your tubes? The hot summer days are coming when tubes are subjected to their greatest strain.

Forestall inconvenience. Safeguard your casings, for you cannot afford to chance ruining a perfectly good casing with a worn out tube. See to it now that your tube equipment is right and ready to meet all the conditions of summer driving—have complete Fisk equipment.

Prepare for the season before FISK TUBE WEEK goes by. Replace any tube which you might have that you are not sure will stand the strain.

Fisk Tubes since first manufactured have always been pure rubber tubes. New Fisk Tubes bought NOW will give you better tire satisfaction and lower upkeep costs for the balance of the season.

Fisk Tubes have been of laminated construction ever since they were first built—that is built up layer upon layer of pure rubber. Every wide-awake dealer in the United States and Canada has a new and full stock of Fisk Tubes.

Time to Re-tire?
(Buy Fisk)
FISK
Pure Fine Para Tu
THE FISK RUBBER COMPANY
CHICOPEE FALLS MASS.
FISK
FISK
Gold Bond Tube
THE FISK RUBBER COMPANY
CHICOPEE FALLS MASS.

Fisk Pure Fine Para Tubes are GREY—the most popular tube in the country.

Fisk Gold Bond Tubes are RED—there is no higher tube quality anywhere.

Keep Youthful!

There is Beauty in Every Jar

"A woman can be young but once, but she can be youthful always." It is the face that tells the tale of time. Faithful use of

Ingram's Milkweed Cream

will keep the skin fresh and youthful. Sarah Bernhardt began its use twenty years ago—today she is proclaimed "young at seventy-one"

50c and $1

Milkweed Cream is a time-proven preparation. More than a "face cream" of the ordinary sort. A skin-health cream. There is no substitute.

"Just to show the proper glow" use Ingram's Rouge. A safe preparation. Solid cake—no porcelain. Three shades—50c.

Send us 6c in stamps for our Guest Room Package containing Ingram's Face Powder and Rouge in novel purse packets, and Milkweed Cream, Zodenta Tooth Powder, and Perfume in Guest Room Sizes. (11)

Frederick F. Ingram Company
Windsor, Ont. 30 Tenth St., Detroit, Mich.

GIVE YOUR CAR A NEW FINISH-DO IT YOURSELF WITH ONE OR TWO COATS OF Effecto AUTO FINISHES

Not a wax or polish, but a durable, quick drying, high luster auto finish. Seven colors. Sold by paint, hardware and auto accessory dealers. Send for Color Card. Pratt & Lambert-Inc. 143 Tonawanda St., Buffalo, N. Y. In Canada, 89 Courtwright Street, Bridgeburg, Ontario.

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF PRATT & LAMBERT VARNISHES

Let Me Quote You a Special Price On My Rapid Fireless Cooker

Cook every meal on it. If you are not satisfied and delighted I will refund every cent. Get my Special Low Factory Price direct to you. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Full set of famous "Wear Ever" aluminum cooking utensils comes with it. Ask for free book of valuable recipes.

William Campbell Co.
Dept. 2, Detroit, Mich.

Church Organs

LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.

Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass.

Hook & Hastings Co.

BRANCHES

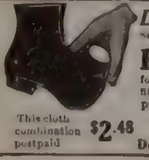
Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dallas

When is that Birthday?

A BIRTHDAY GARDEN of FLOWERS

Send your friends one of these unique "Chase" Birthday greeting cards—each flower bears a sentiment. 35c complete. For Sale Everywhere or Direct

Send for Catalog 225
Ernest Dudley Chase, 251 Causeway St., Boston, Mass.



Ladies EASE YOUR FEET! Send for FREE catalog of specialties in Women's for house and street wear. Comfortable and easy fitting as a glove. Good honest shoes at popular prices. Neat. Longwearing. Noiseless.

PILLOW SHOES

This cloth combination postpaid $2.48

PILLOW SHOE CO.
Dept. 8, 184 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

Young People's Topics for June 17

Student's Recognition

Epworth League Topic. Prov. 1 : 2–7; 9 : 9–12; I Kings 3 : 5–14

HERE they come, back from college, these folks who went out from your League nine months ago to pursue knowledge and thereby to get wisdom. During the nine months the place they formerly held in the League has been filled by others. They cannot drop back into their old work. Nor is it likely that they wish to; for the same nine months have brought to them new ideals, new interests, and new powers. To a certain extent the months at college have weakened the ties of home, and it is very easy for the student on leave to make his vacation more than a rest—to make it, as far as spiritual activities are concerned, a first-class loaf. Those who go from our churches to college usually do one of two things. They may enter whole-heartedly into the spiritual life of the school and find in the comradeship and close association of college work a great opportunity for spiritual growth and for development of new spiritual powers, learning to do personal work, to lead prayer meetings and Bible classes and perhaps facing solemnly, fearlessly and prayerfully the life-work question, in which case they come home with great stores of fresh spiritual strength, with wider outlook and with sharpened vision. If this has been their history in college, they represent a mine of usefulness and a certain source of new inspiration and life for the League, and should be used to the full during their vacation in every way that the officers of the League can plan. Or, on the other hand, in going to college, they may have hidden their spiritual light under a bushel. They may have been a bit faint-hearted; they may have gotten in with a bunch who were inclined to scoff at spiritual things; they may have lacked the courage to stand up for the little faith they had, and they may come home without any new spiritual vision, or with such visions as they once had largely gone. These need the League as much as the League needs the others. Sometimes an invitation to lead the prayer meeting will bring them suddenly face to face with the realization of what they have given up in college in the process of gaining a little learning, and the three months' vacation may be for them a season of spiritual rebuilding and may result in turning back to God a life almost lost to his cause. Thus the students' return from college may be either an opportunity or an obligation. In either case the students' recognition night will be one of the big nights of the League's calendar.

What Is Reverence and Why Should We Be Reverent?

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Heb. 12 : 18–29

REVERENCE consists in showing a proper regard for those things, persons and ideals which are held sacred because of their character and associations. Reverence includes respect and includes fear in the better sense, which we mean when we say, "Fear God and keep his commandments"—fear that is based upon love, fear of giving offense rather than fear of the results of offending. Reverence is, after all, only one of the expressions of love. There can be very little reverence except where the basis of love exists. If we love God, we will revere him and will treat with reverence everything that pertains to him. We are to serve acceptably with reverence and godly fear. We cannot serve him acceptably otherwise. Irreverent service is an impossibility. Many things are mistaken for reverence. Quietness in the house of God which is not based upon love and which includes no worship is hardly reverence; yet the applause and cheering which frequently punctuate the addresses of Rev. Billy Sunday can not be called irreverent. No question of reverence for God or for his house or for his Word can arise from those who truly love him, and who seek daily to do his will and to serve him acceptably. Reverence is a certain fruit of such a life.

* * *

DR. CLARK has issued a call to patriotic members of the Christian Endeavor asking them to enlist in the Christian Endeavor army of production and food economy. This army is to cultivate every possible available area of ground and is to conserve food by eliminating waste. The motto is "More food produced and no waste in our country's time of need." In order to stimulate enlistments and to promote enthusiastic work, Dr. Clark offers twenty dollars to the Christian Endeavorer, man or boy, girl or woman, who gets the largest results from a piece of ground twenty feet square, ten dollars to the one getting second best results, with four prizes of five dollars each for the next four. The same prizes are also offered to those getting the largest results from an acre, the cash value of the crops raised to be reckoned up by the first of November according to retail prices prevailing in the New York produce market during the last week in October.

And Now the Jews

IT was reported from Washington on May 19 that official reports, quoting extracts from Egyptian newspapers, confirmed earlier information regarding terrible atrocities being committed by the Turks against the Jews in Palestine. It was reported that many Jews had been expelled from Jerusalem, especially the younger Jews, and were being driven to unknown destinations in the desert northward from the city after being deprived of all property, and that they were being permitted to take along no comforts or conveniences. Thus they were sent into exile destitute. Those who resisted were hanged.

Already Armenians and Syrians have felt the heavy hand of Turkish oppression, and now the approach of the British troops toward Jaffa and Jerusalem, which was welcomed as forecasting the ultimate deliverance of the Holy City from the hands of the Turk, appears to have brought upon the innocent inhabitants the most terrible of afflictions, numbering them also among those who must be helped by Christian America. Final and complete confirmation of this exile is still awaited. Neither is it known to what extent relief may be either necessary or possible; but such relief as proves requisite will of necessity be rendered, and the Christian Herald Family will not be slow to hear this call.

Address all gifts to War Widows and Orphans Relief Work, Room 93, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Ida A Balbirnie	$5.00	Mrs W E Blankenbaker	$5.00	H S Kenyon	$5.00	J R Hughes	$5.00
Mrs Peter Anderson	5.00	H M Sanders	5.00	Mrs Elizabeth Downie	5.00	Fairfield S S, Puffer, Alta, Can	5.00
Miss M E McClelland	5.00	Martha Mauch	5.00	Mr & Mrs C Madsen & Family	5.00	Miss Beatrice Richardson	5.00
"I H N," Santa Rosa, Calif	5.00	Mrs C Powell Grody	5.00	Lillian L Harting	5.00	Mrs. Gideon Richardson	5.00
Earl G Sparks	5.00	Ladies' Aid Soc, Clay Hill Union S S, Williamson, Pa	5.00	C E Schooley	5.00	Friend, Concord, N C	5.00
Mr & Mrs W C Davis	5.00	Roy O Howes	5.00	Friend, Shippensburg, Pa	5.00	J Chedsey	5.00
Geo H Bennett	5.00	Mrs Harriet E Gaines	5.00	"In His Name," Beebe, Wash	5.00	Mrs E A Daniels	5.00
Mrs Agnes Fox	5.00			Katharine B Sturgeon	5.00	Mrs Florence Allen	5.00
Mrs W A Baxter	5.00
A V M	5.00

Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 lbs., and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for Booklet 23. I'd like to tell you my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 18. 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Bring Out the Hidden Beauty

Beneath the soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon. Mercolized Wax gradually, gently absorbs the devitalized surface skin, revealing the young, fresh, beautiful skin underneath. Used by refined women who prefer complexions of true naturalness. Have you tried it?

Mercolized Wax in one ounce package, with directions for use, sold by all druggists.

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. "Worth more than a farm," says another. So testify over 100,000 Men and Women who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings comfort, health, strength and pep.

MAKES YOU FEEL GOOD AND LOOK GOOD

Replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens shoulders; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, etc., in both sexes. Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank and our very liberal free trial proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Bldg., Salina, Kan.

GORDON

A RELIGIOUS COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

National, Evangelical, Interdenominational, Vocational, Cultural. New fireproof building, with dormitories in Boston's finest educational district. Catalog. Address Dean NATHAN R. WOOD, GORDON BIBLE COLLEGE, Boston, Mass.

A High School Course In Three Years

Learn in your own home. Here is a thorough, complete, and simplified high school course that you can finish in three years. Meets all college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of the faculties of universities and academies.

Write for booklet. Send your name and address for our booklet and full particulars. No obligations. Write today—now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. P249A Chicago, U. S. A.

JAP ROSE SOAP
LATHERS INSTANTLY

NEW-CHURCH THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL
48 Quincy St., Cambridge, Mass.

Established 1866. Three years course. College preparation desired. The curriculum includes systematic study of the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg and spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures. Courses by correspondence when desired.

For catalogue and information, address
WILLIAM L. WORCESTER, President.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50

Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Ray Morrison	$1.25
Aunt & Niece, Cleveland, Ohio	7.00
M E S S, Fishing Creek, N J	15.75
——, New Paltz, N Y	9.33
Friends, Tarban, N Mex	1.45
T W Paine	.10
Isalind Hockaday	1.11
Miss Mary S Caskey	4.00
Onondago Free Academy, Syracuse, N Y	21.65
Friends, Berryville, Ark	14.00
R A Spaugh	12.00
Cong Church & S S, Carson City, Mich	35.56
——, McArthur, Calif	2.66
S S, San Marcos, Cuba	6.00
John Vandermyde & Family	9.00
Ladies Miss'y Soc, Ref Presby Ch, Marissa, Ill	6.00
——, Laclede, Ill	.10
Mrs S Miley Miller	6.00
G D Van Arendonk	9.00
Subscriber, Benton Harbor, Mich	4.00
Mattie Dougherty & children	1.40
J C Burkhardt	8.45
Martin Fels	4.00
Mrs F C Ferguson	6.50
Friends, Water Village, N Y	5.07
Union Relief Fund, Chambers, Nebr	3.75
J H Homer & others	16.00
C C Ellis	11.00
Mrs Earl & Lewis H Hiberly	1.52
A E Baughman	7.50
C H Readers, Patoka, Ill	1.70
F W Sargent	5.05
S S, Aroya, Colo	13.20
Llano Charge, Castell, Texas	22.25
Peaks Ch, Bedford, Va	17.00
Mrs Addie R Williams	100.00
Wm Dick	100.00
Western Maryland College S S, Westminster, Md	50.00
Andrew G Best	50.00
——, Peekskill, N Y	25.00
Clifford Power	25.00
Willard Clemens	25.00
I Terborgh & Family	25.00
Olive L Boynton	25.00
Blanche Brinley	25.00
G Harris Field	25.00
W B Timmerman	25.00
W R Graham	25.00
Mr & Mrs W E Burt	25.00
Mr Arthur E Hunt	20.00
Mrs Mary Hunt	20.00
K M Hardy	20.00
D J Rorabeck	20.00
Miss Elizabeth Lesher	20.00
L M, Sharon, Pa	20.00
Chas Rippel	20.00
First Cong Ch, Belle Fourche, S Dak	20.00
A B C	20.00
In Memory of a Beloved Son, Lapeer, Mich	20.00
Mr & Mrs A Elliott	20.00
Mr & Mrs A D Turner	15.00
Miss Maud Miller	15.00
Mr & Mrs W D McKinstry	15.00
Mrs J M Devall	15.00
A E Nichols	15.00
Geo E Hall & Family	15.00
O C Parsons	15.00
First Christian S S, Bonham, Texas	15.00
Mrs Anna Gustafson	10.00
M & S, Brewer, Me	10.00
J Von Glahn	10.00
W B Crane	10.00
Mrs M E Graves & Children	10.00
Effie W Smith	10.00
Mr & Mrs Cyrus A Smith	10.00
"Sam, Ella, Helen & Florence"	10.00
Mrs Sarah Croddoch	10.00
S S Class, Wendell, Idaho	10.00
Lydia A Batchelder	10.00
E C F	10.00
Mrs D W Karraker	10.00
Mrs Fred J Brownell	10.00
W W Scamman	10.00
Ruth M Short	10.00
L W Felter	10.00
Mr & Mrs P D Wine	$10.00
Elizabeth F Weld	10.00
A R P Sabbath School, Salem, Tenn	10.00
Mrs M E Finley	10.00
Frank B Johnston	10.00
Emma A Cowles	10.00
Friends, Moon, Va	10.00
Friends, Pittsburgh, Pa	10.00
Theo Bandy	10.00
Friend, Lamar, Mo	10.00
Mrs C T Cheek	10.00
Mr & Mrs John H Dawes	10.00
Mr & Mrs Chas Glattley	10.00
Fred Wallis	10.00
Geo Graham	10.00
A J Siekmeier	10.00
Jennie Richards	10.00
Adam Eversole	10.00
Fred P Strathern	10.00
Mrs J G Redmon	10.00
H M Torrey	10.00
Alice Coe	10.00
Mrs Laura L Foster	10.00
Sarah Cockin	10.00
John Cockin	10.00
J C Lawson	10.00
F E Puff	10.00
M Ramsburg	10.00
H J Wick	10.00
O P Schoffner	5.00
Harry A Wallick	5.00
Mrs H I Hoyt	5.00
Anti-Can't Class, M E S S, Bruin, Pa	5.00
Mrs Ada I Livingston	5.00
Mr H Sundeen	5.00
Mrs S Bruce Wright	5.00
Mrs T W Castiel	5.00
Leroy Lines	5.00
Mrs Susan M McEwen	5.00
Miss Anna Gilgren	5.00
Mr & Mrs K R McMaster	5.00
Miss L G B	5.00
W P Christy	5.00
Mr & Mrs Daniel Heimlich	5.00
S Rufenacht	5.00
A B	5.00
Clara & Susie, Catonsville, Md	5.00
Mrs Mary E Howard	5.00
William Tonkin	5.00
Mrs Theo Carlson	5.00
Mrs A J Baker	5.00
Catharine & Clara Rees	5.00
Miss Bertha M Metzgar	5.00
Rev D T Conlan	5.00
Friend, Rochester, N Y	5.00
——, Fostoria, Ohio	5.00
Reader, Salem, N J	5.00
S S McElfresh	5.00
E Wagner	5.00
D W Karraker	5.00
E B Thomas	5.00
Jacob Young	5.00
Miss M E Files	5.00
Mr & Mrs Harry Judd	5.00
Elizabeth Woodson	5.00
Mr Meinhart	5.00
A A Ainsworth	5.00
Mrs H A Krumrine	5.00
In Memory of a Dear Wife	5.00
M P Smith	5.00
Mrs Mary Franklin	5.00
Mr & Mrs J N Rowell	5.00
Mrs John R Core	5.00
W D Benedict	5.00
Mrs Pratt	5.00
Jas H Smith	5.00
Willis Whitehead	5.00
S Grace Harlow	5.00
John W Field & Family	5.00
S N Brown	5.00
Mrs George W Gray	5.00
R B Falconer	5.00
Mrs E C Davis	5.00
Mr & Mrs John Goettge	5.00
Mrs A T Hanna	5.00
Emanuel Winter	5.00
Friend, Creshard, S Dak	5.00
Mr & Mrs D T Higgins	5.00
Mrs J G B	5.00
Mrs John B Niles	5.00
C H Johnson	5.00
Josie Lewis	5.00
Mrs J Kemp	5.00
——, Fort Wayne, Ind	5.00
Primary Room, Afton Community Ch, Ill	5.00
Mrs Mary S Cotton	5.00
Jerome, Etta, Rolland & Sophie Dawson	5.00
Mrs J H Martin	5.00
Lelia F Glocker	5.00
J L Stevenson	5.00
Albert Bengtson	5.00
Mr & Mrs. Walter R Bishop	5.00
Wm Chisholm	5.00
C, Mont	5.00
Three Friends, Robbinsdale, Minn	$5.00
I S Kennedy	5.00
N W Cooper & Family	5.00
In Memory of Father and Mother	5.00
J E Wilcher	5.00
J J Borseth	5.00
P T Nye	5.00
Mrs P T Nye	5.00
Mrs Kate Webster	5.00
Mrs O H Hartwig	5.00
In His Name, Bismarck, N Dak	5.00
Mrs D M Case	5.00
J M Christensen	5.00
Nettie E Phillips	5.00
Miriam Franklin	5.00
S A Overy & Sister	5.00
Mrs Carrie B Webster	5.00
Miss Wenzel	5.00
Mrs R F Haug	5.00
Thomson Sisters	5.00
Rev & Mrs H M Guynn	5.00
Mrs Margaret Aikin	5.00
M M Williams	5.00
Sarah M McCausland	5.00
Miss M J Rogers	5.00
Mr & Mrs W L Wood	5.00
A H Byrd	5.00
J T Lewis	5.00
Mrs Geo R Rose	5.00
Miss Jenny Lind	5.00
Mr & Mrs Oscar G Larson	5.00
Mary E Mitchell	5.00
Mr & Mrs E J Pulis	5.00
Tucker Sisters, Horace, Ill	5.00
Mr & Mrs Hugh F Chisholm	5.00
M M, Madelia, Minn	5.00
Mr & Mrs Wm H Smith	5.00
A & Caroline Mottaz	5.00
E E Morlan	5.00
Alice Evans	5.00
Isabelle B Scott	5.00
Mrs George Oakes	5.00
B B Berry	5.00
P R Phinney	5.00
Woman's Miss'y Soc, Fairview Bapt Church, Mo	5.00
G B Van Landingham	5.00
Subscriber, Boulder, Colo	5.00
Dr O C Scarborough	5.00
L C Glassmeyer	5.00
M J E	5.00
Mrs Eliza Dolder	5.00
Mr & Mrs Okey W Davis	5.00
L D Yeargan	5.00
Mrs A F Bergh & Family	5.00
E A Cary	5.00
Friend, San Bernardino, Calif	5.00
Wm & Mary Hann	5.00
Mr & Mrs F S Frost	5.00
Mrs C W Swartz	5.00
Mrs F Kombaum	5.00
Mrs H Peterman	5.00
A Barrow	5.00
In His Name, Lewisburg, Pa	5.00
Mrs Margaret Shride	5.00
Mrs Mary Kelly	5.00
W P Vincent	5.00
Mrs J S Ross	5.00
Philathea Cl, Bapt Ch, Arthur, Iowa	5.00
Mr & Mrs L H Brisbine	5.00
E Gould	5.00
N Johnson	5.00
Sadie Winner	5.00
Jennie Schmalzried	5.00
Mrs John O Nelson	5.00
Mrs Leonard Nelson	3.00
Mrs Marshall Myers	3.00
Mrs B B Scarff	3.00
Mrs W A Hazlett	3.00
Mrs Eliza J Cowling	3.00
In His Name, Wash., D C	3.00
J Newton Phelps	3.00
Mrs A Mead	3.00
Nora Ericson & Mr & Mrs J W White	3.00
L E Kern	3.00
Mr & Mrs W J Miller	3.00
L H Post	3.00
J L S	3.00
In loving memory of Lida Weaver	3.00
Mrs M M Bishop	3.00
M C Richardson	3.00
I Longman	3.00
Mrs M C Robinson	3.00
Harry S Carleton	3.00
Mrs Lewis Dingman	3.00
H G Brokaw	$3.00
G W Shepherd	3.00
Mrs I D Stone	3.00
Mrs Fred Gerber	3.00
Henrietta Watkins	3.00
Mrs J E Major	3.00
Mrs John Dowley	3.00
Mary L Pulis	3.00
P Hadley	3.00
H S Powell & Sister	3.00
E Sharpe	2.50
Miss Clara Eckman	2.50
Mrs W H Eckman	2.50
Mrs A W Morhous	2.50
A J Hatch	2.50
"Mr & Mrs Subscriber"	2.50
George Bros	2.50
R C Donnell	2.50
Mrs N M Speidel	2.50
Mr & Mrs Craig	2.50
Miss Addie D Hurtin	2.50
Miss Prudy Johnson	2.50
Mrs M Weisser	2.50
P A James	2.50
Chas Roseberry	2.50
M P Conklyn	2.50
E F Smith	2.50
Mrs T J Campbell	2.50
——, Jamestown, N Y	2.50
T T Forneau	2.00
Mrs J C St Clair	2.00
M Cave	2.00
Miss Mary Kester & Sisters	2.00
"In His Name," Moosic, Pa	2.00
C F R	2.00
Subscriber, Lock Haven, Pa	2.00
Mrs E P Akins	2.00
Margaret M Smith	2.00
Miss F Baldwin	2.00
E M H	2.00
Mrs W W Aikens	2.00
Eva A Shoemaker	2.00
Eleanor L Dungan	2.00
Milton J Shaw	2.00
H & B Z	2.00
G Studebaker	2.00
Friend, Phila, Pa	2.00
Friends, Moapa, Nev	2.00
John Schriver	2.00
George M Smith	2.00
G E Wallace	2.00
Band M, Groton, Conn	2.00
James R Raup	2.00
W L Fenner	2.00
G B Gallison	2.00
Mrs J H Williams	2.00
Mr & Mrs McCumber	2.00
Mr & Mrs P G C	2.00
Mr & Mrs Ralph B Moon	2.00
Mrs Sarah A Thayer & Daughter	2.00
John M Denman	2.00
M H Schobert	2.00
W Lafayette Union S S, Eau Claire, Wisc	2.00
Thos A Prideaux	2.00
Emma Rice	2.00
Mrs Ella E & Miss Lillie E Downing	2.00
Mrs Squibb	2.00
Friend, Lamb, Mich	2.00
Mrs Jane Poole	2.00
M A Hughes	2.00
Mrs Mary E Meader	2.00
——, Maysville, Ky	2.00
Friend, Jersey City, N J	2.00
Mrs I F Bilbro	2.00
F H & Mrs J Elwood	2.00
Mrs Caroline A Bartlett	2.00
Mrs D C Black	2.00
Mrs S Shannon	2.00
Laura McCoy	2.00
Mrs Sadie M Nightingale	2.00
Friend, Cortland, Ohio	2.00
Roy V Derr	2.00
S G Gladding	2.00
Mrs R J Truax	2.00
——, Catlettsburg, Ky	2.00
Mrs Minnie Wickham	2.00
Mrs F U Housel	2.00
Mrs F B Twisden	2.00
Friend, Banco, Va	2.00
Miss Mary Albright	2.00
Mrs J M Riggs	2.00
Mrs J L	2.00
Mrs A M Patteson	2.00
Annie F Patteson	2.00
E M	2.00
Annie E Mehring	2.00
John C Lee	2.00
Juniors, Tarentum, Pa	2.00
M J S	2.00
Lenice Millard	2.00
——, Savannah, Mo	2.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

A New Shoe with a New Charm

A new shoe—a new name—a new attractiveness in style—a new comfort in coolness and graceful flexibility—a new economy worth while. These are reasons why you, too, will appreciate the charm of this big new American shoe family called

Keds

Ask for Keds, according to price and style desired, under these names:

National Keds	Campfire Keds	Champion Keds
From $1.50 up	$1.25 to $2.00	$1.00 to $1.50

Keds have cool tops of the firmest and finest of canvas. The soles are made of rubber, full of grace and spring.

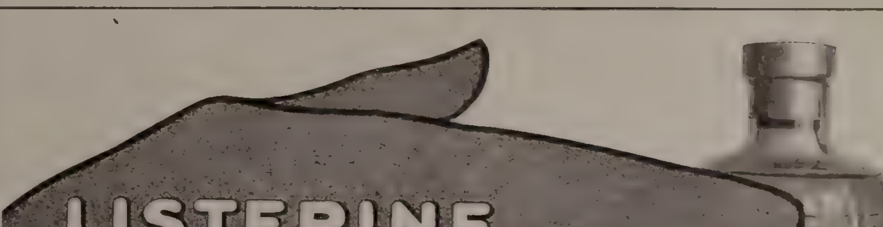
Keds prove a necessity to the well-dressed woman who values perfect ease in all of her outdoor games and sports. They are so comfortable outdoors that she also wears them for housework, shopping and leisure dress-up hours.

Keds, in name, means quality, for behind every pair there is the reputation of the largest rubber manufacturer in the world. You will find all that is desirable in materials, workmanship and shapeliness and smart style in any of the three grades of Keds. There is style, service and economy in Keds for every member of the family.

Keds for girls and boys are national favorites. The lines and support of Keds conform to little growing feet. There is also great economy in their splendid wearing qualities.

United States Rubber Company

New York



LISTERINE

The Safe Antiseptic

A clean wound heals rapidly. Prevent infection of cuts and abrasions by promptly using Listerine.

4 SIZES 15c, 25c, 50c, $1.00

You look at the clock for the time of day
Look at a Tycos for the kind of day

A BAROMETER is nearly as necessary as a clock. It gives you the weather, tells you of changes, forecasts sudden drops or rises, and prepares you for what is coming. An instrument which is scientifically correct is the S. & M. Tycos

No. 2252 HOUSE Tycos Barometer

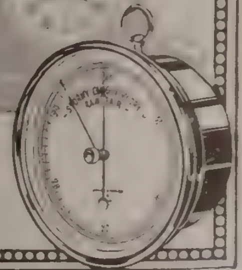
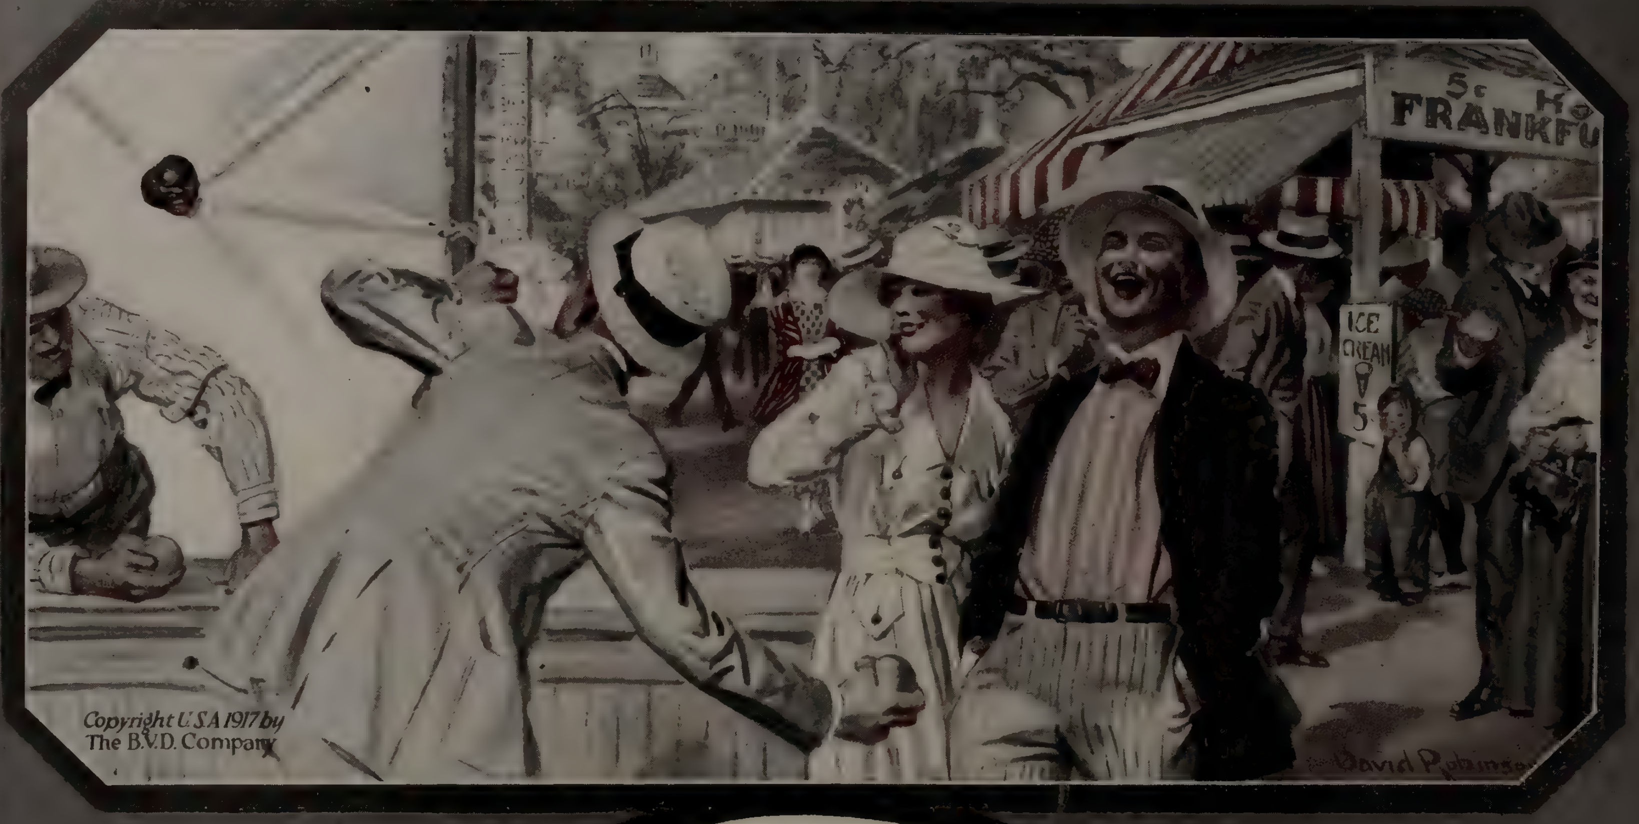
The best materials enter into its construction. Adjustable by anyone to 3,500 feet altitude. In a 5-inch lacquered brass case with enameled metal dial.

S. & M. Weather Instruments are sold by your Optician and Scientific Instrument Dealers. If yours does not have an S. & M. Tycos House Barometer No 2252 in stock send us his name and address and $10 and we will ship you one at once. Our 36-page Barometer Booklet, which describes other styles, is yours on request.

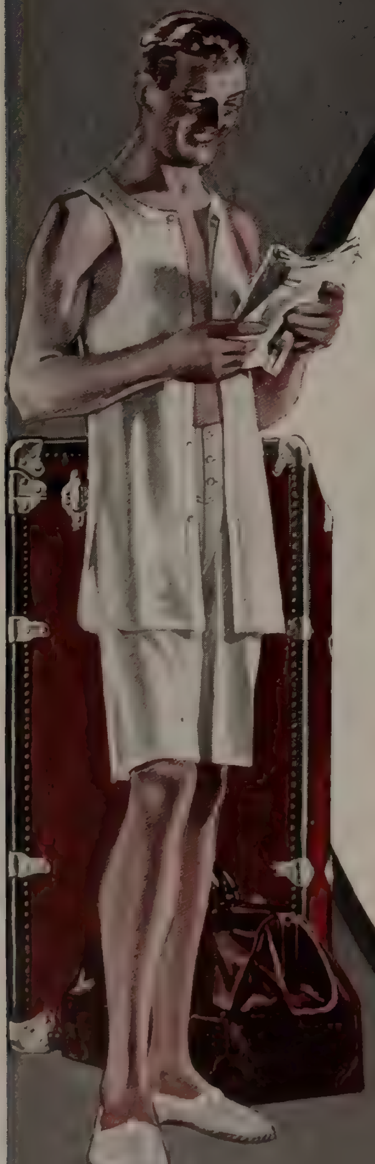
Taylor Instrument Companies Rochester, New York

World's Largest Manufacturers of Scientific Instruments





Copyright U.S.A 1917 by
The B.V.D. Company



Copyright U.S.A.1917 by
The B.V.D. Company

Every Day's A Holiday In Cool B.V.D.

IT'S a holiday in the zest with which you go at the day's work, knowing you are cool and feeling you look it. You increase your efficiency to produce on the job and your capacity to enjoy while off it.

In our own modernly equipped Cotton Mills at Lexington, N. C., the fabric from which these Loose Fitting B. V. D. Undergarments are made, is produced in a scientific manner from selected cotton to insure durability in wash and wear.

In our own B. V. D. Factories the garments are skilfully cut, strongly stitched, accurately finished—to fit and be cool and comfortable all day long.

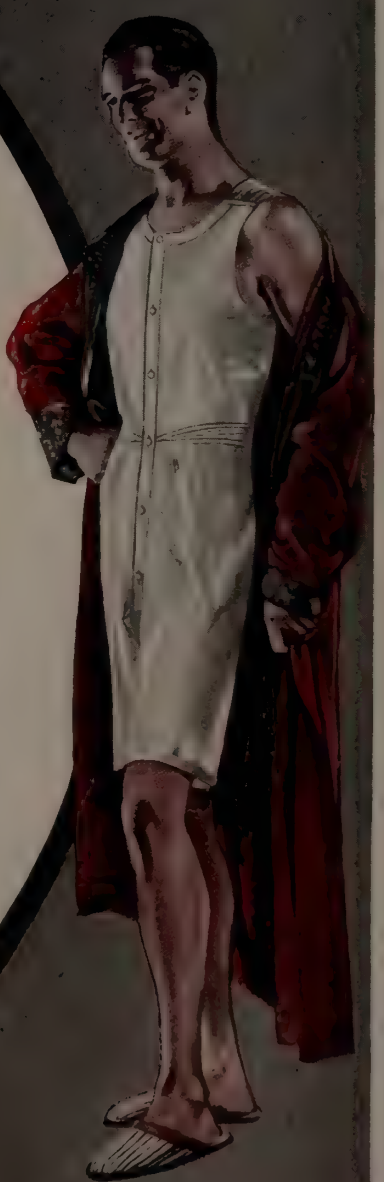
If it hasn't this Red Woven Label

MADE FOR THE
B.V.D.
BEST RETAIL TRADE

(Trade Mark Registered U. S. A. Patent Office and Foreign Countries)

It isn't* B.V.D. *Underwear

B. V. D. Coat Cut Undershirts and Knee Length Drawers, 50c. the Garment. B.V.D. Closed Crotch Union Suits (Pat. U. S. A.), $1.00 the Suit.



Copyright U.S.A.1917 by
The B.V.D. Company

THE B.V.D. COMPANY. N.Y.

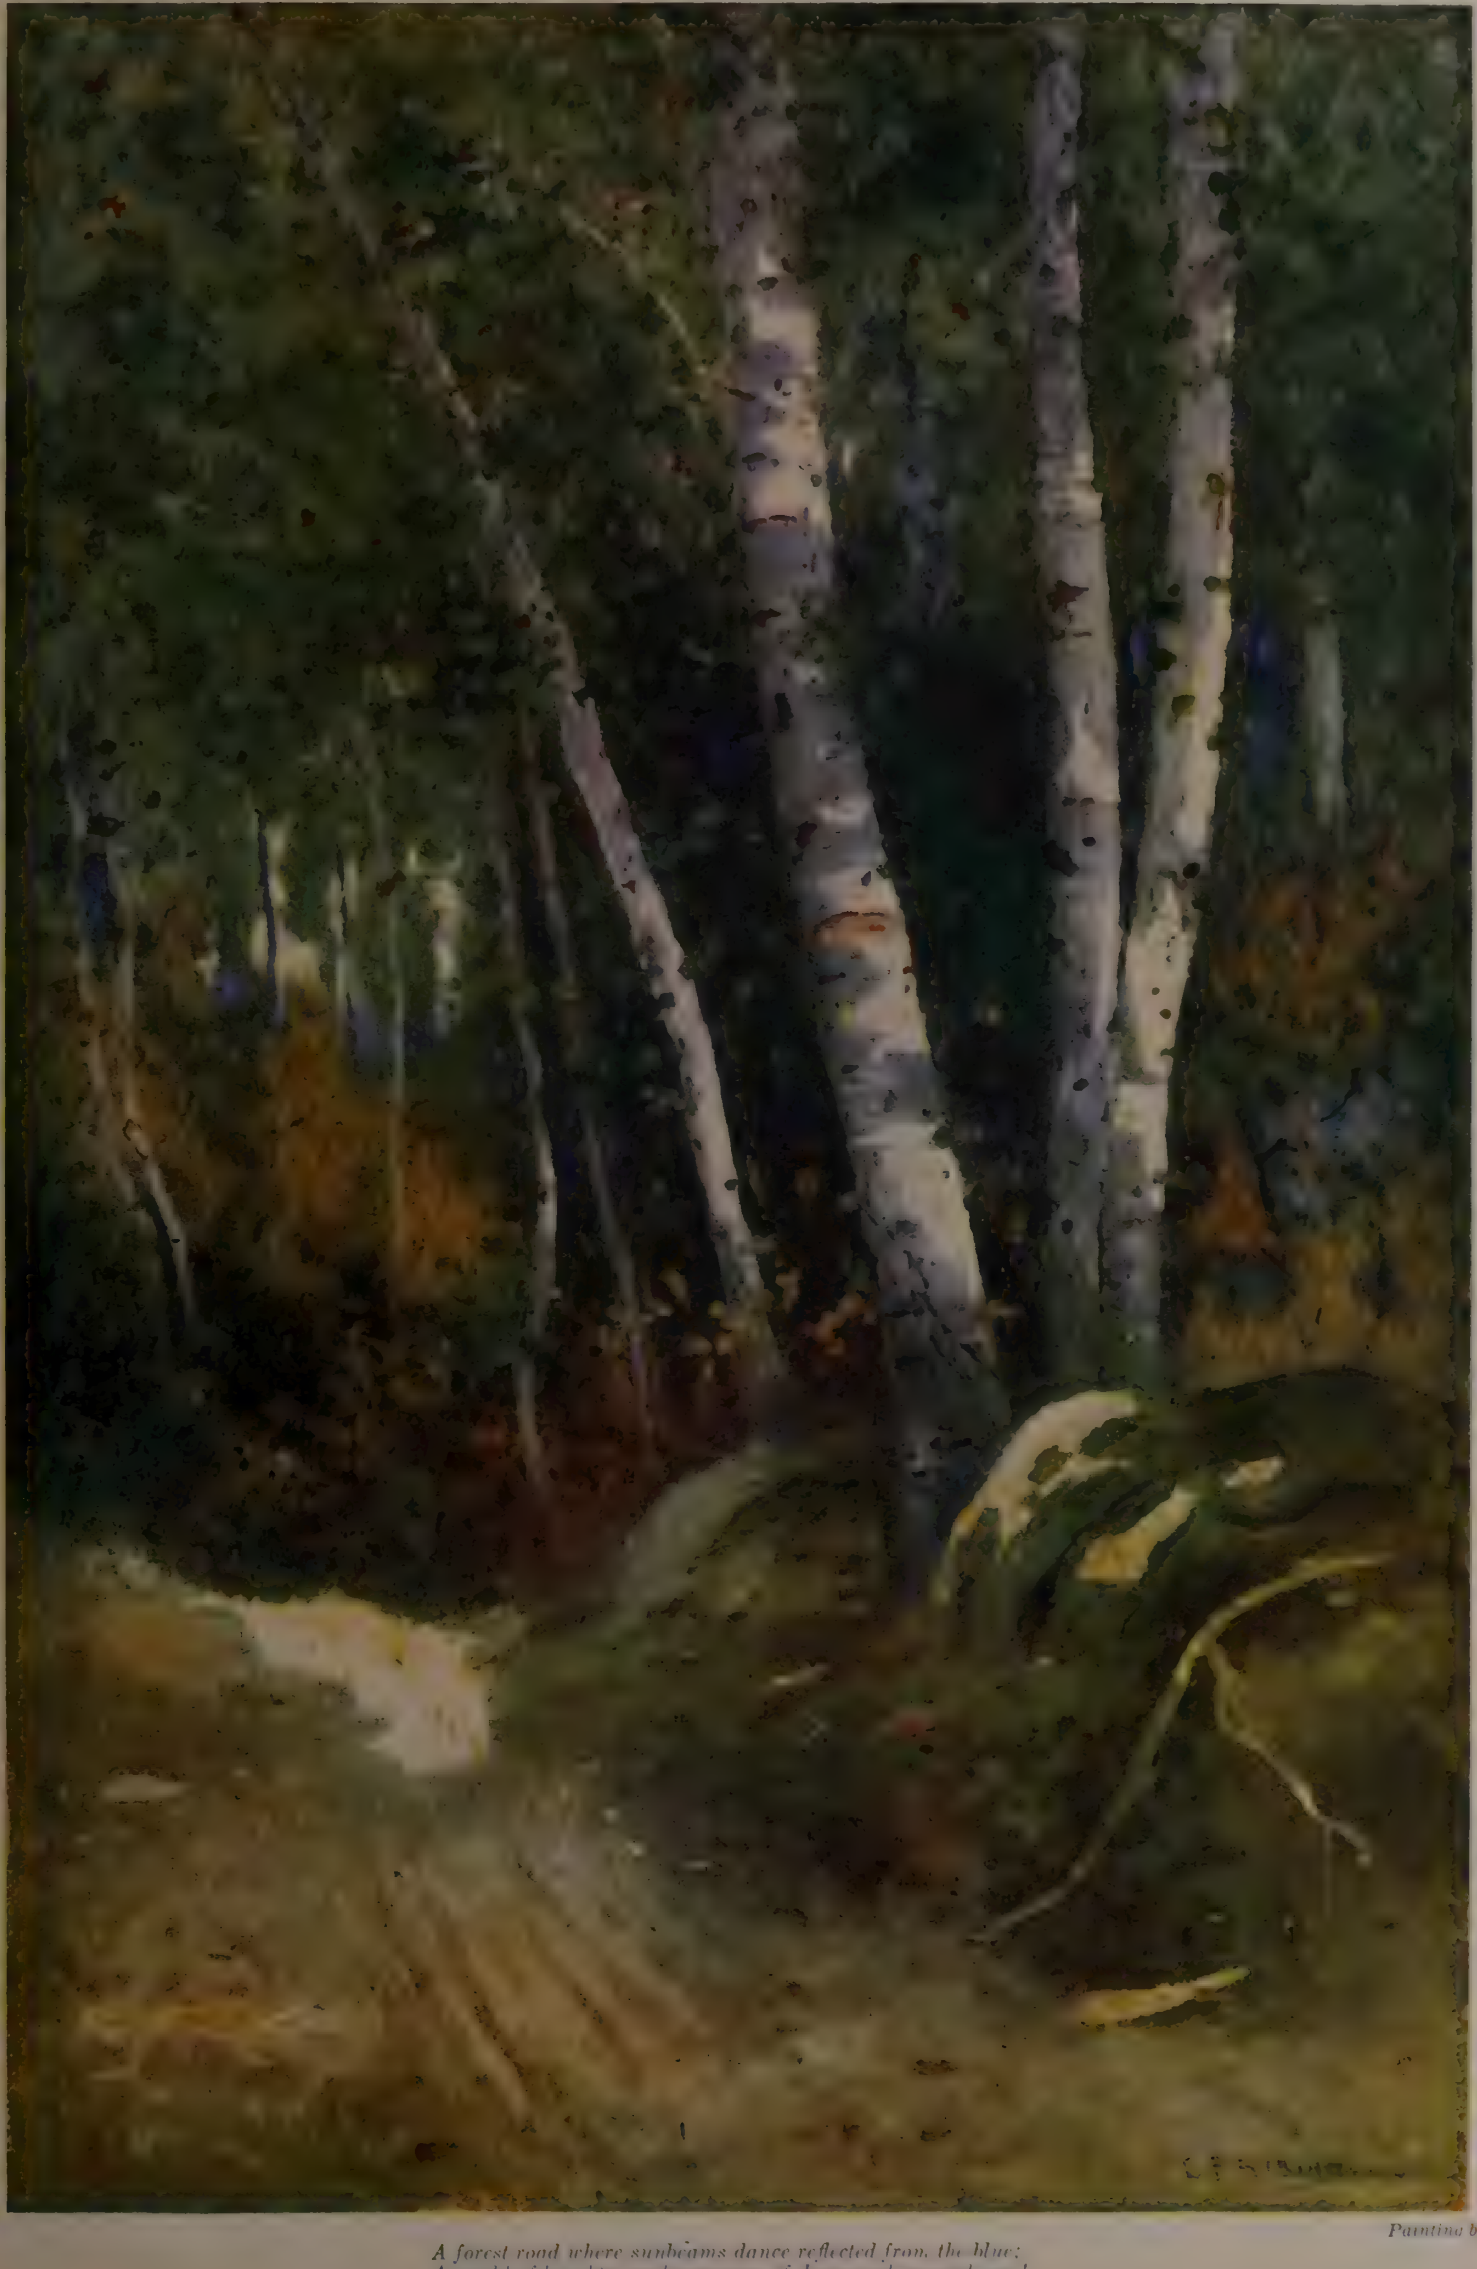
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 13, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 24. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by C. P. Rising

A forest road where sunbeams dance reflected from the blue;
A world of laughter and romance, of June and me and you!

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

ANXIOUS Inquirer, Alexandria, Va. Please explain Luke 24 : 16 and 49.

1. Christ himself chose that they should not know him and his purpose was a loving one. He concealed only to reveal more fully. Immediate recognition would have filled them with a tumult of joy, fear and doubt. Natural causes also aided in preventing ready recognition. A quiet, vigorous, dignified traveler would not be readily recognized as the One so lately languished in death on the cross. The experience of the travelers is our experience. We often fail to recognize him when he is nearest to us; but if he allows this for a brief space, it is only to bless us all the more afterward. 2. The apostles were told to tarry in Jerusalem because it was a quiet place in which to await the great event of the near future. In the meantime, they were to prepare for the enduing of power from on high. If we compare this passage with John 20 : 22, we will readily see a prophetic allusion to the Pentecostal outpouring.

R. E. R., Lipscomb, Texas. Damnation, or condemnation, does not always imply the final loss of the soul. Thus the passage in Rom. 13 : 2 clearly means condemnation from the rulers, "who are a terror to evil-doers." I Cor. 11 : 29 means that the offender would be exposed to severe temporal judgments from God and to the censure of good men. Rom. 14 : 23 means that such a one is condemned already by the Word and by his own conscience. The final loss of the soul of the impenitent, however, is clearly taught in many passages, including Rom. 6 : 23; Matt. 25 : 30, 41; James 1 : 15; Matt. 10 : 28; II Thess. 1 : 9; Luke 16 : 23, 26.

H. M. T., Argyle, N. Y., writes: "Almost every hotel has a bar, which starts boys and others on the road to the saloon, and to my mind they do as much harm as the saloon." The saloons are the greater evil, because they exist in much larger number; but the hotel bar is unquestionably furnishing its share of drunkards and adding to the sum total of poverty, misery and crime.

A. E. H., Muller, S. D. Elders are usually chosen from those who are known as men of tried Christian character and who have had experience in church affairs. Men who are married and are the heads of families are preferably selected. In the early church, the elders were leaders and teachers; they had to be men of blameless character, capable of advising and helping in spiritual matters, and, on occasion, even of taking the pastor's place if called upon. We know of no fixed or general rule which would prevent a worthy man, though unmarried, from being chosen for the eldership, but the usual custom, as already stated, is to select the head of a family.

E. McG., Harrold, S. D. Where was Jesus from the time he was twelve years old until he began preaching?

The Evangelists, who deal mainly with his public ministry, throw little light on the period in question. Edersheim and several other authorities hold that he spent the intervening years between infancy and manhood in Nazareth; besides, the New Testament states that while there "he increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." It has been said that he went to India during this interval, but the story is not authoritative. To the little world in which he moved he was Joseph the carpenter's son, and himself a carpenter until the time was ripe for his active ministry to begin. Among the Jews there was no contempt for manual labor; indeed, it was deemed a religious duty. But the years were years of development as well as of labor—each year bringing to him a fuller realization of his great mission.

C. W. L., Keota, Kan. 1. There can be no real conversion without conviction of sin and sincere repentance That is the point at which the newly awakened sinner, realizing his lost condition, is ready to respond to the Gospel invitation. Conversion, in the theological sense, is turning away from sin to God; and when the convicted sinner accepts Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and solemnly declares his purpose, with divine help, to forsake sin and follow Christ, he has taken the first essential step. Regeneration, which is the second stage, is the work of the Holy Spirit upon the heart of man, making him willing and obedient. We quite agree with you that only those who go forward with a sincere desire for forgiveness of sin and for help to lead a Christian life henceforth, can look for acceptance and forgiveness. 2. The state religion of Russia is Greek Catholic; but there are many who have been won to other creeds, including the Baptist and certain other denominations. The dominant church in Germany is the Lutheran; in England the Episcopalian; in Scotland the Presbyterian; but in all three countries there are many other branches of the great Christian Church with considerable following.

E. M. E., Gainesville, Fla., writes urging that all friends of temperance rally to the support of the movement for passing a law prohibiting the manufacture of grain into liquor during this terrible war. "Of course," E. M. E. adds, "we hope and believe that if we get national prohibition now during the war, we shall continue to have it after the war. It seems to me that this is the chance of a lifetime for national prohibition now. If each and every one will do his part, it could become a mighty weapon for God and righteousness."

B. K. T., South Bend, Ind. 1. Job's wife was wicked in disobeying and doubting. 2. It is useless to speculate as to those things which God has not seen fit to reveal to men.

Inquirer, Davenport Center, N. Y. Will there be more than one judgment?

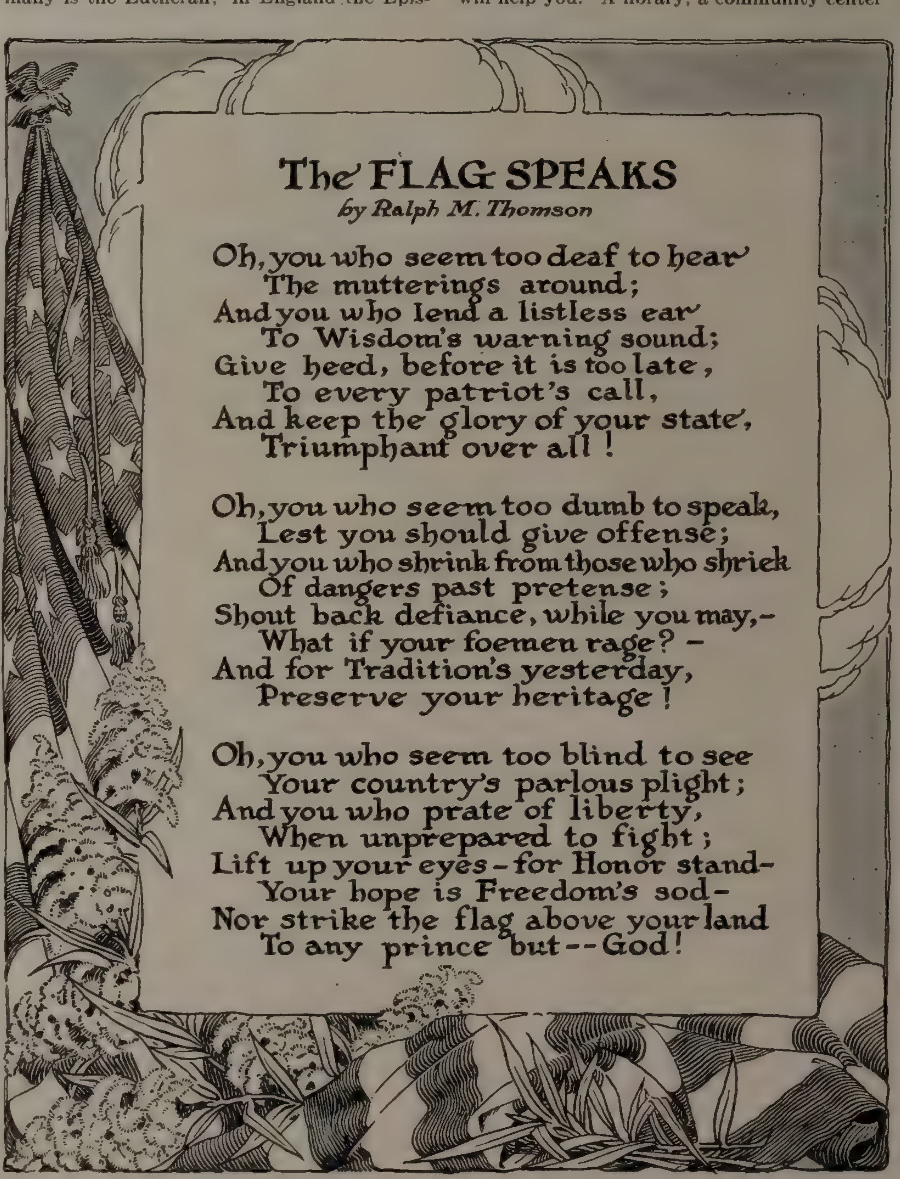
All that we read about the final judgment indicates that it will be of two kinds. There will be the great separation of the sheep from the goats (Matt. 25 : 32), and there will also be another and more joyful judgment, in which rewards are distributed among the children of God in proportion to the work each has done for Christ (Luke 19 : 22–26). These, however, will not be given according to the prominence Christians have attained in the world, nor according to the quantity or conspicuity of the work done; but on the principle of love and fidelity and self-sacrifice, obedient to Christ and the Holy Spirit.

Mrs. H. E. B., Whitefield, N. H. The state religion of Germany is a modified Lutheranism.

M. E. B., Forreston, Ill. What can a country town substitute for the saloon?

Your question is too large for discussion in our department, but perhaps a few suggestions will help you. A library, a community center with an attractive gymnasium, ought to give the boys so much to do that they would not miss the saloon. Church sociables of various kinds, house gatherings at frequent intervals, and a general kindly interest in the boys will help. If the girls of a country town would get together and tell the boys that they must choose between the saloon and themselves they would exert a good influence that would soon become apparent.

Mrs. C. C. McD., Celine, Texas. 1. The unbelieving husband or wife is sanctified by a believing spouse (I Cor. 7) in the sense that the good example of the believer will eventually lead the unbeliever to a recognition of the truth of the Gospel and the ennobling and sanctifying influence it has upon the lives of others. 2. The land of Nod means simply "land of Exile." We may gather from Gen. 4 : 14–15 that at the time referred to the human family had multiplied considerably. Cain's wife was doubtless some blood relative, possibly a sister. Ancient Arab tradition states that her name was Azura. From the account in Genesis we may conjecture that although only four persons are mentioned in the sacred narrative up to this point, the human race had increased rapidly (Josephus says that the Jews held a tradition that Adam had thirty-three sons and twenty-three daughters). Cain's fear of punishment may therefore have been directed toward his own relatives.



The FLAG SPEAKS

by Ralph M. Thomson

Oh, you who seem too deaf to hear
The mutterings around;
And you who lend a listless ear
To Wisdom's warning sound;
Give heed, before it is too late,
To every patriot's call,
And keep the glory of your state,
Triumphant over all!

Oh, you who seem too dumb to speak,
Lest you should give offense;
And you who shrink from those who shriek
Of dangers past pretense;
Shout back defiance, while you may,–
What if your foemen rage? –
And for Tradition's yesterday,
Preserve your heritage!

Oh, you who seem too blind to see
Your country's parlous plight;
And you who prate of liberty,
When unprepared to fight;
Lift up your eyes – for Honor stand–
Your hope is Freedom's sod–
Nor strike the flag above your land
To any prince but -- God!

Mrs. W. T., Hillsdale, Wyo. 1. If any one in your church acts so as to hurt you, that need not keep you from attending divine service. They probably do not know better. Ignore their slights and soon they will either see the error of their ways, or you will have learned to value such attacks so lightly that you will be able to ignore them entirely. 2. It is not given to all of us to possess equal talents in God's service. Paul says, (I Cor. 12 : 4) that we are not given the same gifts by the Spirit. So long as we believe, the testimony of our belief will not be missing, even though we cannot express it in words. Acts oftentimes speak louder than words and more effectively.

W. B. H., Klamath Falls, Ore. The word "Sabbath" was employed to designate the rest day of the Jewish week (from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday). Under the Christian dispensation the day of rest is changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, in memory of Christ's resurrection, and its true designation then is neither Sabbath (which is the ancient Jewish term) nor Sunday (which is the heathen appellation, i.e., "the day of the sun"), but "the Lord's Day." It is not with us, as with the Jews, a day of rest and absolute abstention from all employment, but a day of spiritual recuperation and religious activities in a thousand different directions, and a period of withdrawal from secular pursuits. Under the Mosaic law one might not walk beyond a certain distance, nor light a fire, nor even carry a handkerchief. With us it is rather a day of celebration and glad Christian work, wholly unhampered by the ancient restrictions and obligations, which were designed to apply to a different age and dispensation.

J. C., Richmond, Ind. The passage in Matt. 24 : 30 (with its parallels in Luke and Mark), referring to the "sign" of the coming of the Son of Man, is one upon which commentators are of various opinions. "The star was seen before the first Advent," one commentator writes, "and there were appalling portents before the destruction of Jerusalem; so it may be that something analogous will be witnessed before his personal appearing, the nature of which it is vain to conjecture." Whatever its form or character, the question of universal visibility is overcome by the declaration that "every eye shall see him." (Rev. 1 : 7).

Reader, Conway, Mo. There are many churches which hold "open communion," extending the invitation to all who love the Lord and trust him for their salvation, even though they may be members of other churches, to join in the ordinance.

M. W. C., Tioga, N. D. If it does not interfere with any of the other duties of the day, we can see nothing to criticize.

P. H. S, Lewisville, Ohio. The passage in I Cor. 3 : 12 uses the simile of a building on a solid foundation, composed partly of durable and precious materials and partly of those that are perishable. Gold, silver, precious stones, which can bear fire, are the teachings that will stand the test of severe judgment, while wood, hay and stubble will not stand it. It may not be a question of heresy (for that would destroy the foundation absolutely), but rather of good and bad teachings mixed up together, sound doctrines side by side with man-made philosophies and beliefs that may be attractive but useless. Into the foundation also are those persons who are joined to the church by the teachings, the genuineness of whose conversion will be tested at the end of all things, when "the gold of faith," even to the last grain, will be saved, while all that is worthless will be consumed. The whole illustration the commentators regard as a striking example of Paul's rhetoric.

A. D. B., Ionia, Mich., writes that the following illustration, given by D. L. Moody, suggests the true origin of P. P. Bliss's hymn, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning": "A ship on Lake Erie, bound for Cleveland harbor, was overtaken by a storm, and as they neared the port the pilot could only see the upper light—the light from the lighthouse streaming to them through the storm and darkness. The lower lights were not burning—the pilot could not see how to steer into the harbor. It was impossible to sail back again upon the lake; the ship had to go forward, and for the want of the lower lights alongshore, the vessel, now at the mercy of the huge, roaring waves, was dashed to pieces on the rocks, and many of the crew perished before help could reach them. P. P. Bliss was associated in those early days with D. L. Moody in Christian work, and he must have heard Mr Moody use this illustration, which gives a beauty to its meaning."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Rufugees eating supper at a relief station in the Russian Caucasus

Starving Millions Look to Us

THE crisis of suffering has been reached in Syria and Armenia. The warning comes from American missionaries and official representatives that if the 2,000,000 destitute and homeless refugees are to be saved from death by starvation, relief must be sent quickly or it will be too late. When this intelligence reached New York, the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee, with which the Christian Herald has been cooperating, immediately issued appeals that gave new life and impetus to the movement.

In a single night a big New York throng that faced the issue in the "Billy" Sunday Tabernacle on the evening of May 28 pledged $120,000 to the work of immediate relief. In his prayer of thanks, the evangelist said he was quite sure it would have pleased the Lord more if the amount had been $200,000. He said that had it been that sum, it would have come ten million miles closer to the figure he desired. The Right Rev. Goulasarian, Armenian Bishop, through an interpreter, thanked the big audience for its Christian generosity.

Among the subscribers were "Anonymous," $20,000; Allen Wardwell, $1,000; Mrs. M. B. Bonchian, $1,000; another "Anonymous," $15,000; the Christian Herald, $10,000; Samuel Thorne, Jr., $1,000; several anonymous donators of several Liberty Bonds ranging from $50 to $1,000; Arthur Curtiss James, $10,000; Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Harkness, $5,000 each; the Mount Lebanon Relief Committee, $5,000; $5,000 came from Boston.

This great Tabernacle meeting was given up to discussion of the deplorable situation. The call comes from over 2,000,000 destitute and suffering people in bleeding, poverty-stricken Armenia, Caucasus, Persia, Syria, Palestine, Egypt and Mesopotamia. From the Bosporus to the Euphrates all is poverty, hunger and despair.

Dr. Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, declared the Christian Church was doomed if it should limit the form of its duty or abridge its sympathy in this crisis of the world.

Commenting on what he characterized as "cruelties inflicted by the Turks on the suffering Armenians and Syrians," Sunday said: "More than 1,000,000 men, women and children have been slain and 2,000,000 of the inhabitants are appealing for help to prevent starvation. Lord Bryce, Arthur James Balfour and others have written of the Armenian question as a political issue and of this blot upon civilization. Shall we apply the Turk's medicine to himself? No, that is not the Christian way. It is the Christian way to make him behave."

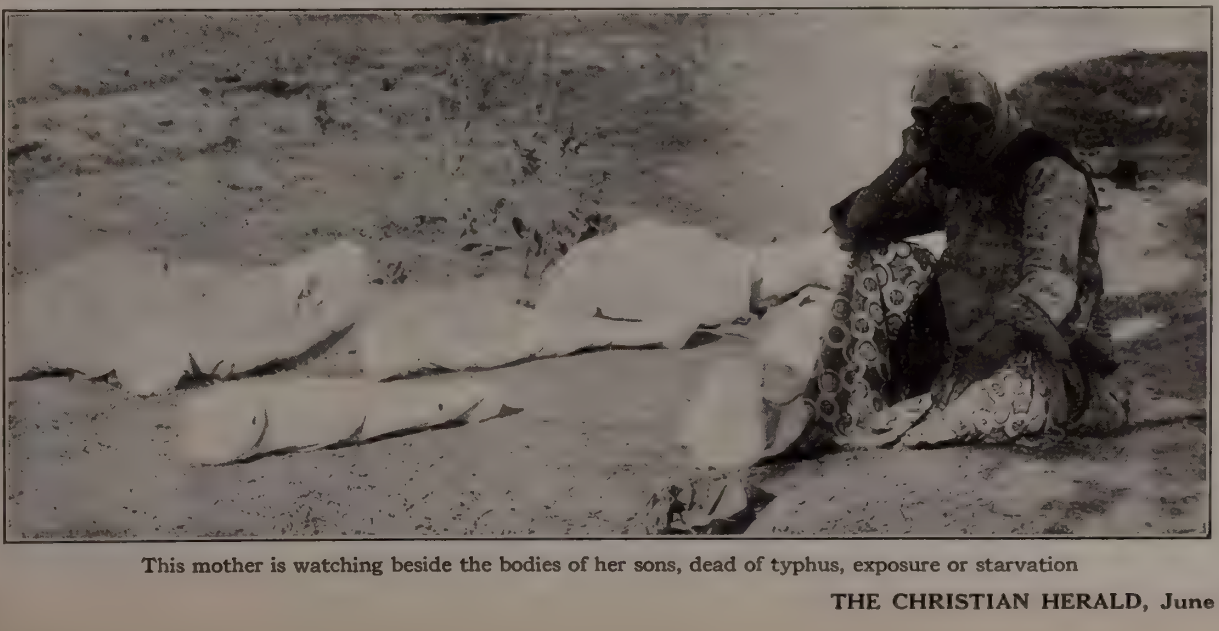
The reports show that thousands of women and children are starving while relief work has been seriously hampered because of an erroneous press report that the committee was unable, since the severance of diplomatic relations, to transmit supplies and funds. The American Committee is sending without hindrance every dollar of money that can be secured, administering its funds through responsible consuls, ex-consuls, American missionaries and other reliable neutral agents, more than 100 of whom are at this moment serving in relief administration.

The cargo of the U. S. S. Cæsar, which has been held in a Mediterranean port by the submarine menace, is expected to be sold at an enhanced price and the proceeds will then be cabled for immediate relief. It will be used in the purchase of supplies in Russia, where the prices are reasonable, and the life-saving food can readily be transported to the Near East.

There are, besides, three absolutely distinct and safe neutral channels open to the committee, through any one of which they can transmit any amount of money to responsible administrators in the needy sections of the empire where destitute refugees are gathered. So far as the attitude of Turkish officials to the work of relief is concerned, there is every evidence that the majority of these officials are inclined to extend every possible favor and courtesy to America's missionaries, whose unselfish service they recognize and respect. A recent communication received through the State Department as Washington contains the following: "Djavid Bey, in charge of the Ministry of the Interior, has sent telegraphic instructions to local authorities throughout the empire informing them that the rupture of diplomatic relations between the United States and Turkey is not a war measure, and that American citizens and institutions should be treated as before."

But, aside from the work in the Turkish Empire, it must be remembered that a large part of the work is among the hundreds of thousands of helpless, homeless, destitute Armenian and other refugees who have fled into the Russian Caucasus, Persia, Syria, Mesopotamia and other sections outside

Continued on page 670



This mother is watching beside the bodies of her sons, dead of typhus, exposure or starvation

Real Progress in the Philippines

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

FROM Bontoc, picturesque capital of the Mountain Province, we rode thirty miles to Banaue, where rice climbs the hills in terraces that are the wonder of the world.

Eight miles out from Bontoc we stopped at Talubin, waiting for our lunch and my camera to catch up. As there was plenty of shade in which to rest before our steady climb to the Polis Pass, 6,200 feet above sea level and 3,400 feet higher than Bontoc, there was no dissenting voice when the suggestion was made that we "rest a while." It is strange how attractive "resting a while" can become when the ponies are joggy, the sun warm and the trail long. Our one hour's rest at Talubin, however, spoiled our six o'clock start, which was the record one of the trip.

Part way up the trail we came to several bunches of red plants tied to some posts. A village, most beautifully situated in a narrow valley on a steep side hill—brown huts in lush green paddy fields—could be seen. The red plants are thus displayed to let people know that a "kanyao" or feast is taking place, and are a warning that a stranger is as welcome as the return of a wife-beating husband. Far below us we could see the tribunal, and, grouped around the small court-yard in front of it, brown-skinned ants that we knew to be men.

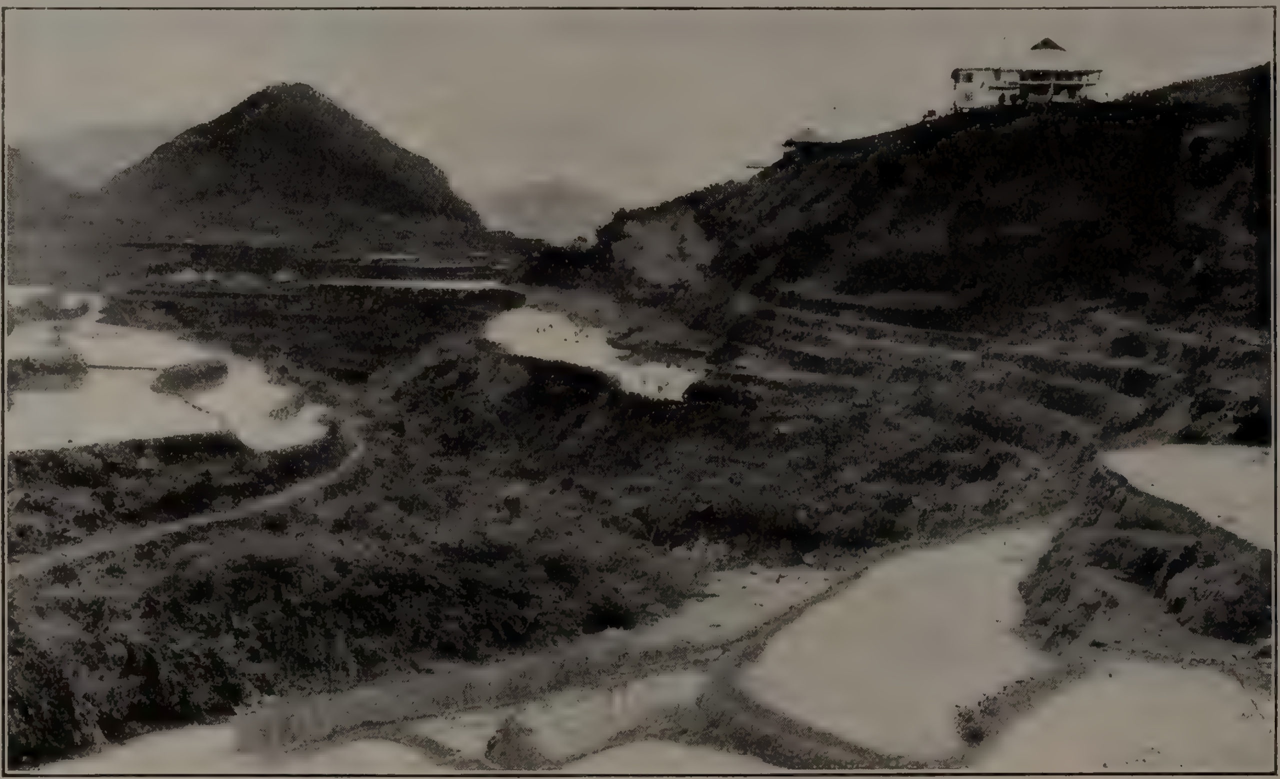


Photo by courtesy of Bureau of Public Works, Manila

Rice terraces winding around the hills of Ifugao Province

On the way we passed through dense jungle, damp and dark, with hanging ferns draping the gnarled scrub oaks in festoons of lacy lightness and with ferns and moss carpeting the steep hillsides beside the trail. Noon found us at the pass, and we could see the terraces of Banaue, seemingly only a short distance away.

The Mountain Trail proper runs along near the top of a ridge and hence is fairly straight, but the trails at lower levels have a lack of direction that almost perfectly resembles the edge of a maple leaf. In the Philippines violent rains are the rule, and this causes numerous deep gorges and side valleys. As bridges are conspicuous by their absence, to use an excellent phrase which was coined by one of the unknown Canterbury Pilgrims, one must descend to each river valley and then ascend to a curve where the rounding hill land between that and the next river is not too distant. To climb straight up the precipitous slopes is out of the question; to float across the intervening valleys like the small clouds, which are continually doing it, is impossible without a magic carpet or seven league boots, so travelers have to undergo the inconvenience of following trails that point in every direction except toward the destination, but which reach there after one has had enough kinesthetic appreciation or depreciation of the trip to make it memorable.

Base ball follows the flag; it has reached Bontoc. Will he strike out?

IN the mountains a map is of no use in judging distance, for there are oxbows and figure-eights in plenty between points that are within hailing distance on paper. From the Polis Pass there is a back trail bordered with raspberry bushes, Benguet lilies, orchids, pitcher-plants, green creepers and feathery bamboo, tree-ferns and white violets, so that one is encouraged to take a field course in botany by the way.

The constabulary station at Banaue is situated on a mound in the midst of a broad valley, up whose sides rice terraces, with flooded surfaces reflecting the clouds above them, reach to the very tops of the surrounding hills. Thousands of years have been spent in building up a system of irrigation which the most expert engineer could not duplicate. Some of the terraces are very broad and others are mere strips of green, edged in yellow mud. Some are thirty feet high or even more. Rivulets that would destroy the terraces with their violence in the period of heavy rains descend in foaming waterfalls in narrow ditches walled away from the fields. Nowhere on the earth's surface has man worked so hard to claim so little, and, although the crops are abundant and the valley is long, rice has to be imported by the Ifugao villages which follow the flooded terraces to the tops of the hills.

The Ifugaos are an interesting people who wear ear-rings, bracelets, anklets and kneelets of coiled brass wire, which they buy by the yard and wind to suit themselves. They carve wood in interesting forms that appeal to such tourists as come to their secluded valley, and they occasionally used to carve each other. But some years ago they had an American governor who was decided on several points, and who is said to have killed off all the bad ones. He so won their admiration by being able to get drunker than any of them could that even his few enemies would take part in the procession that used to carry him home after a drinking-bout and tuck him gently in bed. To us they were very friendly, and I could see no reason to doubt the statement that all the bad ones had been killed.

ON our way from Banaue to Kiangan we stopped at a little village made up of four or five thatched houses set up on posts, with wooden projections like belt pulleys left on to keep out the rats. The Ifugaos have a clever way of keeping pests from eating their chickens, for they entice them into small coops and then suspend the coops high above the ground.

This phenomenon interested Mr. Marquardt very much, and he determined to secure a picture of the row of coops hung up out of harm's way. But there was a dusky Venus in that village who had procured a small mirror somewhere and had used it in ordering her raven tresses and washing her pleasing visage, and as films were few the director decided to combine data on chicken coops with those on Ifugao womanhood, with the result that the chicken coops did not appear in the picture. But he will be able to remember the coops very well by writing on the pleasing picture of a womanly woman, "Above this lady's head there were some interesting chicken coops, suspended from the floor timbers."

We called on the champion wood-carver and medicine man of the district, who carved two life-size figures for the provincial building at Kiangan. They stand one on each side of the staircase, and I think I said "good morning" to each of them at least a dozen times. The wood-carver posed for his picture for a consideration and then wanted his daughter to undergo the same experience. She seemed to be the boss of that household, and I am certain that she is the treasurer, for he passed over all the tips to her. Women in the Philippines, from Filipino to Ifugao and from Kalinga to Moro, have a lot to say about the way things are run.

My first realization of the different status of Philippine womanhood came on the Pacific steamer on which I last returned to the United States. A

Continued on next page

The New Negro Exodus

Why They Are Leaving the South

By G. W. GASQUE, D.D.

IN the industrial centers of the South, like the Birmingham,, Alabama, district, the negroes are leaving for the North for higher wages.

In one city I asked sixty negro laborers a personal question, if they intended to go North. Fifty-four answered in the affirmative. Forty-eight gave, for their main reason, better wages. The other six were able to give no reason in particular.

On inquiry, I learned that the sixty men received from $1.25 to $2.85 per day, with an average wage of $1.65, which was a small percentage above what white men were receiving for the same work.

Also I spent several days calling from house to house in various communities, town and city. The following experience will give a fair general average of what the women are thinking: Out of thirty-five, twenty were determined to go North "so I can git mo' fo' my work." Nine said they had not thought much about it. Six "sho' was a-goin' to stay right wah they is."

"What do you get for a washing the size of the one you are doing now?" I asked a woman.

"I gits ten cents apiece for the shirts, an' when I furnishes the soap an' ever'thing, an' do the starchin' an' arnin', I gits a dollar an' a ha'f, 'sides the shirts." This was for a week's washing for a man and his wife and one child five years old.

"What rent do you pay?" I asked ninety families in six cities in three states, and found that the average was $4.10 a month. The average cost of heating and light for the same families was $22.50 a year.

IN the cotton belt the farm negroes are leaving because they must. It is not a question of whether they want to remain or go. In the states of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, especially, the whites have suffered two poor crops and find themselves unable to carry their tenants over another year.

The negroes own little land, and, the white man not being able to finance him through another year, there was nothing for the negro to do but pack up and leave. When I was in south Alabama the first of May, whole trainloads were still leaving.

This exodus makes a problem rather difficult for the cotton-grower to solve, especially at this time when so much is dependent upon the farm.

Minor causes of the exodus might be stated as follows: (1) For better educational advantages, (2) For better social and political privileges, (3) That they may be assured of fairer treatment in the courts.

Negroes throughout the South are, on the whole, intensely interested in the education of their children. I met a number of hard-working families who were actually eating from one to two meals a day in order to keep their children in school.

The question of voting does not enter to any great extent into the negro's calculations. As one man expressed it: "Votin' ain't wo'th a dollar an' a ha'f a year, 'cause they's goin' to elect who they wants to anyhow." In most Southern states, all voters are required to pay from $1 to $2 a year poll tax.

OF course there are exceptions. A preacher, whose son had just volunteered for service in the army, said to me, "We can't feel that it's quite right to furnish most of the labor for the farms, help run the factories, and do our share in fighting the battles of the country, and then be denied the rights of a citizen."

Uncle George, ex-slave, who isn't moving north

"I understand," said I, "that quite a good many of your race are leaving for the North because you are unable to get justice in the courts. Is it so?"

Invariably the answer was, "No." "A man that'll behave hisself ain't a-goin' to git into no trouble," was the usual reply.

The expressions herewith are the honest expressions of the negroes themselves.

I went into a little negro store—stock worth about $400—and asked the owner, Aunt Lizzie, a woman about fifty years old, if she were planning to leave.

"La, child, no," she said; "what do I want to leave for? I's got my own home an' my childern's all live here. No, sir; I's goin' to stay right wah I is."

She took me across the street and showed me her home, a large, completely finished, comfortably furnished, neatly kept seven-room house, built and paid for by Aunt Lizzie herself.

"How did you do it?" I asked her.

"First I bought the lot, an' paid $10 down an' $10 a month, till I had the lot paid for; then I saved $100 an' had the house built, an' paid $15 a month till the house was paid for. Then I started my store the same way."

"What did you do to get the money to do all this?"

"I worked for it."

"Doing what?"

"Washin', sewin', pickin' cotton, an' jist anything I could get to do."

"Aren't you married?"

"Yes, sir."

"What was your husband doing all this time? Why didn't he help you pay for this home?"

"He's been payin' for the farm. We's got a farm three miles from town."

During the several days I spent in the country, among the many interesting men I met was a man about sixty years old, who owned something like three hundred acres of land, worth from $50 to $250 an acre. When I asked him how he managed to get hold of so much property when so many of his race had nothing, he said,

"To tell you the truth, boss, I bought up this land when it wasn't wo'th but about $20 an acre."

"But even at that, how did you manage to pay for it?"

"All I knows, I got it by workin' hard, an' savin' my money, when the other fellers wus gaddin' about spendin' their money an' havin' a good time."

While in conversation with Uncle George, an ex-slave, ninety years old, he gave me as his "candid opinion" the following:

"Mos' niggers 'r lazy. These he'h young bucks, they ain't much account. Mos' uv 'em 'r paid more'n they'r wo'th. If they'll stay wah they is, an' go to work, an' save their money, an' live right, an' be honest, they'll git along fust rate."

Real Progress in the Philippines

Continued from preceding page

young Filipino wanted to wrestle with some of the Japanese on board. But his wife was with him and she feared she would lose a husband in the mêlée. She vetoed his desire with considerable ease and perfect effectiveness. If she had been a Chinese, Japanese or Indian of the same class, her husband would have wrestled as long as he wanted to, or could, and the woman in the case would have kept her mouth shut. In Turkey a man doesn't mention his daughters. But in the Philippines, in several cases, I have observed that the woman holds the purse and the gavel.

EARLY afternoon found us all using our first galong-galong, which is a rude aerial tramway on which travelers and their saddles are carried when the water is too high for fording. Ever since I saw my first kinetoscope picture, which was a scene of cavalry officers swimming a stream, I have had a boyish desire to let myself, fully clad, into some good wet water and cling to my brave pony as his vigorous kicks carried us across a swollen stream. Here in the wilds of the Philippines, under conditions such as the young boy at his first moving picture show never dreamed of, was my chance to carry out a youthful ambition. But the other men wanted their pictures taken, which took my attention temporarily, and I have a sneaking suspicion that I have become conservative on the matter of adventure. Anyway, I stood on the shaky platform, suspended by telephone wire from a cable, while a naked Ifugao pulled the thing across by means of a rope stretched a few feet below the supporting cable.

Mr. Miller and I had decided to break away from the party on the following day, to wend our way back to Baguio by way of Awa and Monhuyhuy, stopping at Loo rest-house for the Sabbath. But one look at the magnificence of the provincial building, which was our Kiangan home, convinced both Mr. Miller and myself that for one week we would be Mohammedans and have our Sabbath on Friday.

The beautiful stone school and the fine provincial building, which rank among the finest buildings in the Mountain Province, were entirely constructed by public school boys under American supervision. The Bureau of Education in the Philippines does not teach boys how to do things at some imaginary date in the far future. It makes them do them during school hours.

The provincial building is too good for the town. Although the exterior is not especially pleasing, the interior is a storehouse for the finest furniture imaginable. In the great upper hall are tables of the finest first-group wood, formed of slabs twenty or more feet in length, sixteen inches wide and two inches thick. As a provincial building, in a district where the people live in huts, the structure is unjustified. As a useful monument to the skill and willingness of the Ifugao schoolboy under proper direction, it ranks above anything I have seen.

Between the provincial building and the schoolhouse, part of which is used as a girls' dormitory, stands the sacred tree of the Ifugaos, with a span of its branches of three hundred feet. Nor is it a tree at all in the true sense, for it is a gigantic example of the balete, which begins as a parasite vine, kills the tree on which it rises, and then hides it in its twining trunk. The Ifugaos think that when that huge tree dies they too will perish, but there is an industry, a stolidity and a stamina in that obscure race that should remove from their hearts all fear of extinction.

Lieutenant-Governor Dosser, who has had great success in ruling the Ifugaos, was away on a hunt when we arrived, but we had opportunity to look through his fine albums of photographs of these people and note their evolution from the chief headhunting rivals of the Bontoc Igorotes to the trousered, and in one case perfumed, dandies with whom we rubbed solid but flannel-shirted shoulders. All told, I think I like them in G-strings better than I do in white duck. They are admirable in G-strings, with satiny skins that would insure the success of any complexion soap that could produce them. But in white duck they are quite commonplace. The difficulty with the backward races is not while they are backward but when they are forward, and all in all the Ifugaos are less likely to be forward than the Filipinos themselves.

IN the old days the Philippine constabulary offered a fine career for young American soldiers, and some of the best Lieutenant-Governors have risen from service in the constabulary, which is the soldier-police force of the Islands. But under the present administration opportunities are less attractive and less permanent, and the career, which is one of the most promising for the young Filipino, is no longer an attractive field for an American. The constabulary was formed in 1901, under pressure of necessity, to do a large variety of tasks connected with peace, sanitation and established government. Over each province there is a Senior Inspector, the post being held in the Mountain Province by Captain Davis. The majority of the personnel is Filipino, and the bravery and decision of these native police officers promise well for the ultimate ability of the Filipinos to maintain order. The task of forming this native body of soldier-police fell upon young Americans at a time of much unrest, and the results have been highly commendable.

As long as the life of the young teniente was filled with adventure and thrills, with the opportunity to render real service to his native land in its policy of colonization. the field was most attractive to a volunteer or a discharged army man. But today the work is monotonous, the life lonely and the hope of a long career with satisfactory promotion is gone. Whether Filipino officers can govern the constabulary as efficiently as the native soldier-police have manned it remains to be seen. And the Mountain Province may be the testing ground. It is a reasonably sure guess that when the new Filipino governor of the Mountain Province leaves his capital for a tour of his province, in a week or two, he will be sincerely glad that up there among the fine industrious Ifugaos, the clean Kalingas with their direct gaze, and the frank, forceful Igorotes, there is in control of the constabulary of that province an American officer with courage, judgment and determination, beloved by the non-Christian races, who look with grave suspicion at the growing power of the Filipino in the government of the Islands.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

HONOR THE DEAD, CHEER THE LIVING. Decoration Day was this year more than a memorial. The crowds cheered alike for the boys in blue of '61 and for the boys in khaki of 1917. From one end of the country to the other the addresses that marked the formal programs of the day united eulogy with a declaration of the country's firm purpose and the true allegiance of her sons. President Wilson said in an address at the national cemetery at Arlington: "We have said in the beginning that we planned this great government that men who wish freedom might have a place of refuge and a place where their hope could be realized; and now, having established such a government, having preserved such a government, having vindicated the power of such a government, we are saying to all mankind, 'We did not set this government up in order that we might have a selfish and separate liberty, for we are now ready to come to your assistance and fight out upon the fields of the world the cause of human liberty.' In this thing America attains her full dignity and the full fruition of her great purpose."

© International Film Service, Inc.

With firm and steady tread these veteran zouaves of the sixties still guard the colors

Eight States Storm-swept. Tornadoes and cyclones on Saturday and Sunday, May 26 and 27, swept through portions of Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama and Arkansas, killing 295 persons, injuring 1,243 and causing a damage to property and growing crops estimated at several millions of dollars.

In Agreement. The British commission, headed by Mr. Balfour, finished its work in the United States and returned home by way of Canada. Before leaving, Mr. Balfour expressed the conviction that the United States was with the Allies to the end, and there is much evidence to indicate that the American government and the French and British commissions were able to reach an accord upon most of the measures and problems connected with our advent as a belligerent. Both commissions were able to bring us valuable advice and possibly some confidential information which could not otherwise have been transmitted. The Allies know America's resources, America knows the Allies' needs in detail and in the order of their importance. It is not definitely stated whether or not the war aims of the United States and the Entente are also in agreement. The United States announced the high principle that it entered the war in the interests of human liberty and not for territorial or material advantage. Russia's new democracy has raised the parallel cry of "no annexations and no indemnities." As this was written, diplomatic negotiations were under way to assure the Russians that no one of their allies has any war aim in conflict with the newly announced Russian program. Yet there does not appear to be between the United States and her allies a clear and unequivocal agreement as to the peace which, becoming possible through the fortunes of war or otherwise, might end the conflict. It may be the work of the United States to furnish the moral force which shall create just this agreement, and thus hasten the day when peace shall once more embrace all mankind.

Russia Still in Ferment. Following a declaration of the Committee of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates at the great fortress of Kronstadt that they would not recognize the Provisional Government in Russia, anarchists paraded unopposed the streets of the Russian capital, calling for the commune and for war on all capital, and there were reports of a royalist outbreak at Tiflis in the Caucasus, resulting in the arrest of the Grand Duke Nicholas. Committees from Petrograd went to Kronstadt to re-establish its loyalty. The American commission headed by Elihu Root, which is expected to wield considerable influence toward stability in Russia, was reported on June 3 as having safely reached a Russian port.

Fragments of News. Rear-Admiral Sims, in charge of American naval operations in European waters, was formally appointed a vice-admiral on May 28. . . . Russia has ordered 10,000 freight cars and 400 engines in the United States, a total purchase of about $19,000,000. . . . Villa forces on May 30 captured the Mexican town of Ojinaga, opposite Presidio, Texas. . . . The Conference Committee inserted in the Espionage Bill a new press censorship section, but the House rejected the censorship section on May 31, 184 to 144, and returned the bill to conference with instructions to eliminate the censorship. . . . Race troubles are not wholly confined to the South. Two riots occured in New York City between the negroes and police, one on May 26 and the other on May 30, both starting in saloons. . . . Andrew Carnegie, eighty-two years old, and a semi-invalid, has given up returning to his home at Skibo Castle, Scotland, and has purchased a country place at Lenox, Mass. . . . Quakers having been exempted from the draft, a meeting representing all their organization at the Friends' Meeting House in New York City on May 28 agreed to assist the government by work of a constructive nature during the war. . . . The Rockefeller Foundation will build and finance the operation of two hospitals in China, one in Peking and one in Shanghai. The hospitals will be officered as far as possible by native Chinese trained in

Continued on page 669

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE British losses during the month of May were, according to the official statement, in round numbers, 112,500 in killed, wounded and missing.

During the past week events of the slightest importance in either a strategic or tactical sense have been completely lacking on the western front. There have been thrusts here and there on the line by one side or the other, but absolutely no fighting by either side for a definite objective.

Colonel Reddington, military expert of the London Times, speaking of general conditions, writes: "We are drawing near to the close of the third year of the struggle, and there are no conclusive military reasons why the war should soon end. No great Power, and no great army or navy, have been struck down on land or sea. . . . The obstacle to the defeat of the enemy in the field is the failure of the Allies to amass in the western theater of war all the military resources which they possess, and, in our case, to utilize to the full the resources of our manhood. Both these difficulties can be overcome by good will, for a concentration of our existing forces in the French theater is perfectly practicable, while a few amendments to our service acts will give us the men we need for victory. . . . Neither we nor France can afford the heavy losses of a great and general offensive for the moment. We could conduct such an offensive certainly, but if battalions fall, as they may, to half their strength, and if losses are not made good, then we must remember that morale falls proportionately with losses as a general rule, and that in view of the British and American reserve power which can arrive in France, we should be very foolish to exhaust in advance armies which are, in the case, at all events, of France, her last."

ON Friday, May 25, the Italians made a dash forward on the front extending from Castaguavizzia to the sea, and captured the town of Jamiano and the hills to the south, as well as the hamlet of Bagni. Jamiano is fourteen miles from Trieste and about twelve from the Italian border, and is the farthest point east which the Italians have so far reached. The Italians made their greatest advances in the center and right, and were held on their left. The Austrians counter-attacked but were repulsed. For the next two days a fierce battle raged on practically the east bank of the Isonzo all the way from Plava, between Tolmino and Gorizia, south to the sea. On the portion of this front to the north of Gorizia, neither side seems to have won any serious advantage. South of Gorizia the Italians made progress north of Jamiano, and pushed their lines as far east as the outlying houses of Versio. Monday and Tuesday the fighting continued practically all day along the line. San Giovanni, west of Duino, on the Adriatic, fell into Italian hands. The next three days were days of continual battle on the southern end of the line, but were indecisive. The country is a tangled maze of hills, separated by steep and narrow valleys, to which natural obstacles all the devices of military art have been added, calculated to impede an enemy's advance. The Italians to May 31 claim to have taken some 24,000 in this offensive, the Austrians 15,500.

The British report of vessels sunk for the week is the smallest for some time, viz.: 18 vessels over 1,600 tons and only one under that tonnage, and two fishing vessels.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Unknown Heroes of the Cross

*A SERMON BY JUNIUS B. REMENSNYDER, D.D., LL.D.

TEXT—Heb. 11 : 38. "And others, of whom the world was not worthy."

OUR Lord was born at the epoch when the Roman empire had reached a height of glory unrivaled in history. Augustus, nephew of the great Julius Cæsar, one of the three or four most famous human personalities, sat upon the throne of the world. Yet never does Jesus make the least reference to these mighty rulers. He did not judge men by their power, their glory, their fame. When he gave praise, it was rather to the obscure, the humble, the unknown. The Samaritan woman carrying her water-pot upon her head to the well; the poor widow casting her two mites into the Lord's treasury; the devoted Mary sitting at his feet, hanging upon his words; these—from the lowly paths of life—attracted his love and approval. The glare of outward splendor and pomp did not affect him, for he "knew what was in man," and his judgment was according to a pure heart and a right spirit.

This, accordingly, is the standard that runs throughout the Bible. Its motto is: "God is no respecter of persons." And again: "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly." It is the real, inner worth which alone wins his pleasure and which he holds in honor.

In this remarkable eleventh chapter of Hebrews, there is a roll-call of those whose lives have thus been pleasing in God's sight, and who have been heroes of faith and righteousness. Many of the illustrious saints of the Old Testament are here recalled. Abraham, Joseph, Moses, David, Gideon, and other notable leaders in the kingdom and church of God pass in review. Their deeds and their names are haloed with an immortal lustre in the Book of Life.

And to have one's name written upon such a tablet as this—as being one whose life was aflame with devotion to the service of his Maker, and whose one single aim was to advance His kingdom of righteousness and good will on the earth, and to bring about piety and love and peace, instead of iniquity and wrong and hate—how far more glorious than to wear the mightiest kingly or warrior diadem, red with the blood of victims, and bathed in the tears of grief and woe!

HOW beneficent to our youth is the study of the life of such, as for example that of our American martyr-hero, Abraham Lincoln! His clearness of vision as to the real issue, his unwavering stand for the right, and yet, withal, his charity, gentleness and even tenderness to the fallen foe—what a helpful model for imitation! And in the far higher realm of religion, how uplifting and quickening to the spiritual life to hold up for our imitation the lives, the holy deeds, the splendid moral fight, and the heroic sacrifices of such great saints in the church of the living God as the inspired author records in this notable chapter!

But, as the apostle calls upon us to review and follow the illustrious heroes of the cross of Christ, he pauses to think of those obscure saints whose lives were none the less godly, and whose pious deeds still live, but who passed from the stage unmarked by history and unknown to fame. These, too, he puts upon this scroll of immortal honor in the words of our text: "And others of whom the world was not worthy."

How true it is that many of the world's truest heroes are unknown to fame! Limited in talent, or lacking education, or fettered by poverty, or no opportunity coming to their hand, they never won conspicuous places on the world's great theater. But none the less, in their narrow sphere, did they so worthily do their task, so patiently bear their burden, so unselfishly sacrifice for others, so well fill their place and so bravely fight their battle as to deserve the heroes' fadeless laurels. The frail, pallid girl who toils on from year to year, with scarce a ray of pleasure, to support an invalid parent; the engineer who dies with his hand on the throttle to save the lives of his passengers; the mother who gives up every thought of herself for the success and happiness of her child—these are showing a heroism of soul equaling, yea, often far surpassing, that which has made some name go ringing down the corridors of fame.

As George Eliot writes: "A large majority of men and women are of this obscure stamp. They have had no thrilling adventures, nor are their brains pregnant with genius, yet many of these commonplace people bear a conscience and have felt the sublime prompting to do the painful right." Aye! the poetry and the pathos, the comedy and the tragedy, lying in the experience of many of these souls walking the lowly ways of life!

IN the national cemetery at Gettysburg, where sleep the nation's martyred dead, in the vast army of tombs that encircle the splendid monument to victory, we see at one place 700 granite blocks, inscribed with the word "Unknown." And yet, because the names of these fallen patriots are undiscovered and unrecorded, did they die in vain? Who can tell but that, in the fiercest shock of battle, it was these very lives which, poured out on the crimson field, turned the wavering tide of victory, saved a nation from dismemberment, and decided the fact that this "government of the people, by the people, and for the people, should not perish from the earth."

A great writer says: "The history of the world is the history of the few." While this is largely true, that the history and destinies of mankind have been greatly shaped by epoch-makers whose brilliant discoveries—as Galileo, who invented the telescope, or Watt, the steam-engine, or Gutenberg, printing, or Luther, whom the historian Bancroft calls the "giant founder of liberty of thought and modern civilization"—while these notable geniuses have done so much to revolutionize living conditions and to set the world forward in its course, still such forces are exceptional and limited.

Taken as a whole, it remains true that it is not so much by single great deeds or by a few illustrious personalities as it is by the great army of silent workers, of patient toilers and obscure fighters, that epochs of history are made and that the world moves on the path of progress. Upon the quality and work and lives of this great mass of humble men and women, rather than upon the few brilliant leaders, learned scholars and shining personalities, depend the security of the home, the welfare of the state, the support of the church, and the progress and reign of the kingdom of God.

Nothing is more dazzling to men than the prize of fame. To win this glittering height ambitious souls have sacrificed conscience and honor, and with hearts of stone have trodden over the bodies and blood of thousands, and caused nameless woe and misery that they might reach a coveted throne.

AND yet, for what? Has this glittering bauble brought them real happiness? Amid the execrations and curses of the lives they have wrecked, and with the alienation and displeasure of God, what but remorse can sting them, despair torment them, and history pillory them with lasting shame and infamy?

We all, indeed, enjoy popular favor and applause. Everywhere we see men and women striving to gain the public eye, to shine in society, to be in every mouth, and we are tempted to envy those whose talents, or fortunate accidents, or large riches, enable them to secure this coveted prominence.

But our text means to remind us that this is only vanity. That all is not gold that glitters. That things are not always what they seem. That many a showy exterior poorly hides a little, mean and sordid soul. That it matters little as to what are the world's judgment and applause. God's judgments are apt to be exactly the reverse of man's. It is not to the great, the mighty, the proud; but saith the Lord, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit." It is just the lowly, the modest, the unknown ones whose hearts and lives often he looks upon with approval, and who are most pleasing to his all-holy eye. And the history of his kingdom on earth shows how often he has chosen such when he wanted some great deed done.

When he would heal Naaman, the mighty captain of the host of Syria, of his leprosy, the cure is wrought through the little captive Hebrew maid who feared God; when he would humble the proud giant Goliath, he does it through a mere sling in the hand of the pious boy David; and when he would do the greatest of all—send his Son into the world—he does not go to some queen on a throne, but to a humble, unknown Jewish virgin of the village of Nazareth.

The world's greatest mistake is the struggle for high places, and the rivalries, the envies and the wrongs caused by the strife. God does not estimate men and women by their talents, their success, their prominence, their fame. But it is the pure heart alone that pleases him. It is the one who obeys conscience that he approves. It is the one who is working ever so quietly and modestly to serve him who wins his favor. It is the life of unselfish sacrifice and unrecognized service for the church and for the good of others that he marks.

And although quite unheard of on the world's page, the deeds of such are recorded and their names written in the Book of Life. And in the great day, when so many illustrious earthly names will be seen to be but dust and ashes and shame, these unknown saints, these unfamed heroes, these modest, humble, saintly lives, will be brought to view, and shine forth as the sun in his strength.

Let us, then, not think because we are obscure and unknown that our lives are of little worth or note. But in our lowly, unnoticed sphere, untroubled by thought of the world's honor, let us do our humble part the best we can, and let our motives be unselfish. Let us serve God and our fellows, and great shall be our reward, our happiness and our honor in the Kingdom of Heaven.

---

* Pastor St. James' Lutheran Church, New York City.

From Western Prairie to London Pulpit

HERE is a breath of romance. Some sermons printed in a town paper west of the Mississippi find their way into the hands of the editor of the London Christian Commonwealth, and he secures and publishes a biography of the preacher. An ambassador is sent from City Temple, London, left vacant by the resignation of Reginald Campbell, to the small Western city to hear and consult with the writer of those sermons. That sermon-maker, while on a literary pilgrimage to Shakespeare's country, is asked to supply the vacant London pulpit for several Sundays. He returns to the Western prairies. But correspondence is resumed, certain understandings are arrived at, and Dr. Joseph Fort Newton is released from his ministry to the Liberal Christian Church of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to accept the call of City Temple to the pulpit which is one of the most powerful megaphones in Nonconformist Christendom, and a responsibility and privilege that no man dare accept lightly.

Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.D.

On the last Sabbath morning of April Dr. Newton closed his ten years' ministry in Cedar Rapids. The "Little Brick Church" that was almost abandoned when he came to the city was filled with people when I arrived a half-hour early for the service. In enunciation and in physical bearing Dr. Newton gives the impression of being provincial rather than cosmopolitan of the type to which we are accustomed. There is a flavor of Galilee in his speech. Occasionally his wording is staccato. But always you have in an unusual degree the scholar's keen appreciation of the meaning, and the poet's love of the sound, of words. In the audience one sees bankers, servants, editors, judges, business men, young clerks, technical experts, and, recently, army men.

On the day Dr. Newton started to London, where he preached his first sermon to immense congregations on Sunday, May 27, the writer asked him, "What do you specially hope to accomplish in City Temple?"

The answer was immediate. "The first thing is to organize it from a great crowd into a great church. It has been a great preaching station, but that is too heavy a load for any one to carry. It should be an organic community, all sharing the load of spiritual uplift."

Asked again, "What to you is the most significant, most needed teaching of the Bible in our day?" his answer was, "Christ! The great phrase of Paul, 'In Christ'—with the added promise and consummation, 'the hope of glory' for man."

Dr. Newton had nineteen Baptist preachers among his forebears; he was born in Decatur, Texas, graduated from the State University and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. While doing postgraduate work in Boston, he used to frequent the upper gallery of Dr. George A. Gordon's church, sitting away under the roof. "That is why I am in the Christian ministry now," he says.

SUCH is the minister who goes to one of the first pulpits of Great Britain. He goes with this declaration: "My solitary aim, my sacramental ambition, is to make the living, eternal Christ real and vivid to men, so that they may find in the fellowship of God in Christ, light, leading, healing."

ARTHUR PEIRCE VAUGHN.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

Sunshiny Christians

A READER in Missouri writes us a very earnest letter concerning church entertainments, and as the subject is one of general interest, we quote a portion of the letter below.

"If the young people's societies in the church, or any of the members, should make a dinner or supper, charging for it in order to help the church or to pay its honest debts, and if some did not care to attend, but should pay the equivalent to some poor widow or orphan, or should invite some needy one to partake of their hospitality, which of the two do you think would be fulfilling the Scriptures in Luke 14 : 12?
"Missouri. M. P. J."

All authorities are agreed that there is a social side to church life which should be cultivated, although it is desirable that social entertainments, suppers and the like, having in no direct sense a spiritual side, should be held elsewhere. We can see little to criticize in the average church social gathering. It is a kindly and agreeable way of getting acquainted with our friends in the same congregation, and it strengthens the tie that binds the church family together. We have the pleasantest recollections of various occasions of the kind.

If, however, the church sociable or supper, or whatever it may be, should be permitted to take the place of, or to use the funds designed for, benevolent or spiritual work—for which they happen to be far more needed—then there would indeed be some justification for comment and reproof. We do not see how any church or congregation could enjoy a sociable or supper, knowing that its poor had been neglected, its sick left unhelped, or any of its ministering offices or benevolences left undone. The best plan is to make the sociable always tributary to some worthy enterprise of the church, spiritual or benevolent, or both.

A sociable isn't meant to be and shouldn't be a gloomy and depressing affair, but rather the reverse. We hold that religion should brighten life and fill it with cheer and good companionship, as well as with sympathy and kindness. It does not necessarily follow that the amiable, agreeable type of Christian is neglecting any of his more serious duties; it would be a grievous thing to do that. A very large proportion of God's people don't proclaim to the world what they are doing in the way of charity; their deprivations and sacrifices are kept secret, and even their friends may know little or nothing of them. But such a one is certainly making the world all the better to live in.

Some of the grandest men and women we have ever known have been sunshiny Christians. They have radiated joy wherever they went. We might mention scores of great soul-winners who were of this joyous type, yet it did not in the least impair their efficiency for the great and solemn task of calling sinners to repentance. They knew that many a heart is won by a friendly word in season, spoken cheerily and with smiling lips, that could never be reached by one who lives constantly in the shadows.

High Service for Women

CONGRESSWOMAN RANKIN from Montana has come forward with an idea that is worthy at once of her high office and of her sex.

"Food conservation on a national scale," she said, amid the cheers of the House, "is but the natural outgrowth of woman's traditional work. Women in the past have been concerned with the immediate preparation of food from one meal to another. They must now consider the food supply for the year. They must be individually concerned with the food supply for the whole country. Women are well fitted for these activities. They are so closely related to the home. Women officials, with their understanding and sympathy for home problems, will inspire confidence in the home woman and will encourage her to cooperate with the government in this emergency."

The key to the perplexing problem lies in Miss Rankin's suggestion of "women officials"—women leadership, women experience, women sense—in the department of food conservation.

Certainly the men upon whom official responsibility rests have shown little acumen toward any practical solution of the food-supply problem. They have given us words, words, words, high-sounding but without meaning, and they are hysterically heaping confusion upon confusion. Men by the thousands, who have never given a thought except by proxy to the food supply even of their own households, are now advancing amazing theories as to the food supply of the nation. Rich society women, who never enter their own kitchens, are touring in automobile parties, preaching "Preserve or perish" to the country women who have been preserving all their lives.

In the midst of such din and confusion the wise words of Miss Rankin strike a true note. For practical help in the food crisis we must turn to the women, who every day of every year have been dealing with the difficulties of feeding the nations.

The Marriage Month

NO arbitrary decree of fashion was needed to make this glorious month of June the time of loving and mating. There is a higher law, and all animate nature submits to it.

All through the range of plant life sex is as clearly marked as it is in animals. It is the sexual instinct that has given to the flowers their color and fragrance which bribe the bee and the butterfly to carry the fertilizing pollen from plant to plant. In countless myriads of forms of life so low as to be ordinarily beneath our notice marriage and reproduction go constantly on, and the favorite time is June.

"The month of roses" we call it. Why? Because the roses themselves marry in June. Every bursting bud is a drama of love and longing. Every brilliant color, every sweet perfume, is a plea for mating.

This is not mere poetry or romance. It is cold scientific fact.

Love is the great mystery of life. It may be the growth of years, months or an instant. Man sees a million beautiful faces; he hears a million sweet voices; he meets a million women with flowers at their breasts and light in their eyes—and they do not touch him. Then he sees the one, and she holds him for life and death. She is no nobler, better or more beautiful than were those he passed by, and yet his world is empty without her.

Assuredly there is far more than fashion in this universal force we call love.

Looking One Week Ahead

THE great war has stimulated a world-wide interest in prophecy. The second of Dr. J. M. Gray's wonderfully illuminative series on the "Mountain Peaks of Prophecy" appears next week.

Adam was the first gardener. Today, more than ever before, the eyes of men are turning to the soil. Frank G. Carpenter will have a splendid article in next week's paper telling how the boys and girls of America are organizing as a great army of Youth to help feed the nation and the world.

Next week, too, we will all go to "The Children's Paradise." We mean Mont-Lawn, of course—that beautiful Home of Childhood on the Hudson.

"What One Brave Woman Did for Poland," in next week's issue, tells how Madame Paderewska turned her artistic taste to doll-making and helped thousands of her fellow countrywomen and their little folks buy bread.

One of the staff of the United States Department of Agriculture has prepared for the Christian Herald's readers a couple of splendid, timely articles, the first of which, "Uncle Sam Advises the Farmer," will be printed next week.

And that isn't all. Watch and see.

The Conscientious Objector

ONE of the many hard problems in these strenuous days is that of dealing with the conscientious objector. His class is by no means confined to the membership of the Quakers and the Plymouth Brethren, for in other denominations there are doubtless many sincere Christians, whose loyalty is beyond question, who hold substantially the same views that have made the Friends known throughout the civilized world as men of peace. Like Mr. Britling, in H. G. Wells' famous story, they are ready for any sacrifice or any service to "see it through," providing it does not conflict with their deep-rooted convictions by leading to what to them would mean the wreck of their religious principles. Surely some way can be devised to deal with such cases on wiser lines than those that were adopted in England, where the conscientious objector was an object of persecution. If it can be satisfactorily shown that such a person has been a sincere and consistent advocate of the principle he professes, then he could be made to render equally good service to the nation in some other capacity—service to which his conscientious scruples need not apply. We have no sympathy with the mere pretender, who is ready to take up any excuse to escape service; but where a record of long-standing conscientious conviction can be clearly established, it should receive the consideration it deserves. Soul-convictions need no apology from any one.

The End of the Gag Rule

IN the defeat of the censorship clause Congress has sustained one of the most sacred and most stanch of American principles.

There are worse things even than national defeat by a foreign foe; one of them is self-surrender of the principles and ideals upon which this republic is founded.

Even had the gag law been passed it could not have been enforced. It was as clearly violative of the Constitution as it was of the American spirit. Its mere proposal was an outrage upon American traditions, customs, rights and instincts.

Men elected to office are servants of the public, not masters. They are responsible to the people, who ever remain sovereign. Elevation to office does not invest common clay with autocratic powers; such powers, and aim at such powers, have no place in this republic.

As Senator Frelinghuysen said, "This is not a one-man war; it is not the President's war. This is not the war of the War Department or the Navy Department. It is the war of the American people."

It is through the will of our people, and not foreign direction, that the war must be maintained; and it is through the will of our people, and not secret diplomacy, that peace must be secured.

The Wonderful Book

THE Bible is the universal Book of the wide world. In hundreds of languages and dialects, heathen countries are to-day reading its pages, and a great army of missionaries is expounding its truths.

When Dr. Paton was printing his first New Testament in the Aniwan language, Chief Namakei, an old man, eagerly watched the missionary, and one day he said, "Does it speak?" "Yes," said Paton. "It can talk now in your own language." "Oh, let it speak to me—let me hear it speak." Paton then read a few lines, when the old man cried, "It does speak! Oh, give it to me!" Grasping the book, he turned it round and round. Then, pressing it to his heart, he shouted, "Oh, make it speak to me again!" Is not this the greatest work of the missionary, making the Bible speak to men?

It is said that more than five hundred thousand sermons are preached every Sunday from texts taken from the Holy Scriptures. Any but a divine Book would have been worn out ages ago, but the more the Bible is used, the better it is liked. The cry everywhere today is, "Come over and help us!" All gates are open to the Christian soldier sent of God, carrying with him the Word of Power and preaching Christ to every creature.

Czar and King at Work

"WHEN I last heard about the Czar—now plain Nicholas Romanoff," writes the Russian monk Iliodor, "he was shoveling snow in the courtyard at Tsarskoe Selo."

"King George," according to a cable, "may be seen most afternoons in Windsor Park, cultivating a potato patch."

Striking examples of the leveling effects of this great world-struggle for democracy. Czars, kings, kaisers and emperors must find more useful occupation than that of misruling nations.

Royalty has plunged the world into a horrible state, from which democracy alone can rescue it. In the great upheaval thrones are shaken and sunk like ships in a storm, society is lashed and tossed and churned like the sea in a fury, and in the chaos old leaders are cast aside and new leaders are arising in every land.

"The world must be made safe for democracy" is the Wilson slogan under which America is making ready in money and men. There can be no safety for democracy where one man is born to wield a scepter and the many are born to serve. There can be no enduring democracy where autocratic power centers in any man, whatever his title or designation.

"The man with the hoe" is emblematic of service, more now than ever. The man with the scepter, more than ever before, is emblematic of selfish, stupid misrule, blundering diplomacy and butchering warfare. The masses who toil must have voice in their destiny, and the occupants of thrones must come down to the soil and earn their own salt.

Whatever other outcome the great war may have, the world has outlived its hereditary kings, czars, kaisers and emperors.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Girls Celebrating Flag Day

TOMORROW, June 14, will be Flag Day, and celebrations of one kind or another will be held in all the states of the Union in recognition of the fact. One of the most beautiful and memorable celebrations of the event was the one given in Chicago last year by the girls of one of the city's High Schools. There were twenty-three girls dressed as Miss Columbia, and one girl, dressed all in white, carried the flag. They gave a drill on the broad platform at the top of the entrance steps to the high school, on which they performed various evolutions, ending in a salute to the flag. The Flag Day this war year will be one of deepest solemnity, with loyalty and sacrifice and with courage, faith and hope. The first flag of the United States, raised by Washington at Cambridge, Mass., January 2, 1776, consisted of thirteen stripes, alternate red and white as at present, and with a blue canton emblazoned with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, as in the British flag. In 1776, Congress resolved that the red and white stripes should have the blue canton with thirteen white stars, instead of the crosses. At the battle of Bunker Hill there was one banner with no device but a coiled rattlesnake, with the motto "Don't tread on me!" Another was a white banner with a pine tree in the center, with the words "An Appeal to Heaven." The flag of to-day is the same as the original one adopted June 14, 1776, except that the thirteen stars have grown to be forty-eight. Everything that is noblest and most heroic in the past, everything that is true, beautiful and good in individual character and public life in the present, and everything that is to be hoped for in the future—universal liberty, virtue, piety, happiness and peace—is incarnated in the Stars and Stripes. The harvests of our fields, the gold of our mines, the resources of our commerce, the product of our factories, the precious blood of as true young men as ever lived, and the agonizing prayers of millions, are behind the flag to carry it to victory. We pray that out of the world war there may come the white flag of peace to wave over all nations to the end of time. The divine protection over our nation is thus expressed by reference to a flag as a symbol: "And his banner over me was love." (Song of Sol. 2 : 4.)

Blindness in America

GOVERNMENT statistics indicate that there are about 60,000 blind people in this country, and that out of that number between six and seven per cent. were born blind, five per cent. went blind before they were a year old, and over two-thirds lost their eyesight after they were twenty years of age. Some were made blind by accident, some by hereditary taint, others by virulent disease or the infirmities of age. All the states have their blind asylums for the care and education of those from whom the beauty and glory of God's sunlight is shut out. There is no public benevolence more beautiful than the care for the sightless. It is bad enough to have God's sunlight shut out from the body; it is worse to have it shut out from the soul; to be unable to see the green lawns, the beautiful gardens, the bountiful harvests, the fields of endeavor, the gorgeous scenes of delight in the spiritual realm. And yet this is the condition of all by nature. What a blessed thought it is that the same Jesus who opened the eyes of the blind when he was on earth is still, by his Spirit among men, touching with his fingers the blind eyes of the soul that it may see truth, duty, heaven! Those of us whose vision he has restored realize the experience of the one who said: "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." (John 9 : 25.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Chicago high school girls in their Flag Day drill

Paper from Spinach

A HORTICULTURIST in France, M. de Noyer, claims to have made from the stems of spinach a paper which is as strong and delicate as Japanese paper. If this be true, the extension and immediate cultivation of this garden vegetable for the manufacture of paper in this time of need would be one of the solutions of an important practical problem. Paper is from "papyrus," the vegetable growth from which the ancients made the substance on which they wrote. The ark in which the mother of Moses hid him was really made of paper, for the bulrush was the papyrus from which the famed paper of Egypt was made. This is the story: "She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it by the flags by the river's brink." (Ex. 2 : 3.)

Post Offices and Politics

THE partisan political connection between the postmasters and the Federal administration was partly broken by Presidents Roosevelt and Taft by placing all fourth-class postmasters under a system of merit rather than of political favor. Senator Poindexter's bill to put all third-, second- and first-class postmasters under the same regulation, failed in the House of Representatives. But President Wilson has found another way of putting the higher class of postmasters under a system of merit like those of the fourth class. He has given an order that applicants for these higher classes of post offices shall be examined by the Civil Service Commission and selected from an "eligible list." There was never any reason why the Post Office Department should be used as a political machine to do partisan work as it was in olden times, and its gradual disuse for the purpose is salutary. This recent taking of 10,000 post offices out of politics will be good for the nation. There is this test of qualification for service under the Jewish government, determined by the way men drank water from the stream: "And the Lord said unto Gideon, The people are yet too many; bring them down to the water, and I will try them for thee there; and it shall be, that of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go." (Judges 7 : 4.)

Gave Fortune, Charity Charge

MRS. MARKS NATHAN, who with her husband gave over $250,000 to benevolent institutions in Chicago, is now a charity inmate in the Hebrew Old People's Home in that city, with no rights or privileges above the rest. She looks out of her window, after she has done her work in her room, into a yard at the playing of the children of the Orphan Asylum to which she gave the first $40,000, which made its foundation possible, and which is named The Marks Nathan Home for Jewish Orphans. She is a member of the board of directors of the very asylum in which she lives. While the money was given in her husband's name, she made it with her own hands. Her husband was a learned Hebrew scholar, and devoted his time to the study of the Jewish Scriptures. She had a fine business head and provided the support, beginning by making wire frames for women's bonnets, and established a large business. She bought a piece of property for $8,000 which grew to be $40,000. She took half of that and bought ground in the suburbs of Chicago which grew to be worth $150,000, and continued other successful real estate transactions. They were both very devout and felt that God had given them the money to help others and make them happy. So they gave to the synagogues, founded a hospital, an orphanage and other institutions. Her husband died and Mrs. Nathan continued her giving till all she had was gone but $10,000, which she saved for her own support. But the bank in which the money was invested failed, and, without a penny in the world, this dear woman, who had earned much money and given it away, went to the Old People's Home as an object of charity. The most beautiful part of the story is that Mrs. Nathan is not sour or unhappy at the changed condition. To a reporter in an interview she said: "Of course, I am not glad that I must be a subject of charity; but my greatest sorrow is that I have no more money to give to charity." That woman is a heroine; she, the pauper, is above earthly queens. She voices this divine sentiment: "Ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20 : 35.)

Livingstone's African Home Preserved

THE house in which David Livingstone lived at Kolobeng, Bechuanaland, and from which he went out on his world-famed explorations, is to be preserved as a relic. The British government has taken measures to preserve the remains of the house. The ruins of the building have been fenced in and protected by a shed. It is to be kept free of jungles, and in good order. It is well for Britain that she should guard this home Livingstone founded among the heathen, and where he brought so many of the natives to Christ, for he was one of her most honored and useful sons. A poor Scotch boy in a cotton mill, at ten years of age he had a thirst for learning and for souls. He secured an education and then he answered the call to mission work in a foreign field. Being a physician, he carried cures for the body as well as salvation for the soul. With the torch of divine love he started lights in the Dark Continent that will burn till the end of time. Few men were ever honored as he was on his return to England, after four years of wonderful discoveries in Africa. He would not return with Stanley, who was sent out by the New York Herald to find him. Five years later, he was found by his attendants on his knees, dead. His faithful native friends embalmed his body, and under great difficulties carried it all the way to the ocean and to the ship, and a year later, England interred the body of God's hero in Westminster Abbey. The old home in Africa and the bones in Westminster preach an eloquent sermon from this text: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel." (Mark 16: 15.)

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Mystic Scales

SUNDAY, June 17. I Sam. 2 : 3. "By Him actions are weighed." The ordinary human inclination is to measure things and not to weigh them. We are the victims of bulk and size. We are impressed by the spectacular. We are fascinated by the glare of the big stage. And therefore we love to use the lineal measure rather than to estimate the weights of things. But God weighs everything. There are many sensational things, which arrest the public eye, but which weigh little or nothing when placed in the scale of the Lord. And there are many seemingly insignificant things which, when God weighs them, are heavy with imperishable gold. Here and there, in the World of God, we are privileged to see him weighing the actions of his children.

"Thou didst well it was in thine heart." Here is the Lord weighing an inner desire. David yearns to build a temple, and the yearning is not to be realized. But the gracious Lord puts the longing into his scales, and it is found to have the weight of a perfected act. God does not wait for material creations, and then measure the value of our life by visible results. Our hungers are the vital part of our character, and a discerning judgment will estimate their force and intensity. "Blessed are they that hunger!" God weighs the inner things, the yearnings, the prayings, and the dreams. We measure only finished accomplishments. We revel in the dimensions of the temple which is built. God weighs the desire for a temple that was never built, and in his gracious judgment it has all the solidity of a temple made with hands. The man or the woman who longs to be a missionary, but whose yearning cannot be realized, is counted as a missionary in the eyes of the Lord, and the will to do is reckoned as the deed done. "Thou didst well it was in thine heart."

Here are rich men ostentatiously dropping their offerings into the temple treasury. How the temple officials rejoiced in the sensational gifts! How they sounded the praises abroad! And there came a poor widow, and she quietly left her offering for the Lord. Judged by measure it was next to nothing: when put into the scales of the Lord it outweighed all the other offerings put together. On a subscription list it would never have been noticed. Nay, it would never have been published at all; but it shone radiantly in the Lamb's book of life. The widow's service had in it something of Calvary, and the poor contributor was a blood-relation of the Lord. God weighs everything, and love-sacrifice is the heaviest thing in the world.

J. H. J.

The Most Excellent Knowledge

MONDAY, June 18. Phil. 3 : 8. "Yes, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom." Wisdom is knowledge put to practical account, knowledge applied to its proper ends. Bare knowledge is an empty thing, lacking in satisfaction as also in finality. Confucianism is a fine moral system, but even Confucianists confess it lacks something to give it vitality. The knowledge of Christ, that is to say, knowing him, is more than knowledge: it is wisdom and truth.

The knowledge of Christ is the most excellent knowledge because he is the key to the only proper interpretation of life; because there is such finality in him that we can not go beyond him; because eternal life depends upon our knowledge of him as its author and inspirer, and because this knowledge is so related to life as to be a part of life itself. "Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." So speaks Paul, but only of the knowledge of earthly things. Natural knowledge, knowledge of nature and her ways, knowledge of science and arts, leads to culture. Moral knowledge leads to character. Spiritual knowledge binds together natural and moral knowledge, giving beauty to the former and power to the latter. All other knowledge is relative, but to know Christ and the power of his resurrection is absolute. The human mind can no farther go, can no higher climb.

C. C. A.

The Unsocial Habits

TUESDAY, June 19. Prov. 18 : 1. "Through desire a man, having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom." The first nine verses of Proverbs 18, taken together, have rightly been called a sermon on unsocial habits, or vices. Each one of the sins reproved in this section affects not only the doer but the society of men among whom he lives. For the present text we prefer the rendering of many modern commentators: "He that dwelleth apart seeketh pleasure, against all sound wisdom he showeth his teeth." The unsocial habit here censured is found with the haughty, self-conceited person who separates himself from the rest, is sufficient unto himself, takes counsel only with himself, and loves to pose in lonely grandeur. He pretends to look down upon the common herd as unworthy of his companionship, to treat the acclaim of the masses with scorn, to disregard, yea, to defy public opinion. He invites no confidences and receives none. He has no friends, for he lets it be understood that he wants none. He leads nobody, cooperates with nobody, follows nobody. He delights only in one thing, viz., to be apart, to be different, to be singular. Perhaps all the symptoms of this morbid state of mind rarely occur in one individual, but each one of them is a sign of the disease of self-centered egotism. There are indeed occasions when a person wants to be alone. Solitude has its legitimate uses and blessings. But the habit which the wise man strictures in this text is not wisdom, though it seeks to appear as such. Man's greatest enemy is himself. The world is wicked, 'tis true; but so is every man. The man that chooses to keep company only with himself does not keep company with a saint but with a conceited fool: he denies to others the helpful service he owes them as a brother of the great human family and spurns the service of which he is in sore need from others.

W. H. T. D.

The Warming of Peter

WEDNESDAY, June 20. John 18 : 25. "And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself." It is dangerous for any one to warm himself among the comrades around the devil's fire. Peter was bold and courageous when defending his Lord before the mob, but when alone among enemies, convinced that Christ would not defend himself, Peter surrendered his soul to Satan, deserted the disciples, denied his Lord, sealing his lie with an oath. But the old love for the Master was aroused when Peter beheld the wonderful face of the sympathizing Christ.

When Jesus died, Peter must have given up all hope of the success of Christ's mission. Consorting with John on the morning of the resurrection, he no doubt said, "Oh, if I had not denied him! Oh that he would take me back into his love again! I shall never forget the look of agony he gave me at my fall." Suddenly the woman who had seen the risen Christ came to John and Peter, saying, "The Lord is risen! He said, 'Go tell the disciples and Peter.'" At the mention of his name, Peter was filled with hope. It meant that he was to be forgiven and restored to the Master.

The second fire where Peter warmed himself was on the shore of the sea where his Lord had built a fire for the morning meal, and where the old fire of love was newly kindled in Peter's heart, and where he received his great commission to go and feed the flock of Christ. When the question came, "Lovest thou me?" the answer, "Lord, Thou knowest that I love thee" was full of penitence, contrition and devotion. The next fire was on the day of Pentecost, when Peter's tongue was set on fire by the Holy Spirit, so that he could preach a sermon which would bring thousands into the life of the burning heart. Are there not many others loitering in bad company, near the flames of perdition, who should come away and be baptized with the heavenly fire of love?

E. W. C.

Personal Influence

THURSDAY, June 21. Acts 5 : 15. "They brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them." The record does not say that Peter's shadow cured any one, and yet it may have cured some diseases which had their seat in people's minds. A powerful appeal to the imagination will lift some types of mentality above the consciousness of their trouble, real or imagined. This explains many a "miracle" at Lourdes and St. Anne de Beau-pré, many a "cure" of Christian Science. This explains the "healing power" of some persons—their personalities are magnetic, mesmeric. The use of the term "magnetic" suggests the mysterious and powerful character of the influence wielded by great warriors. Napoleon was magnetic; years after his death, when they brought his body back to France, as the ship passed up the river, the banks were lined with multitudes who burst into tears at the sight of the vessel. We almost feel the Napoleonic influence as we gaze down upon his tomb from the gallery of the Hotel des Invalides.

Unconscious influence is an immeasurable factor in human life. The effect of one influential personality in crises has again and again been demonstrated in history. How largely the element of personal influence enters into the formation of the character of the young can not easily be estimated. A hand on his shoulder and a single sentence spoken by a friend as they walked across a college campus turned one of America's greatest statesmen into the paths of Christian experience. Great teachers have been notable in this direction. Such were Arnold of Rugby, Mark Hopkins of Williams, "Domsie" in "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." Unconscious influence is a vast factor in disposing our minds to high ends. One of America's most gifted preachers testified that the strongest influence he felt in youth was that exercised by a stone-mason's apprentice. Mr. Beecher testified that he owed his earliest and deepest impressions of religion to an old black man, a servant in his father's family.

We all cast shadows as we pass along life's way. Shall we not aspire to cast radiant shadows, healing shadows like that of Peter? The surest way to possess and exercise such power is to follow Christ very closely. How closely would we like to follow him? So closely that we may hear the very whispers of his voice.

C. C. A.

The Shallowness of Feelings

FRIDAY, June 22. Prov. 18 : 2. "A fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself." The habit here described represents the other extreme to the habit delineated in the foregoing text. We are here introduced to the person who wears his heart on his sleeve. He delights in communicating to others his thoughts, his views, his opinions, his sentiments. He is thoroughly in love with himself; and he is not at all bashful: he lets everybody see how much he thinks of what he thinks. He is fully convinced that in any affair whatsoever very much depends on his judgment. In his own estimation he is a benefactor of mankind: he exhibits his superiority for the instruction and improvement of his fellow men. It is almost impossible to teach a person of this sort anything. He has known things before you did, and has known them better than you. He had preoccupied knowledge.

In the fourth verse of this chapter the sacred writer speaks of the conversation of the truly wise man, and says: "The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and the well-spring of wisdom as a flowing brook."

We delight to listen to the discourse of a well-informed person and to observe the outpouring of thought from a noble mind, just as we love to sit by a deep river that sweeps by at our feet and watch it carry precious burdens in its onrush to the sea, or as we love to watch the gushing forth of a spring from the virgin rock. But the obtrusive person who peddles his shallow talk as if he were distributing precious pearls, who assumes that everybody is as interested in him as he is in himself, does not create the impression of a wise man. Even the little understanding which he reveals and the truths which he utters are plainly made to serve his own, not other people's, interests. We have as little use for him in our practical world today as Solomon had for him three thousand years ago.

W. H. T. D.

Watching Jesus

SATURDAY, June 23. Matt. 27 : 36. "And sitting down they watched Him there." Not as we would watch Jesus, out of our love for him and longing to follow his example. His crucifiers gazed upon him to find fault with his dying, as they had done with his living. They said, tauntingly, "He saved others; himself he cannot save." Thus his enemies were betrayed into uttering one of the grandest truths about the world's Christ. These men watched him with malignant eyes to find some justification for their crime, just as an enemy will watch for the joint in your armor, where he may pierce you with his malice.

By contemplating Christ, who is in us the hope of glory, we become like him through the assimilation of his loving character. Christians watch Jesus to follow him, study him, trust him, to deny self for him, yea, to become partakers of his sufferings on Calvary, and to exclaim at last, as Christ cries "It is finished," "Truly this was the Son of God." Some see no beauty in him that they should desire him; but as we watch him by faith his glory brightens, till he fills all the horizon of our vision, becoming our rising Sun of righteousness forever.

E. W. C.

◆

Home is the woman's workshop, the man's resting-place, the children's school, and the nation's hope.

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XI

IN QUEST OF THE STARS

IN a roomy old house on Beacon Hill Dr. Frank Gleason made his home with his sister, Mrs. Ellery Thayer. The family were at their North Shore cottage, however, and only the doctor was at home on the night that Hawkins, the Thayers' old family butler, appeared at the library door with the somewhat disconcerting information that a young person with a baby and a bag was at the door and wished to speak to Dr. Gleason.

The doctor looked up in surprise.

"Me?" he questioned. "A woman? She must mean Mrs. Thayer."

"She said you, sir. And she isn't a patient. I asked her, thinking she might have made a mistake and took you for a real doctor what practices. She said she didn't want doctoring. She wanted you. She's a young person I never saw before, sir."

"But, good heavens, man, it's after eleven o'clock!"

"Yes, sir." On the man servant's face was an expression of lively curiosity and disapproval, mingled with a subdued but unholy mirth which was not lost on the doctor, and which particularly exasperated him.

"What can a woman with a baby want of me at this time of— What's her name?" demanded the doctor.

"She didn't say, sir."

"Well, go ask her."

THE butler coughed slightly, but made no move to leave the room.

"I did ask her, sir. She declined to give it."

"Declined to— Well, I like her impertinence."

"Yes, sir. She said you'd"—the servant's voice faltered and swerved ever so slightly from its well-trained impassiveness—"er—understand, sir."

"She said I'd—the deuce she did!" exploded the doctor under his breath, flushing an angry red and leaping to his feet. "Didn't you tell her Mrs. Thayer was gone?" he demanded at last, wheeling savagely.

"I did, sir, and——"

"Well?"

"She said she was glad; that she wanted only you, anyway."

"Wanted only—! Comes here at this time of night with a bag and a baby, refuses to give her name, and says I'll understand!" snarled the doctor. "Oh, come, Hawkins, this is some colossal mistake, or a fool hoax, or— What kind of looking specimen is she?"

Hawkins, who had known the doctor from his knickerbocker days, was guilty of a slow grin.

"She's a—a very good looker, sir."

"Oh, she is! Well—er, tell her I can't possibly see her; that I've gone to bed—away—sick—something! Anything! Tell her she'll have to see Mrs. Thayer."

"Yes, sir." Still the man made no move to go. "She—er—beg pardon, sir—but she'll be that cut up, I fear, sir. You see, she's been cryin'. And she's young—very young."

"Crying!"

"Yes, sir. And she was that powerful anxious to see you, sir, I had hard work to keep her from coming with me. I did, sir. She's in the hall. And—it's raining outside, sir."

"Oh, good Heavens! Well, bring her in," capitulated the doctor in obvious desperation.

"Yes, sir." This time the words were scarcely out of his mouth before the old man was gone. In an incredibly short time he was back with a flushed-faced, agitated young woman carrying a sleeping child in her arms.

AT sight of her, the doctor, who had plainly braced himself behind a most forbidding aspect, leaped forward with a low cry and a complete change of manner.

"Mrs. Denby!" he gasped. But instantly he fell back; for the young woman, for all the world like a tenpenny-dreadful stage heroine, hissed out a tragic "Sh-h! I don't want anybody to know my name!" with a cautious glance toward the none-too-rapidly disappearing Hawkins.

"But what does this mean?" demanded Frank Gleason, when he could find words. "Where's Burke?"

"He's left me."

"Left you! Impossible!"

"Yes." She drew in her breath convulsively. "He says it's only to Alaska with his father; but that's just to let me down easy."

"Oh, but, Mrs. Denby——"

"You needn't try to make me think any different," she interposed wearily, sinking into the chair the doctor placed for her; "'cause you can't. I've been over everything you could say. All the way down here I didn't have anything to do only just to think and think. And I see now—such lots of things that I never saw before."

"But, why—how do you know—what made you think he has—left you?" stammered the doctor.

"Because he's ashamed of me; and—"

"Oh, Mrs. Denby!"

"You don't have to say anything about that, either," said Mrs. Denby very quietly. And before the dumb agony in the eyes turned full upon him, he fell silent.

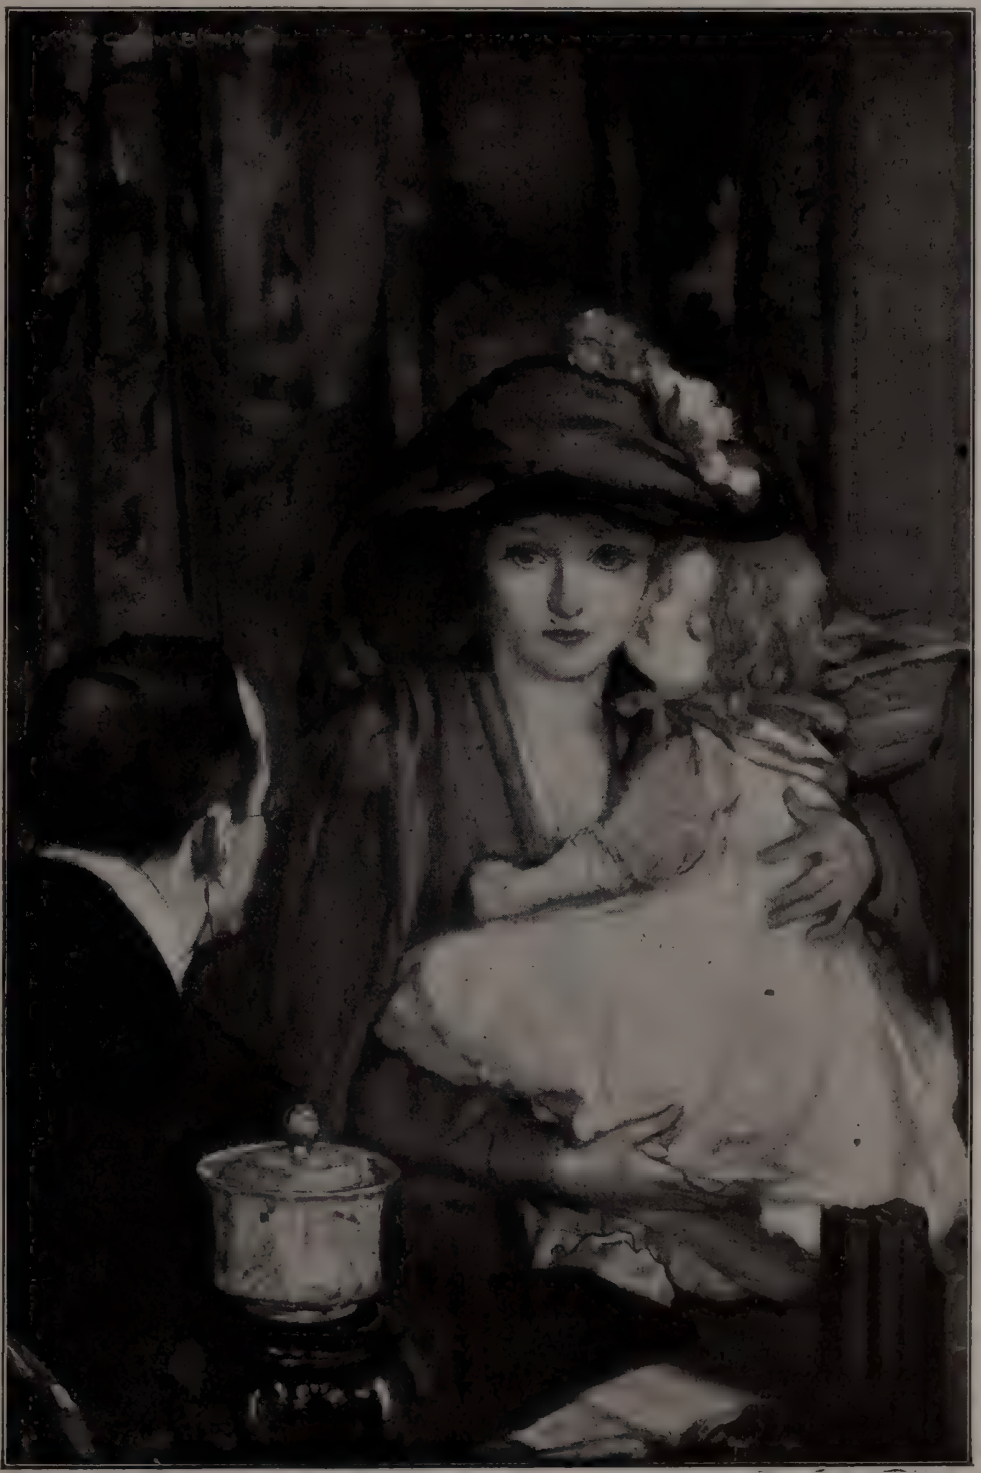
"There ain't any question as to what has been done; it's just what I'm going to do," she went on wearily again. "He sent me ten thousand dollars—Burke's father did; and——"

"John Denby sent you ten thousand dollars!" exploded the doctor, sitting erect.

"Yes; a check. I've got it here. He sent it for a playday, you know," nodded Mrs. Denby, shifting the weight of the heavy baby in her arms. "And—and that's why I came to you."

"To—to me," stammered the doctor, growing suddenly alertly miserable and nervous again. "A—a playday! But I—I—that is—how ——"

"Oh, I'm not going to take the playday. I couldn't even think play—now," she choked. "It's— Then in a breathless burst it came. "Doctor, you can—you will help me, won't you?—to learn to stand and walk and talk and eat soup and wear the right clothes and finger nails and hair, you know, and not say the wrong things, and everything the way Burke's friends do—you and all the rest of them—you know, so I can be swell and grand, too, and he won't be ashamed of me! And is ten thousand dollars enough to pay—for learning all that?"



At sight of her the doctor leaped forward with a low cry

FROM sheer inability to speak, the man could only fall back in his chair and stare dumbly.

"Please, please don't look at me like that," besought the young woman frenziedly. "It's just as if you said you couldn't help me. But you can! I know you can. And I can do it. I know that, too. I read it in a book, once, about a girl who—who was like me. And she went away and got perfectly grand clothes, and learning, and all; and then she came back; and he—he didn't know her at first—her husband, and he fell in love with her all over again. And she didn't have near so much money as I've got. Doctor, you will help me?"

The doctor, with his shocked, amazed eyes on the piteously pleading face opposite, threw up his hands in despair.

"But I—you—Burke— Oh, my dear lady! How utterly, utterly impossible this all is! Come, come, what am I thinking of?—and you with not even your hat off yet! And that child! I'll call Hawkins at once. He and his wife are all there are left here, just now—my sister's at the beach. But they'll make you and little Miss Dorothy Elizabeth here comfortable for the night. Then, to-morrow, after a good sleep, we'll—we'll fix it all up. I'll get Burke on the long distance, and——"

"Dr. Gleason," interrupted Helen Denby, with a calmness that would have deceived him had he not seen her eyes, "my husband isn't worrying about me. He thinks I'm at home now. When he finds I'm not, he'll think I've gone to my old home town where he told me to go for a visit. He won't worry then. So that's all right. Don't you see? He's sent me away—sent me. If you tell him now that I am here, I will walk right straight out of that door, and neither you nor him nor anybody else I know shall ever see me again."

"Oh, come, come," protested the doctor, again helplessly.

ONCE more Helen interrupted.

"Doctor, why can't you be straight with me?" she pleaded. "I had to come to you. There wasn't anybody else I could go to. And there isn't any other way out of it—but this. I tell you, I've been doing some thinking. All the way down it's been just think, think, think."

Continued on page 670

"Is It Well With Thy Soul?"

A Sermon by Evangelist Billy Sunday, Preached in the New York Tabernacle *

TEXT—II Kings 4 : 26. "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?"

FIFTY-THREE miles north of Jerusalem, eight miles from Tabor and four miles from Jezreel, there once stood the famous and unfortunate city of Shunam, situated in one of the most beautiful spots on the globe, surrounded by olive orchards and fields of waving grain, with babbling springs and shaded groves—an ideal place for an ideal home—and in that city there was such a home, presided over by one of the famous women of antiquity.

Elisha the prophet used to pass by this home on his way to Mount Carmel and back again to the schools of the prophets at Jericho, of which he was head, and there was something in his actions that led this woman to conclude that he was a man of God, for she said one day to her husband: "I perceive that a man of God is passing by us continually." Women are of keener perception when it comes to things spiritual and moral than are men.

"I perceive that a man of God is passing by us continually." And she said to her husband, "Let's build for him a little room and place therein a bed, a stool, a pitcher and a candlestick that he can ever afterward call that his home." The suggestion evidently met with the approval of the husband, for they did it and ever afterward the man of God, tired and worn on his journey, had a resting place, and he made that his home.

THERE was in that family an only child, and I can see him out in the field, where his father was with the reapers, and the hot sun of the Oriental country beat down on his head and the boy threw his hands to his head and cried: "My head! My head! My head!"

And the father said to the servants: "Carry the lad to his mother." And they bore him to the house. And then, to my mind, occurs one of the saddest statements found upon the pages of the Old Testament. He sat upon his mother's knee until noon, and then he died. Broken-hearted, she carried him upstairs and laid him upon the bed of the man of God, then turning to the young men her servants she said to them: "Saddle me a beast and drive on." Down yonder at Mount Carmel was the man of God who she believed had power to bring to life that dead child. Out there on the highways was the mother with her heart breaking; down there in the home at Shunam was the boy lying on the bed of the man of God, dead—and you have the picture. And they went on, and Elisha looked down the road and saw them coming, and he said to Gehazi, who was sort of a private secretary: "Yonder comes that Shunamite. I wish you would see what she wants and what brings her hither." And Gehazi ran down the road and met her and saluted her in the words of my text: "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?"

She answered, after the manner of Eastern salutation, "It is well." She drew near to the man of God, dismounted from the beast, fell upon her knees, threw her arms about him and wept. Gehazi, possibly thinking her insane, came, seized her by the shoulders and by sheer force was about to drag her away when the prophet of God put out his hand and stopped him and said, "Do not so rudely use her. The poor woman's soul is vexed and troubled within her and God has not revealed to me the cause of her sorrow." Then he turned to the woman and asked her why she had come and why she wept. She told him her boy had died and she believed by what she had seen and learned of him as she watched him pass her house and as he had been a guest in her home, that he walked close with God, and if there was anybody in all the nation that she believed had power with God it was that same man, and she made that trip to have him help her.

YES, sir, when your heart is breaking the first man you want to get under your roof is the preacher, a man that walks close to God. You don't want the dancing master then, nor the saloonkeeper, nor the card prize-winner. When your hearts are breaking you want somebody that keeps in touch with God. Then you will send for the sky-pilot.

She said, "My boy is dead and I want you to go back and help me and bring him to life again." And Elisha said to Gehazi, "Gehazi, here, you take my staff and go lay that on the dead child that he may live." I don't know, but I have always thought that Elisha presumed a little bit there. I do not know that God had told him to do that. What we want is a personal touch; there is too much of this other business. I think one of the curses of the church today is a perpetual sign hanging from the pew: "Wanted, a recipe whereby our work can be accomplished by proxy," and they think if they drop a check in the plate they are released from any responsibility and absolved from any necessity for doing anything for God.

She said, "I want you to go with me," and Elisha said to Gehazi, "Go, lay the staff on the dead child that he may live." But she clung to him, weeping, and said, "As the Lord God liveth and as my soul liveth I will not let thee go," and she compelled the man of God to accompany her home. He put everybody out of the room, out of the house. He walked into the chamber where the dead boy was lying on the bed, and we are told that he spread himself upon the dead child, put his face to the boy's face, his hands on the boy's hands, his heart to the boy's heart, and he prayed, and God heard his prayer, and the heart in that child started like a pump and drove the blood through the veins and the arteries; his eyes moved, his lips trembled, he sat up and asked for his mother. Elisha called to Gehazi, and said, "Carry the lad to his mother," and the house of sorrow was turned into a home of mirth; that of grief into happiness; that of misery into joy, because the woman's confidence was not misplaced and God had heard the prayer of the man and restored the boy to life.

NOW, why do you suppose God gives us that beautiful and matchless story? I'll tell you. That is simply an Old Testament incident, that is simply a pastoral incident of centuries and centuries ago, but there is a lesson in it that I think and feel is peculiarly applicable to this meeting, and for that reason I bring to you the message, and that is, God wants to teach us importunity in prayer, determination to accomplish the thing upon which our heart is set, no matter what difficulties or obstacles may be in the way.

Oh that the church would hold on to God and not let him go!

Now, "Is it well with thee?" I will answer that much of it for every man in this building tonight.

Is it well with the man that will sit at the gaming table and run the risk of being a black-legged gambler?

Is it well with the man who will take even an occasional drink and run the risk of becoming a sputtering, vomiting, reeling, jabbering drunkard, staggering to the pit of hell?

Is it well with the man that will take God's name in vain on his lips and pour out his polluted oaths and blasphemy?

Is it well with the man that will hang on the walls of his memory vile, lewd pictures?

Is it well with the man or woman who is careless of his or her associates, or of the Sabbath day and the laws of God?

No! No! Ten thousand times no. God pity you, if you go out into eternity with the sin on your life that is there tonight as you sit and listen to me!

THERE are reasons why you ought to come. In the first place, God is ready and willing to forgive you, no matter how black your sins may have been.

God says: "You go down and stand and tell them that I will forgive them. Tell them, yes, that they have broken my law. Tell them, yes, in their fear and their knowledge of sin they are getting away. They are trying to drown it in pleasure." God says: "Stand and tell them I will forgive and blot out their transgressions." God stands ready and willing to forgive you, and by and through the sacrificial death of Christ I am able to stand here tonight and bring you this message.

FRIENDS yonder are anxious. God is anxious. Christ is anxious. Is it well with thee? No. No.

"Is it well with thee?" Not if you are here without Jesus Christ for your Savior. God pity you.

Say! Why? Why are you not as pure as a sunbeam? Why are you not as sweet as a dewdrop? Why are you not as lovely as the sun-kissed Alps? Why are you not as unchanging as a spring morning pulsing with bird song? Why? I'll tell you, sir. God made those things, and God can make you like those things if you will only let him.

You say: "Mr. Sunday, I had a bad start in life. I have come from bad stock. I have bad blood in my veins. I was born with the devil in me and with evil inclinations." You can be born again with the devil out of you if you want to be, if you will give yourself to Jesus Christ and turn from your sins. Certainly. Don't blame your parents. They brought you into the world, that's true, but you yielded to its sin when you came in. Don't blame them.

"IS it well with thy husband?" The man that sits by your side; the man whose name you bear; the man for whose comforts you work; the man to please whom you stand and toil; the man who is the father of your children; the man the sweat of whose brow and the expenditure of whose brain and muscle force buys the clothes that cover your body and the food that satisfies and appeases you; the man whose image is woven in the fibres of your heart; the man for whose footsteps you listen; the man you swore to love, honor and cherish; the man for whom you left a good deal better home than he has ever given you; you turned your back on more happiness than he has ever given you. "Is it well with thy husband?"

"IS it well with the child?" I have often tried to imagine Noah and his wife seated in the ark, contented, and the storm of God brewing to burst on the world, and one would turn to the other and say: "Where are the boys?"

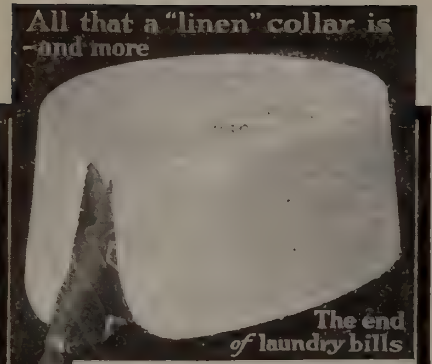
"Oh, they are out; they will be in late to-night. Leave the night lock so they can get in; they didn't take their key with them."

I can't imagine a father and mother tucking themselves in bed and letting their children gad the streets. "Is it

Continued on page 669

---

*In delivering this sermon, which was furnished to the Christian Herald by Robert Matthews, secretary to Mr. Sunday, the evangelist introduced a number of variations, suited to his audience and conditions at the moment.



All that a "linen" collar is —and more

The end of laundry bills

CHALLENGE
CLEANABLE COLLARS
Best for summer months. Indispensable for motoring. Ever-white. stitched edge effect. dull linen finish — and instantly cleanable with soap and water

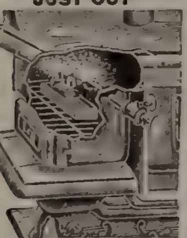
POSITIVELY NO-WILT
A $5 to $10 annual saving — and real comfort All accepted styles, half-sizes. At your dealers or samples by mail 25c each
A booklet on request.
The Arlington Company
725 Broadway, New York
DU PONT

"NO, DEAR—NO!
"Mother can't play. Her feet won't let her."

Old before her time. Yes, old and crippled Strength gone — spirit flown. No joy in life.

Mothers and wives with weak or falling arches can get quick and positive relief with the wonderful new FOOT BALANCE. No pain — permanent.

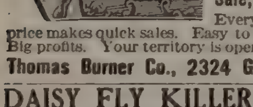
Ask for Free Book.
Walter F. Jordan & Co.
120-R Boylston St. Boston



AGENTS—Only One in the World KEROSENE (Coal Oil) BURNER
JUST OUT
Fits in any cook-stove. Makes its own gas from Kerosene(coal oil). Gives every home a gas stove. Absolutely safe. Cheapest fuel known.

Wonderful Labor Saver
Agents just coining money. Women wild about it. No more coal or ashes to carry. No more danger from gasoline.

Safe, Clean, Odorless, Cheap
Every home a prospect. Low price makes quick sales. Easy to carry and demonstrate. Big profits. Your territory is open. Write today.
Thomas Burner Co., 2324 Gay St., Dayton, Ohio



DAISY FLY KILLER PLACED ANYWHERE, ATTRACTS and KILLS ALL FLIES. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap LASTS ALL SEASON. Made of metal can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express prepaid for $1
HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
40 designs—all steel. Handsome, costs less than wood, more durable. We can save you money Write for free catalog and special prices.
KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
499 North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

ALADDIN READI-CUT Houses
Eliminate Waste
Save Money
Get Catalog 214 The Aladdin Co. Bay City, Mich.

The Purpose of John's Gospel

International Sunday School Lesson for June 24

John 21 : 15-25

By GEORGE D. ALLISON, Ph.D.

WE have completed a six months' study of the Fourth Gospel. We must pause to take account of stock today, ere we enter on a very different course in Old Testament History. This, then, is a review lesson, in which those of us who are teaching will endeavor to gather up the main lines of our subject and see to it that we have given a living, vital impression to our pupils. They ought to have a definite notion of what the Gospel of John means to Christian thought. They ought to be richer in spiritual treasure for having traversed this sacred ground, hallowed by the devotional meditation of generations of believers.

Outline Review

JESUS OF NAZARETH, JEWISH MESSIAH AND LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

1. The Messiah Manifested. Chap. 1-4.
2. The Messiah Rejected. Chap. 5-12.
3. The Apostles Instructed. Chap. 13-17.
4. The Trial and Cross. Chap. 18-19.
5. The Victorious Lord. Chap. 20-21.

The Gospel of a Mighty Personality

Lesson after lesson has left us under the spell of one mighty Personality, whose power and grace were so impressed upon his associates that they regarded him as incarnate God, and went forth to change the world under his inspiring doctrine. The Christ of John's Gospel is the world's greatest figure. "Never man so spake," as John quotes even from his foes, but his deeds match his words, and moreover we gain the impression of a Being greater even than all he said or did.

An unbelieving world is confronted with the unescapable fact, which nothing can gainsay: that a group of humble men consorted for a year or two with a village carpenter turned preacher and thought it no incongruity to hold him divine. Not only so, but in the power of faith in him, they built anew the moral foundations of the human race!

The longer they and their successors thought about it, the surer they were that Almighty God had come into his world in a unique way in Jesus Christ his Son. So we have in the fourth and much the latest Gospel the largest claims and the most compelling presentation of the case.

This Gospel deals in ideas, in exalted aspirations, in wondrous concepts of truth, all expressed in terms of personality. And it all comes from the brief, brief ministry of Jesus.

Its Purpose—the Deepening of Faith

"These are written that ye may believe." So John hoped for his work and so it has been, for myriads have read and read again, till they have experienced a welling up within their souls of confidence in the God and Father of Jesus Christ.

John believed that the Man of Nazareth was not only the Coming One of Jewish song and prophecy, but the Messiah of the world, its Leader into the new era that is to be.

John believed that Jesus of his own race and time, tempted in all things like as we are, was the Son of God. Because he so believed we are helped to the faith that God is not far off and unconcerned, but cares for us with fatherly love.

Its Purpose—the Impartation of Life

"These are written . . . that, believing, ye may have life." There is nothing in common with the doctrine of Nirvana, or nothingness, here. Jesus came that we might have life, and have it abundantly. John wrote that life, new life, eternal life begun here and now, might be enjoyed by his hearers. Any man has gone astray who thinks of requiring belief for belief's sake—it is always belief for life's sake. There is nothing unreasonable and arbitrary about true faith; instead, it builds the mind as well as the heart in strength.

The fruit of life through faith in the mighty Christ here portrayed is shown in John himself and also in the wonderful record of the career of Paul, who testified, "The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." We also are witnesses—abundant life is ours by the same faith.

The Epilogue

Our lesson text today is properly printed as an epilogue at the close of the book. The great statement of the purpose of the writer has been penned, prefaced by the remark that there were many other signs not written in the book. But he is loath to leave his subject, and he adds that beautiful last scene in the golden dawn by the lakeside, which we call sometimes The Restoration of Peter.

We would not have missed this for anything. The sore-hearted blunderer who had denied his Lord, who could not rest but must urge the others on to fishing again; the figure on the beach; the discerning John with his whisper of hope, "It is the Lord"; and then Peter's plunge into the sea unable to wait for the heavy net.

The Lord's Appeal for Love

Jesus was glad to know that Peter was more anxious to get to his side than to secure the wonderful haul of fish. He knew that at heart Peter was loyal and longed for a chance to serve. And so he asks him if he really cares more for his Lord than for anything else. Peter vehemently declares his love. "Love," says Jesus; "that's a great word. Are you sure your feeling toward me is love?" "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou perceivest that I love thee," responds the anguished apostle.

We say that we love Christ. How oft like Peter do we fail him in his time of need? And yet if we seek his fellowship, he is ever ready to restore. This ought to be our feeling in our communion with him in the service of the church. We come from our testing, often from our defeat. Yet again and again the sensitive soul hears him saying, "Lovest thou me?" True worship has a mystic quality in it. He has drawn near to us and given us a chance to reinstate ourselves. He has forgiven and restored. He sends us forth renewed, but with a commission from himself.

Love Manifested by Christlike Ministry

For the appeal to love is only half of this farewell message. Every response is met with the challenge to service. Three times he asks the disciple to search his own heart and give his answer. Every time he points out the inevitable consequence of genuine love for him: "Feed my lambs, shepherd my sheep, feed my sheep." The only way by which we can manifest our devotion to the Risen Lord is by ministering to others in his name.

Besides, Jesus was commissioning these men to build his church on earth. He held them to no creed, he bound them by no oaths, he exacted of them no theological qualifications such as have vexed his modern apostles. One test of attitude: Love to Christ. One qualification for usefulness: Willingness to Serve Others.

'Tis only unwavering love to Christ that can sustain Christian service with undiminished zeal. When the sheep go astray, when they perversely reject advice and ministry, it is only the love of Christ that can constrain us to go on. Years of missionary labor before the results can be seen

BLUE STREAKS

TRADE MARK REG U S PAT OFF.

When a gypsy peddler sells you a horse, he probably does not plan on seeing you again. He wants to make one sale—and plenty of profit. Never mind about your satisfaction.

The Goodyear Dealer sells you better bicycle tires cheaper. He wants to see you again—often. He wants to keep you as a permanent customer. Goodyear Blue Streaks help him do this.

Why Some Dealers Don't Handle Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires

Bicycle riders have been paying too much for their tires. And the tires have not been good enough. High profits have been to blame. And, too many brands of tires, too.

But now Goodyear comes out with a really good tire—the Blue Streak—which costs the rider only $3.25 each. It is as good as some other tires that cost $5.00 each, and better than most that equal it in price.

Naturally, the rider appreciates this Goodyear square deal policy. It means big savings for the rider.

And, quite as naturally, some dealers refuse to handle Goodyear Blue Streaks. They want a higher profit on each tire.

But those dealers who do sell you Blue Streaks—and there are many of them—place your satisfaction ahead of their own profit. These, also, are the bicycle dealers who do a big permanent business. Riders are their friends.

Find the Goodyear dealer in your town. The fact that he has Blue Streaks for sale means he is a square deal merchant.

Boys everywhere are wearing Goodyear Bicycle Caps. Ask your dealer. They're especially popular with Bicycle Clubs—name of club printed on the cap.

Long Wear Pleases Dad

You will find Goodyear Blue Streaks wearing a good long time. There are many miles of happy travel in these tough, rugged tires built with two stout, reinforcing strips of fabric beneath the tread. The strong, two-ply tire body has wonderful durability. A long wearing tire is most economical.

Non-Skid Treads Save Side-Slipping

Goodyear Blue Streaks are made with sharp-edged blocks of rugged rubber that bite the ground like teeth, in travel. Side-slipping is prevented. Besides, these stout rubber blocks add to the life of the tire. Press your thumb on a Blue Streak Tread. You can feel the bite.

Springy Tires Make Pedaling Fun

No boy likes to push a bicycle with heavy, clumsy tires. So Goodyear Blue Streaks are made of fine two-ply fabric carried in lively rubber. That gives you strength and extreme lightness in your tire. Such a resilient tire makes pedaling easy. The tire shares the job with your legs.

Handsome Tires—Show Your Friends

Blue Streaks are good-looking as well as long-wearing and easy riding. They put your bike on parade—make it look like new. You will know Goodyear Blue Streaks by the smart Blue Streak on either side of the tire.

See your Goodyear Dealer or write The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, O., for his address.

GOODYEAR
AKRON

The Food That Seems Made
For July

Were you asked to picture an ideal food for July—
It would be a whole grain food—
A dish that's ever-ready—
A delightful dainty—
A food easy to digest.
And that would be Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice.

Airy Whole-Grain Bubbles

Here are bubbles of grain—thin, flimsy toasted—puffed to eight times normal size.

They crush at a touch, and in melting away yield a fascinating flavor.

Every food cell is exploded, under Prof. Anderson's process. Digestion is easy and complete. Every atom feeds.

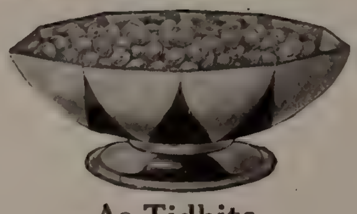
They are food confections, eaten all day long—not mere breakfast dainties. Mix with fruit, eat them dry, serve in every bowl of milk.

Every serving brings a whole grain food of which folks get too little. And in a form where every granule counts.

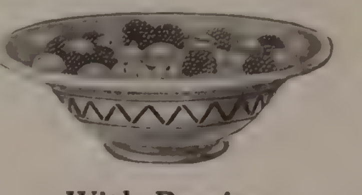
These are the perfect grain foods, where the whole grain is fitted to wholly digest. And children revel in them. Keep plenty on hand in summer.

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice
and Corn Puffs
Each 15c Except in Far West

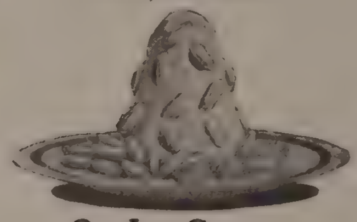
In Milk
Flaky, Toasted Bubbles



As Tidbits
For Playtime Foods



With Berries
A Crusty, Flavory Blend



On Ice Cream
A Nut-Like Garnish

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers (1608)

of men would be impossible without this incentive. But love never faileth.

The Attestation

Now we come to the last page of the Gospel of John and find there an attestation to the fidelity of the writer by his friends, his disciples, his successors in the work, "We know that his witness is true." That "we" reminds us of the continuity of Christian effort, of the eager days when those who had known Christ in the flesh were in great demand among the primitive churches. We realize how the written recollections of the apostles were not penned until most of the eye-witnesses were gone. Then there arose a call for a permanent record. Those humble men responded with the four "Gospels" we know so well.

The Inexhaustible Gospel

It is remarkable how much is enshrined in John's brief pages. In our six months' course we have had to leave untouched such a passage as the seventeenth chapter, for example: Christ's mighty prayer for the apostles and for us. The richness and suggestiveness for devotional meditation is such that the years cannot exhaust its freshness and charm. Consequently we can appreciate the naïve and wistful sentence that closes the record:

> "There are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself would not contain the books that should be written."

The things which Jesus has done in the nineteen centuries since then still claim the largest single group of written books. And the Mighty Worker is still at his task today and shall be tomorrow. Let us give him a chance to show what he can do with us and through us and ours, as John did so long ago.

The Old Bookshelf

I. About Clothes

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

THERE is a long bookshelf in the corner of my room—in the darkest corner, where gray shadows lie, ghost-like, along the wall. And on this bookshelf there stands a row of worn, dog-eared volumes with faded covers and pages that are marked, perhaps, with the print of small, too eager fingers. They are the books that I knew and loved when I was a little child.

Some of them are fairy tales—the vivid, glowing bits of fancy that filled my small girlhood with romance and adventure and poetry. Some of them are travel books that set me longing for the mystery of other lands—lands I shall never see. Some are books of unbelievable facts; others are books of perfectly convincing make-believe.

Oftentimes, half furtively perhaps, I go to the dark corner and select a book from the long shelf and, curling up in a big chair, I turn back the pages and with them the years, until I am a youngster again, with stiff pigtails and round eyes and black-and-blue knees—an eager child in a gingham frock and stubby-toed, little shoes.

It's a surprising adventure to read a childhood book after one has, to a certain extent, grown up. For a child usually loses most of the literary style and word-shading and philosophy in the absorbing interest of the story; while the grown-up, reading delightedly, subordinates the story and chuckles over the flights of fancy the author has indulged in. Oftentimes, too, the grown-up finds something half-hidden that is worth while or beautiful.

Yesterday, for the first time in years, I re-read Rudyard Kipling's "Jungle Book." I reveled again in the story of animals who talk and act and think and love as we humans do. I read of the man-child who was brought up with the wolves, of the much-hated tiger who raided villages and killed men, of the black panther who was feared and respected, and of Old Baloo, the black bear, half-blind with the weight of years, who was schoolmaster to the young of the Jungle.

THE jungle, according to Mr. Kipling, is a well-behaved place, governed by the most rigid sort of jungle law. Old Baloo it is who teaches this law, with all of its delicate shadings, to wolf cubs before they may run with the pack, to baby bears before they can make their first kill, to small foxes before they attempt to exert their subtle cunning. Strangely enough, some of his maxims might apply to us, although we live in a man-built jungle of smokestacks and skyscrapers and great iron bridges, and are governed by man-made law.

"His spots," says Old Baloo, "are the joy of the Leopard, his horns are the Buffalo's pride.

"Be clean, for the strength of the hunter is known by the gloss of his hide."

This is one of the maxims of Old Baloo, the half-blind schoolmaster of the Jungle. As a child, it was only a couplet with a pleasant rhythm to me, but now—being a grown-up—I can see the meaning that lies back of the words.

Have any of you ever visited a zoo or a circus? If you have, you have perhaps seen tigers—great, splendid beasts with smooth muscles rippling under shining coats. Sleek-looking animals they are—alert, vigorous, fear-inspiring. Passing from the tiger cages to the inclosure the monkeys live in, one cannot help noticing the great difference. For the monkeys, rolling in the dust and mud, fidgeting, blinking through a tangle of dirty matted hair, are neither vigorous nor fear-inspiring.

"Be clean," says Old Baloo very wisely, "for the strength of the hunter is known by the gloss of his hide." So runs the jungle law that Old Baloo teaches to the young animals. And if it's true in the animal jungle, it is certainly true in this ultra-civilized jungle.

Clothes do make a difference. They shouldn't, of course, for real worth has nothing to do with clothes; but we who meet folk casually must judge, very often, by appearance. A girl with a blouse on that is fastened by a safety pin instead of a button is very often labeled "sloppy" in our minds, although her character may be beautiful. A man with a week's mud on his shoes is not very likely to be given a responsible position, because it is quite logical to figure out that a man who neglects his shoes will neglect his work, too. Perhaps the man, despite his shoes, is a very conscientious worker; but how can the casual observer know? Many perfect housekeepers may wear flannel wrappers to the breakfast table—but though their homes may be immaculate and their children wonderfully brought up, if I were a man choosing the woman to trust with my home and children, I'd be inclined to search for the woman who looked fresh and crisp and dainty and smiling, as she poured my morning coffee.

"Clothes do not make a man." So runs the old adage. But, adds a modern clothing advertisement, "They cover nine-tenths of him!"

OH, friends of mine, clean minds and hearts and characters are much more important than neat clothing. A good point of view is more to be desired than a good dress. But try, if possible, to look what you really are. For soiled collars can help one to form an unchangeable prejudice, torn dresses can aid one in making an unfavorable decision, and curl-papers have very often helped to kill love. Although it may be most unfair, it is easier to trust or love the person whose appearance inspires trust or love.

Pearls lie asleep in many a grayly uninteresting oyster. But many of us hurriedly pass them by to stand gazing at the polished jewels in a shop window. It isn't the pearls' fault that we pass by—they have no way of freeing themselves from the unattractive covering.

But we have the power, most of us, to look what we are!

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

KRYPTOK GLASSES
THE INVISIBLE BIFOCALS

KRYPTOKS (pronounced Crip-tocks) give the necessary correction for both near and far vision. You see distant objects and close-by things with equal clearness. No bothersome removing of glasses; no fussing with two pairs.

KRYPTOKS are free from the conspicuous seam or hump of old-style bifocals. No one can tell you are wearing double vision glasses.

Ask your oculist, optometrist or optician about KRYPTOK Glasses.

Write for booklet, "Eyesight Efficiency"

KRYPTOK COMPANY, Inc.,
1061 Old South Building,
Boston, Mass.

The old Bifocal — With the disfiguring seam or hump

The KRYPTOK Bifocal — With clear smooth even surfaces

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1983 Ry. Exch., Chicago

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.

WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

Young People's Topics for June 24

The Bible and the People

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ps. 19:7-14
(Conquest Meeting)

THE Bible has always been the Book of the people, and it has always carried its message wherever its open pages have been read. In the days of Nehemiah the reading of the law brought the people to repentance and to loyalty to God. The translation of the Bible into German and English, into the speech of these great peoples, and the spreading of it among the common folks, made the Reformation possible. In every mission field today the Bible, translated into the tongues of the people, is winning its way through the power of its message over the hearts of men. In every Christian country, every renewal of spiritual life, every new period of evangelism is marked by increasing study of the Word. The Baptist denomination has from the beginning placed its strongest emphasis upon the reading of the Bible, and it has based all its doctrine on the final and single authority of God's revealed Word, refusing any creeds or statements of faith and standing squarely upon the Word itself. This topic gives to each Baptist Young People's Society an unusual opportunity to call its membership and the church with which it is connected back to first principles and to firm and steadfast loyalty to the open Bible, read daily and lived by.

Mission Work in Our Cities

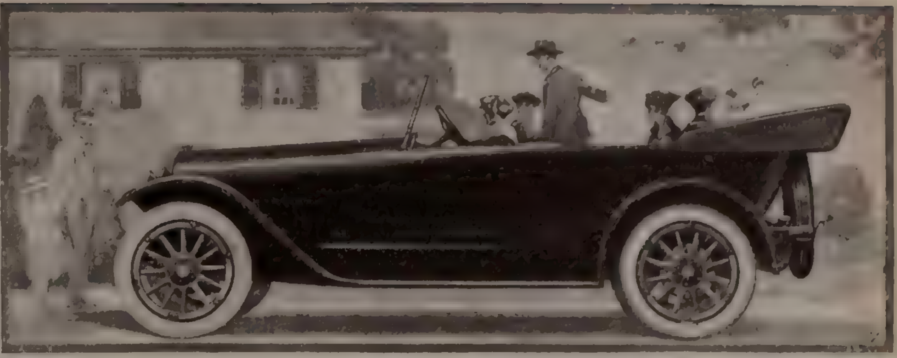
Christian Endeavor Topic. Ps. 87

CITY mission work is one of the points in which home missions overlap into foreign territory. All varieties of mission work are blended in it, and the churches in the cities are overwhelmed with the varieties of opportunities and needs which press upon them for ministry. In the seaboard cities, and in most of the larger cities away from the coast, there are large colonies of foreign-born people, many of them estranged from the churches of their native land, all of them anxious to learn the speech and customs of their adopted country, and most of them willing to accept the Protestant faith, especially if it comes to them as a part of the process of securing the education which they desire. Classes in English for adult immigrants, in most cases using the Bible as a textbook, are proving a wonderful means of reaching the foreigners within our gates. Children of these foreigners learn English in our schools, but get little religion with it. With these the church faces another opportunity and perhaps a greater problem. Both opportunity and problem are being met in vacation schools and in various activities in connection with the Sunday schools during the winter. Besides these two educational and evangelistic opportunities, there is always the ministry to the poor, a class which includes both immigrants and native-born Americans, and which requires help in material things as well as in spiritual. Poverty has three great causes, incompetence, liquor and disease, sometimes all three combined, and the churches must be prepared to meet and to defeat them all.

Missionary Story of the Visit to the Head Hunters

Epworth League Topic

THE head-hunters about which this topic centers are the Dyaks of Borneo, the tribe which may have furnished the wild man of Borneo. The Educational Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, Mr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York, will send to any leader helps for this topic. The Dyaks are related to the Chinese, some of their remote ancestors having emigrated to the Malay Archipelago from China, carrying with them the art of making steel and cloth, but these arts are gradually being lost through savagery. The family customs and dress of the Dyaks resemble somewhat those of the Igorotes in the Philippines, about whom Maynard Owen Williams has been writing in the Christian Herald.



No Other Car So Complete

One Mitchell distinction lies in the fact that every wanted feature is in it.

There are 31 features which most cars omit. There are more dainty touches—more luxuries and beauties—than in any other car in this class. We have added 24 per cent to the luxury cost this year.

There are all the attractions which our experts found in 257 new models. All combined in a single car. You will see here everything we know to make a car more appealing.

Doubled Endurance

In addition to that, in the past three years we have doubled our margins of safety. Every vital part now has 100 per cent over-strength.

The result, we believe, is a lifetime car. Two of these cars that we know of have already run over 200,000 miles each—about 40 years of ordinary service.

In the past two years, dozens of famous engineers have bought Mitchells for their personal use, because of this extra strength. Your dealer will show you a list of them.

Two Sizes—8 Styles

There are now two sizes of the Mitchell Six, two basic prices, and eight exclusive bodies.

You will find a hundred surprises in them. You will see the result of wondrous factory efficiency, due to John W. Bate. For all of these extras are paid for by savings which he has worked out in this plant.

Go see them. When you buy a fine car and a car to keep, you will want a Bate-built Mitchell. It will spoil your taste for a car less handsome, less enduring, less complete.

MITCHELL MOTORS COMPANY, Inc.
Racine, Wisconsin, U. S. A.

Mitchell SIXES

TWO SIZES

Mitchell—a roomy, 7-passenger Six, with 127-inch wheelbase and a highly-developed 48-horsepower motor.

$1460

Four Passenger Roadster, $1495.
Sedan, $2175. Cabriolet, $1895.
Coupe, $1995.
Also Town Car and Limousine

Mitchell Junior—a 5-passenger Six on similar lines with 120-inch wheelbase and a 40-horse power motor—¼-inch smaller bore.

$1195

All Prices f. o. b. Racine

YOUR FINAL OPPORTUNITY

To Order a Bible Picture Study Outfit With Plenty of Time to Enter Your Answers

IS AT HAND!

YOU have two weeks more in which to order an Outfit and to mail in your chosen verses. That gives you just enough time to order, receive your Outfit, enter your verses and send in the set before the last day for submitting verses has passed. You have time—IF YOU HURRY!

JUNE 27 is the last day for obtaining Outfits, but it is also the last day for mailing in sets of answers. Sets mailed June 27, and thus bearing the postmark of that day, will be accepted, even though they arrive later. So order today—you will have through June 27 to mail in your answers!

The End of An Unusual Offer

Open to All

Take notice that our Special $1.25 Offer of the complete Outfit, with Christian Herald for six months—an extension, or renewal of a present subscription, or a new subscription—will end June 18.

After June 18 this offer will no longer be open—the Outfit may be had then with other offers, but not with any offer so tempting!

You may order the Outfit sent to yourself, and the Christian Herald to some other person.

Our $1.00 Offer

Why not give the Christian Herald for six months as a gift to a friend who is not now a subscriber? Send $1.00, the regular subscription price for six months, and the Outfit will be sent to you as a reward. Or secure a new subscription, collecting $1.00 from the new subscriber for the Christian Herald for six months, and receive the Outfit.

The Judges

The Judges of the Bible Picture Study are now being chosen, and probably their names will be announced in our next issue. They will, of course, be eminent Bible scholars, well fitted for the task.

Participation in the Study without expense is open to all, as explained in the rules, free upon request. But the time to enter is short—isn't it better to order the Outfit without delay?

The Checking

The checking of your set will be done primarily by yourself. Every participant who uses the Answer Book will cut out page 64, and keep it at home. Also, before sending in the set of verses, he or she will make an exact record of the verses submitted for each picture. It is not necessary to copy the verses—just make a careful notation, by book, chapter and verse number, of the verses submitted for each picture. Then, when the officially best verses, as chosen by the Judges, are printed in the Christian Herald, you will check off, on your checking sheet, the number you had correct (best) and incorrect, and send in the checking sheet to us.

Participants not using Answer Books should send in to us at once for a checking sheet, and should keep home a record of the verses they are submitting for each picture.

COUPON FOR EVERYBODY

This Offer is Open to Subscribers and Non-Subscribers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

I enclose $1.25. Please {enter / renew} a six-months subscription to:

Name ....

Address ....

....

Send the complete Bible Picture Study OUTFIT ("Pearls from the Bible," Answer Book, all 60 pictures, rules, etc.) to:

Name ....

Address ....

....

The Moment to Decide

You who are now competing in the Study—have you reached the point where you are arranging your verses for submittal?

Are you considering the elimination of some verses? Perhaps you feel that many of the verses you are discarding are sufficiently good to merit being retained, but you can submit only five verses for a picture in one set of answers.

Submit All Selections

Why not secure a second or third Outfit, and so submit a second or third set of verses?

Thus you could submit all the verses you consider fitting—as many as fifteen different verses for each picture, if you submit three sets of answers!

Or in one set you could submit only those verses you consider the very best.

In the second set the same verses might be repeated, with the addition of one or two for each picture that also seem very likely candidates for the honor of being named "best."

And in the third set could go all the verses you believe may by any possibility be named "best" for the pictures.

You have time to order a second or third Outfit—but HURRY!

Full Postage

must be placed on each set submitted. Sets go as first-class mail, and take letter postage.

‘Is It Well With Thy Soul?”

Continued from page 664

well with thy child?” Hear me a minute! You are interested in their education. You are concerned for their health. You will work to give them three meals a day. You will buy them warm clothes for winter and cool clothes for summer. You are concerned for their health, but, great God, what about their soul? God pity a boy of girl, when all the Christianity they hear is from the lips of strangers, not from their own parents. “Is it weil with the child?”

What should you do? Speak to them. Live right before them. Set them an example that will inspire them.

I tell you there are men in this town, who are leading other boys, as well as their boys, as straight to hell as two and two make four. “Is it well with your child?”

IF I was not a Christian do you know what I would do? I would walk down the aisle to-night, give my heart to God, and if I had a child, I would go home, wash its face to waken it and I would say to it, “You never heard your father pray. I want you to hear him pray.” I would get him on his knees and I would let that child that bears my name hear my voice in prayer.

And I tell you, a mother's arms and a mother's heart are a safe anchorage and there are not devils enough in hell to drag the children out of that harbor if they will only get in there. “Is it well with the child?”

Listen. In your home there are boys and girls destined to rule in church and state. Upon whichever side of their life the influences are thrown will determine what they will be. Hear me! Some Oliver Cromwell that will dissolve parliament; some David Brainard that will change the Indian war whoop into a Sabbath school; some Beethoven who will touch the world's heartstrings and make them sing; some Miss Dix who will soothe the brain of the crazed; some Clara Barton wthat will bind up the battle wounds; some Frances E. Willard who will arouse the people to the ravages of the liquor traffic. Yes, some one, I say, destined to rule in church and in state. Some John Knox who will make queens turn pale on their thrones; some Martin Luther who will start a reformation.

Yes, but you wait too long. You wait until he curses you to your face before you teach him “Thou shalt not take the name of God in vain.” You wait until he staggers into your presence before you teach him “Look not on the wine when it is red.” You wait until he steals and is off for the penintentiary before you teach him “Thou shalt not steal.” You wait until he has robbed some girl of her virtue before you teach him “Thou shalt not commit adultery.” You wait too long. You wait too long. You are too late with your prayers, with your tears, with your sermon, with your song, with your tabernacle. You are too late. You are too late. You wait too long.

I tell it to you with shame. I stretched the elastic bands of my mother's love until I thought they would break. I went so far into the dark and the wrong until I ceased to hear her prayers or her pleadings. I forgot her face, and I went so fast that it seemed to me that one more step and the elastic bands of her love would break and I would be lost. But thank God, friends, I never took that last step. Little by little I yielded to the tender memories and recollections of my mother; little by little I was drawn away from the yawning abyss, and thirty years ago, one dark and stormy night, in Chicago, I groped my way out of darkness into the arms of Jesus Christ, and I fell on my knees and cried: “God be merciful to me, a sinner.” Thus I am here preaching to you to help you to Jesus Christ. Is it well? Is it well?

◆

THE campaign in the big tabernacle entered on its last two weeks on June 5. Trail-hitting, which in six weeks of the campaign reached a total of 47,234 (Boston's total for ten weeks having been 47,903), continued to run strong at each meeting, the trail-hitters on Sunday, June 3, at three services numbering 2,829. Mrs. Sunday was taken suddenly ill May 18, was operated on at once, and was able to return home from the hospital on June 2. On June 13th, Mr. Sunday is to address a select audience of real rumhounds at Hadley Hall in the Bowery.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 658

American schools, and will cooperate with missionary enterprises. The total cost of the buildings will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 and the annual upkeep about $300,000. . . . One bank announced that it would take $75,000,000 worth of the Liberty Loan, and one New York citizen subscribed for $2,000,000 worth. But to make it evident that it is a people's loan for great and small, the New York Reserve Bank issued ten-dollar Liberty Loan certificates, five of which may be exchanged for a baby bond. The President is said to have taken $10,000 worth. . . . The Brazilian Chamber of Deputies on May 29 passed a bill revoking Brazil's declaration of neutrality in the German-American war. The bill authorized the seizure of German ships in Brazilian ports. . . Major-General Goethals, in an address in New York on May 25, indicated that the Shipping Board, while it would not abandon the project for the building of wooden vessels, would place a heavy emphasis upon the construction of vessels of steel. . . . The Senate Finance Committee has made a number of radical changes in the war revenue bill as it was passed by the House. On May 29 it was announced that the bill as then planned by the committee would yield only $1,150,000,000 as against $1,857,000,000 as planned by the House. The committee is planning a tax on domestic sugar to yield $50,000,000, a tax on automobiles, based on horsepower, to yield $25,000,000, also taxes on cocoa, tea, coffee, soft drinks and confectionery. The committee struck out the taxes proposed on pianos, organs and musical instruments not operated mechanically, moving picture films, jewelry and chewing gum, gas and electricity. Taxes on motorcycles and motor-boats, phonographs, athletic and sporting goods, proprietary medicines and cosmetics were also dropped from the bill. The committee expected to make up for some of the taxes it was dropping by increased taxes on liquors. . . . The franchise reform bill passed to its second reading in the British House of Commons on May 22. As drawn, the bill would extend the suffrage to about 2,000,000 men voters and to about 6,000,000 women, of whom 5,200,000 would acquire the franchise as wives of qualified voters. . . . The Spanish mail ship C. de Eizaquirre was sunk on May 26 with a loss of about 133 lives. The manner of her sinking was not announced. . . . Rev. Joseph W. Kemp, who resigned his pastorate in the Calvary Baptist Church, New York, has accepted a call to the pulpit of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, New York City, a newly organized interdenominational church.

STEWARTS
IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

2¢ Will TIRE-DOH-ize The Ordinary Puncture

Copyright, 1917, Atlas Auto Supply Co., Chicago

Why pay from twenty-five cents to a dollar for ordinary puncture repairs and risk the burning of the tube in the vulcanizer? Two cents' worth of Tire-Doh will make a perfect repair and leave that part of the tire stronger and better than the rest.

Permanently Repairs the Biggest Tears TIRE-DOH Adds Thousands of Miles to Life of Casings

Tire-Doh repairs smallest punctures or biggest inner tube tears. And it does difficult jobs that are absolutely impossible with other methods.

Kneaded into cuts, holes and sand blisters, it prevents untimely destruction of casings and doubles their life in many instances.

Made Under Secret Process—No Heat Nor Tools Needed

Tire-Doh has no substitute, for the secret of its manufacture is carefully guarded. It eliminates need of heat, tools and patches. Only Tire-Doh and your fingers are required to Tire-Doh-ize your tires.

Tire-Doh not a tire-filler. And it's not a patch that may come off—but a rubber compound that becomes a permanent part of the tire. Seven years on the market and a thoroughly proved success.

For Auto, Motorcyle, Bicycle Tires—All Rubber Goods

TIRE-DOH
TIRE-DOH
TIRE-DOH
COMPLETE OUTFIT

Tire-Doh repairs anything made of rubber. Keep an outfit in your house as well as in your car.

50c and $1.00. 10,000 Dealers Have It

Canadian prices 65c and $1.25. Get a Tire-Doh outfit from your dealer today and save worry, trouble, time and expense. Nearly a million others are doing it. If your dealer doesn't sell Tire-Doh, send to us direct together with his name.

Manufactured and Guaranteed by
ATLAS AUTO SUPPLY COMPANY
694 W. Austin Avenue, Chicago

Everybody needs Tire-Doh Why not “knead” it too?

Make Reservations Now
For Season of 1917

The office in the Annex will be open daily to accommodate guests who desire to inspect the hotel and make detailed arrangements.

The
New Ocean House
Swampscott Mass.

Opens June 19

Greatly enlarged, rearranged and beautified. Many new and interesting features planned for the coming season.

Our descriptive booklet mailed on request.
E. R. Grabow Company, Owners and Managers
131 State Street, Boston, Mass.

Mark Twain Was A Great Pilot!

Fifty years ago he knew every sand bar and danger mark in that ever-changing Mississippi river. His accurate knowledge insured a safe, pleasant journey for his passengers.

But today you wouldn't ride with a pilot who steered according to Mark Twain's landmarks. The pilot of today must know the river channel as it is now.

The same is true of tires. You want tires built on the accurate, scientific knowledge of today.

Miller Tires

GEARED-TO-THE-ROAD

The Miller Method of vulcanizing is a modern development that retains the natural vegetable wax and oil in the fabric; builds rugged endurance and safety into the rubber tread. But even this modern process is charted daily by experienced Miller engineers and chemists—men recognized as dependable tire pilots. That's why Miller Tire users don't have mishaps but get excessive mileage and carefree service.

You demand an up-to-date car. Demand a tire of today—a Miller Tire.

For sale by Geared-to-the-Road
Distributors and Dealers everywhere

THE MILLER RUBBER COMPANY, AKRON, U. S. A.

SPECIAL OFFER—We are the largest manufacturers of toy balloons in the world. Send 50 cents for the new Airoplay Outfit—a big package of balloons. Fun for everybody—children or grown-ups. Address Dept. G.

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 663

The doctor wet his lips.

"But, if—if Burke knew——"

"Look a-here," cut in Helen resolutely, "you've been to our house quite a lot since Burke and me was married. You think I made Burke real happy, don't you?"

There was no answer.

"You might just as well say the words with your lips, doctor. Your face has said them," observed Helen, a little dryly.

"Well—no, then;—but I feel like a brute to say it."

"You needn't. I made you. Besides, I'm glad to have you say it. We're right out in the open, now, and maybe we can get somewhere. Look a-here, do you know?—for the first time in my life today I was sorry for John Denby. I was! I got to thinking, with Dorothy Elizabeth all safe and snug in my arms, how, by and by, she'd be a little girl, and then a young lady. And she was so sweet and pretty, and—and I loved her so! And I got to thinking how I'd feel if somebody took her away from me the way I took Burke away from his father, and married her when I didn't want her to, any more'n Burke's father wanted him to; and I—I could see then how he must have felt, worshipping Burke as he did. I know—I used to see them together, when I was nurse there with Mrs. Allen's children. I never saw a father and son so much like—chums. He doted on Burke. I know now how he felt. And—and it's turned out the way he said. I hain't been the one for Burke at all. I've—dragged him down."

"Mrs. Denby, please—" begged the doctor.

BUT she paused only long enough to shake her head.

"Yes, I have. I know. I've been thinking it all over—the life we've led together, and what he might have had, if he hadn't had—if it hadn't been for me. And that's why, now, I want to see if—if I can't learn how to—to make him not ashamed of me. And it ain't for me, only, it's for Dorothy Elizabeth. I want to teach her. It's bad enough to have him ashamed of me; but I—I just couldn't stand it if he should ever be—be ashamed of—her. And now—won't you help me, please? Remember, Burke don't want me at home, now, so I'm not displeasing him. Won't you help me? It's my only—chance!"

The doctor sprang to his feet. His eyes were moist and his voice shook when he spoke.

"Help you! I'll help you to—to bring down the moon and all the stars, if you say the word! Mrs. Denby, you're a—a little brick, and there's no end to the way I respect and admire you. Of course I'll help you—somehow. Though how I haven't the faintest idea. Meanwhile you must get some rest. As I told you, my sister is at the beach, and there are only Hawkins and his wife here to, keep the house open. But they'll make you comfortable for the night, and we'll see to-morrow what can be done. We'll have some kind of a plan," he finished, as he crossed the room to ring the bell.

"Oh, thank you, thank you!" breathed Helen. "But, remember, please, I'm not Mrs. Denby. I'm Mrs. Darling—my mother's maiden name,"—she begged in a panic, as the doctor touched the bell.

TRUE to his promise, Frank Gleason had a plan, of a sort, ready by morning. He told it at the breakfast table.

"I'm going to take you to my sister, provided, of course, that you agree," he announced. "Five minutes' talk with her on this matter will be worth five years' with me. I shouldn't wonder if she kept you herself—for a time, with her. And you couldn't be in a better place. Perhaps you'll be willing to help her with the children—and she'll be glad of that, I know."

"But—my money—can't I pay—money?" faltered Helen.

He shook his head.

"Not if we can help it. Your money you'll need later for Miss Dorothy—unless you are willing to make yourself known to your husband sooner than you seem now to be willing to. We'll invest it in something safe and solid, and it'll bring you in a few hundred a year. You'll have that to spend; and that will go quite a way—under some circumstances."

"But I—I want to—to learn things, you know," stammered Helen; "how to be—be——"

"You'll learn—lots of things, if you live with my sister," remarked the doctor significantly.

"Oh!" smiled Helen, with a sigh of relief and content.

The doctor sighed, too—though not at all with either relief or content. To the doctor, the task before him loomed as absurd and unreal as if it were, indeed, the pulling-down of the stars and the moon—the carrying-out of his extravagant promise of the night before.

To be continued

Starving Millions Look to Us

Continued from page 655

the Turkish Empire and within the protection of the Russian and British lines. The American consular agent at Damascus estimates that 500,000 people have been driven into the provinces of Aleppo and Damascus. The majority are women and children, and they are slowly dying of starvation.

The following cablegrams received from or through the American consulates will suggest the urgency of the need in these sections, not for a supplementary meal, but for the first morsel of bread with which to ward off starvation:

"Relief funds finished. Need unprecedented. Require hundred thousand dollars this month (May). Request committee to assume responsibility for ten thousand fatherless children at rate of two dollars per month per child. General condition of refugees has reached critical state. Nearly two years exiled from their homes. In many districts signs of exhaustion appearing. Larger numbers of old, or sick, or weak men with families to support. Appalling number of widows with dependent children. Majority will not be able to return to old homes for at least one year. Estimate 40,000 orphans here. Need for aid at this time greater than ever before. Urge and implore that New York Committee continue its support with renewed vigor if the many thousands it has helped are to be saved. We need million dollars for next twelve months."

The committee in the last twenty months has spent three million dollars for relief in Western Asia, without one cent of expense for collecting or administering funds. Every dollar contributed goes undiminished to relief. The expense of collection and disbursement is met privately. We have positive proof that all aid is effectively distributed, and that the entrance of this country into the war will not stop relief work.

Government aid, such as our government, as well as France and England, have been privileged to give to Belgium, cannot be secured for these people. They are solely dependent upon voluntary contributions to sustain life until they can be restored on a self-supporting basis.

Up to the present time, including the $10,000 contribution given at the Tabernacle meeting, the Christian Herald War Relief Fund has contributed over $60,000 to save the perishing multitudes of Syria and Armenia. All gifts toward this imperative life-saving work should be addressed to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War Continued on Opposite Page

——, Mount Holly, N J	$1.00
Jason P Greene	1.00
Mrs Maggie Martindale	1.00
Mrs C E G	1.00
C T Stenberg	1.00
Susie W Van Wagener	1.00
Jno J Gatling	1.00
Mrs R A Horton	1.00
E B, Martins Ferry, Ohio	1.00
Mrs Wm Forsyth	1.00
Friend, Trumansburg, N Y	1.00
Richard Scourse	1.00
In memory of of Mother	1.00
A B Hurtin	1.00
Mrs Robinson	1.00
Amelia Ruegg	1.00
Mrs Minnie Emmel	1.00
H S P	1.00
Margaret C Platt	1.00
Mrs Eunice Darling	1.00
Mrs Walter Wilson	1.00
J M Richardson	1.00
I V W	1.00
Mrs A E Jacobs	1.00
Friend, Syracuse, N Y	1.00
Mrs L B Wooding	1.00
Annie Ulary	1.00
L H W	1.00
J G Luechauer	1.00
Springhill Community Ch, Greensburg, Ind	6.90
Swedish Bapt Ch, Stanchfield, Minn	3.19
Oak Forest S S, Norwood, Mo	1.37
Mrs F L Rayworth	6.50
C H Reader, Waneta, W Va	.35
St Matthew's Evang Luth Ch, Detroit, Mich	13.08
Anglin St Presby S S, Cleburne, Texas	15.35
Mrs Emily Banks	7.00
Lisbon Bapt Ch, Clark Co, Ohio	8.38
Friends, Eagleville, Mo	9.57
Moravian Ch, New Dorp, S I, N Y	6.40
Friend, Oberlin, O	.70
Friends, Trade River, Wisc	30.00
Mrs Alice H Smithson	9.00
Friends, Hopkinsville, Ky	4.50
Friends, Hainesville, Wisc	4.55
S S, Swedish Evang Free Ch, Turlock, Calif	61.58
Pleasant View S S, Belmont, Wisc	13.50
M E S S, Atwood, Colo	14.25
Z De Loach	4.90
Yten Harmsel	17.00
——, Williamsport, Pa	.15
Mrs K Mangold	8.00
The Winn Family	4.00
James A Caldwell	7.00
S S, Christ Meth Ch, Denver, Colo	30.00
Union S S, Dover, Colo	7.67
Elva E Dauchey	8.00
Kate E Keys	4.00
Union Ch, Whitefield, Me	2.25
Mary Smart	2.75
Menlo S S, Wash	7.46
Cherokee Union S S, Omak, Wash	7.18
——, La Clede, Ill	.10
Mrs Lizzie D Stennett	4.50
Lebanon Circuit, Tenn	16.44
Immanuel Bapt Ch, Santa Ana, Calif	9.00
C E Soc, Groopschoop Ref Ch, Holland, Mich	14.00
Ellen Chapel, Union S S, Lewistown, Pa	3.66
Children's Collection, Flaxton, N D	4.50
Welsh M C Ch, Emerson, Ia	11.70
Mrs Jennie Patton & Daughter	4.00
S S Morris Chapel, M E Ch, Jackson, O	5.40
Willing Workers Bible Ch, Union S S, Chambersburg, Pa	3.70
Meth Epis Ch, Winslow, Ariz	17.00
Meth Episc S S, Swiftwater, Pa	8.50
Jane B Pierce	6.00
Mr & Mrs W J M Caughey	$7.00
Bapt S S, Lucas, S Dak	16.45
Mrs H Cottrill	4.00
Chariton Bapt Ch, Glasgow, Mo	19.50
Mrs Fedelia Grisivold	.75
H B Camden	1.12
A H Blair & Family	8.00
Union Ch, Sunderland, Vt	2.75
Sugar Grove S S, McCracken, Pa	23.27
Mrs O Wilson	7.50
Presby S S, Eden Prairie, Minn	42.81
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	3.50
M E Ch, E Pittston, Me	4.25
"Two of the Lord's Little Ones"	3.06
"In His Name," Shippensbur., Pa	6.00
Brethren S S, Beaverton, Mich	4.20
——, Milford, Mich	1.25
Friends, Waddington, N Y	4.00
Presby S S, Louisa, Va	40.00
First M E S S, Lancaster, O	40.00
Forest Glen & Jefferson Park S S, Chicago, Ill	12.54
First Bapt Ch, Parkers Prairie, Minn	24.80
Mary A K C Lambert	.10
Primary Dept, S D B School, Fouke, Ark	2.25
Hope Miller	6.00
Beulah Bapt S S, Russellville, Pa	7.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Wagoner	.75
Mrs C Mason	.95
Mr & Mrs Wm J Zimmerman	.75
Class No. 2, Meth Episc S S, Kipling, O	2.35
Primary & Junior Classes, U B S S, near Inavale, Nebr	.75
Women's Miss Soc, Second Ref Presby Ch, New York City	11.00
S S, St Marks Luth Ch, Guilderland Ctr, N Y	3.50
Friends, Kings Mountain, N C	33.50
Madison Centre S S, Forest City, Ia	11.00
Miss Mary E Waterhouse	1.45
S S, U P Ch, Worthington, Pa	7.15
S S, U P Ch, Buffalo, Pa	6.30
U P Cong, Buffalo, Pa	12.20
Boyd's Grove Ch Henry, Ill	3.50
I A Miller	8.00
Presby S S, Pennington, N J	38.50
Philathea Baraca Bible Cl, Richlands, Va	25.10
Miss Swain's S S Class, Bowling Green, Va	9.40
Friends, Aiken, S C	3.25
J R Burleigh	4.00
Dean C Dutton & Family	16.00
Friends, Meth Ch, Abilene, Kans	4.50
Mrs G W Hassler & Family	4.00
S S Classes, Meth Ch, Waverly, N Y	3.35
M E Ch, Austin, Colo	7.50
Mr & Mrs David Kislig	4.00
Waldensian Ch, Monett, Mo	9.75
Friends, Ovid Center, N Y	6.25
Jr Boys, Presby S S, Freeport, O	2.01
Friends S S, Rosedale, Ore	8.65
Mrs Rose Haines	17.00
Chas W Wilson	8.00
Children of Purity School, Chester, S Car	1.35
Table Rock Ch, Monument, Colo	9.75
J F Keppen & Family	40.00
J H Smith	40.00
C E Soc, Westwood, Calif	12.00
Henry Dexter	4.00
——, Pine Grove B C, Can	4.00
Women's Missy Soc, M E C S, Hope, Ark	8.00
Mrs Clifton Hall	$.75
Mrs E L Raymond	6.00
Mrs S N Dawson	.32
Antioch Epworth League, Howard, Kans	3.65
Carl Stenwall	7.00
Laurel Grove, Zion, Arbor, Tabor Bapt Chs, Va	65.00
Ladies Aid, U Luth Ch, Parkside, Sask Can	6.00
Children of St. Helena Presby S S, Md	6.50
Mrs J W Laird	1.75
Free Meth S S, Wessington Sprgs S D	6.33
Edward Howe	19.77
A B R	6.50
Lewis Co S S Ass'n, Nezperce, Idaho	28.00
Miss Belle Miller	24.00
Sr Baraca Cl, First Bapt Ch, Bainbridge, N Y	3.20
Bible School, Ch of Christ, Sayre, Pa	14.40
——, Jasper, Ind	8.00
Franklin G Patton	7.50
In Memory of J W Chambers Dodd	22.50
Nellie B Langhead	2.90
U P S S, Uniontown, O	3.25
Mrs John York	3.65
Prinedale Mission Cong S S	4.40
Castroville, Mission Cong S S	15.60
——, Lenoir, N Car	100.00
Friends, Hydro, Mont	50.00
Y P S, Swedish Mission Ch, Malmo, Nebr	25.00
Mrs E E McMeen	25.00
Wm Heatherington	25.00
Mr & Mrs J W Peifton	25.00
Ladies Benevolent Soc, Congl Ch, Plainville, Conn	25.00
Mrs Leah Williams	25.00
Mr & Mrs L R Hannah	25.00
Friend, Lodi, Calif	25.00
B H Hershey	25.00
John H Blake	20.00
Two Friends, Patten, Me	20.00
"In Memory of Our Young Son"	20.00
S S Crockett	20.00
E R Mabry	20.00
Public School, Lawton, N Dak	20.00
Non-denominational S S, Ft Duchesne, Utah	20.00
Peter Nelson	20.00
Pastor & Members, Slatington & Slatesdale Charge, M E Ch, Lehighton Pa	15.00
Mrs Mary S Hampton	15.00
Miss Sarah Truax	15.00
Dora Hutchinson	15.00
Students Taylor University, Upland, Ind	15.00
E. Tappe & Family	15.00
Mr & Mrs J H R	15.00
U P Ch, Unity Sta, Pa	15.00
Miss L Hauser	15.00
M E Ch, South Queen Anne, Md	10.00
L L Cooperrider	10.00
W M Brabb	10.00
A B Morgan	10.00
Cora Adsit	10.00
Daisy Von Schlieder	10.00
Ira Clynick	10.00
G W Beardsley	10.00
Reader, Hedrick, Iowa	10.00
M Moon	10.00
O B Wickercham	10.00
Mrs Clara S Shepard	10.00
P J Wedel	10.00
Horace Martin	10.00
Mrs E W Thurmond	10.00
B Rutherford	10.00
Mrs E B Osborne	10.00
J H Neighbour	10.00
S D Constant Reader	10.00
C L Walker	10.00
Mr & Mrs A L Barrows	10.00
Mary A Moore	10.00
E Cutler	10.00
Jennie E Jones	$10.00
Friend, Millville, N J	10.00
Friends, Lawrenceville, N Y	10.00
Geo A Connolly	10.00
Emma V Robinson	10.00
Mr & Mrs P M Carnahan	10.00
R M W	10.00
Val Briky	10.00
Mrs Elise Zink	10.00
G A B	10.00
Miss Fannie De Loach	10.00
Ladies Aid Soc, Grand Prairie Luth Cong, Amor, N Dak	10.00
Golden Rule S S Cl, M E Ch, South Shelbyville, Ky	10.00
Ben H Smith & Family	10.00
M Moon	10.00
John Downs	10.00
Mrs E W Mattoon	10.00
Mrs Cora McConnell	10.00
John Liebenstein	10.00
D O Smith	10.00
S H Bradwell	10.00
Mrs Elise Stauffer	10.00
Allen Cunningham	10.00
L O Brightbill	10.00
——, Pittsfield, Mass	10.00
Mrs Sarah B White	10.00
Mrs A J M	10.00
Chas A Davis	10.00
Stanley R Dimrick	10.00
Mrs E C Hart	10.00
Emma J Walburg	10.00
Mrs Julia C Parker	10.00
E R Young	10.00
S G Good	10.00
Susan P Putman	10.00
Amelia & Mary B Haverstick	10.00
Mrs Mary M Miller	10.00
Women's Bible Cl, U P Ch, North Bend, Nebr	10.00
Two Friends, Chambersburg Pa	10.00
——, Marshalltown, Ia	10.00
Mrs Sarah L Sperry	10.00
Friend, Brazona, Texas	5.00
Milton & Lou Cowgill	5.00
Grace S Fairchild	5.00
C Hawkins	5.00
Miss Kate Brown	5.00
Mrs Mary A Forbes	5.00
Mrs F Gilpatric	5.00
Emma H Burniston	5.00
Mrs Wm Forck	5.00
Mrs M S Bryan	5.00
Wm W Smith	5.00
Mrs Bella McKenzie	5.00
Mr & Mrs W Schwarz	5.00
O R Alsop	5.00
Mrs Dora Mullen	5.00
Mrs J D Frucher	5.00
W M Brokaw	5.00
Mrs N F McMillen	5.00
Friend, Paterson, N J	5.00
Henry Horing	5.00
Flower Mission Club, Spartansburg, Pa	5.00
Frank L Jones	5.00
——, Hope, Kan	5.00
Mrs M Tuttle	5.00
Albert E Ogg	5.00
F J Boehmer	5.00
Adelbert Wait	5.00
Mrs A C Born	5.00
Mrs J O Dameron	5.00
Mrs R N Mills	5.00
Fred & Grady Kiser	5.00
Meadow Creek Presby S S, Greenville, Tenn	5.00
Mrs Thos Smith	5.00
Ellen Thomson	5.00
J Edwin Norvell	5.00
I M Taylor	5.00
F Baumberger	5.00
C W Wichterman	5.00
Mr & Mrs B Zimmerman	5.00
Mrs A F Latcham	5.00
Mrs C E Smith	5.00
Friend, Steamboat, Nev	5.00
Mrs W N Shumaker	5.00
Miss Jennie L Lacey	5.00
R Galloway Ross	5.00
Katharine Marchant	5.00
J W Heatherington	5.00
Mrs Huston Burns	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

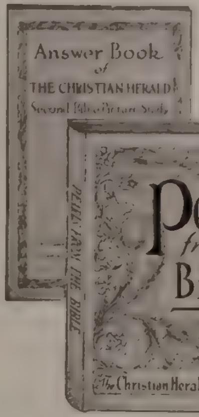
SPECIAL RENEWAL OFFERS

Bible Picture Study Outfit

OFFER No. 1 We will send the complete Bible Picture Study Outfit and the Christian Herald for 6 months for $1.25

This NEW offer is open to all. If now a subscriber to the Christian Herald, you can, by forwarding $1.25, have your subscription extended 6 months from date of expiration and also obtain the complete Outfit of the "Pearls from the Bible," the Answer Book and all 60 pictures (on one sheet) at once. Here is a reduced print of the short collection of Bible verses from which you choose those that fit or describe the pictures best. After selecting from "Pearls from the Bible" the verses that fit the pictures best, you will write them down in the Answer Book, shown here, and send it in. Those who send in the 1000 best lists of verses will be awarded 1000 cash prizes, beginning with $1,000.00, $800.00, $600.00, etc. See announcements in Christian Herald. Don't delay!

There is ample time to select your answers if you do not delay. Send your order at once.



Answer Book of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Pearls from the Bible
The Christian Herald, New York

Above Offer Expires June 18, 1917

"Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings"

OFFER No. 2 We will send a copy of "Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings" together with the Christian Herald for one year for $2.10

MISS THEODOSIA'S HEARTSTRINGS
ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

In this irresistible novel of happiness, Miss Theodosia Baxter wandered up and down the world for three years in search of something to interest her, only to come home and find it on the upper step of her own front porch.

What she found was a very much surprised child who was holding a baby on the small area of her knees.

They were two of the Flagg children who lived in the house next door—Evangeline the voluble and little Elly Precious, who possessed six toes.

Ere long Miss Theodosia made the acquaintance of Stefena, the eldest of the Flagg children, and little deaf Carruthers.

How this quartette of youngsters reached the heart of the staid and travel-worn woman, and eventually brought a romance into her own life, is set forth in Mrs. Donnell's characteristic style.

"Limpy"—The Boy Who Felt Neglected

OFFER No. 3 We will send a copy of "Limpy" and the Christian Herald for 1 year (new or renewal) for $2.25

LIMPY
WILLIAM JOHNSTON
"LIMPY" THE BOY WHO FELT NEGLECTED
Irvin S. Cobb says:
By WILLIAM JOHNSTON

What William Johnston has done in this story is to put on paper the soul of a boy of ten, who is just coming face to face with the truer values of life. No mean achievement is this, for it is a beautiful thing to look into the heart of a child and see what is hidden there.

This book has just been published and is making a big hit. A copy was sent to the Secretary of the Christian Herald and he became so interested in it that he sat up half the night reading it. If possible it interested him more than "Pollyanna." In his opinion, it is one of the most human stories that has been written in years.

Irvin S. Cobb says: "Somebody might have written a truer, sweeter, more appealing, more convincing story of a boy than 'Limpy,' but nobody ever has."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox says: "'Limpy' is very beautiful and tender and ought to have a real success. It stirs the very best in its readers."

Christian Herald for Two Years

OFFER No. 4 We will send the Christian Herald for 2 years (104 issues), new or renewal, for $3.00

Save $1.00 by taking advantage of this Special 2-year Offer—104 issues of the Christian Herald for $3.00 (instead of $4.00). Each year we receive hundreds of thousands of subscriptions. It means a saving to us to enter your subscription for 2 years instead of one, as we avoid the exchange of correspondence and the expense of re-entering the renewal again next year. We will pass even more than this saving on to you—if you act at once. Should postage increases for war revenue force an advance in subscription rates, your saving would be more than $1.00.

ORDER BLANK

CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: For the enclosed $........send the Christian Herald for..............................to (Fill in length of subscription)

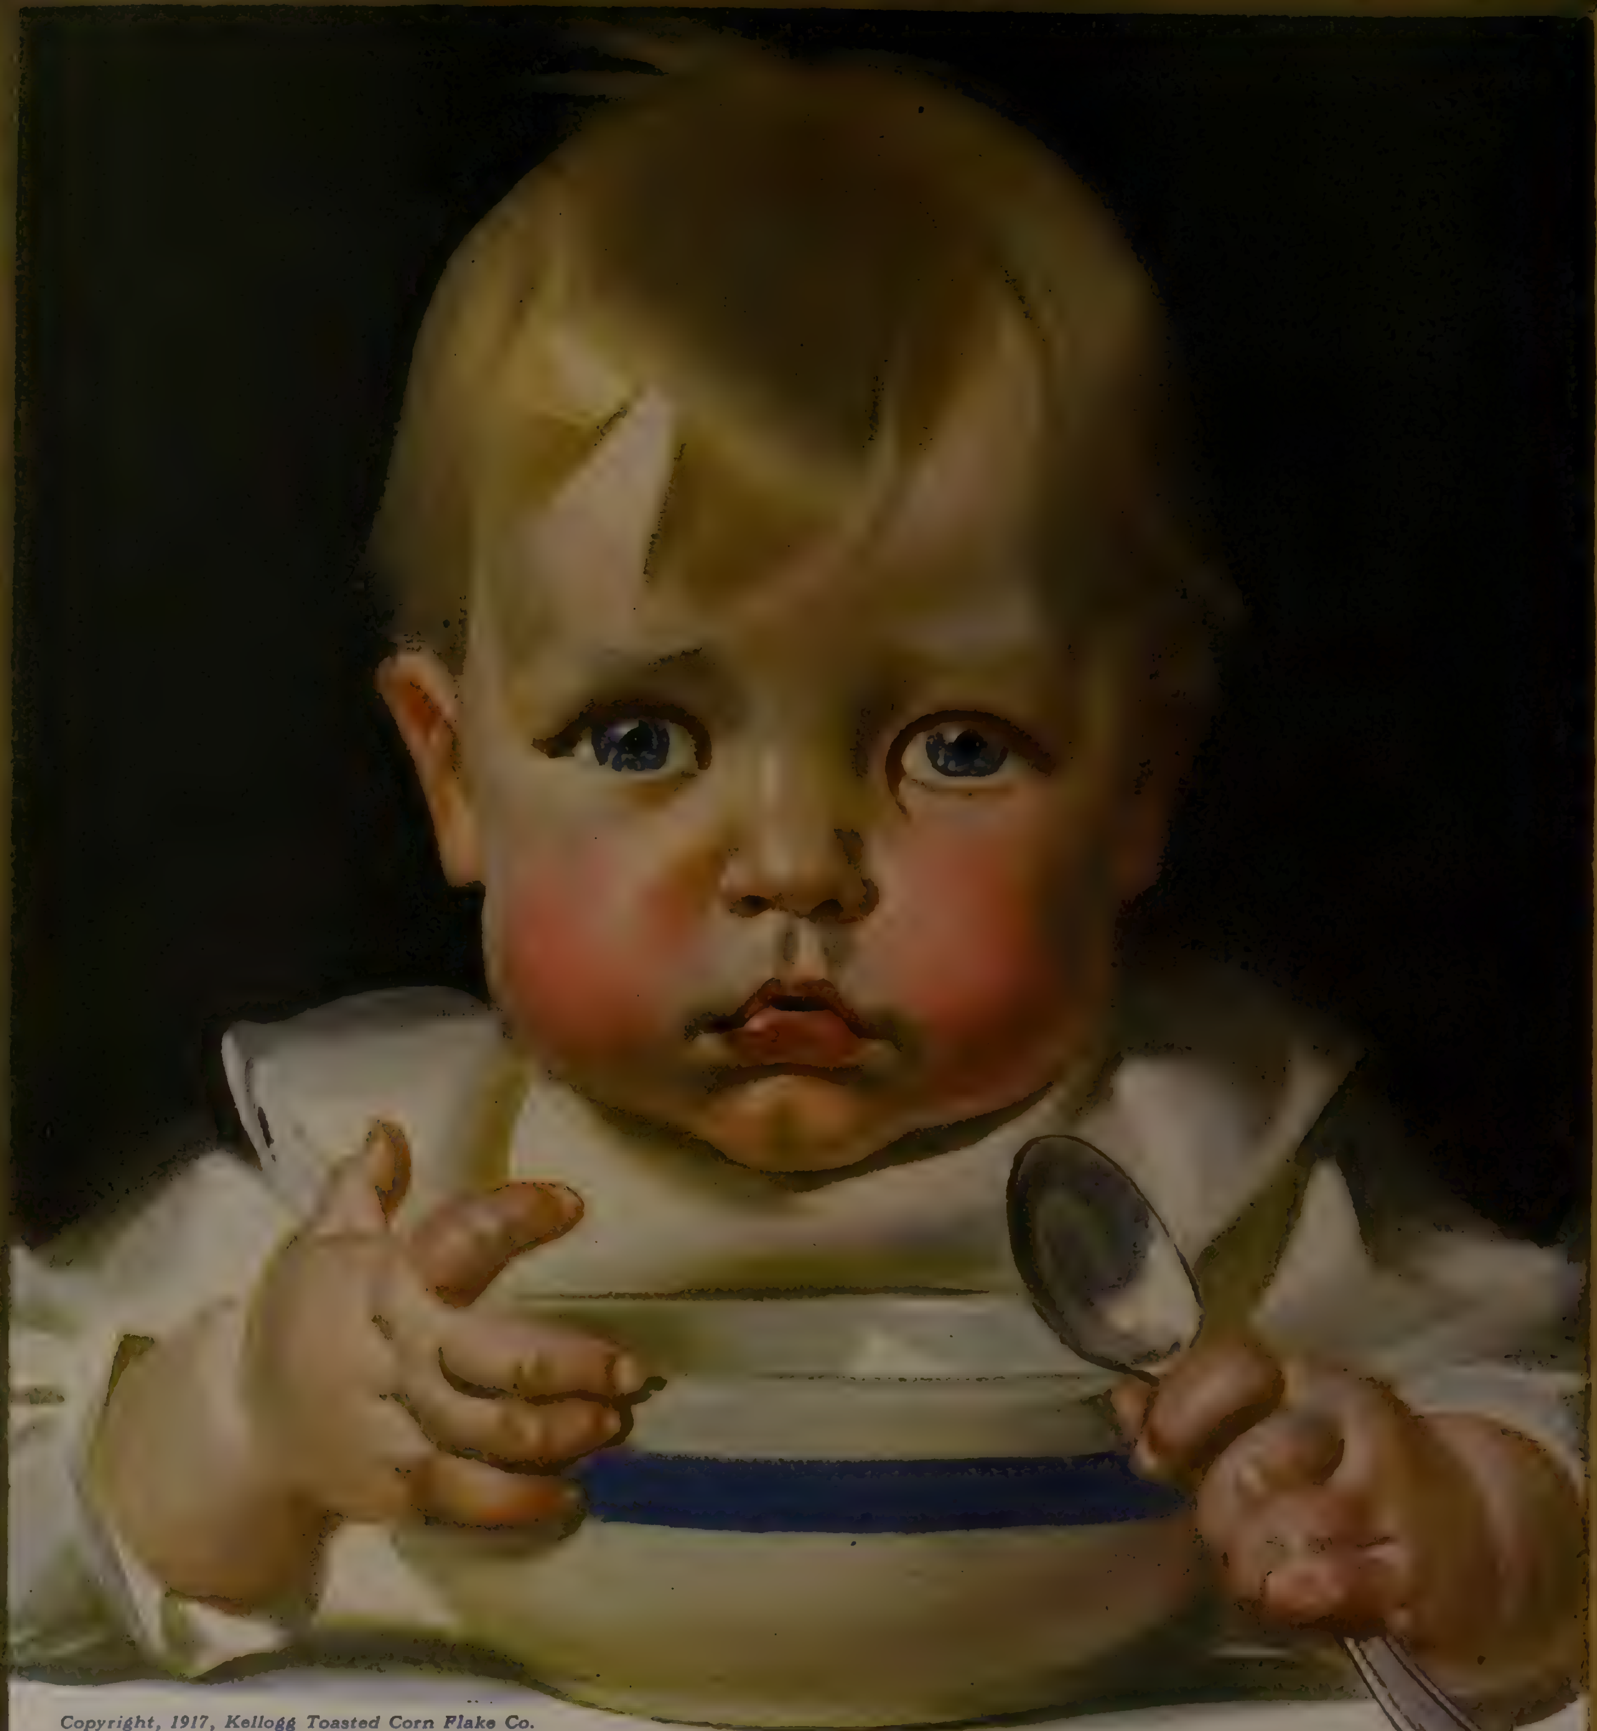
NAME..............................

ADDRESS..............................

Send a copy of..............................
(Fill in name of book wanted)

NAME..............................

ADDRESS..............................



Copyright, 1917, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co.

Always ready for Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes

Children tire of drinking milk; but the wise mother smiles and pours the milk plentifully into a big bowlful of Kellogg's. Children are always ready for Kellogg's—the original Toasted Corn Flakes, thin, crisp, and appetizing.

KRUMBLES is Kellogg's all-wheat food. Every single tiny shred is thoroughly toasted.

W. K. Kellogg

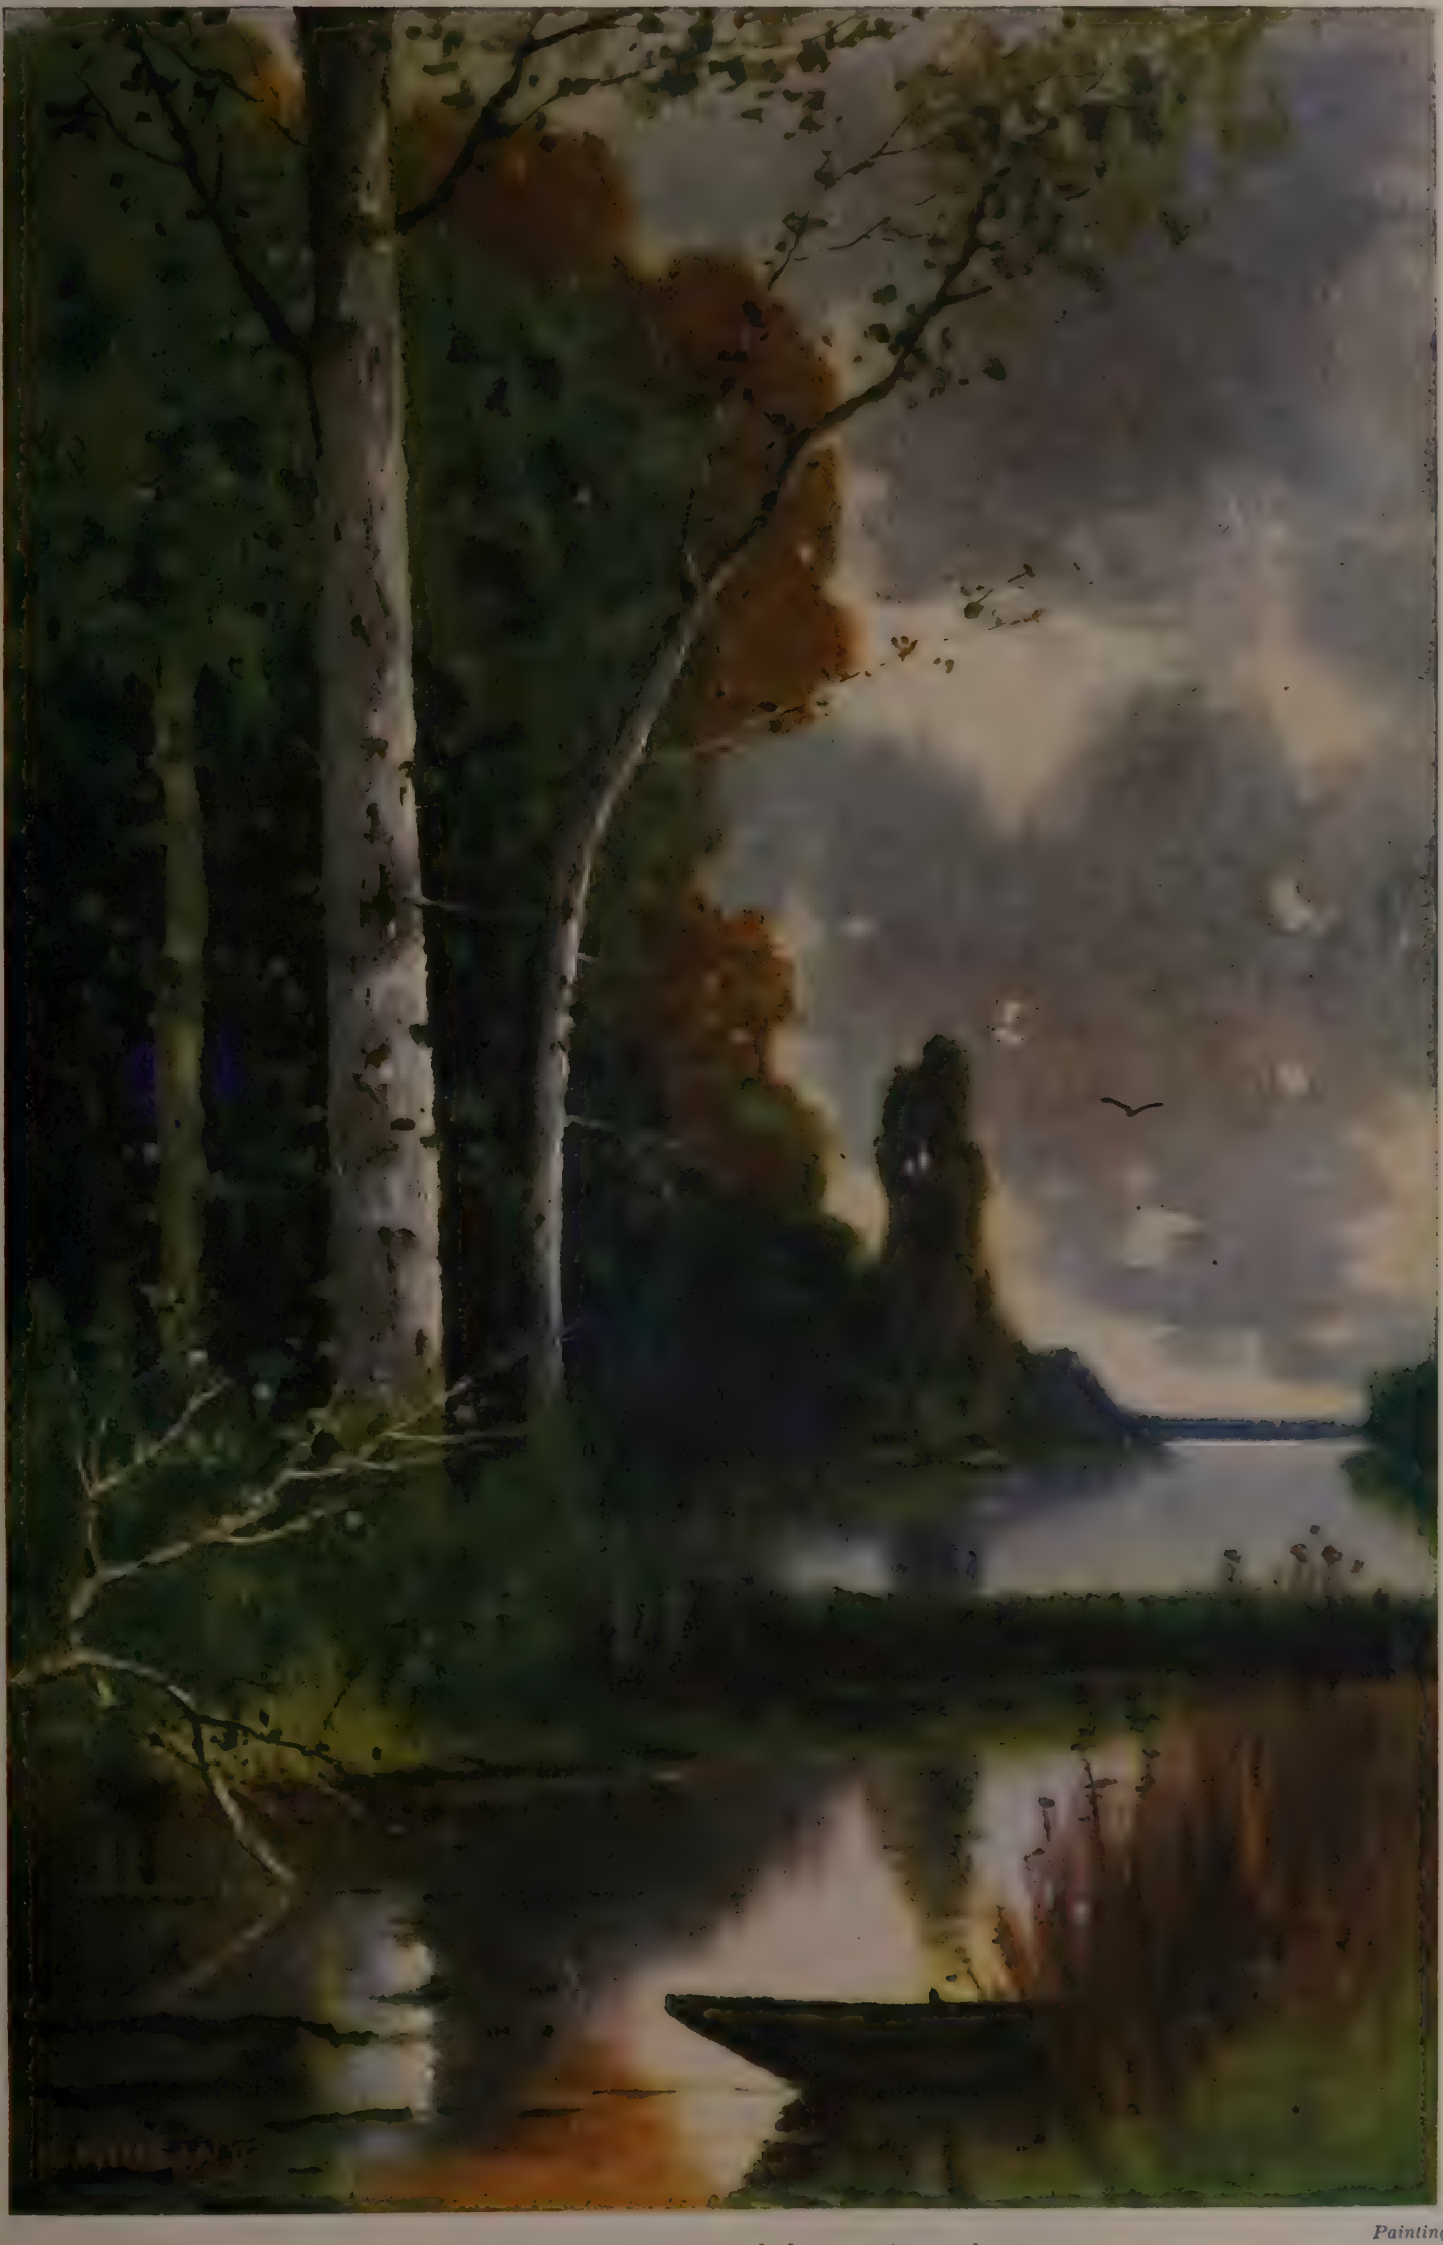
Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES
W.K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, JUNE 20, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 25. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by C. P. Rising

An empty boat close to the shore, gray shadows creeping on the stream,
And birch-trees white against the sky—ghosts of a half-forgotten dream.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

WEARY One, Culbertson, Neb. No one who is worried about sin is beyond help. The very fact of your being worried shows that you feel the need of help. Christ came on earth to help sinners and not the righteous (Matt. 9 : 13). It is those who are sick of sin that need a physician, and Christ is that Physician (Mark 2 : 17). Now, if Christ came to save sinners, and to heal those sick by and of sin, he came to help you; hence, all you have to do is to accept that help. You say you cannot get peace and comfort by prayer. Have you tried to simply grasp the things offered? God cannot lie (Heb. 6 : 18). Christ says to you and all sinners, "Come unto me, all ye that labor" (Matt. 11 : 28). He seeks you, loves you and wants you. Just persevere, and the strength you need will come to comfort you (Matt. 4 : 3–10).

Mrs. C. M. P., Vineland, N. J. The United States did not sign the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium.

A. K., Lackawanna, N. Y. 1. The subject mentioned in your letter has already been treated in our issue of April 4, page 385. 2. Thanks for clippings you sent.

Mrs. G. A., Baltimore, Md. Persons who are united to Christ by faith and have become heirs of God, would not commit suicide, as no murderer (and a suicide is a self-murderer) has eternal life abiding in him (see I John 3 : 15). If such a person took his own life, his reason may have become unbalanced by grief, or trouble, or anxiety, and in that case he was irresponsible. Any person who, having his reason and his mental powers unimpaired, deliberately kills himself, would give evidence by his act that he was not a true Christian. The condition of the suicide's mind prior to his committing the fatal act has to be taken into account. There is no doubt that a large proportion of those who commit suicide are of unsound mind at the time and not responsible. You may be quite sure that if a Christian loses control of his faculties and in that condition kills himself, he will not by that act be rejected. In thinking of a suicide, we must bear in mind the possibility of dementia, and not sorrow as those who have no hope.

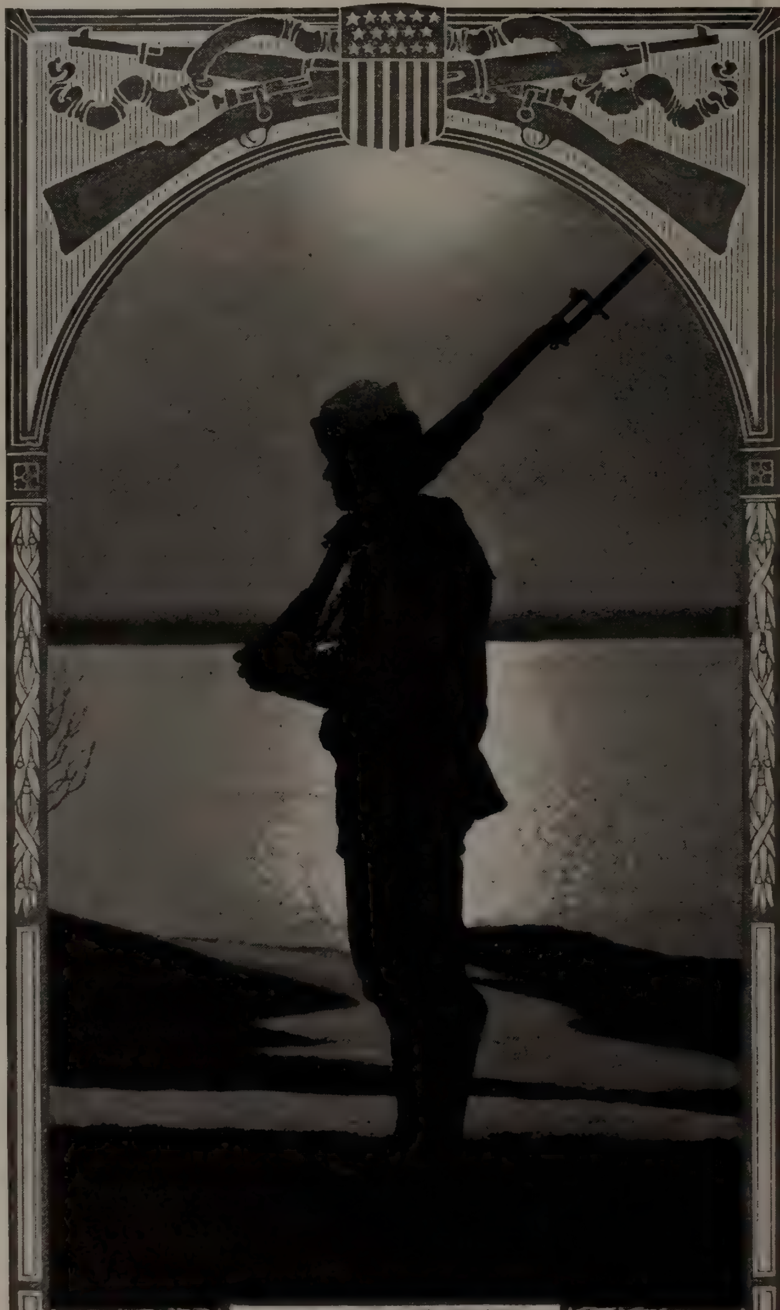
J. B., New York Mills, N. Y. There is a tendency among a certain class of critics to symbolize many things in Scripture, even where the text is clear and explicit. The Bible language concerning future punishments and rewards cannot be explained away by such methods. While the Bible abounds in metaphor and similitude, these are used in their proper places, and to the diligent student, who searches with faith and an open mind, they are not confusing. Certainly, where it refers to God the Creator, the loving and merciful Father, to his Son the Saviour, and to the plan of salvation for the redemption of the human race, it has been sufficiently clear to convince countless multitudes and transform their lives.

W. J. W. C., Santa Maria, Calif. 1. The predictions in Rev. 20 are still unfulfilled. 2. In the passage in Rom. 7 : 18 Paul illustrates the "double self" in the heart of man, the conflict between the spiritual and carnal natures. He had the desire to do good, but the flesh was still strong and insistent; yet he recognized that this baser nature was not his true self. Even in the regenerate, the strife between conscience and passion is often acute; but the regenerate has at heart a real love for the good, and a strong desire to follow it, which cannot be said of the unregenerate. The passage should be taken in connection with the whole argument from verse 14 to verse 24. 3. Luke 14 : 26 should be compared with the same thought, expressed in different form, in Luke 12 : 53 and Matt. 10 : 37, to get at the true meaning. The last mentioned reference sets it in a clearer light, giving it a meaning that is more readily understood.

J. W. W., New Paltz, N. Y. There are, unhappily, Christian ideals which seem impossible of realization in this life, at least under existing social conditions. We can only hope and pray that the time may soon come when they will be realized.

D. S. M., Jordan, Minn. Two occasions are referred to in the Gospels on which Jesus cleared the temple entrance of various kinds of merchants, whose occupation within its precincts was a sacrilege. The first was an incident of the first year of his public ministry. He had come from visiting Capernaum to attend the Passover. The incident is related in John 2 : 12–22. The second instance was during the third year of his ministry, and took place in Passion week. (See Matt. 21 : 10–17 and parallel passages.)

E. S. B., Paterson, N. J. We cannot, of course, determine whether or not your acquaintance has the gift of tongues. The gift of tongues at Pentecost was given because of an urgent need. It was speaking not in unintelligible tongues which none could understand, but in the current languages represented in that great throng of different nationalities. There was no confusion, no misunderstanding, no Babel of uncouth or meaningless sounds. It was the method chosen by the Holy Spirit to enlighten and bring into the Gospel fold the strangers from other lands, who were soon to depart. That the gift may still be bestowed in modern times is not questioned; but that it has been bestowed in instances where emotional and uninstructed persons are concerned, is questionable. We should "try the spirits" to see whether they be of God or otherwise. He is not the author of confusion, and he gives no message to his children that is wholly lost through being unintelligible.



SUNSET

by
Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

The ripples dance, red-tinted, on the sea-
Far off a bird-note quavers, high and shrill,
It wakes the echoes, thrillingly, until
My lonely heart seems leaping out of me-
Until I think of days that used to be,
When, from a farm-house on a wooded hill,
I watched the sun sink down, serene and still
And fade from sight behind a great fir tree.

I stand, a silhouette against the sky,
A gun upon my shoulder, and my gaze
Turned straight ahead-I watch the sands so gray.
Far off I hear a bird's shrill, longing cry,
A cry that seems to sob for other days...
Upon the sea, blood-red, the ripples play.

M. E. B., Urbana, Ohio. Nearly one-fourth of the earth's land surface is comprised within the continent of Africa, and it is as far around the coast of Africa as it is around the world. Every eighth person of the world's population lives in the dark continent. The blacks double their number every forty years and the whites every eighty years. There are 843 languages and dialects spoken among the blacks of Africa, but only a few of them written. One area in Africa unoccupied by missionaries is three times the size of New England, a second would make four states like New York, and another is eighteen times the size of Ohio. Throughout Africa there is one missionary for every 133,000 souls.

S. P., Blachly, Ore. Please explain John 8 : 56. Your difficulty comes from the use of the present tense, but, in order to get at the meaning of this verse, you must remember as all those who take the words of Scripture literally should do, the peculiarities not only of the dead languages, but of the poetical meaning attached by the old writers to many passages. The meaning of the passage becomes clear when we consider the facts. The patriarch Abraham, having received the promise in which was contained the coming of the day of Christ, had such faith that he not only actually foresaw the day in the far distance, but, depending on the inviolability of the promise, exulted in the prospect, which prospect was fulfilled at the Transfiguration.

W. A. C., Fowlerton, Tex., writes: "I was deeply interested in Ferdinand C. Iglehart's article published in the Christian Herald of May 9. I have resided near army posts in three different states during the past twenty-five years, and have had twenty-five years of observation at close range of the effects intoxicating liquor has upon the army of the United States. I sum it up in three words: It is deplorable! Thousands of temperate young men enter military service, serve their term of enlistment, and are discharged confirmed inebriates! Beer and whisky absorbed their money during their term of service, and within a week after each pay-day they couldn't have purchased a one-cent postage stamp and paid cash for it. These are plain, cold facts. The only way to successfully deal with the liquor curse is to quit making the stuff. We all of us know this, and the government of the United States knows it, too. I wonder why it doesn't stop it?"

President H. J. Kaltenbach, New York, writes: "I am sure that in publishing the assertion by the Rev. F. C. Iglehart that 618,000,000 bushels of grain were used last year in the manufacture of intoxicants, you did not mean to deceive your readers. The facts are, as taken from official records and given to the press three weeks ago, that the total quantity of grain used in the production of alcoholic beverages during the fiscal year 1916 was less than 87,000,000 bushels, of which 67,000,000 were used in making beer, and less than 20,000,000 in the production of distilled beverage liquors. Of these 87,000,000 bushels, more than 35 per cent. was returned to the farmers in stock feed, leaving the total net consumption at less than 57,000,000 bushels. These figures are taken from the records of the Internal Revenue Bureau."

The foregoing correction is made gladly, the figures given in the article referred to having been clearly an oversight, as the writer of it himself discovered, although too late to have the error corrected in the issue in which it appeared.

Mrs. E. A., Hemlock, Ohio, writes: "I have just finished reading your editorial in the Christian Herald, 'Glimpsing the Kingdom,' and extracts from the writings of Herbert George Wells. There are two points that appeal to me very forcibly: first, his disappointment concerning organized Christianity, and second, the world's hope for the World-Kingdom of God. I am heartily in sympathy with the spirit of this article. The same thought has been on my heart and mind many years. I believe the time is at hand for the Church of God to get together in unity of spirit and action, and I have watched and waited long and anxiously for the great theologians to come to the front with some proposition that all would gladly act upon, but in vain. If we would throw away form, ritual, creed, dogma, and base our faith in Christ on the Gospels, taking the book of Acts (the only book of conversions) beginning with Chapter 2, where the door of entrance to the Kingdom (the church on earth) was first opened, and the terms of entrance given by the Holy Spirit, sent to guide the apostles into all truth, and to bring to their remembrance all that Christ had taught them—this much, believed and obeyed, would bring every honest soul into the Kingdom of Christ. Isaiah tells us the highway of holiness is so plain that a fool shall not err therein."

Mrs. B. H. Butterfield, Route 2, Lodi, Calif., would be glad to hear from Reader, Oklahoma; I. D. L., Smuggler, Colo.; Mrs. A. H., Pedricktown, N. Y.; and J. E. H., Parkersburg, W. Va., regarding their recent letters in the Mail-Bag.

J. H. G., McDade, Texas. Question is controversial. We hold that God regards the spirit, rather than the form, of the observance.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

© Underwood & Underwood

The Royal Palace at Stockholm, where Social-Democrats of many nations will meet in world conference for peace

Workers of Many Nations Seek Peace Basis

RUSSIA, since becoming a republic, refuses to continue actively in the world war. The powers that now prevail in Russia have as their watchword, "Peace without annexations or indemnities." Though the government of Russia is in a wofully unsettled condition, the control at present appears to be in the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, backed by the entire Social-Democratic element, not of Russia alone, but of the world.

The newspaper organ of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates says: "We must not allow any misinterpretation of our watchword. 'Annexation' means the forcible seizure of territory in another state on the day of declaration of war. 'Without annexation' means not a drop of the people's blood for such seizure." The publication, after quoting two English newspapers to the effect that the declaration of the Provisional Government and the pronouncements of the revolutionary leaders show that the Russian peace formula coincides with the Anglo-French war aims, says: "You are deceiving yourselves, gentlemen, or, rather, you are vainly striving to delude your fellow countrymen concerning the real policy of the Russian revolution. The revolution will not sacrifice a single soldier to help you repair the 'historic injustices' committed against you. What about the historic injustices committed by yourselves, and your violent oppression of Ireland, India, Egypt and innumerable peoples inhabiting all the continents of the world? If you are so anxious for justice that you are prepared in its name to send millions of people to the grave, then, gentlemen, begin with yourselves."

The Workmen's and Soldiers' Council, having appealed to the Allied nations for a restatement of their war aims with regard to "no annexations or indemnities" and received no official response, has called an international conference of Social-Democrats to be held at Stockholm, Sweden, and opening July 8. The stated purpose is "to organize a world union to consider means to end war and eliminate imperialism." The Socialists of many nations are promptly responding. There will be 150 delegates from various Entente countries, 50 from the Central Empires of Europe and 48 from neutral lands. Most of these delegates are already on their way, many are gathered at Christiania for preliminary conferences, and some have arrived at Stockholm.

THE British Socialists responded in a meeting at Leeds, on Saturday, June 2. Eleven hundred delegates hailed the idea of the Russian republicans, proclaimed sympathy with peace without annexations or indemnities, and demanded that the British government support that formula in harmony with the Russian government. The meeting agreed to divide England into thirteen districts and call a conference in each at the earliest moment possible and formulate its plans. A resolution initiating the British workmen's and soldiers' group described its aims as being "to work for a peace made by the peoples of the various countries; for the complete political and economic emancipation of international labor, and, among other things, to stop the exploitation of food and concern themselves with the welfare of soldiers and sailors in every way."

The meeting despatched the following message to the Social-Democrats at Petrograd: "The largest and greatest convention of Labor, Socialist and Democratic bodies Great Britain has held in this generation today endorsed the Russian declaration of foreign policy and war aims, and pledged itself to work through its newly constituted Workmen's and Soldiers' delegates for an immediate democratic peace."

More significant still was a sudden change in the attitude of the British government toward the Stockholm conference. From unqualified opposition the government turned to endorsement. Immediate announcement was made that the Socialist delegates would be granted passports. "Curiously enough," says the New York Tribune's special London correspondence, "it coincides with the lull in the fighting. The belligerents are entering the finest fighting month of the year with comparative calm on every front, except the Italian, and even there the pace has greatly slackened." It synchronizes exactly with the report of Field Marshal Von Hindenburg that "the great British and French spring drive has come to a certain conclusion."

"Add to this situation, with prohibitive food prices and months and years of grinding toil in the machine shops under double pressure, and you obtain," says the Tribune's correspondence, "an explanation of the unrest and willingness of the people to seek a panacea, even if it be found in the maneuvers of the Socialists, who a few months back were classed as pro-German traitors."

On the same day that the English Socialists met at Leeds, a meeting of the majority and minority sections of the Socialist Party was convened in the French capital. "While the council was sitting," says the Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, "the Place de la République was a scene of great animation. A crowd began to collect early in the afternoon in front of the Hotel Modern, where the meeting was held, and gradually increased until about 6 P.M. it numbered several thousands. As time went on the crowd became impatient, and raised cries of 'Go to Stockholm!' and 'Down with the war!' Outside, the crowd was singing the 'International.' It was the first time it had been sung since the war. The café terraces surrounding the Place de la République were crowded with people, who looked on with approval. During a suspension of the session, MM. Longuet, Brizon and Ropoport went down and addressed the crowd. M. Longuet said: 'We are going to Stockholm to make peace,' and the declaration was received with tremendous cheers."

Meanwhile the French Premier, M. Ribot, has been stoutly contending that "peace can come from victory alone," and the Chamber of Deputies has upheld him in a resolution that peace conditions must include the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France and reparation for damage done in the invaded regions. The French Socialists of all factions, however, have been rapidly coming into complete harmony in the demand that they be permitted representation at Stockholm. There is no indication as yet whether the French delegates will obtain passports, but in view of the situation as now outlined it appears to be the view that their presence there would not be so objectionable as it was at first regarded in some quarters.

The peace program of the Austrian and German delegates, as formulated in a group conference at Christiania, provides for no annexations, no indemnities; restriction of mechanical means which may be employed in maritime and air warfare; Finland and Russian Poland to be independent states; the people of Galicia to have autonomy under the sovereignty of Austria; restoration of freedom of commerce on land and sea; modification of the protectionist system; the establishment of "international administration" for all maritime routes and interoceanic canals and international railways. The delegates go on record as opposing the annexation of Belgium, and declare themselves as "being friendly to Serbia's independence, which state, by joining with Montenegro, can assure itself of an outlet to the sea."

The Socialists of the United States, in their convention at St. Louis, adopted by a three-fourths vote resolutions declaring: "The only struggle which would justify the workers in taking up arms is the great struggle of the working class of the world to free itself from economic exploitation and political oppression. As against the false doctrine of national patriotism we uphold the ideal of international working-class solidarity. In support of capitalism we will not willingly give a single life or a single dollar; in support of the struggle of the workers for freedom we pledge our all."

Morris Hillquit of New York and ex-Congressman Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin were chosen as delegates to the Stockholm conference; but the State Department has refused them passports. The Socialists of the United States, therefore, may not be represented.

That American sympathy with and endorsement of the aims of the International Conference is not confined to the Socialists was shown in the great Madison Square Garden meetings in New York of the "First American Conference for Democracy and Terms of Peace." Most of the speakers, who included college professors, well known pacifists, Socialists and labor leaders from almost every state, demanded that President Wilson restate in concrete terms our war aims and the conditions upon which we will make peace. The resolutions declare: "The conference favors an early, general and democratic peace, to be secured through negotiations in harmony with the principles outlined by the President of the United States and by revolutionary Russia, and accepted substantially by the progressive and democratic forces of France, England, Italy, Germany, Austria and other countries, namely: (a) no forcible annexation of territory; (b) no punitive indemnities; (c) free development of all nations."

Victor L. Berger, speaking at one of these great meetings, touched on the Stockholm conference. He said that he still expected to go to Stockholm despite the refusal of the State Department to issue a passport to him. He characterized the war "as the result of a morganatic marriage between Lombard Street and Wall Street." He added: "As was to be expected, the issues of that union were illegitimate war babies. Every time you mention peace, these war babies are ready to die. The war is exceedingly unpopular in the Middle West. People are lukewarm about it in the South, and if the Far West is prepared to fight anybody it is Japan, not Germany. The real trouble is, we have a rubber stamp Congress, which has abdicated its powers. Nothing could afford more convincing proof of this than that a Democratic Congress allows Elihu Root to teach Russia democracy."

The Italian government has announced that no passports will be given to Italian Socialists to participate in the conference at Stockholm. The Minister of the Interior considers the international conference a maneuver of the Central Powers, aided by Russian extremists.

It has been decided that a preliminary conference of Socialists of the Entente countries will take place in London during July. The Russian Socialists will be asked to participate, or at least to be present.

The Socialist hope seems to be that though peace may not directly result, the world conference may at least pave a way for it.

Baron Rosen, Russian Statesman, Who Appeals to the Entente for a Peace Terms Conference

BARON ROSEN, former Russian Ambassador to the United States and former member of the Council of the Empire, suggests as a means of exit from the war a diplomatic conference of the Entente Allies to determine a possible basis of peace with the Central Powers. The original aims of the war—the complete ruin of the enemy—have become hopeless, he declares, and the war promises to develop into a slow process of more or less general exhaustion of both sides. He says:

"The Russian democracy was the first to have the courage to say aloud the definite word which has freed everybody from the bloody hypnosis under which the nations labored for nearly three years. We must abandon the use of words which mean nothing clear and definite and begin a diplomatic conference with the Allies and the United States, which has joined the coalition, and find out what conditions of peace will satisfy them and at the same time be in accordance with the spirit of the declaration of the temporary government and the principles proclaimed by President Wilson."

Baron Rosen

Mobilizing the Boys and Girls

All Through the South Many Thousands of Pig Clubs, Corn Clubs and Poultry Clubs Increase the Food Supply

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

THIS letter is to show how thousands of boys and girls in the United States can each do his or her "bit" for our country in this great war with Germany. The crying need is for more food, both for ourselves and our allies, and every boy who raises an acre of corn or brings up a fat pig is helping in our fight with the enemy. Every girl who cultivates a patch of vegetables and puts them in cans, or who has a few chickens and adds their eggs to our food supply, is helping the nation in this mighty struggle. If we should all join together and each do his share there would be no scarcity of food here at home, and we should have vast supplies to ship to our allies in Europe.

204#
Boys hog
85#
Dads hog

The boy ran a pig-feeding race with dad and won 204 pounds to 85

Here is what 5,000 little girls in Texas have done within the past year. They are taken from only thirty-two counties, and they represent only a small part of the state. Their work was done to help themselves, for no one knew until now that we should have this great war. Nevertheless, those 5,000 girls put up about 80,000 cans and glass jars of vegetables and fruits. They had little farms of only one-tenth of an acre. But there were more than a third of a million such farms, and the tomatoes raised upon them weighed tens of thousands of pounds. One little girl raised 6,800 pounds of tomatoes on her tenth of an acre, and the girls of one club raised 44,000 pounds. In some places the girls have gone in for fowl-raising, and in one county last year there were nine egg circles, which marketed about a half million eggs.

The boys of Texas who belong to corn clubs, cotton clubs, pig clubs and baby beef clubs now number more than 9,000, and nearly every one of them is cultivating an acre of land after the methods advised by our Agricultural Department at Washington. There are more than 3,000 of them in the corn clubs, and the average yield of the corn raised by them last year was ten bushels more than the average raised by their fathers and neighbors. If as good farming were done all over the country, our corn crop would be a billion bushels larger than it now is, and at current prices it would be worth more than a billion dollars additional.

TAKE, for instance, the pig clubs. They are being started all over the south, and not only the states and counties, but banks, business firms, chambers of commerce and individuals are interested in them. Many people are loaning money to the boys of the pig clubs as a patriotic work, and now that the war is on these funds will be greatly increased. The first club was organized in Caddo Parish, La., in the fall of 1910, with a membership of fifty-nine boys. It was an outgrowth of the corn clubs of that region and was started to give some of the club members an opportunity of marketing their corn through the pigs. This pig club work is divided into two sections—that of fattening a hog for home consumption or the market, and that of raising a litter of pigs. Each boy may take the branch he likes best, but, in most cases it is a combination of the two.

In 1915 there were more than ten thousand children in the pig clubs, and of these more than five thousand were in Louisiana, Alabama and Georgia, where the work was first started. Many of the states are now offering prizes at the fairs for the best pigs raised by these clubs, and it is not uncommon to see the prize given to a girl.

The most of the pig club members are boys. Everywhere they are beating their fathers, and some of them are making extraordinary records. In 1915 the average valuation of a hog in Louisiana was $7.70; but the pigs of the boys' clubs were worth on the average $22.26, and a similar proportion existed in Alabama and Georgia. Two hundred and five pigs were exhibited by members of the clubs at the Louisiana state fair, and John Robert Reid won $122 in prizes and was offered $400 for one of his sows and its litter. He refused this, but sold four of the little pigs for $260, and he estimated his net profit that year at $647.

And now as to chickens and eggs. The Bureau

Continued on page 689

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

II. God's Covenant With Abraham, or Why He Chose Israel

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

THIS is our second study of the Mountain Peaks of Prophecy. The former carried us forward to the story of the tower of Babel in Genesis 11, at which time it appeared as if the rebellion and iniquity of the race had driven the name and the truth of God out of the earth which he had made.

But it was not so. It is written that "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (Rom. 11 : 29), which, for our present purpose, means that his original promise of the redemption of the race had not been forgotten, and that his mind had not changed concerning it.

But the period has now arrived for a change in the method of its execution. This does not mean that it is a new method, so far as God himself is concerned. It is not a surprise to him in the sense that he is obliged to adopt it because of a previous failure. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15 : 18). What he is now about to do had been not only foreknown but foreordained.

He is about to call into being a secondary instrument for the redemption of the race. The primary one is the Seed of the woman, as we saw in our first study: the Personal Redeemer, the Son of God. But the secondary one is the nation of Israel, whose beginnings take their rise in the call and history of Abraham (Genesis 12 to 25).

And for what purpose does God desire Israel? On an earlier and different occasion in this journal, it was shown that this was threefold. Israel was to be a repository for his truth in the earth, and to her was committed the sacred oracles. She was to be a channel for the coming of the Personal Redeemer to the earth, and she gave the world its Saviour. And she was to be a national witness to God before the other peoples of the earth. His unity, his supremacy, his character were to be made known through her, that all the ends of the earth might fear him, and that the nations might "be glad and sing for joy" (Ps. 67 : 4).

This brings us to our second mountain peak, where "the Lord said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee" (Gen. 12 : 1).

It was not of merit, but of grace, that this call came to Abraham. He dwelt in paganism, and was personally a sinner like all the rest of mankind. No partiality was shown to him above other men, in the sense that God loved him more than them. He was chosen for this place because God loved the whole race of men and desired to save them by this means. "A Syrian ready to perish was my father," the priests of Israel were taught to say, and although when first spoken this referred to Jacob, yet its application to his grandfather Abraham would have been equally true. The sequel will disclose this.

II

LOOK now at the threefold blessing on Abraham. There was, first, a blessing for himself: "I will bless thee, and make thy name great" (Gen. 12 : 2). Little is required to remind us of the fulfilment of this promise. Whether we follow Abraham in his temporary sojourns into Egypt and Philistia, or abide with him in the peaceful tents of Canaan, or accompany him to battle against the confederacy of Chedorlaomer, it was still the same. God was his Friend (Isa. 41 : 8), and kings honored him, and his silver and gold increased and his cattle and land multiplied. Nor was it only in things physical but also in things spiritual that this was true. Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness (Gen. 15 : 6); and so transcendent a blessing was this that it becomes the New Testament exemplar of Gospel grace. Christ was made a curse for us, says the apostle Paul, "that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ" (Gal. 3 : 13, 14). Abraham's name is great.

There was, secondly, a blessing for his direct posterity—"I will make of thee a great nation" (Gen. 12 : 2); "I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth" (Gen. 13 : 16). Israel has not been great, numerically or territorially, as compared with other nations; but she has been great in God's dealings with her, in the wonders wrought in her history, in the things she has accomplished and in the influence she has exerted, not only on the nations contiguous to her but on those of the whole earth. And, as we shall see, her history is not ended, but only temporarily suspended. When the present interregnum has expired, and Israel again takes up her mission in Palestine, the career outlined for her is more glorious than her past. She is to be the head of the nations and not the tail (Amos 9 : 11–15). Moreover, as our former study pointed out, believers on Jesus Christ are the spiritual seed of Abraham, "a multitude whom no man can number."

There was, in the third place, a blessing for the whole world—"Thou shalt be a blessing"; "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12 : 2, 3). This also has been literally fulfilled. All who came into right relationship with Abraham personally were blessed because of that relationship. All who came into right relationship with Israel, the nation that proceeded out of his loins, were blessed for the same reason. But very specially all who have come into right relationship with Jesus Christ, the spiritual seed of Abraham, have been so blessed, and literally they are of "all the families of the earth." However, this part of the promise also awaits complete fulfilment in the time to come; for some day "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11 : 9).

Dr. James M. Gray

III

BUT there were two contributing agencies to the execution of this threefold blessing upon Abraham. The first was the gift of a land for him and his posterity to dwell in, and the second, the treatment which God purposed to accord to other individuals and nations as they treated Abraham and his descendants.

"The land that I will show thee" is the way in which God first alludes to it in Gen. 12 : 1. Later, when Abraham came into Canaan, the Lord appeared unto him, and said: "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12 : 7). Still later, after his return from Egypt and subsequent separation from Lot, the Lord appeared unto him once more and, repeating the promise, said, "All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed forever. . . . Arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee" (Gen. 13 : 15–17). Finally for our present purpose, God makes a solemn covenant with Abraham, describing and defining the boundaries of the land, "from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates" (Gen. 15 : 18–20).

These boundaries, it may be said, are much more extensive than the territory Israel has ever yet occupied, indicating the greater future in store for her when she occupies the whole. It is scarcely necessary to speak of its fruitfulness, caring for a large population in the past, and capable of caring for a larger one in the future when, by the special blessing of God, "the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed" (Amos 9 : 13). Its location also is a strategic one. God, in Ezekiel, calls it the "middle of the earth," and the national and international struggles for the possession of its capital in the past bear out that description, to say nothing of the covetous eyes of all peoples that are resting upon it today.

Some have found fault with God for wresting this land from its earlier possessors to bestow it upon Israel. But they have not considered his motive for doing so, nor its justifying cause. As to his motive, we are always to keep in view his purpose to redeem the race, and the use he would make of Israel to that end. He was not giving this land to Israel for her own sake, as we have seen, but for the world's sake.

On the other hand, the occupants of the land, known in general terms as the Canaanites, had utterly forfeited its possession. You are a landlord, let us say; and you have a tenant who, with means abundant for the purpose, persistently refuses to pay your rent. Moreover, he has repaid your unwonted consideration for him by abusing your property into the bargain. Patience has ceased to be a virtue, and in the sight of both God and man you are justified in his ejection by due process of law. Nay, you are an unwise administrator of a trust if you fail to exercise your obligation to do so. God did no more than this; but he did this, because of the peoples of that land it could be justly said that their cup of iniquity had been filled to overflowing for some time. Moreover, he will act in a similar way and on a larger scale when he again comes down to earth to deal in judgment with the sons of men.

IV

BUT no feature of this prophecy has more practical concern for us at present than the dealings of God with other individuals and nations as they dealt with Abraham and his descendants. "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee" (Gen. 12 : 3). The reason is added—"and in thee all the families of the earth shall be blessed." In other words, that this blessing may follow, Abraham and his descendants must be preserved and protected as the divine instrument to that end.

Accordingly, when famine drives Abraham into Egypt and Pharaoh would take Sarah from him, "the Lord plagued Pharaoh and his house with great plagues," so that he was glad to send "him away, and his wife, and all that he had" (Gen. 12 : 14–20). God makes the enemies of Abraham's son Isaac to be at peace with him. Laban cannot circumvent his grandson Jacob. Prison walls cannot prevent Joseph from being second in the kingdom of Egypt. On a larger scale of operations, Pharaoh and the whole kingdom of the Egyptians are plagued with terrific judgments, until Moses is given liberty to lead the Hebrews, as the descendants of Abraham are now called, out into the land of promise.

Read the early historical books of the Old Testament from Joshua to Kings, and observe that this principle in God's dealings with the nations never varied. Sometimes he used the nations in chastisement of Israel; but when they "helped forward the affliction," that is, when purpose of aggrandizement led them to inflict greater and more prolonged suffering upon Israel than was meet, their time of punishment always came. "It shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks" (Isa. 10 : 12). Thus said the Lord of one of these nations, and thus has he acted towards all of them.

The trouble in the whole Gentile world to-day is attributable to the treatment of Israel or the Jew. Jonah in the whale's belly is a type of disobedient Israel swallowed by the Gentile nations, which can enjoy no comfort until she is emitted and restored again to her own land. And when God begins to bless her again, those nations will be blessed with her. "God shall bless us," says the psalmist, "and all the ends of the earth shall fear him." (Ps. 67:7).

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

PROHIBITION BY TAXATION. The Finance Committee of the Senate on June 4, considering the War Revenue Bill, fixed a tax of twenty dollars a bushel upon all foodstuffs used in the manufacturing of distilled spirits for use as beverages. A tax was also proposed of five dollars a gallon on molasses, syrups, etc., used in distillation for beverage purposes, these taxes to be in addition to the present tax of one dollar and ten cents per gallon. The object of this tax is admittedly not revenue, but the prevention of distilling. According to various estimates there is enough whisky in bond to last, under normal consumption, from one to three years. The amendment prevents the importation of whisky. At last reports the committee was planning a slight increase of second-class postal rates, substituting for most of the proposed increase a direct tax on advertising receipts of all publications. Taxes are also proposed on automobiles used for pleasure, running from $7.50 to $25, according to the retail price of the car, and the committee has planned to increase the tax fixed by the House on cigars and tobacco and cigarettes. The committee is also considering another bond issue of a billion dollars.

© International Film Service, Inc.

New York answers the call to the colors. A West Side tailor shop becomes a registration booth

THEY COME, TEN MILLION STRONG. June 5, instead of being a sombre day, became almost a holiday, and from coast to coast and from the Lakes to the Gulf the young men of the nation flocked to the registration booths in such numbers as to overwhelm the officials waiting to enroll them. It appeared probable at this writing that the total number registered would exceed 9,000,000; the estimate of the Census Bureau as to the number eligible was 10,264,867. It was announced from the Provost Marshal's office on June 4 that the first draft under the law would probably be for from 900,000 to 1,000,000 men, which it was expected would be reduced through exemptions and rejections to 625,000, leaving a reserve of 125,000 for the first army of 500,000 men. There was some disorder on Registration Day, some of the Indians in the West refusing to register. A riot organized at Butte was put down by military force. Later reports indicated that more than half of the men registered had claimed exemption.

A BOND OR A BOMB? Army aviators flying over New York on June 7 dropped circulars urging the people of the metropolis to buy the Liberty Bonds as a protection against bombs from the sky. All over the country similar activities, spectacular and otherwise, marked the closing days of the sale of Uncle Sam's greatest bond issue; officials and patriotic citizens were working together in a great effort to insure the over-subscription of the bond issue. At every public gathering for any purpose where it could possibly be arranged speakers were on hand urging the people in short addresses to come to the financial support of the government. A week before the closing day the total of subscriptions was only $1,300,000,000.

PAN-AMERICA AND THE WAR. On Sunday, June 3, in addressing a great open-air Liberty Loan mass-meeting in Baltimore, Mr. John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American Union, and former United States minister to Argentina, said: "That the whole Western Hemisphere will be directly engaged in the war before another year passes is now not only possible but very probable. The preponderating public sentiment everywhere in Latin America is undoubtedly pro-American and pro-Ally. The tide of Pan-Americanism is undoubtedly rising, and it looks as if the flood would carry all America with it."

PERSHING IN ENGLAND. Major General John J. Pershing and his staff, with about seventy enlisted men of the regular army, altogether 198 men, reached an English port on June 8, and were received with full honors by the British military authorities. The army collier Jupiter, with 10,500 tons of wheat and foodstuffs, was reported as reaching a French port several days before.

NORTHCLIFFE TO AMERICA. Lord Northcliffe will head the British War Commission to the United States, succeeding Secretary Arthur J. Balfour. Lord Northcliffe is the owner of the London Times and Daily Mail, which he has refused to muzzle. He has been the consistent foe of inefficiency and bureaucratic muddling.

A SHORT CROP. The Department of Agriculture on June 8 estimated the 1917 wheat crop at 656,000,000 bushels, 16,000,000 above last year's crop.

Looking a Week Ahead

IN next week's issue:

A wonderfully absorbing letter from Professor Alexander Robertson on "Life in Venice in War Time"—a vivid description of present conditions in the "Queen City of the Adriatic."

An introduction to the Neighbors' League which is making citizens.

Uncle Sam's advice to the farmer on how to increase the meat supply and to preserve fruits and vegetables now wasted.

A personal story by Miss Sangster about an enterprise very dear to members of the Christian Herald family. And a trip along the coast of the Philippines with Maynard Owen Williams.

Also a story of the closing of the Sunday campaign preliminary to a personal message from Mr. Sunday which will follow a week later.

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

IN the war in Europe three things are today the most important to the mind of the average American: the western front, the Russian situation, and the U-boat menace. On the Rumanian, Mesopotamian, South Palestinian and Macedonian, as well as the Caucasian and Russian, fronts, there were no events of importance during the week.

On the western front, except for minor activities between the great angle of the line and Rheims, nothing took place on Friday, June 1, and except for a German attack on the French positions near the Mill of Laffaux in the same region on Saturday, which temporarily succeeded but ultimately failed, this stagnation continued, with occasional reciprocal trench raids by the French and minor thrusts by the Germans, netting a few prisoners. Tuesday the British made minor gains south of the Souchez River and north of the Scarpe, while farther south on the French front fighting became more active.

During all this time, however, there had been very intense artillery activity by both sides in the Wytschaete sector of the front. This sector forms a sharp German salient or jut, about three miles in width and depth, south of that former center, Ypres, in Belgium. Early on Thursday, June 7, the British began a mass attack on this salient, and the German positions on each side, with the object of flattening the salient. In the British reports of June 7 it was claimed that the Messines-Wytschaete ridge had been captured, including the villages of Messines, Costaverne, Wytschaete and several other important strategic points. A German counter-attack, the British reports state, was smothered by artillery fire. Field Marshal Haig's troops captured over 6,000 prisoners. German official bulletins concede the breaking of the salient.

From April 1 to date, the French and British offensives on the western front have captured a total of 54,584 prisoners—the French quota being 31,820 and the British 22,755. During this same period the Germans have taken approximately 12,000 French and British prisoners. The total British casualties for May amounted to 114,000. During the week a German air raid on Kent and Sussex killed twelve and wounded twenty-six and did no military damage, though according to the German report it did considerable damage at Sheerness. The British fleet bombarded Ostend and Zeebrugge, on the Belgian coast; effectively, the British say—non-effectively, the Germans claim.

THE complications confronting the Russian government continue. Several of the ministers of the provisional government have resigned, as has also General Alexieff, the commander-in-chief, and General Gourko. General Brussiloff has been appointed to take the chief command, in succession to Alexieff. Advices of June 7 to our government in Washington, however, state that officials in Russia are more hopeful that the Kronstadt trouble is passing over and the situation is likely to improve.

On Tuesday the Italians proclaimed the independence of Albania, following the example of France and Austria, who issued similar proclamations some time ago.

The British official report of losses of ships as a result of submarine attacks for the week ending Sunday, June 3, show that in that week 15 vessels of 1,600 tons and over, three under that tonnage, and five fishing vessels were sunk. This is three less of the larger vessels than last week, two more of the smaller, and three more of those employed in fishing.

On the Austro-Italian front the Austrians have taken the offensive during the past week, particularly on that portion of the Isonzc front south of Gorizia. The Austrians have recaptured most of the positions lost by them in the recent Italian effort to break through to Trieste, in the vicinity of Jamiano, and thence southward to the Adriatic coast, and have taken 10,000 prisoners.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

International Court

A GROUP of distinguished men from all parts of the country gathered at the Nassau Hotel, Long Beach, Long Island, for a five days' conference on the foreign relations of the United States, with Martin H. Glynn, former governor of New York, in the chair. The principal address on the opening day was made by Charles Evans Hughes on "The Future of International Law," in which he urged the establishment of an international court of justice to hear all disputes between nations, and a council of conciliation to work against the recurrence of a world war. Mr. Hughes, among other things, said: "What is the prospect? Are we to have a Roman peace—a peace imposed by a dominating state rising over all, a new empire in which the only law shall be its will? Or is there to be a chance for a world where each state, small and great, shall stand securely in its equality, its independence, its integrity; where compacts between nations are not illusory; where mutual rights and duties are respected and acknowledged; where rules for international intercourse and instrumentalities for the peaceful settlement of international controversies are developed and maintained; where Force becomes the servant of Law and not its master? This is the vital issue." The international court would lack the support that is given to the United States Supreme Court, which he held up as a working model. To remedy this, he urged the development of an international spirit in all countries. The difference between the two bodies would be this: The court would settle all international disputes; the council of conciliation would not decide, but would suggest and advise on matters in dispute. Moses, at the suggestion of his father-in-law, instituted the judiciary for the children of Israel, for the settlement of disputes and the trial of cases. He appointed district judges, and became chief justice himself, and God, the Supreme Judge, guided him. After the world war we shall hope to have a world court, guided by truth and righteousness, with God the Supreme Arbiter, and a universal and lasting peace. This is the account of the institution of the civil courts for the trial of cases among the Hebrews: "And Moses chose able men of all Israel, and made them heads over the people. And they judged the people at all seasons." (Ex. 18 : 25, 26.)

Elephant Removes Girders

THE Indian elephant, Luna, was not pleased with the disposition the ironworkers made of some huge iron girders which they piled up between two fences surrounding the elephant yards at the New York Zoological Garden. She managed to roll them under the corral fence and dragged them one by one into the elephant house for better keeping. The girders weigh five hundred pounds each, and on bringing each one in, she proudly threw it down on the cement floor with a tremendous crash. The keepers tried to get Luna to take their heavy girders back. She refused to do so flatly and, in as plain language as she could use, told them if they wanted them back they might take them back themselves, and they did. In olden times, and in our own time among certain nations, the elephant has been a great help in war and peace in carrying heavy burdens. It is understood that the behemoth of the Hebrews was the elephant and that these words refer to his strength and physical headship of the animal kingdom: "His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron. He is the chief of the ways of God." (Job 40 : 18, 19.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Miss Rankin's Maiden Speech

THE first woman's speech ever made officially in the Congress of the United States was delivered the other day by Miss Jeannette Rankin, the representative from Montana. The speech was only three minutes long, but it was full of tact, fact, and brains, and won immediately for her the result she sought. She introduced an amendment to the Food Bill recommending that women be included in the War Food Commission. In her speech she said: "The work provided for in this paragraph, such as gathering information, extending and enlarging the news service, and preventing waste, includes activities we have been accustomed to seeing women fill. Women are well fitted for these activities, they are so closely related to the home. Women in the past have been concerned with the immediate preparation of food from one meal to another. They must now consider the food supply for the year. And now as we face this international problem of feeding the people, the responsibility is placed upon all of us." She spoke for just three minutes. When she concluded, the House broke into applause which developed into an ovation. The amendment was carried unanimously amid great applause. Miss Rankin on woman suffrage, prohibition and other moral questions is a radical, and will have to be reckoned with as an important factor in the Congress of the United States. The relation of woman to the food supply and its preparation for the family which formed the substance of Miss Rankin's speech are here illustrated: "She is like merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar. She riseth while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens." (Prov. 31 : 14, 15.)

President Li's Chinese Problem

ONE of the prime factors in the revolution of 1911 that resulted in a democracy for China was Li Yuan Hung, the president of the republic. He was born in Hupe, the central province of China, was graduated at the naval school and was an artillery officer in the navy. In a defeat by the Japanese fleet he tried to drown himself in the ocean, was fished out, went back to his province, did brave and loyal military duty, took technical military training in Japan, and with brains and vigor had much to do in overturning the Manchu dynasty. At the success of the revolution he said that injury to foreigners would be visited with the death penalty; for, said he, "The purpose of my life is to make the Chinese flag a pride to the world." On the death of Yuan Shi Kai, Li, as the vice-president, naturally succeeded to the presidency of the republic. He is having a stormy time with his parliament. He has just dismissed Premier Tuan Chi Jui from office and appointed Li Ching Hsi. The provincial military governors, who were attempting to disband parliament, left Peking before the president took action against Tuan Chi Jui, as the president had positively announced that he would disregard their demand for a dissolution of the legislative body. The president declared that Parliament must not be coerced in any way, and announced his intention to conduct the government in accordance with the provisional constitution. Some of the disgruntled military governors instigated rebellions against the Peking government, and as this was written eleven provinces were reported to be defying President Li, who with only three provinces supporting him was practically a prisoner in Peking. The military governors were in control of the railways, had organized a cabinet, and had appointed General Hsu-Shin-Chen as dictator. The militarists had established a censorship of telegraphs and had delegated the chief of gendarmes in Peking to watch President Li, but there had been no disturbances, and an amicable settlement of the difficulty was expected. The rulers had prime ministers in olden times. The appointment of the new premier by Li calls to mind this appointment of a prime minister by the king of Babylon: "Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon." (Dan. 2 : 48.)

Edward Carey Dead

EDWARD CARY, who had been on the editorial staff of the New York Times for nearly fifty years, died at his home in Brooklyn May 23. He was one of the clearest and most powerful editorial writers of his generation. He had the deepest moral convictions, and his arraignment of bad men and measures were simply terrific. His pen did much to break up the Tweed ring and send the "boss" to prison. Millions of people during his lifetime were stirred with righteous indignation and prompted to right doing who never heard of his name. It is impossible to calculate the influence of such an editor of genius and character in the better life of the individual and nation. It will never die. Of such it can be said: "They may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14 : 13.)

Work Way Through College

CARL BROWN, in charge of the employment bureau of the Y. M. C. A. at the University of Oklahoma, said the other day: "Any boy who has a little money to go on, good health, and the right kind of stuff in him, can get an education at the University of Oklahoma." Mr. Brown is a student who spends all his time outside of study hours aiding students and jobs to get connected. Although the university city is purely a residence town, with no factories in which work may be obtained, students find plenty of employment in boarding houses, offices, and so forth, where everything from stenographic work to washing dishes is done by young men and women who are making their expenses in school. Practically every leader in this state school is either entirely or partly self-sustaining. The boys and girls who work their way through college are nearly always successful in their practical callings after they graduate. The lesson of self sustenance is learned early and for good. While divine grace is necessary, human industry is also necessary in the material and spiritual realms in obedience to this command: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2 : 12.)

A Motor Life-Boat

A MOTOR life-boat has been sent to a Pacific steamship. It is thirty feet long, has twenty-five horsepower, a speed of ten miles an hour, a cabin and wireless appliance, and power enough to tow a number of life-boats. Why was the world so long coming to such a proposition? Christ is the life-boat that saves the soul sailing over life's troubled sea from the wreck of rocks and storm. This salvation is typified by this cry for help and rescue in the storm: "Lord, save us; we perish. . . . Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm." (Matt. 8 : 25, 26.)

Curious Siberian Jewel-Box

A CURIOUS jewel-box made of fossil ivory by the natives of Siberia is on exhibition at the Museum of Natural History in New York. The sides and top are composed of flat pieces of ivory and are carefully fitted together, the corners being dovetailed. They have carved in them scenes of the northland, the front side representing a hunter returning from the chase riding a reindeer. The box is made from the tusks of mammoths that have been buried for ages beneath the ice in Siberia. Some of these tusks weigh from 200 to 300 pounds. Elephants' tusks furnished the ivory for the Jews. Solomon made his throne of it. "Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory." (I Kings 10 : 18.)

The Words of My Mouth

*A SERMON BY REV. EDGAR DE WITT JONES, D.D.

TEXT—Col. 4:6. "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one."

THE background of this text is of uncommon interest. The great missionary to the Gentiles was deeply concerned that the Christians of Colossæ should make a favorable impression on their non-Christian neighbors. In the fifth verse of this chapter he offers a timely admonition, "Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time." By the phrase "them that are without," St. Paul means those who were not followers of the Christ. Freely paraphrasing and amplifying the verse, it may be rendered as follows, "Fellow Christians of Colossæ, be careful of your conduct toward those not of the household of the faith. Watch your words. Temper your speech with love, letting no opportunity pass in order that you may persuade many to become disciples of Jesus Christ."

Nowadays one hears occasionally even Christians say, "I don't care whether people like my conduct or not. It's nobody's business but my own what I do or what I say." But no first century Christian ever thought or acted on that principle. They cared very much what others thought of their conduct, and especially were they anxious that their actions should impress favorably those hostile to their Saviour. It was this concern for others—this gentle, kindly conduct of the early Christians—that won converts by the tens of thousands.

"LET your speech be always with grace." Gracious speech possesses both charm and power." Forsooth, "a word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." True it is that "a fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul." The Bible is a veritable storehouse of teachings on the wise use of the tongue; and the climax of such teaching is that of James, the Lord's brother, who affirms that it is easier to tame a tiger than the tongue. Whoever has learned to control his speech has come far toward self-mastery. By our speech are we judged daily. There are, of course, persons of affability and suavity of manner whose lives beneath the surface are unworthy; but they are the exception. There are persons of ruggedly noble character whose speech is rough and ungracious; but they are not many. Graciousness of speech and courtesy of manner are greatly to be desired. Fitly spoken words are better than letters of commendation; they are their own testimonies and references.

Said a great preacher of many years' experience: "In fifty years I have not known a cynical or fault-finding Christian who led a single soul to Christ." Gracious speech implies everything that is good and true and beautiful in the use of words. For one thing, it implies speaking the truth in love. It is profitable to imagine the effect of the gracious speech of the Christians at Colossæ upon the pagan residents. They were impressed by what they saw and heard. No story of scandal was upon the lips of the Christian company, no profanity or blasphemy; only gracious, courteous, and timely words, such as strengthened, encouraged, and edified.

"LET your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." That is a sprightly sentence, a pungent phrase—"seasoned with salt." Christians, of all people, ought to be interesting. A dull disciple of Christ is an anomaly. But there is a difference between a sprightly speech and choleric conversation. Alas! some people season their speech with pepper or tabasco sauce. They actually delight in speech which smarts and stings; they do so love to employ words that scorch and burn. The Christian ideal is a man or woman who never needlessly offends or hurts a fellow mortal by unkind or ill-tempered speech. The apostle here commends stimulating speech, thought-inciting words. There is a great deal of conversation which, while it is not evil, is not positively good; it is not constructive; it does not build up. It is flaccid and devoid of nourishment. There is no nutrition in it. It is a kind of verbal skimmed-milk diet. A Christian's conversation ought to be rich unto edification. Alfred Tennyson once visited at the home of two sisters who were devout Methodists. They met him at the door and he said to them, "What is the news?" They answered, "No news but that Jesus Christ died for sinners." "Ah," replied the poet, "that is old news and good news and new news."

Perennially fresh and possessing the charm of novelty is the Gospel story to those who have been born from above. The mind of Jesus Christ will, if we permit it, transfigure even our most commonplace conversations and invest them with a sure immortality. There are many members of churches who wax eloquent in praise of the latest book or the newest drama, who find it exceedingly difficult to impart any warmth or contribute any brilliance to a conversation on religion. Their trouble is not lack of fluency, but lack of spirituality. They do not read the Bible. They are not given to prayer. They are church members, but not Christians, save in a surface sense of the name.

The Apostle exhorts the young Christians to let no corrupt communications proceed from out of their mouths. Foul speech is an index to a soiled soul. Corrupt speech in man or woman is a sad commentary on their inner thoughts. When one begins to relish a "broad" joke or a salacious story, he may well consider the state of his heart and straightway begin a renovating process.

HERE is a prescription for speech that is spiritual, that builds up, that becomes Christian men and women as a rose becomes the bush on which it grows: Season your conversation with salt, the salt of common sense, the salt of affection; the salt of truth, the saving salt of a genuine good humor.

"That ye may know how ye ought to answer each one." The young Christians would be asked many questions; some of them would be perplexing, some vexatious, and all would open a door of opportunity for the Christian religion. Simon Peter in his first epistle, third chapter, fifteenth verse, has something to say about "being ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning a hope that is within you, yet with meekness and fear." A great deal depends upon the right word at the right time with the right accent; so much depends upon a wise answer to a hard or a foolish question. When a man has a great cause at stake he may well pray to know how to answer his critics so he may make friends for that cause. Paul was himself an adept at gracious speech seasoned with salt, knowing how he ought to answer each one. A supreme example of his tact is found in the twenty-sixth chapter of Acts, where in chains he made his defense before King Herod Agrippa and his wife Bernice and Governor Festus. Open your Bibles and read Paul's speech on that dramatic occasion as a commentary on this text. Observe the gracious and courteous introduction: "I think myself happy, King Agrippa, that I am to make my defense before thee this day touching all the things whereof I am accused by the Jews; especially because thou art expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews; wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently." Observe also the salt with which Paul seasoned that address; how he establishes a point of contact with the king by his emphasis on the fact that the Jews had long cherished the hope of the Messiah. "And concerning this hope I am accused by the Jews, O king! Why is it judged incredible with you, if God doth raise the dead?"

OH, that speech was seasoned with salt through and through. It was anything but stale or insipid. There was not a dull sentence in it. It sets one's ears tingling to read it. What must it have been to have heard it! And that great speech of Paul's was interrupted. Festus was astonished. He could not understand the speaker's impassioned eloquence; he believed he was insane; and in the very midst of Paul's defense Festus cried out with a loud voice, "Paul, thou art mad; thy much learning is turning thee mad." With courteous forbearance Paul answered, "I am not mad, most excellent Festus; but speak forth words of truth and soberness. For the king knoweth of these things, unto whom also I speak freely. . . . King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest." And the proud Herodian answered disdainfully, "With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian." As if to say, "Paul, you think you can make me a Christian by one speech. Do you actually believe that you can make me, Herod Agrippa, a follower of the crucified Nazarene by a single sermon?" Now mark well the wise and tactful answer that the apostle made. He put the better construction on the words of the king and answered with vast tenderness, "I would to God, that whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am, except these bonds." One wonders if Agrippa ever quite forgot those gracious words of the prisoner of the Lord. It is pleasant to surmise that in the dark and tragic days that befell the king the memories of those words, like the solemn tones of a great bell, summoned his soul to the worship of the Highest.

"Let your speech be always with grace." For the sake of Christ, the Colossian Christians were to consider the words of their mouths that they might be acceptable both to the non-Christians and to those who were already of the household of the faith. Aptly, indeed, does such counsel apply to all of us modern followers of the Christ. It is more important to watch your tongue than to watch your step. Not only so, but the former is the more difficult of the two. Silence is sometimes golden, and it will often be the part of wisdom not merely to speak with courtesy or with grace, but to withhold any utterance at all.

IN a certain city, the minister of an important church tried in vain to interest a young attorney and his wife in religious things. The young lawyer and his wife were not openly hostile to religion, yet they everywhere conducted themselves as if the Church of Christ were not in existence. The minister, after several years of service in that city, was called to a larger church in a larger city; and some months after he began his work in the new field he discovered that the lawyer and his wife had removed to this same town. The minister experienced some misgivings when he made this discovery. The young couple was attractive and had a faculty of making themselves the center of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. The minister feared the couple would attract and lead away from the church some of the young people in whom he was deeply interested. Greatly to his surprise the lawyer and his wife became regular attendants at church and very active members of the Sunday school. A complete change had taken place in their lives. The minister accepted the miracle without asking for explanation, but one day he and the lawyer were thrown together, and this was the story the young attorney told the minister:

"I think we were proud of our indifference to the church," he began. "Our idea of life was to do our daily work faithfully and then to amuse ourselves. At first our married life was happy. Then, I don't know how, we began to drift apart. No one suspected it; we never admitted it to ourselves until one morning after we had been out late to some social festivity. I suppose we were nervously tired from the excitement and our efforts to appear natural before our friends. Over the breakfast table the storm broke. We rehearsed petty incidents that had led up to the present state of affairs, sketched boldly the undesirable characteristics we had discovered in each other, and for the first time openly spoke of a legal separation. Then I got up to go to my office. I hurried into the library to get a book, and there stood face to face with three women of your former church who had come to interest my wife in some charitable object and whose arrival the maid had neglected to announce. These women admitted that they had heard all we said and had hoped to slip out unseen. Then each woman in turn promised for the sake of Christ and the church never to repeat the words she had overheard. We did not believe that those promises would be kept. We waited for a change in the attitude of our friends; to those not our friends the spoken thoughts we had hurled at each other would be savory morsels of scandal. 'For the sake of Christ and the church,' I found myself repeating again and again. A year passed—a year of such watching and waiting as few young people, I hope, have ever known. It brought my wife and myself together in a forgiving, enduring love. At last we had to believe that the promises that had been made had all been kept. Through the church we were saved from disaster. In return we have given ourselves into the keeping of Christ and his church."

"Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time."

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one."

Who of us but has need to pray the old and familiar petition, "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my Rock and my Redeemer"?

◆

The Lord answers our prayers only when we lift our end.

The man who takes defeat sweetly is on the highway to success.

Mistakes are the foolish man's stumbling-blocks; the wise man's stepping-stones.

---

* Pastor, First Christian Church (Disciples), Bloomington, Ill.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Uncreated Beam

SUNDAY, June 24. Ps. 36:9. "In thy light shall we see light." A little while ago I was in a certain cathedral when the sunshine, pouring through a very vivid stained glass window, fell upon the open Bible, and stained its pages with the color of the medium through which it had passed. It was no longer the simple sunshine, but tinted green or purple as the case might be. And the happening became symbolic and took on spiritual significance. For how often we filter God's plain light through colored windows of our making! We construct a transforming medium, and then we affect to bask in the eternal Light, when all the time we are moving in perverted light of our own creation.

Perhaps it is the stained window of prejudice. A man may cultivate a prejudice until it becomes one of the firm and established windows in his life. He sees everything in the purple rays of this medium. He sees his neighbor in this misinforming light. He looks at society and business as they lie in the self-created hue. Nay, the Bible itself reflects the light of his own prejudice, and he sees only what he wants to see, and not what the Holy Spirit revealed. If only he would remove that stained glass window, and let God's sunshine stream through, then in God's light he would see light, and the revelations would be the ministers of truth and holiness.

Or perhaps the perverting medium is a mean or false ambition. Our ambitions directly influence our desires, and our desires are master-elements in determining our interpretation of God's truth. We may believe just as much as we want to believe, and that "want" is largely fashioned by the most zealous ambition which is reigning in the soul. It was on this matter that our Master uttered a very significant word: "How can ye believe who seek honor one of another?"

Here is belief in one direction fatally affected by a search in another direction. That is to say, a man's faith is directly related to his quest. A man who is feverish for honors, and who will take any road to get them, cannot believe in Jesus, for the simple reason that he cannot see him. Everything is deeply colored in the red hues of his own fiery ambition. He does not see anything as it really is, not even the Lord himself. And except that man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God.

And so for the only wise and healthy life of the soul we need plain glass windows. "If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light." If we would enter into the wonderful secrets of salvation we must receive "with meekness" the engrafted Word, and let it shine like unadulterated light upon all the powers and business of the soul.

The revelation may be very startling. "Thou hast set our secret sins in the light of thy countenance." But the exposure is only the first step to transformation, and having loved the light we shall most surely become children of light. J. H. J.

The King's Face

MONDAY, June 25. II Sam. 14:32. "Wherefore am I come from Geshur? It had been good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face." Absalom, the king's son, had been banished from court. Three years he had been an exile. David relented and permitted him to return to Jerusalem, but ordered that Absalom was not to see his father's face. Two years this state of things continued, and then Joab interceded. Again the father relented, and Absalom came to the palace, saw his father, and they were reconciled. In Absalom's case, he saw not the king's face because the king was angry. If we fail to see the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, it is our own fault. He is here. No arbitrary barrier rises before us. Only our hardness of heart, our spiritual blindness, or our indifference is a barrier to the vision.

What can we do to make sure of the inward vision of God? "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." We must separate the substance from the symbol. The Bible, the church, the sacraments are only symbols. To be satisfied with reading the Bible and going to church and taking the sacraments, without being conscious of the presence of him whose word the Bible is, whose organic body the church is, who seeks to make himself known to us in the sacraments, is as if one were perfectly satisfied to sit down and visit with a photograph! Wherefore do we come if we see not the face of the King? This, if anything, is what worship means, all private and public worship,—to fix our spiritual eyes upon the Eternal, the Immortal, the Invisible. Thus doing, we shall endure. Thus doing, we shall preserve the proper balance between giving and receiving. Thus doing, our psalms shall be more than mere music, our prayers shall be more than mere words; they shall be homage we pay and praise we offer to the King. Wherefore are we come if we see not his face? C. C. A.

Blunted by Wickedness

TUESDAY, June 26. Prov. 18:3. "When the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach." The old Greek interpretation of this text commends itself as the closest reproduction of the words and the sense of the wise man: "When the wicked cometh into the depth of evil, he despiseth, and in his ignominy he reproacheth."

In the initial stages of a sinful career the transgressor is still pursued by a sense of shame. He can still blush; he winces under reproof; he is uneasy when his sin is spoken of in his presence. But as he goes on in his wicked course, these tender feelings become blunted in him; he becomes indifferent, callous, defiant. "Then cometh contempt," namely, on his part—contempt of all that is good and honest and virtuous. He has cast all regard for decency, propriety, morality, religion to the winds; he has no faith in human goodness and treats the most sacred matters and the most hallowed relationships with undisguised scorn. A mother's heart-rending pleading, a friend's sympathetic warning are barely listened to with impatience and then brushed aside with a gesture of disgust. Nor is this all. The person who is become confirmed in wickedness regards others as wicked as himself. He has to admit that he is thoroughly bad, but out of his own ignominy he rises to reproach those who have censured him or who are better than himself. All goodness he declares a sham, all virtuousness a pretense. He regards all men as hypocrites and assigns them a place below himself in the moral scale, because he is openly wicked and therefore considers himself honest in his badness, while others conceal their wickedness and live a lie. How truly does Scripture describe the heart of man!

W. H. T. D.

Doing One's Work

WEDNESDAY, June 27. John 17:4. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." Every hour of Jesus' three wonderful years was utilized. No time was wasted. When there was a woman at the well who needed salvation, he forgot his weariness, his eating hour; he had meat to eat that men know not of, "for my meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." He was arranging for a great harvest of souls while the disciples were looking for food. We should be like him in our work in his vineyard.

He has a plan for every man. John Tauler says, "Every work is a gift of God. Let us each do that which another cannot do so well." We must not count our lives dear when engaged in his service. It is God's work we are doing, not our own. Every man's life fits into God's mighty plan like a mosaic in a picture. We should not complain if we are only the hands, the foot, the eye, for all are essential to the completed body of which Christ is the head, heart and life.

Our Divine Guide does not show us all the pathway of our journey unto the end. "One step is enough for me." He is the way and the leading. We follow him, and often he widens the path, enlarges the mission, till the goal is golden with glory immortal. We walk hand in hand with him like a child with a parent, trusting where we cannot trace, believing where we cannot see, and knowing that the heavenly side is just over the Delectable Mountains, where we shall hear the "Well done!" when life's work is ended. E. W. C.

Making Life a Song

THURSDAY, June 28. II Peter 1:5. "Besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue." The writer of these words was not unacquainted with the composition of the Greek chorus, for he employs the very term from which we get our words "chorus" and "choir." The verb originally meant "to bear the expense of a chorus," to provide or supply the material for a chorus. So the Revised Version has this reading, "Adding on your part all diligence, in your faith supply virtue." It is difficult to resist the impression that the apostle had in mind a musical figure. If he had been thinking in architectural terms, he would have said, "Build on your faith virtue." But he is thinking of a life in harmony with God, a life in harmony with itself. So he says, "Let your faith be in tune with virtue, let them sing together."

It is a great thing to be "in tune with the Infinite." Only so may we be in tune with ourselves. To be in harmony with one's self is to build day by day a symmetrical character. What if one's faith develop faster than his knowledge? There is your fanatic. He means well but he does not know. What if one's faith be more fully developed than his courage? There is your timid, shrinking, cowardly disciple, who, when the trumpet calls to battle, hides in the cellar. What if one's faith and knowledge be developed, but he be deficient in brotherly kindness and charity? There is your strict, rigid, pharisaical, self-righteous, censorious disciple.

This is the ideal of the apostle: a Christian character in which virtue blends with virtue, excellence with excellence, grace with grace, until all life is like an anthem of praise, until all the praise is His who lived the perfect life, the melody of whose words and deeds mingles forever with the chorus of the skies.

C. C. A.

Exact Judgment

FRIDAY, June 29. Prov. 18:5. "It is not good to accept the person of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgment." Communal life in an organized society requires for its maintenance and healthy development the strict administration of justice. Favoritism, partiality in the courts of law, sap the pillars of the state. Against this unsocial vice the wise man turns in our text. "To accept the person" of some one is a Hebrew phrase which signifies to show partiality. A person may be ever so good otherwise; when he is arraigned in court his case must be judged, not on the strength of his fair reputation and the general esteem in which he is held, but solely on the evidence produced and by the accepted principles of right and wrong. Before the law no man should enjoy any privileges over any other man.

If justice is not dealt out even-handedly, it is not justice. Partiality in court is fatal to the well-being of a community in any case, but it works the greatest harm when a wicked person is favored by judge or jury. Respect for the law is destroyed, the citizens' feeling of security is invaded by fears, integrity is depreciated and crime encouraged. When it becomes known—when the mere suspicion arises—that in order to obtain justice you must enjoy the favor of certain persons, men will in sheer self-defense resort to practices which they otherwise condemn. They will show favors in order to obtain favors. The partisan spirit will spring up; factions will form, and passion will determine the actions of men. Right and truth may still be proclaimed with a great deal of fervor by either side, but men have actually ceased to believe that right is self-supporting and self-assertive. It has come to be regarded by them as a weak principle unless backed by might. Woe to the land where the instruments of justice are employed for the protection of the wicked and to the harm of the righteous!

W. H. T. D.

The Spirit of Communion

SATURDAY, June 30. I Cor. 11:27. "Whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup unworthily shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord." Paul is referring to some who came to the table to eat a meal for bodily sustenance, or to those who should partake for the appearance of devotion while the heart was far from Him. It is expected that all communicants feel at times their own unworthiness to come to the Lord's table, for they are conscious that they can do nothing to merit salvation, which is a free gift from Him who alone is worthy to receive glory, honor, power, riches, wisdom and blessing.

This is the Lord's Supper, and whosoever will may come and freely sup in remembrance of Christ, though he may not be worthy so much as to gather the crumbs under the table. At each approach to the Holy Communion we should examine ourselves preparatory to a more complete consecration to Christ, asking ourselves the question, "Do we love one another as Jesus loves us? Is there no hatred in our heart against any person? Are we seeking to live a life of sacrificing service for others? Are we pure in our pleasures, our reading, our thoughts, our business life? Whatsoever we do, is it all to the glory of Christ?" Then we are in the spirit of sweet fellowship with him, having him enshrined in our hearts.

E. W. C.

◆

The stream of true love always flows out over the land of a brother's need.

Is she a good wife? Tell her so! It beats hothouse flowers on her grave.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

As Canada Sees It

THAT some of our Canadian neighbors are beginning to regard the war from a different angle than that which was so common there a few months ago is now becoming evident. Discussing the obstacles that stand in the way of reaching human brotherhood and international fellowship, the Montreal Witness declares that "the best way to do this, indeed the only way, will be to throw aside all forms of sham Christianity, which harbor and nurse animosity, and adopt the brotherhood of the Gospel. Is it not time," asks the Witness, "that some great crusade of true Christianity should sweep over these lands, with its message of peace on earth and good will between men? Looking at things on a larger scale, how is the principle of race-autonomy to be applied while seashore nations bar the way of inland ones to the sea? Russia chafes at the gates of Constantinople. Austria is fighting for Trieste as for her life. Germany, though not so shut in, regards Antwerp and Ostend as her natural seaports. Is it not plain that the nations will have to come to terms and cease to be barriers to each other; that instead of perpetuating war by tariff restrictions, all doors must be thrown open; that as in each region all races must live on equal terms together, so must the broad continent come to count itself a general commonwealth, in which each people lives for the good of all?"

This mingling of Christian ideals with strong common sense is a hopeful indication at a time when there is a constantly increasing undercurrent drawing the world peaceward. In all the countries involved, the question of terms of peace is constantly coming to the surface. Even in the midst of war, and surrounded on every hand by the fiercest struggle, the heart-longing of combatants and non-combatants is for peace, and their thoughts are of how it may be ultimately achieved. In the International Socialist Conference at Stockholm it will probably be the main theme of discussion, and here in America it is being debated by eminent university professors, as well as by gatherings of peace-lovers in the humbler walks of life, who have the common cause of humanity at heart.

Shifting the War Debt

IT WOULD be amusing, if the matter were less serious, to note the alacrity with which the classes who have made and are making enormous profits out of the war are now seeking to shift their share of its cost upon posterity. Direct taxation of present wealth is to be abhorred, they argue, and the cost should be met as largely as possible through bonds, to be paid by the next generation.

Of course it is disagreeable to give up good money and get nothing in return but a mere tax receipt; while, on the other hand, it is rather pleasant to buy government bonds, untaxed, guaranteeing future repayment and bearing 3½ per cent. interest. The bond system makes patriotism financially easy and wars profitable—except to posterity, which will have to pay.

But the capping argument of the tax-dodging capitalists is that the benefits resulting from this war will be enjoyed by posterity, and therefore posterity ought to pay.

It cannot be made too clear at this point that no one knows what benefits, if any, posterity will get out of this war.

That the war thus far has been and is of immeasurable benefit financially to this generation in this country is seen in the enormous mushroom fortunes springing up on every hand. It is clearly in evidence that these reapers of war profits have abundant ability to pay a just share of the war cost. They are getting their advantage out of the war, whether posterity ever gets any or not.

Rather than pay our own war debt, we would bond our children to pay it?

We would do this, with eyes wide open to the fact that, while we are enormously benefited financially by the war, there is no assurance that posterity will be benefited at all?

Is this Americanism? Is it patriotism? Is it decent honesty?

Present wealth should be made to pay its just share as we go along. Wealth should be held no more sacred against conscription than bodies are. While men who have nothing but their lives to give are drafted, the dollars should be drafted too.

The last three years in this country have been epoch-making so far as big business is concerned. The exports have increased from $2,465,884,149 in 1913 to $4,333,658,865 in 1916. For the ten months of the fiscal year ending April 30 the total exports were $5,167,000,000. This excess war trade has yielded and is increasingly yielding enormous excess war profits, which may very justly be made to bear a considerable share of the excess war cost. A careful estimate has shown that the profits of 1916 in excess of the average for the last three years before the war amount to some $3,500,000,000. At this rate (and the rate is increasing, every 10 per cent. of tax on excess war profits alone would yield $350,000,000.

With these overflowing streams of excess profit available as sources of national revenue, but escaping taxation, it is not fair that general business, which is not especially profiting by the war, but in many instances suffering from it, should be made to bear heavy burden. With these dazzling profiteerings almost untouched, it is not fair that meager private incomes barely sufficient to sustain families should be heavily taxed.

The profit-bloated munition-makers, dealers in army and navy supplies, food pirates and holders of foreign certificates, who were so insistent upon our participation in the war, should now be drafted into paying their share of war's tremendous cost.

It will be to the enduring shame of our statesmanship if the vast bulk of the war cost is successfully shirked by the excess profiteers, to be borne by the masses least able to bear it, or—worse still—left as a legacy to our children and our children's children.

China's Higher Ideals

TEN years ago the movement for the prohibition of opium in China began. Never was a battle more gallantly fought than that for the rescue of the world's most populous nation from the drug which had long been its degradation. Now comes the cheering intelligence, through the American Board for Foreign Missions, that the last ounce of opium was sold in China a few weeks ago, and that its prohibition is now complete. The foreign syndicate in Shanghai offered the government $7,000,000 for a six months' privilege of continuing the trade in opium, but the offer was refused, and this at a time when the government needs money so badly that it has tried to borrow from the United States. This may rightly be regarded as one of the finest illustrations of moral principle of which a government could show itself capable.

What has raised China's ideals? There is but one answer: Christianity and the Bible. These have done more to broaden and liberalize and elevate the mind of China than all other things together. The new government has decided in favor of full religious tolerance. What a difference between the spirit of China in Boxer times and that of today! Then the foreigner was hated and his religion mocked at. Today all doors are open in China for God's Word to have free course. Her people have begun to regard the Bible as the secret of America's greatness. In forming their republic on Western models, the Chinese first set out to emulate the economic efficiency of the West, then its military system, and again its republican institutions. In all of these efforts, the plan of imitation has not worked out well. So the Chinese have been led to the Bible, and in it they are finding what they sought. Not only the common people, but the gentry, the literati, are studying the Word. Bible classes abound even in schools and colleges. China, gray with age and with 400,000,000 population, or over one-fourth of the human race, is looking far beyond its ancient shrines and its hoary beliefs, to Jesus Christ and the Bible. The cumulative results of half a century of missionary work are beginning to appear, and they show that the workers builded better than they knew. Whatever vicissitudes arise in the experiment of self-government, it is cheering to know that the nation's face is turning toward the spiritual sunrise.

"Let Us Live for the Children"

TWENTY-THREE years ago the last week in June, "The Children's Paradise" first opened its hospitable gates for the first season. The experiment of that year was begun on a very modest scale. At first only a few score children were taken, as the accommodations were limited, the buildings few and small, and the equipment exceedingly modest; but it had in it the germ of a noble enterprise. With great energy, the late Dr. Klopsch, whose inspiration founded the work, pushed it forward, taking care to choose the beneficiaries from the very poorest homes. In many states the readers of the Christian Herald came enthusiastically to his aid. At the close of that first summer season, about eleven hundred children had been entertained. Every succeeding year showed an increase. New and commodious dormitories were built, playgrounds were laid out, and by the time the great dining-hall of "Fort Plenty" arose in stately proportions, the annual capacity of the Home had risen to upward of 300 every ten days, or a total of 3,000 little guests every season.

Our Children's Home extends a cordial welcome to any members of the Christian Herald Family who may find an opportunity to visit it during the present summer. We invite a continuance of their kindly interest in its welfare and progress. It is in the truest sense their work, their enterprise, their personal benevolence, as their goodness of heart has established this attractive Home and made it a blessing to tens of thousands of children of the poor, who had no other means of getting a summer holiday.

Every patron of the Christian Herald Children's Home who sends in a contribution this year toward its support will receive a fine colored engraving of the Home, size 38 x 12 inches, as a souvenir of the enterprise our friends have united to create, and which is so aptly named "The Children's Paradise."

Clocks Ahead

IF CONGRESS should pass the Daylight-Saving Bill, as now seems probable, all the clocks in the country may this summer be turned an hour ahead, so to continue during the coming months until the Fall. The measure is in the line of national economy and thrift, and is calculated to effect a very large saving in fuel and lighting. Household gas and electric light bills would be cut down materially. Large manufactories and big concerns that employ workers by the thousand would exchange an hour of artificially illuminated dusk for its equivalent of clear daylight. The sun is up early these mornings, and seems to tap at our windows, calling "Clocks ahead!"

It is estimated that the financial saving by the change throughout the entire country from mid-June to mid-October would be something between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. Borough President Marks of New York, who has studied the subject thoroughly, reckons that a million tons of coal will be saved by this change. Last summer Great Britain saved about $12,000,000, the main item in this economy being 240,000 tons of coal. In view of the high cost of living, fuel included, it would seem that a reform which involved no outlay but a simple turn of the clock, and which promises to yield so much in results, should be worth a national trial. A long list of big business concerns have already put their clocks ahead on their own account, and find that the plan works admirably, and that 95 per cent. of the employees favor it. It has been in operation in Canada for several years. Many of the large cities in our Western states are eager to give it a trial.

By all means, let us beat Father Time at his own game. If the whole nation, by rising and getting to work an hour earlier, can save a million a day, surely it is worth while.

Watch the Bulwarks

THERE has grown up in this country a large body of restrictive laws governing the employment and education of children and the employment of men and women. These laws, after infinite labor, have been passed over the determined opposition of manifold interests to which immediate profit bulks larger than the welfare of the race. Yet each new restriction has worked for the welfare, not only of the child and of the race, but of business as a whole. Now, with the stress of war conditions upon us, and with the demand for speeding up in every line of production, there is coming a demand for the breaking down of the barriers wisely established against the exploitation of youth and womanhood, and against the unlimited hours of labor for men. Those seeking less strict regulations are careful to keep the possible profit in the background and to make their plea upon the high plane of national necessity. Some modification in restrictive laws has been found necessary in England and may be found necessary here; but we will need to go slow and to be sure that each proposal represents a real necessity, and that it is not some form of the greed of gain. The legislature which recently adjourned in New York State passed two bills authorizing the suspension of the labor law and the compulsory education law under what appeared to be very adequate safeguards. The governor of the state was not, however, convinced either of the necessity or the wisdom of the laws and vetoed them. But the question will arise constantly during the war, and those interested in the broader welfare of mankind and in the liberation of all who labor from the thraldom of burdensome conditions will do well to keep alert lest there should be a danger of the relinquishment of benefits so hardly obtained.

President Wilson's Note to Russia

REPORTS became current about the middle of May that President Wilson was about to send a note to the government of the new Russia. Then it was said that the note had been forwarded. Then rumor suggested that new developments would result in the note not being delivered; and, finally, semi-official reports told us that it had been delivered but would not be made public. Demands have also been heard for a new statement of American and Allied war aims. All rumors and speculations were set at rest and the question of American objects in the war was answered on June 10 with the publication of the note and the official notice that it had been delivered to the Russian government on May 26 by Ambassador David R. Francis.

The text of the note follows:

"IN VIEW of the approaching visit of the American delegation to Russia to express the deep friendship of the American people for the people of Russia, and to discuss the best and most practical means of co-operation between the two peoples in carrying the present struggle for the freedom of all peoples to a successful consummation, it seems opportune and appropriate that I should state again, in the light of this new partnership, the objects the United States has had in mind in entering the war.

"Those objects have been very much beclouded during the last few weeks by mistaken and misleading statements, and the issues at stake are too momentous, too tremendous, too significant for the whole human race to permit any misinterpretations or misunderstandings, however slight, to remain uncorrected for a moment.

"The war has begun to go against Germany, and in their desperate desire to escape the inevitable ultimate defeat those who are in authority in Germany are using every possible instrumentality, are making use even of the influence of groups and parties among their own subjects, to whom they have never been just or fair, or even tolerant, to promote a propaganda on both sides of the sea which will preserve for them their influence at home and their power abroad, to the undoing of the very men they are using.

America Seeks No Gain

"The position of America in this war is so clearly avowed that no man can be excused for mistaking it. She seeks no material profit or aggrandizement of any kind. She is fighting for no advantage or selfish object of her own, but for the liberation of peoples everywhere from the aggressions of autocratic force. The ruling classes in Germany have begun of late to profess a like liberality and justice of purpose, but only to preserve the power they have set up in Germany and the selfish advantages which they have wrongly gained for themselves and their private projects of power, all the way from Berlin to Bagdad and beyond.

"Government after government has by their influence, without open conquest of its territory, been linked together in a net of intrigue directed against nothing less than the peace and liberty of the world. The meshes of that intrigue must be broken, but cannot be broken unless wrongs already done are undone, and adequate measures must be taken to prevent it from ever again being rewoven or repaired.

"Of course, the imperial German government and those whom it is using for their own undoing are seeking to obtain pledges that the war will end in the restoration of the status quo ante. It was the status quo ante out of which this iniquitous war issued forth, the power of the imperial German government within the empire and its widespread domination and influence outside of that empire. That status must be altered in such fashion as to prevent any such hideous thing from ever happening again.

We Fight for Liberty

"We are fighting for the liberty, the self-government and the undictated development of all peoples, and every feature of the settlement that concludes this war must be conceived and executed for that purpose. Wrongs must first be righted and then adequate safeguards must be created to prevent their being committed again. We ought not to consider remedies merely because they have a pleasing and sonorous sound. Practical questions can be settled only by practical means. Phrases will not accomplish the result. Effective readjustments will, and whatever readjustments are necessary must be made.

"But they must follow a principle and that principle is plain. No people must be forced under sovereignty under which it does not wish to live. No territory must change hands except for the purpose of securing those who inhabit it a fair chance of life and liberty. No indemnities must be insisted on except those that constitute payment for manifest wrongs done. No readjustments of power must be made except such as will tend to secure the future peace of the world and the future welfare and happiness of its peoples.

"And then the free peoples of the world must draw together in some common covenant, some genuine and practical co-operation that will in effect combine their force to secure peace and justice in the dealings of nations with one another. The brotherhood of mankind must no longer be a fair but empty phrase, it must be given a structure of force and reality. The nations must realize their common life and effect a workable partnership to secure that life against the aggressions of autocratic and self-pleasing power.

Unity Means Victory

"For these things we can afford to pour out blood and treasure. For these are the things we have always professed to desire, and unless we pour out blood and treasure now and succeed, we may never be able to unite or show conquering force again in the great cause of human liberty. The day has come to conquer or submit. If the forces of autocracy can divide us, they will overcome us; if we stand together, victory is certain and the liberty which victory will secure. We can afford, then, to be generous, but we cannot afford then or now to be weak or omit any single guarantee of justice and security."

The Man Who Said "Tomorrow"

A Farewell Sermon by Evangelist Billy Sunday*

TEXT—Exod. 8:10.
"And he said—To-morrow."

FOR four hundred and thirty years the Jews had been in Egyptian bondage. They had made brick without straw and bared their backs to the lash of the taskmasters, and they had been compelled to submit to all the barbarities and cruelties that a powerful and heartless nation could inflict upon those who were their vassals and slaves. God had told Joseph that he would come and lead them out.

And at the appointed time, to the very day that God said he would come, he appeared under the leadership of Moses to lead them out, and old Pharaoh the king refused to let the people go and God was compelled to afflict him and the people with plague after plague, and it was during the prevalence of one of these that the conversation between Moses and Pharaoh, of which my text is a fragment, occurred.

It was the plague of frogs. They were to be seen and found everywhere. The land stunk with their dead bodies in wells; rivers and creeks were filled and the people were calling for deliverance.

Pharaoh sent for Moses and Moses said to him: "When shall I entreat the Lord that he take away the plague?"

And he answered in the words of my text: "And he said, Tomorrow."

I never thought that argued much for the common sense of Pharaoh, because he had sent for Moses ofttimes and Moses had answered his prayer and the plague had been stayed.

And the people were suffering; they were dying and were crying to God. "And he said, Tomorrow." I say, it never argued much, in my judgment, for his common sense.

There are many that are saying, "I wouldn't have done that," but you have been doing it, many of you, for five years and some of you for fifty years.

God is doing all he can to push you away and some of you are doing all you can to get into hell, while he is doing all he can to keep you out. You are a fool! "And he said, Tomorrow."

I BELIEVE many have come to these meetings with an honest desire to serve God, but have put off yielding to Christ, and even now there are scores, yes, hundreds, of you without Christ, and if God's judgment would fall on you hell would be your portion; but I pray God you may come now. End the struggle.

You say "tomorrow" you will begin some new work. You say, "I will tomorrow." You should give up some associate or companion and you say, "I will tomorrow." You should begin to save money and lay it by for the rainy day that will come to everybody, and you say, "I will tomorrow."

You should yield yourself to Jesus Christ and turn from your sins. You have said, "I will wait until the meetings are over and then I'll go quietly into the church." I wouldn't give that much for you if you do. I would take you, understand, but I would not give that much for you after I got you.

Hear me! Of all the times you ever had to fit your souls for heaven you have had it in the days that have come and gone. God never flashes such light in your face. You never had such an opportunity before and you never will again.

Great opportunities love great company. They always do. They rarely travel alone. They are gregarious in their flocks, travel in herds. Every opportunity is a bellwether to a school, a flock or a herd of opportunities.

Think of the sermons you have had to resist; the tears and the pleadings to which you have to say, "No." It has taken years to get into the hardened condition that many of you here to-night are in.

LISTEN! If I were you, and had made up my mind that I never would be a Christian, I would leave the building now. If standing, go; if sitting, arise and I will wait. Worm and elbow your way to the door, get out and hurry down the street and get away from the sound of my voice.

If I were you and had made up my mind I never would be a Christian, I wouldn't wait. If ever a man spoke to me of Jesus Christ I would run from his presence, and if I heard a church bell toll a funeral, would stop my ears, and if ever I saw a crêpe hanging from the doorknob, or a hearse going down the street, I would shut my eyes and I never would darken a church door. I wouldn't go within sound of the voice of a preacher, if I had made up my mind that I never would be a Christian. I would get out of here now, for every minute is adding guilt to your poor miserable soul!

When death calls you must go, millionaire or hobo. When death comes you must go and nothing can hold you back. God pity you, if you have simply lived in the world.

The annual death rate of the human race is 33,000,000. That's 91,000 a day, 3,700 every hour, 62 every minute. One-half of the human race die before they are 16 years old; one-quarter of the human race die before they are 5 years old. The average length of a human life is thirty-three and one-third years. Not one man or one woman in 1,000,000 lives to be 100 years old.

Suppose I should come back to New York five years from now. How many of you would respond and take your place where you are? If I should come back ten years from now, how many of you would come and stand or sit about where you are? If I should come back fifty years from now it would seem like a sepulcher. You, and you, and you, and you would be in the graveyard, and the little ones would be old and decrepit.

If I should come back in seventy-five years those who are in arms tonight would then hobble down here gray-haired and with wrinkled brow.

You have gone, and still you say "No" to God.

A friend of mine was preaching in a town in New Jersey, and there was a young fellow there, cashier in a bank, whom they tried to get to give his heart to God. He made the excuse that he had to go to New York.

It was in 1888, when they had that famous snowstorm, snow twelve feet deep. He had no other excuse to go than to get away from the meeting. He was hours and hours floundering his way through the slush and the snow to his armpits, to reach his hotel, and when he arrived at the Old Astor House, down on Broadway, he was wet and chilled and he could hardly stand.

They summoned a physician. One glance and he said to him: "Have you a mother alive?"

"Yes, sir, and a wife."

"Where do they live?" "In New Jersey."

"I'll send for them."

He looked at the doctor and said: "My God, you don't think it's that bad?"

"Yes, it's bad. Get them here quickly. It's pneumonia. I don't think I can help you."

He turned his face to the wall and said: "I have missed it. I have missed it. I have missed it."

The doctor said: "What do you mean?"

He said: "I had nothing to bring me here. I merely did it to get away from the meeting, and judgment followed me."

His wife and his mother hurried to his bedside and as they entered the room he faintly whispered, "I have missed it."

They begged, they pleaded, they prayed, they entreated, they implored him, and after every entreaty he would respond faintly, "I have missed it." The lamp of life flickered, and as it went out, the last words that fell from his lips were "I have missed it; I have—" and he gasped and was no more.

IT is not necessary to commit some great sin to be lost; just neglect it. Let the merchant neglect his business and he is a bankrupt. Let the one who is sick neglect to send for a physician and he will die. God pity you! In hell some of you will say, "My, how near I was to going forward, I stood in the street and listened. I was so near, but I fought it off." God pity you! God pity you! "And he said, Tomorrow."

DON'T YOU! DON'T YOU!

Copyright, 1917, William A. Sunday.

---

*This sermon was furnished to the Christian Herald by Robert Matthews, secretary to Mr. Sunday.

Uncle Sam Advises the Farmer

The Department of Agriculture Gives Timely and Practical Suggestions on Food Production and Conservation

(Upon request of the Editor of The Christian Herald, the Department of Agriculture has specially prepared the following article and a second that will appear next week.)

THE nation-wide campaign for increased food production and conservation is well under way. The appeal of the President that all citizens lend every effort to increase the nation's food crops, avoid waste, and practice economy is having wide response, but the great task of assuring an adequate food supply for this nation and for the nations of Europe which are depending upon America is only well begun. Legislation is pending in Congress which will provide machinery for further stimulating production, regulating distribution, and preventing the exploitation of the necessaries of life.

In the main, farmers have planted those crops which past experience has taught them are best suited to their local soil and climatic conditions. The prevailing high prices for staple crops have encouraged farmers to plant those things for which there is the widest demand. The best thought and energy are needed in the cultivation and conservation of the crops now planted, as well as in the replanting of acreages where previous crop plantings have failed.

IN view of the enormous importance of securing an adequate supply of food, it is essential that farmers be assured of an adequate supply of labor to harvest their crops. Every effort will be made by the Departments of Agriculture and Labor and other agencies to see that sufficient labor is provided. The Department of Agriculture is arranging to place a man in each state, in touch with the state central agency, whose sole task will be to assist in the better organization of the farm labor supply. Much can be done by cooperation among farmers in their communities to make more effective the regular labor remaining on farms, and relief undoubtedly can be afforded through the shifting of labor temporarily from one section to another. Labor not heretofore regularly or fully utilized can be called into service. There are many hundreds of thousands of boys in rural districts and villages who can render useful service. The army of boys and girls organized in agricultural clubs numbers more than three hundred thousand. It can be enlarged and its members can be employed in many additional directions. It has been estimated that more than two million boys between the ages of fifteen and nineteen years in the cities and towns are not now engaged in productive work vital to the nation. Many of these boys have had contact with rural life and their services could be utilized, especially in the harvest season, if proper steps were taken to organize them.

The Department of Labor has in hand especially the organizing of labor in urban communities. It is devoting its employment agency to this emergency task. In connection with the Employment Service, cooperative understandings have been made by the Department of Labor with official employment agencies of several states and cities and similar arrangements with other states are being made. The crops must be harvested, and farmers should feel free to proceed with their planting to the limit of their resources and facilities.

THE probable shortage in the wheat crop has caused some anxiety. The most effective way to obviate the effects of this shortage this year is to plant corn, according to experts of the Department of Agriculture. Ordinarily only a small proportion of the corn crop has been used for human food. A relatively slight increase in the corn crop will place many million bushels more of human food at the disposal of the world without interfering in any way with the feed needed for the support of livestock. The department is urging the wider use of corn in the diet. It is the best substitute for wheat to be had in large quantity and can be utilized in bread, mushes, and a great variety of other ways.

It is important, therefore, that the corn crop be closely conserved. Cultivation should not be delayed until the field looks weedy, according to the corn specialists of the Department of Agriculture. Only a little stirring of the soil is required to kill weeds immediately after they germinate and before they have used much soil moisture. Early cultivation is beneficial in preventing loss of moisture by evaporation, and also in hastening the warming of the soil. Deep cultivation is ordinarily not advisable. It should never be done close to the plants after they are a foot high, as much harm will be done by breaking the roots. To get an early start of the weeds in many sections or when the seed germinates slowly it is advisable to harrow once or twice or otherwise cultivate the field before the corn comes up. Cultivating after heavy rains is a good practice and should be done as soon as the surface is dry enough to work well.

ANIMAL and insect pests of corn will soon open their spring campaigns of destruction. It is highly important this year that every hill of corn be saved. Information as to measures against corn pests may be had from the Department of Agriculture.

Where other crops have failed, in regions to which it is adapted the Department of Agriculture is advising farmers to grow buckwheat. It should be sown particularly on old meadows and pasture lands where yields of hay and grass promise to be small. In the more Northern states buckwheat can be sown almost anywhere without reference to elevation, but farther south it is best adapted to the upland and mountainous sections. Buckwheat should be sown on land prepared as for corn. It is valuable as a human food. It is also an excellent feed for poultry. The middlings remaining as a by-product after milling are, on account of their high protein content, a valuable feed for dairy cows. The production of buckwheat will help to provide food in many districts for local consumption, and thus tend to avoid the danger of shortage due to possible lack of adequate transportation facilities.

IN the Southeastern states the sweet sorghums, Sudan grass, the millets and cowpeas are forage crops advised for summer planting. The transportation problem may be a very serious one during the coming year. It is very desirable for this reason that farmers in the Southeastern states should grow sufficient hay to feed their work stock and other farm animals, instead of importing it from other sections of the country. This would relieve the pressure on transportation agencies and relieve large quantities of marketable hay for the use of the arm . Usually there is a large amount of untilled land in the South, and if this were utilized in the production of forage there would be an abundance of hay to supply all home requirements. Seed of millets and sorghums can be obtained at reasonable prices. Some scarcity exists in Sudan grass and cowpea seed.

The Department of Agriculture is urging farmers in the Southern states to prepare adequate and suitable storage room for their sweet potato crop. One-fifth of the sweet potato crop of these States, as much as ten million bushels, is lost annually by decay. To save these ten million bushels to the food supply, the growers of the South are urged to prepare well-ordered storage houses as soon as possible for the coming harvest. Two things are essential in sweet potato storage room: good insulation and provision for thorough ventilation. Farmers' Bulletin 548, "Storing and Marketing of Sweet Potatoes," gives full directions for handling and saving the sweet potato crop.

(The Christian Herald will gladly forward the names of all persons who desire specific information on any subject on the production of food or its wise utilization and conservation to the U. S. Department of Agriculture, which will send very valuable information in the form of bulletins and special circulars.)

The Road to Understanding

By ELEANOR H. PORTER, Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XII

THE TRAIL OF THE INK

BURKE DENBY was well pleased with the letter that he had sent to his wife, enclosing the ten thousand-dollar check. He felt it was both conclusive and diplomatic; and he believed that it carried a frankness that would prove to be disarming. He had every confidence that Helen would eventually (if not at once) recognize its logic and reasonableness, and follow its suggestions. With a light heart, therefore, he gave himself up to the enjoyment of the day with his father. By Saturday, however, a lively curiosity began to assail him as to just how Helen did take the note, after all. There also came unpleasantly to him a recurrence of the uncomfortable feeling that his abrupt departure from home Thursday night had been neither brave nor kind, and, in fact, hardly decent, under the circumstances. He decided that he would, when he saw Helen, really quite humble himself and apologize roundly. It was no more than her due, poor girl!

By Sunday, between his curiosity and his uneasy remorse, he was too nervous really to enjoy anything to the full. Monday, however, found him headed for Dale Street; but in an hour he was back at Elm Hill. He was plainly very angry.

"She's gone," he announced, with a brevity more eloquent of his state of mind than a flood of words would have been.

"Gone! Where?"

"Home—to spend that ten thousand dollars, of course. She left this."

With a frown John Denby took the proffered bit of paper upon which had been scrawled:—

"I hope you'll enjoy your playday as much as I shall mine. Address me at Wenton—if you care to write.

"HELEN."

"And there was nothing to show when she left?"

"Nothing—except that the apartment was in spick-and-span order from end to end; and that must have taken some time to accomplish."

"But perhaps the neighbors would——"

"There's no one she knows but Mrs. Cobb," interrupted Burke, with an impatient gesture. "Do you suppose I'm going to her and whimper, 'My wife's gone. Please, do you know when she went?' Not much! I saw her—the dear creature! And one glance at her face showed that she was dying to be asked. But I didn't afford her that satisfaction. I gave her a particularly blithe 'Good-morning,' and then walked away as if I'd known I was coming home to an empty house all the time. But, I repeat, I'm disappointed. I didn't think this of Helen—running off like this!"

"You think she was angry?"

"Of course she was—at that, and at the way I left her the other night. I was a bit of a cad there, I'll admit; but that doesn't excuse her for doing a trick like this. I wrote her a good letter, and you sent her a very generous check; and I told her I was coming today to pick up my traps and say good-by. She didn't care to see me—that's all. But she might have had some thought that I'd like to see my daughter before I go. If there was time I'd run up there. But it's out of the question—with only tomorrow before we start."

"Wenton is her home town, I suppose."

"Yes. She left there, you know, two years before I saw her. Her father died and then her mother; and she had to look out for herself. I shall write, of course, and send it up before I go. And I shall try to write decently."

"Too bad, too bad!" John Denby frowned and shook his head again. "I must confess, Burke, that I, too, didn't quite think this—of Helen."

"I don't know her street address, of course." Burke was on his feet, pacing back and forth. "But that isn't necessary. It's a small town—I know that. But I can't have a reply before I leave. There isn't time, even if she deigned to write—which I doubt, in her present evident frame of mind. Pleasant, isn't it? Makes me feel real happy to start off with, tomorrow!"

"No, of course it doesn't," admitted John Denby, with a sigh. "But, come, Burke"—his eyes grew wistful—"don't let this silly whim of Helen's spoil everything. Fretting never did help anything, and perhaps, after all, it's the best thing that could have happened. That's her way of getting back at you. That's all. Let her alone. She'll come to her senses in time. Oh, write, of course," he hastened to add, in answer to the expression on his son's face. "But don't expect a reply too soon. You must remember you gave Helen a pretty big blow to her pride. I wish she had looked at the matter sensibly, of course; but probably that was too much to expect."

"I'm afraid it was—of——" Biting his lips, Burke pulled himself up sharply. "I'll go and write my letter," he finished wearily, instead.

IT was January when John Denby and his son returned from their Alaskan trip. The long and rather serious illness of John Denby in November, and the necessary slowness of their journeying thereafter, had caused a series of delays very trying to both father and son.

To neither John Denby nor Burke had the trip been an entire success. Burke, in spite of his joy at being with his father and his delight in the traveling itself, could not get away from the shadow of an upturned bottle of ink in a Dale Street flat.

Not once, through the entire trip, had Burke heard from his wife. Their mail, of course, had been infrequent and irregular; but, from time to time, a batch of letters would be found waiting for them, and always, with feverish eagerness, Burke had scanned the envelopes for a sight of Helen's familiar scrawl. He had never found it, and he was very angry thereat. He was not worried or frightened. Any Denby of the Dalton Denbys was too well known not to have any vital information concerning him or her communicated to the family headquarters. If anything had happened to either Helen or the child, he would have known of it, of course, through Brett. This silence could mean, therefore, but one thing: Helen's own wish that he should not hear. He felt that he had a right to be angry. He pictured Helen happy, gay in her new finery, queening it over her old school friends in Wenton, and nursing wrath and resentment against himself (else why did she not write?)—and the picture did not please him.

He had suggested separation (for a time), to be sure; but he had not suggested total annihilation of all intercourse! If she did not care to say anything for herself, she might, at least, be decent enough to let him hear as to the welfare of his child, he reasoned indignantly.

On one course of action he was determined. As soon as he returned home he would go to Helen and have it out with her.

Under these circumstances it is not strange, perhaps, that the trip, for Burke, was not an unalloyed joy; and the delays, in addition to giving him no little anxiety for his father, fretted him almost beyond endurance.

As to John Denby, he, too, could not get away from the shadow of an upturned bottle of ink.

Burke's word-picture of that evening's catastrophe had been a vivid one; and John Denby could not forget it. He realized that it meant much in many ways. The fact that it had been followed by Helen's ominous silence did not lessen his uneasy questionings. He wondered if, after all, he had done the wise thing in bringing about this temporary separation. He still believed, in his heart, that he had. But he did not seem to find much happiness in that belief. In spite of his supreme joy and content in his son's companionship, he found himself many a time almost wishing the trip were over. And the delays at the end were fully as great a source of annoyance to himself as they were to his son. He, as well as Burke, therefore, heaved a long sigh of relief as the train drew into the Dalton station, bringing into view the old Denby family carriage with old Horace on the box, and with Brett near by, plainly waiting to extend a welcoming hand. Brett's face was white and a little strained-looking. John Denby, noticing it through the car window, remarked to his son:

"Guess Brett will be glad to see us. He looks tired. Overworked, I fear. Faithful fellow that, Burke! We owe him our trip, anyway. But who supposed it was going to prolong itself away into January like this?"

BURKE DENBY had not been at home half an hour, when, his face drawn and ashen, he strode into the library where his father was sitting before the fire.

"Father, Helen has not been at Wenton at all," he said in the tragically constrained voice of a man who is desperately trying to keep himself from exploding.

John Denby came erect in his chair.

"Not been there— What do you mean? How do you know?"

"Brett. I found these upstairs in my room—every letter I've written her—even the first one from here before I left—returned unopened, marked 'unclaimed, address unknown,' together with a letter from Brett in explanation."

"So that's it—why he looked so at the station! What did he say?"

"He says it was a long time before the first letter came back. He knew we were away up in the mountains, and would be very likely started for home before he could reach us with it, anyway. And there wouldn't be a thing we could do—up there, except to come home; and we'd already be doing that, anyway."

"Quite right. Brett is always right."

"Then, of course, came the delay, your sickness, and all. Of course he wouldn't let us know then—when we couldn't come. By that time other letters I had written on the way out began to come back from Wenton. When the second and third came he knew it wasn't a mistake. He'd been hoping the first one was."

"Yes, yes, I see. And of course it might have been. But what did he do? Didn't he do—anything?"

"Yes. First, he said, he kept his own counsel—here in town—then he

Continued on page 689

Commencement Day—1917

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

IT was in the elevator of a fashionable department store. A slender girl in a fluffy white hat was speaking.

"There isn't going to be any fun this year at my brother's college," she said mournfully.

Her companion, an equally slender girl in an equally fluffy hat, answered:

"No fun!" she ejaculated. "No fun! on Commencement? No parties, no Class Day, no exercises, no—anything? Why?"

"Because," the first girl shook her head in regret, "because of this horrid war! So many of the boys are going—so many have gone—that they don't want any gayety! They'll just be giving out diplomas and—and that will be all. And"—her voice rose to a wail, almost—"I was going to have such a wonderful time——"

I left the elevator.

THE month of June, before, has always brought a triple picture before my eyes. June has always been, to me, a month of Brides and Roses and Commencement Days. I have written about girls, misty-veiled, floating up flower-banked church aisles to the sound of organ music. I have written of roses—fragrant bowers of roses, white and pink, and scarlet, and yellow. I have written of graduates—sweet girl graduates in white frocks, manly boys in caps and gowns. June, to me, has always been a wonder-month.

But this June is different from other Junes. The Brides are different—more anxious, with misty eyes, perhaps, behind the misty veils, and ears that hear a vague battle-sound above the thrill of the organ. And, as for Commencements—well, many schools and colleges are doing away with exercises, and nothing but the very formal awarding of diplomas is left to mark the occasion. Only the roses—God's own roses, pink and white and scarlet and yellow—remain unchanged.

GRADUATION—Commencement—means a great deal in the life of any schoolgirl or college student. It's the goal of attainment, the veritable mountain peak of desire, that marks the real boundary between the land of preparation—the land of childhood and sunshine—and the land where grown men and women must fight their way, with smiling eyes, to every kind of success. Commencement Day is a symbol, a milestone, a crossroad where one chooses the worthwhile path and pauses, before taking the decisive step, to glance back at the flowers blooming beside the way. Commencement Day means exactly what the words stand for—commencement day.

"Why," said a young girl to me last year, "I never really felt grown-up before. I've always"—she fingered the ribbon-tied roll of parchment that she had worked so hard to obtain—"I've always said to myself, 'Oh, there's another year of school—lots of time left to play!' Now—now I feel as if it's life that's before me, real life! I feel as if it's time to do something, feel something, be something. It isn't

FISK
Visible Value
BICYCLE TIRES

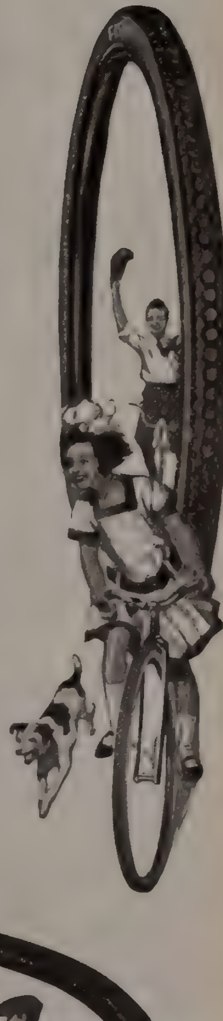
The Tires for all Purposes

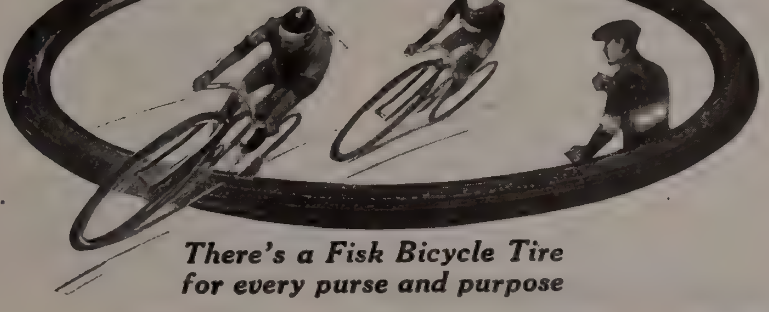
—and the most complete line of bicycle tires on the market.

When the bicycle enjoyed its first popularity, two decades ago, the standard quality of Fisk Bicycle Tires was known to all wheel enthusiasts. That high quality has been maintained through all these years and Fisk Tires remain the favorite of the vast majority of bicycle users and manufacturers.

You can buy no greater dollar-for-dollar tire value anywhere. "When you pay more than Fisk prices you pay for something that does not exist."

For Sale Everywhere
Ask Your Dealer





There's a Fisk Bicycle Tire for every purse and purpose for Sore Muscles here is an antiseptic germicide liniment—one that is healing, cooling, and soothing. Absorbine, Jr., is more than a germicide, more than a liniment—it is both. It means prompt relief from aches and pains; keeps little cuts and bruises from becoming more serious.

Absorbine, J^r.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

It is especially good for children's hurts because it is so harmless and safe to use—made of pure herbs and positively non-poisonous.

Use Absorbine, Jr., wherever a high-grade liniment or germicide is indicated. To reduce inflammatory conditions—sprains, wrenches, swollen veins or glands.

To reduce bursal enlargements, wens, weeping sinews.

To allay pain anywhere—its anodyne effect is prompt and lasting.

To heal cuts, bruises and sores.

Only a few drops required at an application.

$1.00 a Bottle at Druggists or Postpaid

A Liberal Trial Bottle will be sent you upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple St Springfield, Mass.

Are you grateful

Thank You!

for that auto ride, kind act, gift or other favor your friend gave you? If so, send them a Chase "Thank you" card.

For Sale Everywhere or Direct

Send for Catalog 226
ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway Street Boston, Mass.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50

Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Don't Inflict a Truss Upon Your Child

GROWING children need a great amount of care and attention. Especially is this true when the child is unfortunate enough to be ruptured. But the parent who harnesses a ruptured child with a truss is inflicting an injustice.

Trusses seldom fit well. Spring trusses are dangerous. No truss can be comfortably worn in bed. Most trusses are conspicuous. Few of them are uninjured by water.

The Brooks Rupture Appliance has none of the drawbacks of a truss. It is especially adapted for wear by children because it is made to the individual measure of the wearer. It rests flat and smooth, and its soft cushion adheres to the flesh, making slipping impossible. This cushion is always cool and comfortable, owing to a constant circulation of air.

SENT ON TRIAL

To convince you of the great comfort and relief which your child will obtain from the Brooks Rupture Appliance, we shall be glad to send you one on free trial. If you are not entirely satisfied, we will cheerfully refund your money. You may deal with us with the knowledge that you are receiving the care and attention of a sanitarium. We are not a factory.

The Brooks Rupture Appliance has the endorsement of the country's leading physicians. Thousands of happy wearers daily sing its praises.

Do not permit your child to suffer any longer. You owe it to the child and to yourself to learn more about this Appliance without delay.

Use the Coupon. Use It Now.

BROOKS APPLIANCE COMPANY
Manufacturers of Orthopedical Appliances
398 State Street Marshall, Mich., U. S. A.

I should like to receive, in a plain wrapper and without obligating myself in any way, full details concerning the Brooks Rupture Appliance.

Name ....
Address ....
City .... State..................

only that my dresses are longer and my hair is turned up. It's something deeper than that—something inside of me. I feel that I'm grown-up and have a woman's work to do. I feel that this is really the Commencement—of everything."

So spoke a girl graduate—last year. But this June is different from other Junes. For the country is calling, and Commencement means, in many cases, an answer to the call.

"There won't be any fun at my brother's college this year—" said the slender girl in the fluffy hat. "And I was going to have such a good time——"

COMMENCEMENT Day has always before been a rather wonderful day, to be celebrated with a good time. This year it will be a much more significant day, but the good time and fun may be lacking. The boys who, last year, would have been going joyously into business will be, perhaps, marching grimly into war. Perhaps some of them will go half gladly, lured by the call of adventure, but many of them will go out with firm jaws and clear eyes to "do their bit" because they love their country and wish to serve it. Many of these boys will not go gladly. But most of them, because they are Americans, will go smilingly.

And the girls—well, there is much talk this year of "doing one's bit." And the girls who would have stepped out with buoyant step into a world to be conquered, will be doing their bit, knitting, nursing, encouraging, praying. Many of these girls who, because they are Americans too, will smile though their hearts are aching, will be sending brothers and sweethearts to the far off firing-line. And it's as hard to wait at home, almost, as it is to go!

Commencement Day is the day when studies are supposed to be finished and the great world lies all ahead. But the wise student knows that his studies will never be finished, that he will always be learning new lessons. And the lessons that the graduates, this year, still have to learn are very hard lessons, indeed; lessons of bravery and privation, of honor and faith, of doing and daring, and, above all, of sacrifice. The lessons to be learned this year are a new sort of lessons, and they must be learned stanchly and smilingly.

OH, boys and girls who are this year taking diplomas, be big enough to face a real Commencement Day! This June is a different sort of a June from other Junes—only the roses are the same as they were last year—and we all have a different problem to face—a problem that, last year, would have seemed unbelievable. It's hard to realize that we are really entered into a world struggle, but realize it we must. And we must learn, on this Commencement Day, to face life as real men and women face it. We must learn to take many things seriously; and while we are taking them seriously, we must remember to laugh when we can, and to sing when we can, and to lend a helping hand when we can.

Commencement Day! . . . It has always, before, meant the dawning of a new era to young people—the ushering in of a bigger, broader life that is welcomed with color and light and music. Commencement Day, 1917, is being ushered in with color and light and music; but the light is the flare of camp-fires and rockets across the dark, and the music is martial music, and the colors are the red, white and blue of patriotism.

Isaiah's Call to Heroic Service

International Sunday School Lesson for July 1. Isaiah 6

The Secret of a Great Career

By Rev. George D. Allison, Ph. D.

WE begin this week a new six months' course in later Hebrew history beginning shortly before the Captivity and including the return under Ezra and Nehemiah.

We look first upon the testimony of one of Israel's mightiest figures concerning his call and consecration to his task. This is Isaiah, a prophet of the front rank, one of the world's leaders. This patriot and reformer ascribes all his achievements to the inspiration and guidance of the Almighty. He reveals to us the secret of his career, the reason for his unswerving fidelity to truth and righteousness, and the ground of his assurance that even out of the shameful failure and loss of his people the kingdom of God should be advanced.

Equally great from the point of view of literature and religion, this sixth chapter deserves to be memorized by every young Christian:

The Setting of the Vision

It was "in the year that King Uzziah died." That successful reign of half a century had closed in the gloom of leprosy. Notwithstanding the wealth and luxury of Jerusalem, danger threatened from every side. It was a critical hour, and a sense of impending need drove Isaiah to the temple. The chanting of the great choir and the aroma of the incense surged in upon his very soul, and he was lifted up into the heaven of heavens and saw in vision the angels round about the throne.

I. A Vision of God

In a few majestic sentences Isaiah gives to us the conception of God which came to his heart, prepared thus to receive the vision. His God is exalted, holy, powerful, a God great enough to meet the emergency of the hour and all the emergencies of time.

We need that feeling today. We need a vision of God through the turmoil and anxiety of this dark era. It is good for us to know that above the battle is One to whom all things are known.

It is best for us to interpret the glorious and reverent seraphim as incarnations of the mighty forces of the universe all ready to do the bidding of the Creator. Isaiah's words suggest that these are not physical forces only, but spiritual and moral influences as well. The whole earth is full of his glory!

Coordinate with the emphasis on God's supremacy and omnipotence comes the conception of God's holiness. The seraphim veil themselves before him. The chant of the celestial ones is filled with awe before God's moral perfection and piercing purity: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts." The whole Bible is unanimous in its testimony to the righteousness of God. Read Ex. 34:6, 7 for Moses' vision of Jehovah at Mount Sinai, and notice the terms applied to God; merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abundant in loving kindness and truth, forgiving, and that will by no means clear the guilty. Mighty and holy is our God. In his presence the sin and selfishness of the world are revealed for what they really are.

II. A Conviction of Guilt

Therefore it is not surprising that the first result of the vision is not a call to preach, but a conviction of personal unworthiness. This man was not a bad man, but in the light of the glory of God all the shortcomings of his life were revealed. He realized as never before the weakness and moral failure of his soul. He felt like a leper compelled to cry, "Unclean, unclean!"

This spritual shakeup is healthy for any one of sincere spirit, for it leads to a new relationship to God. Nearly all of the great saints experienced it. Remember how grand old Luther endeavored to justify himself and found his soul blacker and blacker before God.

Inextricably linked with the feeling of personal unworthiness before the Throne was the sense of social iniquity all around the prophet. We experience the same; the sin of the world is our sin. All around us are multitudes with the same impurity, the same greed. How can we dare to join in the worship of the heavenly host!

STOP!
Paring Corns Is Dangerous

AND so are harsh liquids. The only safe way is Blue-jay.

If you want instant relief, if you want to end your corns in 48 hours, use the gentle Blue-jay. Last year millions of corns were ended in this quick, easy way.

Most cases require but one treatment. A very small percentage require a second or third treatment.

Touchy corns are needless, and it is needless to risk dangerous ways to get rid of them.

Decide now to gain utter freedom from your corns. Purchase a package of Blue-jay Plasters at your druggist's.

You gain instant relief, and in 48 hours your corn may be removed without pain.

BAUER & BLACK
Chicago and New York
Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

Blue=jay
Stops Pain—Ends Corns
Sold by All Druggists
Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters

MAKE YOUR TIRE MONEY GO FARTHER

What would you say to getting tires guaranteed for 4,000 miles at the lowest prices in America? Tires in which every cent of money, every ounce of energy, every thought of the makers, are concentrated on quality—and quality alone.

BUCKSKIN PLAIN & NON-SKID Guaranteed TIRES are absolutely high grade in every respect, despite their low cost. The purest Para rubber and the strongest Sea Island cotton fabric enter into their manufacture. You get the low prices only because WE SELL DIRECT. We have no salesmen, no agencies. You pocket the saving. And remember this: If the tire does not live up to its guarantee, you get full credit for unexpired mileage and we pay express both ways. Write for prices and free illustrated booklet. 20

THE L. & M. RUBBER CO.
East St., Carrollton, O.
West. Dist. Office, 1436 S. Mich. Ave., Chicago

FREE BOOK

Runs on Kerosene
Alcohol, Gasolene or Gas
A most remarkable invention

No electricity, wires or springs. 1917 Improved patented Models. Runs 8 hours for a cent on kerosene. Quiet—convenient. Brings genuine comfort and satisfaction. Ideal for the sick. A proved success. The Wonder Fan. 2 Models. 8 Sizes.

A { 12-in. $16.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
16-in. $18.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
B { 16-in. $19.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
21-in. $22.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
F. O. B. Chicago. Cash with order only.

KEEP COOL
LAKE BREEZE MOTOR. 571 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

Ladies EASE YOUR FEET!
Send for FREE catalog of specialties in Women's PILLOW SHOES
for house and street wear. Comfortable and easy fitting as a glove. Good honest shoes at popular prices. Neat. Longwearing. Noiseless.

This cloth combination postpaid $2.48

PILLOW SHOE CO.
Dept. 8, 184 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

So here we see the twofold task of the Holy Spirit; to purify the lips of individuals and to change the character of the social group. Consecrated individuals and a redeemed society go together. We should never get the latter were it not for the former.

III. The Cleansing Touch

Isaiah had come face to face with God. He had not offered temple sacrifices, but had come only with full confession of sin. There were no intermediaries necessary. When he confessed, God was ready to meet his confession with pardon. The Almighty through his angel touched the unclean lips where all the guilt of a life was gathered, and they were purged. This is a picture of absolute, free, unfettered forgiveness by God.

The glowing stone was taken from the altar where fire burned continually, the token of the undying love fervent of God. That love purged away the sin as a fire burns refuse. God's fires are cleansing.

Moreover, there was moral power in that fire. It was no magic rite, but a visible token of the action of God's Spirit on a broken and a contrite heart. "God has heard your confession, he has forgiven your sin, he has purified your lips," the seraph would say.

"Behold, he prays." When a man prays earnestly before God with strong crying and tears, the divine and the human touch, and miracles take place that the world cannot understand. And we are neglecting worship! We are out of contact with the source of spiritual power. It was worship that brought Isaiah the vision; it was prayer that brought him peace, and that vision, that conviction of forgiveness, that sent him forth to make his mark upon his age as a prophet of God.

Let us, seeing the awful need of the hour in which we live, seek to worship in spirit and in truth, to be much in prayer, that we too may be commissioned from on high. Let the call to worship ring out anew from the Church of Christ. Let us advertise to all men that our God is sufficient unto these things.

IV. The Challenge to Service

God is always calling, but only the listening hearts are apt to hear. Now that Isaiah had made bare his soul before God and had received the assurance of acceptance, he hears the challenge to service. Neither is he conscripted, but the voice of the Lord calls for volunteers.

Instantly he responds, "Here am I; send me." This free and personal dedication of a life is of the very essence of our religion. Because he had thus seen and heard and chosen, Isaiah was afterward unshakable. He was no hireling, no unwilling soldier. Having once for all given himself, he is free from temptation to desert or disobey. The secret of his great career is an absolute consecration.

Meanwhile that young man or woman who sees a spiritual need and hears God say, "Whom shall I send?" does well to venture all in faith. The call to the ministry or to missions is no uncanny or unnatural experience. It is born of a vision of God, a conviction of need, and a listening to the voice of the spirit.

A Terrible Message and a Gleam of Hope

For we must not forget that Isaiah ministered in a difficult and anxious time, as we do. Indeed, the message he received is so terrible and black that for many readers it almost spoils the chapter we are studying. It softens the blow, but makes it none the less terrible, to know that the meaning of it had grown gradually upon the prophet from his actual experience. He had to tell the nation that its doom was certain through its spiritual blindness.

He came to know that most of his work was vain. The more he proclaimed the way, the farther they went from it. Christ himself experienced this, and said sadly that his hearers also did not understand. The perversity of men is incredible. We learn so slowly, so hardly. The more earnestly the abolitionists pleaded the more determined the slave power became. Today the energy and consecration of the anti-alcohol movement has arrayed millions of money and the best brains of the country to combat the temperance reform.

Let us not forget the gleam of hope that assuages the grief of Isaiah's heart. There shall always be a righteous remnant, the seed of the future. Though a minority, they fight with God on their side. They are the soldiers of the future, the builders of the unseen city. They are the pioneers of the kingdom of God. Twelve men were the beginning of the Christian Church.

So in the midst of the bitterness of nationalism today there are more consecrated internationalists than ever before. Though there be unscrupulous profiteers, the self-sacrificing are innumerable now. Though it seems the darkest hour since the Middle Ages, we may be trembling on the verge of the new and better things that are to be.

God give us men!

Young People's Topics for July 1

America for Christ

Epworth League Topic. Deut. 11 : 10-17

AMERICA is our promised land. Even as the Jewish nation held Palestine in security so long as they followed righteousness, so may it be that the broad acres and fertile plains of North America may belong to the people which now occupies them only so long as it serves God, keeps his commandments and plans to make the law of heaven the rule of earth. History is full of verification of the prophecy that "the nation that sinneth it shall die." America with her free schools, her open churches, her unfettered press and her liberty of speech is forearmed for righteousness. But her schools and press and public speech will not alone make America a righteous nation. America won for Christ will be an America triumphant, an America that will live, an America that will point the way for the nations of the world to a unity of thought and purpose, toward a righteous peace in which every man will be able to work out his highest destiny and every nation will reach its highest development. But America will only be won for Christ through the Christian living and consecrated effort of us who now call ourselves Christians. It is not primarily the work of the evangelists or the ministers; it is the work of every saved man and woman to make the risen Christ America's King and Saviour.

Little Things That Make or Mar

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Song of Sol. 2 : 15: Prov. 25 : 11 (Consecration Meeting)

A SINGLE scratch on the polished top of a mahogany table isn't much, but you cannot look at the table without seeing the scratch, and while it was made quickly, it may be the work of hours to remove it and to restore the surface to its original unbroken gloss. A little word, dropped perhaps unconsciously, may spoil all the pleasure of an afternoon for a whole company. A little kindness, equally unconscious, may bring a flood of sunshine into a dark, forbidding day. Great is the power of the little thing. A little wire wound with other little wires into a great cable helps to carry the traffic of the metropolis crossing a great bridge, and a little rivet that holds tightly together two plates of an ocean liner is doing its part in insuring the safety of the trip, while, if it does not hold, a little leak may be but the beginning of the foundering of the mighty ship. Sometimes we fret because we cannot do the big things, yet the big things are, after all, only the sum of many little things; and nearly every great leader of men has had his unknown friend whose wholesome company and ready sympathy have kept him fit for the great deeds. There is only one little life we can give to the Saviour, and we cannot tell until we have given it how great it may become.

DUTCH BOY
WHITE LEAD

This Paint Triumphs Over Water

White-lead and linseed oil form an alliance against water. So strong is their mutual attraction that if linseed oil is added to a mixture of white-lead and water, the white-lead unites with the linseed oil and excludes the water.

Dutch Boy white-lead is the union of pure linseed oil and finely ground pure white-lead, a paint which excludes destructive moisture and decay from your buildings.

On inside walls of office or home, Dutch Boy white-lead, mixed with a flatting-oil and colored any tint, provides artistic decoration which will neither fade nor become shiny, and is as washable as china plates.

Write for Paint Facts No. 65 and learn how to make your property look well and last long.

Dutch Boy
PRODUCTS

This Metal Triumphs Over Friction

Friction in the wrong place and at the wrong time is the arch enemy of progress. It lays its retarding grasp on every machine—the rushing locomotive, the fleet motor, the busy milling engines—and turns their power to self-destruction.

Standing guard between the machines and this destroying friction are the bearing metals.

There are Dutch Boy bearing metals for every form of machine, for every kind of friction. Whatever the friction, they minimize both friction and cost.

Dutch Boy solders embrace a complete line. Each is numbered and can always be duplicated.

Send for Metal Facts No. 65.

National Lead Company
New York Boston Cincinnati
Buffalo Chicago Cleveland
San Francisco St. Louis
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co.
Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co.
Pittsburgh)

Get This Handsome Symbol of World-wide Democracy

Show your colors on YOUR car. Give our Army and Navy your moral support—for America needs men back of our fighting forces, as well as in them.

The Liberty Flag Holder
With Allied Flags

Made in U. S. A. for Red-blooded Americans

A high-grade patriotic emblem made for service—staunch and strong. AMERICAN MADE FLAGS OF SPECIAL SILK, stitched to prevent fraying—Fast colors—STEEL FLAG STAFFS fasten securely in the strong nickel-finished holder—will not warp in the heat or break in the wind.

ORDER YOURS NOW—so you'll have it for the FOURTH of JULY.

Ask your dealer first—but if he can't supply you, send us $2.50 for the LIBERTY FLAG HOLDER complete with Allied Flags.

We will send it to you at once, postpaid

EXTRA FLAGS with steel staffs, American, French, British, Belgian and Italian sent postpaid at 25 cents each. Beautiful for decorative purposes in HOMES, in CLUBS, at DINNERS and at PATRIOTIC FUNCTIONS.

The Stanley Mfg. Co.
Dept. L :: Dayton, Ohio

DEALERS: Write us. We have an attractive proposition for you.

JUNE 27TH

Last Day for Buying Bible Picture Study Outfits
and
Last Day for Mailing In Bible Picture Study Answers

ONE WEEK MORE OF OPPORTUNITY!

AROUSE yourselves, you who need Outfits in the Bible Picture Study, for the last day to obtain them is June 27!

But June 27 is also the last day for mailing in your answers—sets of answers mailed on that final day will be accepted, even though they arrive here later.

Therefore you cannot wait until the last moment before securing your Outfit, for if you lagged too long the Outfit would not be in your hands until after June 27—and so it would be too late for you to submit any answers in it.

Order sufficiently in advance so that you will have the Outfit, and your verses entered in it for submittal, by June 27 at the latest!

Free Competition

Those who have been competing free—that is, by making up their own outfits, drawing a picture to accompany each verse submitted, etc.—may have come to the conclusion that they cannot fulfil the requirements to their own satisfaction, and that they will secure our Outfit, and submit their verses in our Answer Book.

Many have recently written us that they felt their efforts at drawing, and in other ways, were not pleasing to themselves, and that therefore they were ordering Outfits.

If others are of the same mind we urge them to hurry, so that the Outfit can reach them, and their verses be entered, by June 27 at the latest.

Submitting Additional Sets

Other participants believe in the wisdom of submitting two or three sets of verses, instead of contenting themselves with one set.

Quite a number of participants state that they intend to submit as many as fifteen different verses for some of the pictures, using three sets of verses to do so. As many as five verses may be submitted for each picture, you know, in one set of answers.

Others say they will submit a wide selection of applicable verses for the 60 pictures in one set; then eliminate the less likely ones for a second set; and cut the verses down to only the very best verses in a third set.

These competitors, too, are warned to hurry. The wisest decisions will be unavailing if not acted upon. Order your Outfits in time to enter the answers, and to start the sets back on time!

COUPON FOR EVERYBODY

This Offer is Open to Subscribers and Non-Subscribers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York

I enclose $1.25. Please {enter / renew} a six-months subscription to:

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

. . . .

Send the complete Bible Picture Study OUTFIT ("Pearls from the Bible," Answer Book, all 60 pictures, rules, etc.) to:

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

. . . .

A Home Record

Every participant must keep at home a record of the verses he or she submits. You need only write down the Book, and chapter, and verse number, of each verse.

Just take some blank sheets of paper, and start by writing down "Picture No. 1." Then beneath this write down the reference record of the verse or verses you submit for the picture. Next write down "Picture No. 2," make out the record of verses submitted for it, and so on for all 60 pictures.

If you submit two or three sets of verses, make a separate record list for each set.

The Checking Sheet

Each participant must also have at home a checking sheet. Those who use the Answer Book should cut out the checking sheet (page 64) and keep it home. Those competing free must send in to us for a checking sheet enclosing two-cent stamp for mailing. One checking sheet must be on hand for each set of verses submitted.

Your Own Checking

The Committee of Judges will be given the list of all verses submitted by participants, and they will go over them carefully and name the officially best verses. This list of best verses will be published as soon as possible in the Christian Herald, and then you will refer to your home record, and mark off on the checking sheet the number of verses you had correct (best) and incorrect for each picture. Lastly, the checking sheets will all be sent in to us, and from this record we will proceed in checking up on all the sets. When we have substantiated the returns we shall announce the reward winners.

By utilizing your aid in the checking we shall be enabled to announce the winners in a short time.

First-Class Postage

Every set submitted must be sent as first-class mail, taking letter postage—that is, two cents for each ounce or fraction thereof. Better have your set weighed, to make sure you are placing sufficient stamps on it. Do not roll your set of answers—mail it flat.

Our Offers

The offer of an Outfit, with the Christian Herald for six months, is held open for our subscribers, at the special price of $1.25. Use the coupon herewith in accepting this.

Or secure a new subscription from some friend or neighbor for six months, send us the $1.00 collected, and we will forward you the Outfit for having done this for us.

Why not give the Christian Herald for six months to a friend, sending us the name and address, with $1.00, and telling us to send the Outfit to you?

Hurry!

Whichever offer you accept — hurry! Do not delay a moment. The last day for sending in your answers is fast approaching, and you cannot set back the clock. Mail your order right away, or it will be too late!

Mobilizing the Boys and Girls

Continued from page 676

of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture has aided in forming boys' and girls' poultry clubs throughout the south, and they are raising great numbers of pure-bred fowls and marketing quantities of eggs. Their product is far above that of the grownups of the neighborhood who keep poultry, and their fowls are larger and fatter. In Dallas they have nine egg circles, which have marketed 54,000 eggs in the past few months. In Oklahoma eighty-five girls who have made reports as to their poultry club work now have a total of more than 4,000 hens in their flocks. They raised 4,100 chickens last year and produced more than 13,000 dozen eggs. Each girl made a profit of more than $25.

The best results shown by the girls have come from the canning clubs. Nearly 50,000 girls were enrolled in them in 1915, and they raised and put up more than 5,000,000 pounds of tomatoes and over 3,000,000 cans of vegetables and fruits. The farms of the club members were each only one-tenth of an acre; but the average profit from these small patches was over $24, or more than $240 an acre.

THE greatest increase in our food supply, however, can be made by the corn clubs and by the boys who will each put out an acre of corn and cultivate it after the methods which the boys' clubs have proved to be good. There are 60,000 boys cultivating corn after the rules of the government experts in the southern states this year. The boys who have produced large crops of corn are little fellows and they come from all parts of the south. Jerry Moore of South Carolina has grown 228 bushels on one acre, Eber Kimbrough of Alabama more than 224 bushels, and Ben Leath of Georgia more than 214 bushels. Bennie Beeson of Mississippi grew 227 bushels of corn on his acre, and Walker Lee Dunson of Alabama has grown 232.7 bushels at a cost of 19 cents a bushel. The cheapest corn in point of production was that of Junius Hill of Alabama, who grew 212 bushels on his acre at a cost of 8.6 cents per bushel. Even the Indian boys are excelling in corn raising.

In addition to the clubs mentioned above, the children of the south are now starting peanut clubs, potato clubs, cotton clubs, and other clubs devoted to the raising of food and clothes for the nation. They are all working under the rules set down by the agricultural departments of the states or of the government at Washington, and their little farms are object lessons to all the country about. Heretofore this work has been done by the children only for the money to be made out of it. From now on they will have the added stimulus of patriotism, and every boy and every girl who joins the clubs will be a little soldier fighting side by side with the army for the good of the world and the country.

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 685

put the thing into the hands of a private detective whom he could trust; and he went himself to Wenton—for a vacation, apparently."

"Good old Brett! Wise, as usual. What did he find?"

"Nothing—except that she was not there, and hadn't been there since she left some years ago. So he had to come back no wiser than he went."

"But—the detective?"

"Very little there. Still, there was something. He traced her to Boston."

"What friends has she in Boston?"

"None, so far as I know. I never heard her mention knowing a soul there. Still, I believe she had a—a position there with some one, before she went to Aunt Eunice."

"There's Gleason—she knows him."

Burke gave his father a glance from scornful eyes.

"My best friend! She'd be apt to go to him, wouldn't she, if she were running away from me? Besides, we've had three or four letters from him since we've been gone. Don't you suppose he'd tell us of it, if she'd gone to him?"

"Yes, yes, of course," frowned John Denby. "Think of it — that child alone in Boston, and—no friends! Of course she had money—that is, I suppose she cashed it—that check?"

"Oh, yes. I asked Brett about that. I hoped maybe there'd be a clue there, if she got somebody to cash it for her. But there was nothing. She got the money herself, at the bank here, not long after we went. Brett evidently knew you had given her such a check——"

"Yes, I had told him," nodded John Denby.

"She didn't leave any of the money, however. She took it all with her."

"Took it all—ten thousand dollars!"

"Yes. The detective, of course, is still working on the case. He got to Boston, but there he's up against a blank wall. He's run a fine-tooth comb through all sorts of public and private institutions in Boston and vicinity without avail. He's made a thorough search at the station. He questioned the matron, ticket-men, cabbies, policemen — everybody."

"Poor child, poor child!" groaned John Denby. "Where can——"

But his son interrupted sternly.

"I don't know where she is, of course. But don't be too sure it is 'poor child' with her, dad. She's doing this thing because she wants to do it. Don't forget that. Didn't she purposely mislead us by that note she left on my chiffonier? She didn't say she had gone to Wenton, but she let me think she had. She's waiting till we get home, and till the money's gone. Then she'll let herself be found."

"Oh, come, come, Burke, aren't you just a little bit—harsh?" remonstrated John Denby.

"I don't think so. She deserves—something for taking that child away like this. Honestly, as my temper is now, if it wasn't for the baby I should feel almost like saying that I hoped she wouldn't ever come back. I don't want to see her. But, of course, with the baby, that's another matter."

"I should say so!" exclaimed John Denby emphatically.

"Yes; but, see here, dad! Helen knew where she was going. Brett says one cabby remembered taking just such a young woman and child from an evening train at about that time. He didn't recollect where he took her, and he couldn't say as to whether she had been crying or not; but he's positive she directed him where to go without a moment's hesitation. If that was Helen, she knew where she was going all right."

JOHN DENBY frowned and did not answer. His eyes were troubled.

"But perhaps here—at the flat——"

"The detective tried that. He went as a student, or something, and managed to hire a room of Mrs. Cobb. But he didn't learn—much."

"But he learned—something?"

"Oh, yes; he learned that it belonged to a poor little woman whose husband was as rich as mud, but quite the meanest thing alive, in that he'd tried to buy her off with ten thousand dollars, because he was ashamed of her!"

"Then she knew about the ten-thousand-dollar check?"

"Apparently. But she didn't know Helen had gone to Boston. Helen evidently did not confide in her—or perhaps she intentionally misled her."

"I see, I see," sighed John Denby.

For a minute the angry, perplexed, baffled young husband marched back and forth, back and forth, in the great, silent room. Then, abruptly, he stopped short, and faced his father.

"I shall try to find her, of course,—Meanwhile, so far as Dalton is concerned,—my wife is out of town. That's all. It's no one's business."

To be continued

Champion
Toledo
Dependable Spark Plugs

Champion Heavy Stone
Price $1.25

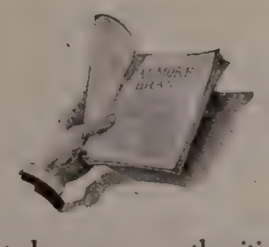
"Hand me that plug —I want to see if it says 'Champion' on the porcelain."

"Hereafter when you buy plugs, make sure they always have 'Champion' on the porcelain as well as on the box."

An inferior plug can completely handicap the performance of a costly machine—while Champion spark plugs make any priced car perform better.

The number of cylinders is not as important as the results obtained from them. "Champion" spark plugs insure the desired results.

Champion Spark Plug Co.
Toledo Ohio



Delicious Bran Food

Note how many authorities are urging bran, in the magazines and newspapers.

Bran is Nature's laxative. It supplies the needed roughage.

Dull days, headaches, bad complexions show the need for bran. We must keep clean inside.

Doctors used to advise clear bran. But folks did not like it. They would often quit it, despite its good effects.

Now they advise flake bran mixed in a whole-wheat dainty. Thousands of them have selected Pettijohn's.

Here is a luscious wheat dish which everybody likes. Yet it hides 25% bran.

Try it one week. Even that will convince you that you should not eat branless diet. And no Pettijohn user wants to. Start tomorrow morning.

Pettijohn's

Rolled Wheat—25% Bran

A breakfast dainty whose flavory flakes hide 25 per cent unground bran.

Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent fine patent flour with 25 per cent bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe.

Both sold in packages only. (1606)

FORD THEFT INSURANCE FOR $5

Protect your Ford against theft with a Safeguard Lock. Does what all others claim to do—positively makes your car impossible to drive. Renders steering wheels helpless. No hammer can smash it. Price $5.00 includes new pinion post. Money back guarantee certificate with each lock. Try a Safeguard 30 days at our risk. Write today—tomorrow your car may be gone.

The Reliance Co., 426 W. 38th Street, Chicago, Ill.

DEALERS WANTED

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"We are advertised by our loving friends"

Prepare baby's food according to the

Mellin's Food

Method of Milk Modification

Harold F. Logan, E. Weymouth, Mass.

John D. Stevenson, Palouse, Wash.

Kenneth Harrison, Lexington, Va.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

LIFETIME VALET SERVICE

$1

ONE CENT A Month

Press your trousers EVERY DAY of your life for less than 1 month's tailor's pressing bills, and look spic and span ALWAYS.

Leahey's

Heatless Trouser Press

makes a perfect knife like crease in 15 minutes. Complete pressing in 2 to 3 hours. A Creaser, Presser, Stretcher and Hanger combined in one. Preserve your trousers—no more hot irons to make them shiny and destroy the original texture of the cloth. Use the HEATLESS method—first cost is the only cost. Weight 20 oz. Of finest waterproof fibre board, with heavily nickel-plated clamps of tempered spring steel. This is a cuts out all tailor's bills and saves trousers. Trousers pressed while you sleep or travel.

Wonderful Money Saver

New Trousers for Old

The HEATLESS method—no scorching iron—makes your trousers look like new daily. Average cost 1c a month. Money back if you want it.

At Your Dealers or Mail the Coupon

One dealer sells 36,000. The country taken by storm nothing like it since the safety razor.

10 Days' Free Trial Guaranteed

Auto Vacuum Freezer Co. 25C W. Broadway, New York City
(Trouser Press Dept.)

Enclosed find $1.; for which please send me postpaid one Leahey's HEATLESS Trousers Press. If at the end of 10 days I do not wish to keep it, I will return it to you and you will return my dollar.

Name.... . . . .
Address . . . .
State whether slim or medium

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

THE arm of the Lord is not shortened; there is no limit to the power which awaits the key of believing prayer. It is related in the fourth chapter of II Kings how the wife of a prophet came to Elisha as the representative of God, and told him that her husband had died, and that creditors had come to take her sons to be bondmen. Elisha asked her what she had in the house, and she replied, "Nothing but a pot of oil." Then he told her to "borrow not a few" empty vessels of all her neighbors, then to shut the door upon herself and her sons, and to pour out from the pot that she had into the empty vessels, setting aside those that were full. And she filled them all and sold the oil. Thus her debt was paid and her children were saved. Sometimes we forget to take stock of what we now hold, when we come as supplicants to the throne of grace. Yet what we have, plus the power of God, is ample both to save us and to keep us, and to fit us for any service toward which our hearts incline.

A sister in Maine asked the Prayer League weeks ago to join her in prayer for her son, a minister of the Gospel, who needed a surgical operation which he was unable to pay for. She praises God that from some unknown source the money has come to pay for his medical treatment and to care for his wife and four young children.

Rev. H. P. L. asks the prayers of the League for a revival meeting at Branch, Mich., and for preservation of the sight of his left eye. He also tells of twelve souls saved in a revival.

S. S. E. acknowledges the tender mercies of the Heavenly Father in the restoration of a dear son, who was critically ill.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Birmingham, Ala.; Kansas City, Mo.; Orton, Ontario, Canada; Wingham, Ontario, Canada; Denver, Colo.; Hanover, Pa. (at the M. E. Church); Columbia Cross Roads, Pa. (at the Baptist Church); Meadow Creek, Mont.; Chambersburg, Pa.; Washington, D. C.; Bloomington, Ind. (that all states may be voted dry); Sidney, Mont.; Mount Sterling, Ky.; Galveston, Texas; Virgilina, Va.; Branch, Mich. (that many may be saved during revival); Wassaic, N. Y. (that the Christian Endeavor may not close); Olathe, Kan. (for the awakening of the Brotherhood Presbyterian Church and that the financial problems of the church may be cleared); Berwick, Iowa (for the success of a Sunday school and Bible school); Hubbard, Ohio (for nation-wide prohibition).

Mrs. J. E. M. and Mrs. A. J. D. ask prayer that sons' minds, Mrs. J. D., that husband's mind, L. L., that mother's mind, C. D. A., that wife's mind may be restored; nine friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives; Mrs. M. B. A., that daughter-in-law's mind may be restored.

Mrs. A. R. S. and Mrs. J. H. G. ask prayer that their husbands' sight may be restored; W. E. C., that wife's sight may be restored; Mrs. J. W. W. and J. R., that mothers' sight may be restored; Mrs. D. C., that a mother's sight may be restored without an operation; S. O. L., that growth on eyelid may be healed; Mrs. W. C., that operation on eyes may be successful; H. P. L., that sight of left eye may be restored; twenty-three friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives or themselves.

Fifty-six friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Mrs. J. H. S. and Broken-hearted Mother ask prayer that sons may be cured of the liquor habit; five wives, their husbands; two sisters, that members of family may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. J. H. M., that a brother may be cured of the liquor habit; five, that other friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

Twenty-eight parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-two wives, their husbands, including Mrs. A. W., that husband may be saved and return to his family; fifty-nine, other relatives or friends.

Thirteen readers ask prayer for special blessing for others.

One hundred and fourteen ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, eighty friends, for healing for themselves.

Thirty-nine friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Fifty-seven friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. A. T., Plainview, Texas; L. L., Farmdale, Ohio; S. J. H., Sidney, Neb.; E. B. C., Criders, Va.; Mrs. J. W. W., Belleville, Pa.; B. M. M., St. John, Kan.; Mrs. W. D. T., Geary, Okla.; N. M. S., Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. G. G. O., Cushing, Okla.; A True Friend, Pinewood, S. C.; Mrs. R. L., Grinnell, Iowa; Mrs. T. A. S., Claremont, Calif.; Mrs. H., Denver, Colo.; Mrs. C. K. L., Lancaster, Pa.; C. D. A., St. Cloud, Fla.; A. C. B., Philipsburg, Pa.; Mrs. S. V., Glendale, Calif.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; Mrs. A. F. W., Philadelphia, Miss.; Mrs. R. A. H. C., Brunson, S. C.; Mrs. A. R. G., Santee, Calif.; Miss L. A. C., Burlington, Vt.; Mrs. W. D. T., Glary, Okla.; Miss J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; S. R., Muskogee, Okla.; J. R. H., Harding, Mass.; Mrs. W. M., Rutledge, Tenn.; Mrs. W. H. S., Galveston, Texas; E. A. M., Turtle Lake, N. D.

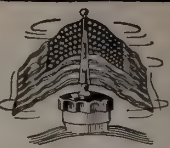
A War Veteran's Heart Touched

ONE of the most touching letters lately received in connection with the Christian Herald's relief work among the war sufferers comes from an aged pensioner in Sheridan, Wyo. The writer, who is a crippled veteran of the Civil War, in sending a contribution, says in his letter: "This little mite is to the War Widows and Orphans Fund. I have no income save my pension, which I divide as far as it goes among my needy neighbors at home. If everybody would put their trust in God, there would not be a hungry soul on earth; for it is written: 'Trust in the Lord and do good, and you shall dwell in the land and surely you shall be fed,' and if the good Lord said so, he assuredly meant it. Blessed be God! There was enough left over at that feast in the wilderness to feed every hungry sinner on earth. God's bountiful mercies are not all used up yet."

This letter of faith and loving sacrifice is a type of many others of the same class that are received by the Christian Herald from readers whose hearts have been touched by the appeal in behalf of the destitute people of Syria and Armenia. We are hoping for a wide response, as the need is most urgent. It is a cause which churches, Sunday schools and allied organizations should feel glad and privileged to help. A gift to the Fund now may save a precious life. All contributions should be addressed The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Julia B Saberson	$5.00
"In His Name," New Berlin, Pa.	5.00
Mrs J P Taylor	5.00
Ladies' Benevolent Soc. First Cong Ch. Royalton, Mass.	5.00
Mr & Mrs G B W, Saginaw, Mich	5.00
Mr G W Emarine	5.00
Mary E Barnett	5.00
Anna A Davenport	5.00
T A Garland	$5.00
Jessie Williams	5.00
W A Brodt	5.00
S S, Pilot Rock, Ore.	5.00
E S Colman	5.00
J K	5.00
L H Haines	5.00
N G Hutchinsen	5.00
Wm S Lowry	5.00
Mrs Fannie Glascock	5.00
Mrs P B Keim	5.00
"Marie-Illinois"	5.00
Kensington Klub, Wolbach, Nebr.	5.00
— —, Portland, Ore.	$5.00
Mrs L A Geiger	5.00
——, Ripon, Wisc.	5.00
Mr & Mrs O H	5.00
Mrs A C Waldron	5.00
Miss Jean Brownfield	5.00
Mrs M D Butler	5.00
Friend, Canton, S D	5.00
Reader, Ellensburg, Wash.	5.00
M E U Wooton	5.00
J C D	5.00
Mr & Mrs A B Daughty	$5.00
Mrs A F M Smith	5.00
Mrs Bertha F Blowers	5.00
John I Guptill	5.00
X X X	5.00
T B	5.00
Daisy Hight	5.00
A B Shaw	5.00
Mrs J F Betzner	5.00
Mrs Caroline Davis	5.00
Mrs Emily E Fuller	5.00
M H Cox	5.00



Motorists!!
Show Your Colors

Every motorist should have his car decorated with the national emblem, but the ordinary bunting flags speedily become lost or weatherworn.

It spins! It wins!

$1 Post Paid

7 in. wide—4½ in. high

The National Revolving Metal Flag

is a true representation of the Stars and Stripes in their glorious red, white and blue. Made of toughened metal lithographed with weather-proof enamel colors that will keep bright through good and bad weather.

Adjusted in a few minutes to any radiator cap, even those with thermometer. Hung on swivel post so that it revolves with the breeze or the movement of the car. Beautiful and permanent, an ornament to any car, and one that will cause a thrill of pride to the beholder.

If Your Dealer Can't Supply You Send One Dollar Today

National Can Co., 2580 East Grand Blvd., Detroit, Mich.

Dealers Write for Prices on quantity shipments. Every motorist wants one

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should. I know I can, because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now, oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

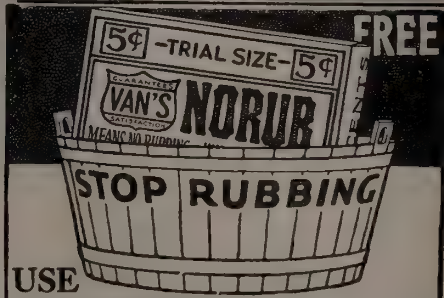
I want to help you attain your proper weight. In your room. Without drugs. By scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves.

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once. You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 18. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago



USE

Van's NORUB on wash day and save your strength and clothes.

Write for above Free package, sending us your dealer's name and address, if he cannot supply you.

VAN ZILE CO., Dept. C, West Hoboken, N. J.

Delivered TO YOU FREE

Your choice of 44 styles, colors and sizes in the famous line of "RANGER" bicycles, shown in full color in the big new Free Catalog. We pay all the freight charges from Chicago to your town.

30 Days Free Trial allowed on the bicycle you select, actual riding test in your own town for a full month. Do not buy until you get our great new trial offer and low Factory-Direct-To-Rider terms and prices.

TIRES LAMPS, HORNS, pedals, single wheels and repair parts for all makes of bicycles at half usual prices. No one else can offer such values and such terms. SEND NO MONEY but write today for the big new Catalog. It's free.

Rider Agents Wanted

MEAD CYCLE COMPANY Dept. H-71 Chicago

AGENTS A Big Seller New - Patented

SCREEN DOOR CHECK

Splendid summer seller. Low Priced. Stops the bang and saves the door. Easy sales. Big profits. Big demand. A sale in every home. Dozen can be carried in pocket. Demonstration sample free to workers.

THOMAS CHECK CO. 4324 East St. Dayton, Ohio

LE PAGE'S CHINA CEMENT
STANDS HOT AND COLD WATER 10¢

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

Miss G Herschler	$3.00
Mrs J C Merrick	3.00
Mrs L V Moore	3.00
Subscriber, Kansas City, Mo	3.00
Friends, Calumet, Mich	3.00
H M W, San Luis Obispo	3.00
E R Brown	3.00
F P	3.00
Ebenezer A R P Ch, Lexington, Va	3.00
Mrs Alice Heath	3.00
Mrs S Luchsinger	3.00
Mrs M D Butler & Miss Cora Wesner	3.00
Pleasant Hill Friend	3.00
Mrs E M Ogburn	3.00
Edward D Gitt	3.00
Mrs Arthur Goin	3.00
H N Carpenter	3.00
L S S	3.00
Mrs E R Schureman	3.00
Presby S S, Dell Rapids, S Dak	3.00
Friend, Brawley, Calif	3.00
Katie McPhee	3.00
Geo M Welch & Family	3.00
Mrs Elizabeth Stebbins	3.00
Mrs Edith Black	3.00
Jennie Griffin	3.00
Emma R Bratsche	3.00
Mrs Ellen Willains	3.00
Milton Labaw	3.00
Mrs G L Baxter	3.00
Mrs W C Armor	3.00
S S Cl of Girls, Portland, Ore	3.00
——, Carbondale, Pa	3.00
Mrs Laura Harroun	3.00
Mrs & Miss Woehrle	3.00
Mrs M A Palmer	3.00
Mrs M J Kittles	3.00
C H Thorne	3.00
Rev E P Savage	3.00
Kellerton Ch, Vienna, S Dak	3.00
Mrs E P Savage	3.00
R A Buckmaster	3.00
W B Crawford	2.50
Mrs Bertha H Ulbrech	2.50
In Memory of Mrs E V Scoggin	2.50
C R Eby	2.50
Donald McPherson	2.50
Mrs Louisa A Schmidt	2.50
David Simon	2.50
Mrs Geo Buzzell	2.50
Y P Soc, Liverpool, Texas	2.50
Mr & Mrs L R Dunkelberger	2.50
Mr & Mrs T N Reynolds	2.50
Mrs E A Merritt	2.50
M N Brooker	2.50
Mrs Annie L Curtis	2.50
Friend, Galva, Kans	2.50
Mr L O Lawrence	2.00
Miss Florence W John	2.00
R E Kegris	2.00
E C Holloway	2.00
Miss Lizzie B Francisco	2.00
Friend, Robinson, Ill	2.00
——, Chicago, Ill	2.00
Mrs Belle Ruffener	2.00
Helpful Circle, King's Daughters, Philadelphia, Pa	2.00
Mrs Lawrence Smith	2.00
B R Atkins	2.00
James Ashcroft	2.00
F J Hicktin	2.00
C Powell Grody	2.00
M Ketler	2.00
Mary Penzel	2.00
Mrs G R Sayre	2.00
Mrs Martin Kittelson	2.00
Mrs E J Stover	2.00
Mrs Allen Swain	2.00
W J Swain	2.00
Ole Aufinson	2.00
Billy Ocair	2.00
Henry Rarey	2.00
Mrs Joseph Wright	2.00
Mrs M E Chamberlin	2.00
Mary & Mae Rhule	2.00
M J Batchelor	2.00
Miss Helen L Congle	2.00
Helen Graham	2.00
——, Fayette, Mo	2.00
Mr Wm Hamilton	2.00
——, Gary, S Dak	2.00
Mrs C A Gregory	2.00
Martha J Moore	2.00
Members of C H Family, Middletown, Conn	2.00
Wm E Beel	2.00
S S	2.00
Mrs Lucy Bennett	$2.00
Friend, Nakomis, Ill	2.00
Geo A Hankins	2.00
H A Morse	2.00
Matilda J Robinson	2.00
Mrs Monroe Kyle	2.00
Friends, New Bern, N Car	2.00
Mrs L A M	2.00
Tomhicken Grammar School, Sugarloaf, Pa	2.00
Miss Louisa C Ritter	2.00
Mrs Blanche Derry	2.00
Mary J Yohe	2.00
Mrs E H Fittz	2.00
Mr & Mrs F W Porter	2.00
Wm H Best	2.00
Mrs H J Banks	2.00
Friend, E Pepperell, Mass	2.00
F W Locke	2.00
Readers of Herald, Scenery Hill, Pa	2.00
L M Yaggy	2.00
S S Class, Richwood, N J	2.00
S S Cl, 2nd Ref Ch, Kalamazoo, Mich	2.00
Mrs A W Blackburn	2.00
John R Sheffield	2.00
L E French	2.00
Mrs F T Getman	2.00
J L Priwer	2.00
H A Barker	2.00
Mrs H P Studler	2.00
Mrs John Howalt	2.00
V R Kannarkar	2.00
——, Baltimore, Md	2.00
Julia C Homire	2.00
M R Martin	2.00
Mr & Mrs W J Hope	2.00
Elizabeth Wagner	2.00
B T Hall	2.00
J Earl Mansur	2.00
R S Townsend	2.00
Mrs Milton Campbell	2.00
Rev G W Ridout	2.00
Mrs G W Ridout	2.00
George J B Ridout	2.00
Ruth W Ridout	2.00
Albert Kilburn Ridout	2.00
Mrs R H Barrett	2.00
Christian Wendling	2.00
M Alexander	2.00
W K Galeener	2.00
Mrs Kate Alford	2.00
S L	2.00
Ellen Simkin	2.00
Miss N Miles	2.00
Mr & Mrs Bernhard Nikkel	2.00
R O Morris	2.00
Chas A Farr	2.00
"In His Name," Browning, Ill	2.00
Presby Ch, Monroe City, Mo	2.00
Mrs Annie Widmayer	2.00
Mrs Carrie E Paul	2.00
Mrs Caroline D MacCausland	2.00
Mrs A E Walsworth	2.00
J O Goodwin	2.00
I M	2.00
P C Harty	2.00
Friend, Germantown, Pa	2.00
Miss Gladys L Beebe & Mother	2.00
M C Green	2.00
John H Floen	2.00
Mrs M H H	2.00
C H V	2.00
F W & N A Pitcher	2.00
Mrs M J Ewers	2.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Duffield	2.00
Mrs A J Miller	2.00
L J W	2.00
——, Biggsville, Ill	2.00
Albert E Holt	2.00
Friend, Lynn, Pa	2.00
Miss E Martin	2.00
Mrs Anna M Wilson	2.00
S E Curtis	2.00
F Lanting	2.00
E Wonnink	2.00
Friend, Dallas, Wisc	2.00
William John	2.00
Jay Wormwood	1.50
Richard Schirmer	1.50
Leonard Marklund, Jr	1.50
Mrs Ettie Heston	1.50
H S J	1.50
Mary E Eggleston	1.50
M M Denham	1.50
Subscriber, Vader, Wash	1.50
Mrs A Morley	1.50
J S Yoder	1.50
Miss Marie F Roe	1.00
Subscriber, Nova, O	1.00
Mrs Beda Spence	1.00
Mrs W J Evans	$1.00
Mrs C H Glasier	1.00
R H F	1.00
Mrs J H Pope	1.00
Mrs A M Anderson	1.00
Sadie E Dixon	1.00
J S Clark	1.00
Mrs C C Reed	1.00
Friend, Woodhaven, N Y	1.00
Mrs South	1.00
Mrs Allen	1.00
Mrs L H Tavernier	1.00
Mrs M C Sampson	1.00
Mrs M J Daniel	1.00
S H Ayers	1.00
Miss L A Brown	1.00
Mrs T Arends	1.00
Mrs H C Smith	1.00
Mrs Golman	1.00
Girl, Holden, Mo	1.00
Mrs W A Shackelford	1.00
Pauline Sigler	1.00
Mrs Jas R Leslie	1.00
J O Deming	1.00
Mrs James Boone	1.00
E J C	1.00
Geo E Ogburn	1.00
E K Palmer	1.00
V P Palmer	1.00
Rev O A Palmer	1.00
Mrs O A Palmer	1.00
Reader, Unionville, N Y	1.00
Julia Ambler	1.00
Ethel N Lawrence	1.00
Misses A E & C A Childs	1.00
Mrs J H Cole	1.00
Mr Allen Swain	1.00
Mary Bitzer	1.00
Miss Kilday	1.00
Sallie Smecker	1.00
Mrs Catherine Little	1.00
Winnie Cope	1.00
Mrs W McGlenn	1.00
Elizabeth Wright	1.00
Mrs M Mebus	1.00
——, Alton, Ill	1.00
M W H	1.00
Frank Graham	1.00
Spencer Graham	1.00
Chas Graham	1.00
Frank Ashby	1.00
Mrs Julia Shaffer	1.00
W R	1.00
Jas Lowney	1.00
"In His Name," Scottsburg, Ore	1.00
M L Goldil	1.00
Miss Kate Gordon	1.00
Miss Fannie C Armistead	1.00
Mrs Samuel Harper	1.00
Widow's Mite, Lowell, Mass	1.00
Mrs S R Durrell	1.00
Leo Brown	1.00
Mrs Clara Emmous	1.00
——, Farmington, Me	1.00
Mrs Emma Leibbrand	1.00
J I Davies	1.00
Catharine F Little	1.00
——, Schuylerville, N Y	1.00
Mrs H F Datesman	1.00
Clay Co., Ind	1.00
J Marie B Reichenbach	1.00
Mrs A J Christman	1.00
A E Ward	1.00
H R Howes	1.00
Vera E Steele	1.00
H J Young	1.00
Miss L B F	1.00
Mrs T H Ridley	1.00
Robert Ridley	1.00
C E Soc, Interlaken, N Y	1.00
"Indiana"	1.00
Louisa Smith	1.00
Mrs R J Silvernail	1.00
Mrs Sarah E Ward	1.00
——, New Britain, Conn	1.00
I C Clutter	1.00
W A Wright	1.00
Mrs E C Welborn	1.00
Mrs M J McWethy	1.00
Flora La Shelle	1.00
J C L	1.00
M I Sweadner	1.00
Mrs Ollie Smith	1.00
Mrs Jones	1.00
Mr & Mrs & Miss D Zoe Porter & Mrs E R Zimmerman	1.00
Country S S, White Plains, N Y	1.00
Mrs L M Nichols	1.00
Mrs Standley	1.00
Mrs Jas E Browne	1.00
Mrs Sarah Bickenbach	1.00
Mrs Alfred F Ham	1.00
Ada Lupton	1.00
In His Name, Bonanza, Ida	1.00
Lois D Dawson	1.00
——, Cascade, Va	$1.00
Friend, Minot, N Dak	1.00
Mrs Nellie D Clark	1.00
Friend, Hallandale, Fla	1.00
Mrs H Chappell	1.00
Mrs E J Evans	1.00
Lizzie L Murphy	1.00
——, Youngsville, Pa	1.00
Frank Porter	1.00
Emily, Winona, Minn	1.00
Mrs C W Treonton	1.00
Ruth & Esther T	1.00
Mrs W H P	1.00
Mrs L D Black	1.00
——, Petersburg Va	1.00
A H Holland	1.00
Friend, Saint Jo, Tex	1.00
Mrs F E Munn	1.00
Mrs G E Adkisson	1.00
Mrs F V Flint	1.00
Mrs M F Peitzsch	1.00
——, Chillicothe, Mo	1.00
Mrs A Clark	1.00
James Hallen	1.00
"Cash," Mobile, Ala	1.00
J A P Harlan	1.00
Mrs D H Wonder	1.00
W M True	1.00
Mrs T J Bowen	1.00
"In His Name," Mary Minn	1.00
Mrs S H Shin	1.00
Reader, White Hall, Wisc	1.00
Tom Lewis	1.00
Mrs James E Dee	1.00
Mrs S Fairchild	1.00
Miss Ruth Porter	1.00
ABC	1.00
Elizabeth Colvin	1.00
Mrs L A Childs	1.00
Mrs Julia Watkins	1.00
——, Philadelphia, Pa	1.00
Anne Johansen	1.00
Mrs D Livingston	1.00
Mrs Wm Baker	1.00
Mrs Fred Keller	1.00
H M Noblett	1.00
Mrs C M Yarger & Daughter	1.00
Mrs M R Hawkins	1.00
Mrs T B Claggett	1.00
E J Harkison	1.00
D S Topliff	1.00
Ida L Logan	1.00
J E Greer	1.00
H E McC	1.00
Bell Giepin	1.00
Carrie Heath	1.00
For His Sake, Johnsonburg, N J	1.00
Mrs Henry Moats	1.00
Miriam C Comerford	1.00
Mrs Mary A Fountain	1.00
Oscar Eliason	1.00
John Gunderson	1.00
Einar Evenson	1.00
P E Sehutt	1.00
J H Thompson	1.00
Johnnie Agrey	1.00
Joseph Agrey	1.00
M L Agrey	1.00
S J Grimsrud	1.00
Mrs C M Heath	1.00
Mrs W H Murphy	1.00
Nancy C Wood	1.00
Kitty McFall	1.00
Mr & Mrs John Lavety	1.00
Al Davis	1.00
Friend, Wattsburg, Pa	1.00
John L Hoffman	1.00
Mrs Clyde Spalding	1.00
Mrs Emma R Stover	1.00
Mrs J M Goodnow	1.00
S S Brainard	1.00
Mrs J D, Hyndsville, N Y	1.00
S W Nelson	1.00
Mary H Banks	1.00
Mrs Jennie E Crone	1.00
Mary E Stevens	1.00
S T Henderson	1.00
Mrs Mary Hicks	.50
C E W, Sayre, Pa	.50
Mrs L C Lawrence	.50
Thomas Graham	.50
——, Jourdanton, Texas	.50
Mrs Lizzie C Nicholas	.50
Percy Holman	.50
Oscar Sheutt	.50
Peter Holman	.50
H B Johnson	.50
John Perterson	.50
Willie Agrey	.50
Hàlbert Floen	.50
S Sparks	.50
H P Grogan	.50
Henrietta Lien	.50

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

MOST VALUABLE PREMIUM EVER OFFERED

HISTORY is in the making. The boundaries of the nations are constantly changing. Stirring events are occurring daily in cities and countries formerly unknown. To keep posted on the world's news every one should have an up-to-date Atlas. After months of search the Christian Herald has obtained

HAMMOND'S UP-TO-DATE ATLAS OF THE WORLD

Revised to MAY 1st, 1917

128 pages of maps in colors, including 12 special war maps indicating the fighting lines of the armies in Europe. The maps show every portion of the earth as it is today. The thorough manner in which the maps of this work are kept abreast of the times is shown by the following:

Virgin Islands. This is an entirely new map of our new possessions in the West Indies, recently acquired from Denmark.

Belgium and Franco-German Frontier. This new map is especially complete as regards places in the western theatre of war.

Western Russia, Poland and the Russo-German Frontier. This is the most complete and satisfactory map of the northeastern theatre of war contained in any atlas.

Balkan States. An entirely new map.

Dalmatia and Austro-Italian Frontier. This new map shows the great Alpine barrier.

Asia Minor. This new map shows the completed and projected portions of the Bagdad Railway and all other changes to date.

176 pages in all, printed on high finish paper, strongly and handsomely bound in cloth, with attractive cover stamping, size 10¼ by 13⅝ inches.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS ATLAS.—Send us $2.00 with the name of a NEW subscriber you have influenced to take the Christian Herald for one year and we will send you the Atlas, postpaid.

"Limpy, the Boy Who Felt Neglected"

By WILLIAM JOHNSTON

What William Johnston has done in this story is to put on paper the soul of a boy of ten, who is just coming face to face with the truer values of life. No mean achievement is this, for it is a beautiful thing to look into the heart of a child and see what is hidden there.

This book has just been published and is making a big hit. A copy was sent to the Secretary of the Christian Herald and he became so interested in it that he sat up half the night reading it. If possible, it interested him more than Pollyanna. In his opinion, it is one of the most human stories that has been written in years.

IRVIN S. COBB says:
"Somebody might have written a truer, sweeter, more appealing, more convincing story of a boy than 'Limpy,' but nobody ever has."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX says:
"'Limpy' is very beautiful and tender and ought to have a real success. It stirs the very best in its readers."

WE will send a copy of "Limpy," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year for.......... $2.25

OR—We will send a copy of "Limpy" postpaid, as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald accompanied by.......... $2.00

"The Wicked John Goode"

By HORACE W. SCANDLIN

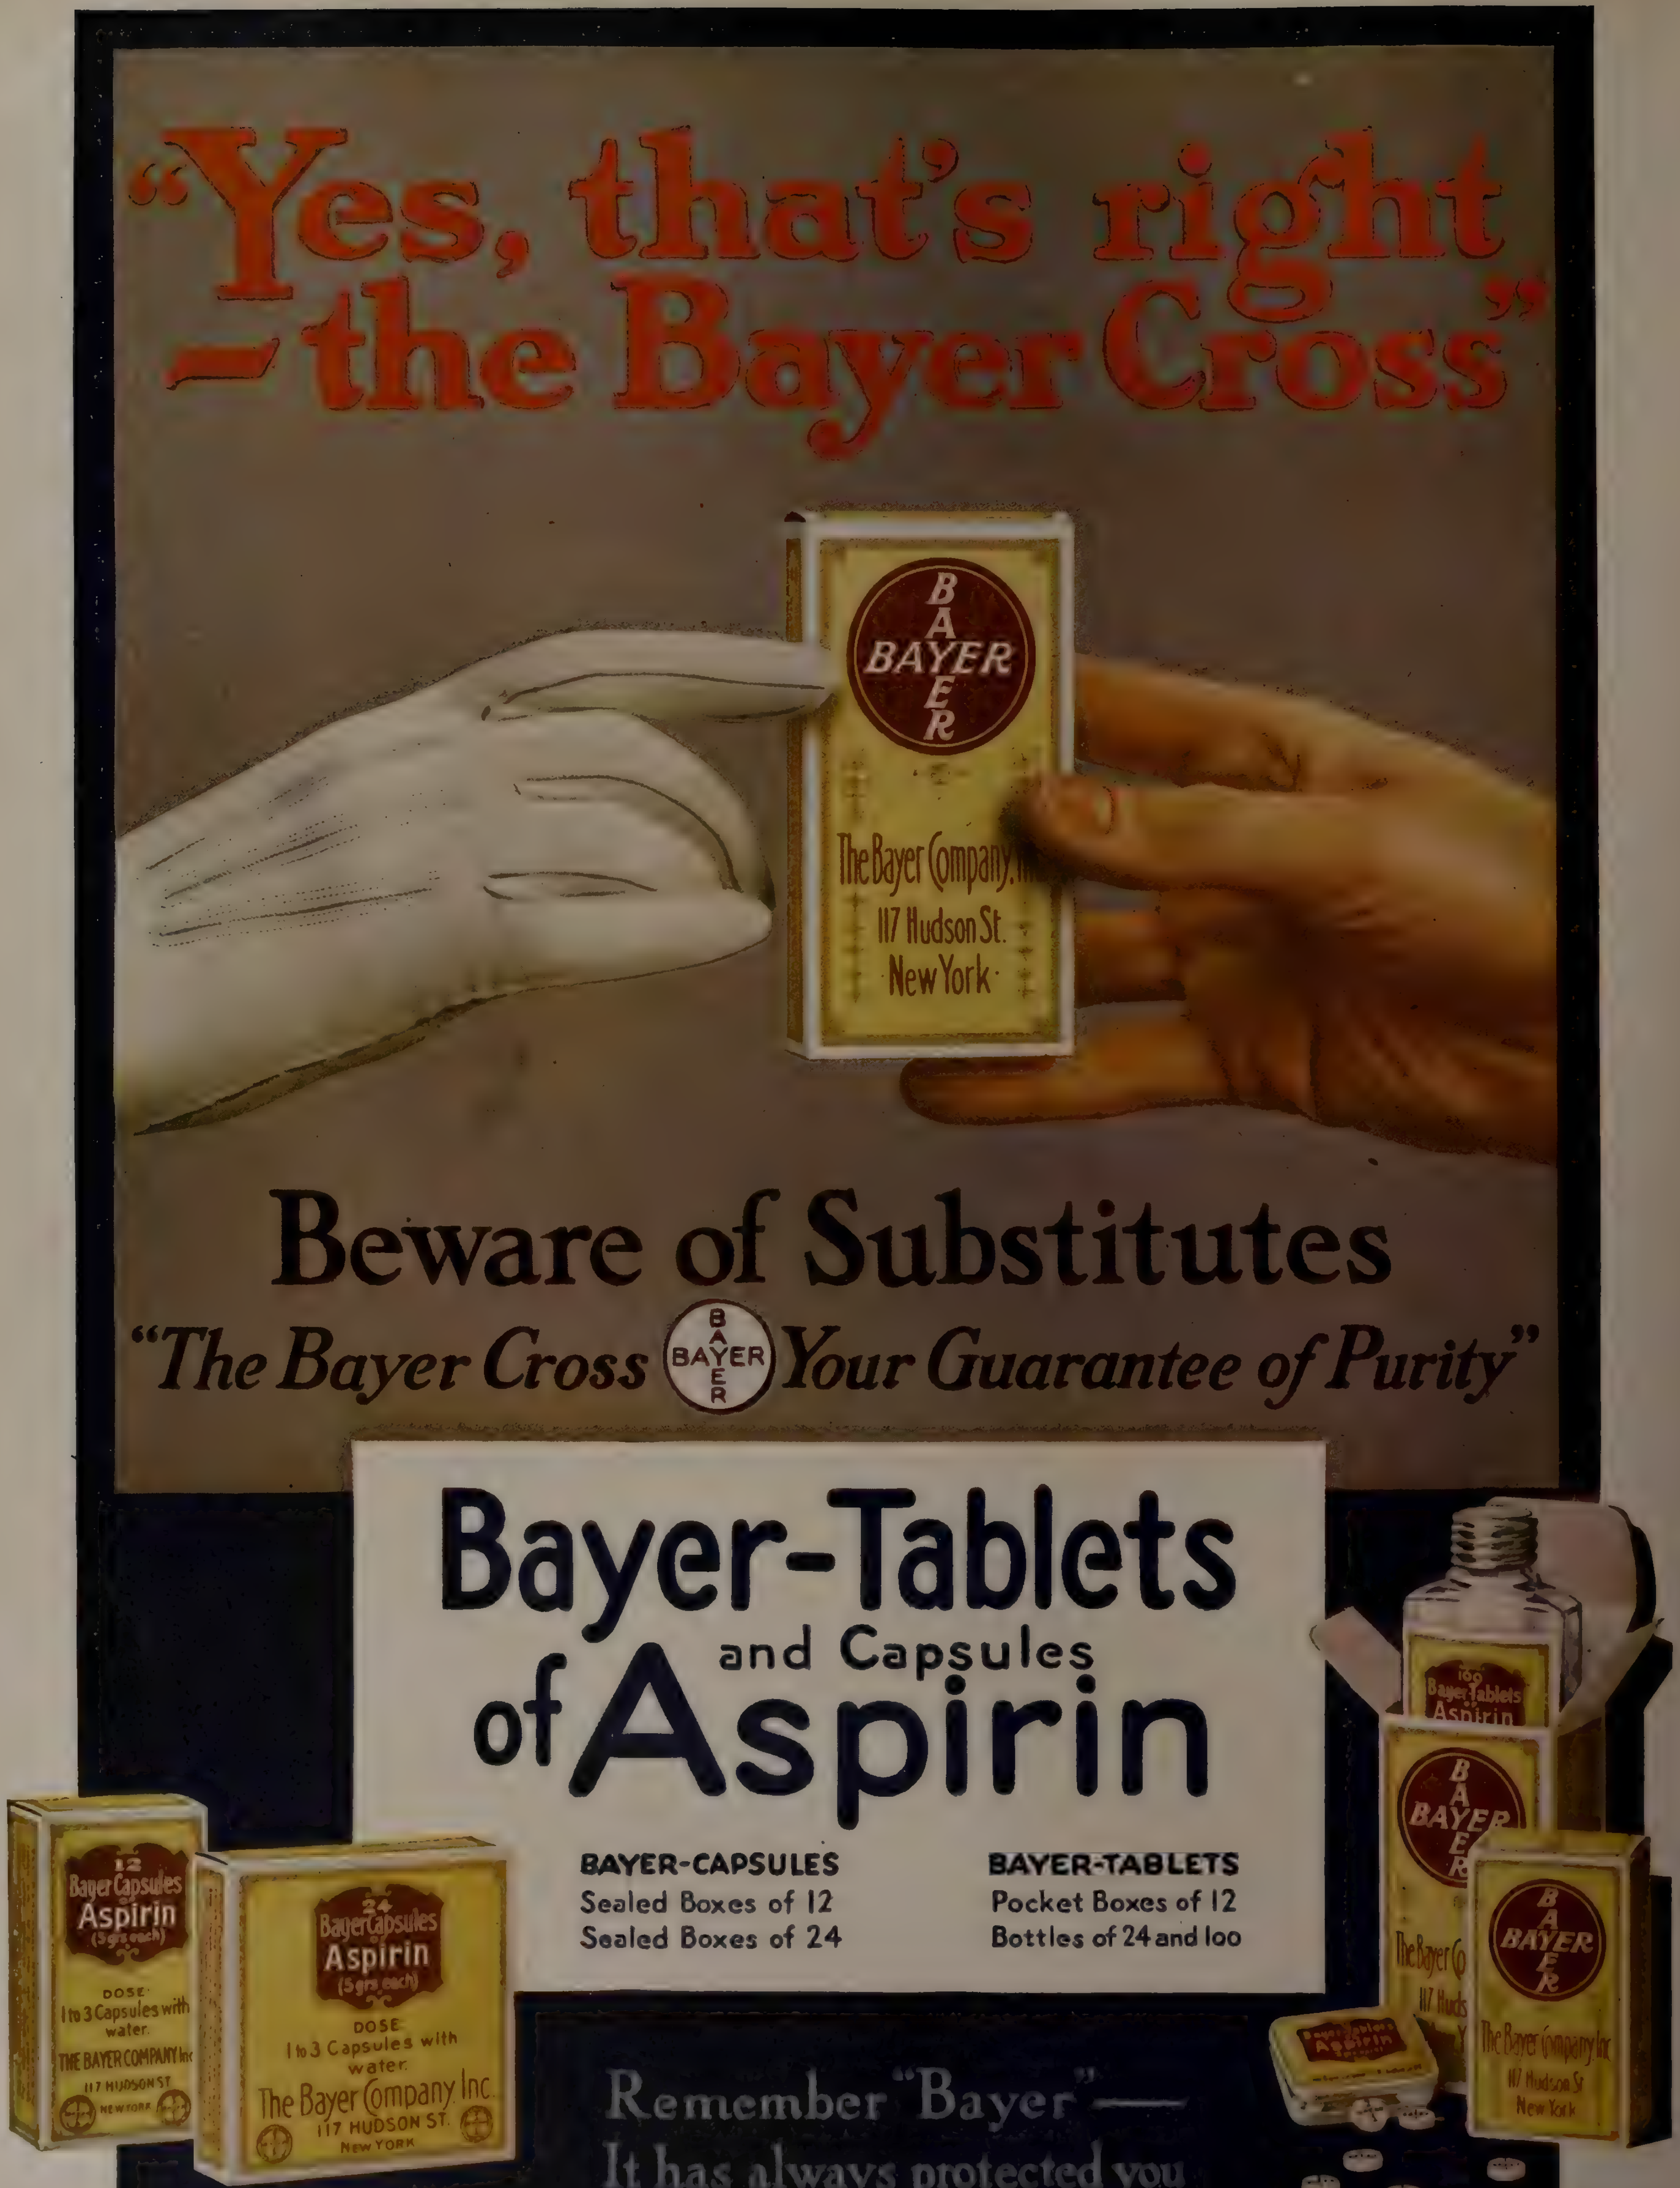
Introduction by THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE. Epilogue by REV. J. G. HALLIMOND

A book full of thrills — a book with a message. The runaway lad — the reform school—the state prison—the drunkard's reward—the whole gamut of life's tragedies right through to Christ and redemption. Life at its worst and best.

WE will send a copy of "The Wicked John Goode," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year for.......... $2.40

OR—We will send a copy of "The Wicked John Goode," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription accompanied by... $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York



BAYER
The Bayer Company, Inc
117 Hudson St.
New York
12
Bayer Capsules
Aspirin
(5 grs each)
DOSE
1 to 3 Capsules with water
THE BAYER COMPANY Inc
117 HUDSON ST
NEW YORK
24
Bayer Capsules
Aspirin
(5 grs each)
DOSE
1 to 3 Capsules with water
The Bayer Company Inc.
117 HUDSON ST.
NEW YORK
100
Bayer Tablets
Aspirin
Bayer Tablets
Aspirin

"Yes, that's right —the Bayer Cross"

Beware of Substitutes

"The Bayer Cross BAYER Your Guarantee of Purity"

Bayer-Tablets and Capsules of Aspirin

BAYER-CAPSULES
Sealed Boxes of 12
Sealed Boxes of 24

BAYER-TABLETS
Pocket Boxes of 12
Bottles of 24 and 100

Remember "Bayer"—
It has always protected you

The trade-mark "Aspirin" (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.) is a guarantee that the monoaceticacidester of salicylicacid in these tablets and capsules is of the reliable Bayer manufacture

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
BLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 27, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 26. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

YACHT SAILS DOMINI ATLA

ter, Mass., Fishermen

Photograph by John Kabel

The fishermen are home at last,
The harbor bar is safely past;
And, though the sea is touched with light,
The purple twilight murmurs, "Night!"

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

J. W. W., Weaver's Ford, N. C. Please explain Matt. 8 : 11, 12.

These verses contain a prophecy regarding the coming of the Gentiles into the Kingdom. Even the most remote, from the East to the West, shall in time hear the call, and, following it, come in to make a part of the blessed host of the chosen. The Jews represented the delights of the Messiah's kingdom as a feast and banquet. The reference here, however, is rather to an intimate domestic intercourse. The patriarchs are properly mentioned, as they were really the forerunners of the new order of things, and as with them the separation of the people of God began. While now the Gentiles are being taken in because of their willingness to accept the Kingdom, the Jews, the sons of the Kingdom, who by hereditary right and according to the ordinary law of gracious righteousness might be expected to enter, are cast out because they will not believe and accept.

N. M. R., Petersburg, Ind. Please explain Heb. 10 : 26–35.

What is here condemned is not a single sinful act, but a permanent state and continuance in a sinful course, and such continuance as implies apostasy. One who in weakness has fallen again and again need have no fear. The Spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. But God has ways and means of helping the weakest to regeneration and ultimate victory.

K. H. F. O., Knoxville, Tenn. Please explain I Cor. 10 : 24.

The word wealth here is to be translated good. This is in accord with the sense of the entire chapter. The writer is exhorting his readers to strive after better things. As it is God's design in all his works, but preeminently in redemption, to seek another's good, so it is the grand law of the Christian life and the main ornament of the Christian character.

E. S. P., Tacoma, Wash.. The only answer to be drawn from Scripture is the one you have indicated.

Mrs. K. A., Garrettsville, Ohio. At the age of thirty Paul was a member of the Sanhedrin (Acts 26 : 10), and as such he "gave his vote" against the followers of Jesus. Being the youngest of the judges, he may have been appointed "judicial witness" of the execution of Stephen.

F. C. V., Newark, N. J. John Paton was indeed a great missionary, and a pioneer in various ways. His example has been an inspiration to many. The Christian Herald has been in touch for many years with the work he founded in the New Hebrides.

Rev. W. W. S., Osborne, Kan., in reference to the question of X. Y. Z., Marion, Ind., in a recent issue: "How to become a Christian and be saved," sends the following:

Love, John 3 : 16.
Offer, Matt. 11 : 28.
Trust, Acts 16 : 31.
Obedience, Acts 2 : 38.
Saved, Rom. 8 : 9.

If J. M. K., Landisburg, Pa., who asked for the poem "Oh, the happy time is coming," will send her full name and address, we shall be glad to comply with her request.

Mrs. J. H. C., Lawrence, Kan. The Bible tells us to "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" (Luke 20 : 25), and all good citizens should do so. He who watches over even the sparrows, and is careful of the wants of all his children, will make all things clear in his own good time.

R. L. A., Philippi, W. Va., writes: "In the Christian Herald of April 18 I noticed a contributed article entitled, 'A New Way of Raising Church Funds,' to which I wish to take exception. I believe the plan is against the teachings of the Bible. I believe the New Testament teaches that the motive of all Christian acts, which includes the giving of our money, should be love. In the plan suggested, how easy it would be for the prizes of fifty and of thirty dollars for the largest amounts raised to become the impelling motive, instead of love. Gal. 5 : 6 says, 'For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision: but faith which worketh by love.' Too many of our so-called Christian acts are performed because of other motives than that of love to Him who gave us even his life. I believe this is the reason why many of the efforts of the church today are unavailing. God will not accept nor bless any offering that we may make to him unless the impelling motive is love. Then, again, how easy it is for people, in working out this and other plans for raising church money, to make an unfair profit, which is only dishonesty in one of its many forms. Surely we have enough competition in this world, without injecting it into the church. I believe in church suppers; surely it is good for Christians to have fellowship one with another; but I don't believe in church suppers as a means of raising the money which we should gladly and willingly give without any such inducement. Why can't we Christians give ourselves, our time, and our earthly store to the Lord with gladness and singleness of heart, actuated simply by pure love to Him who has done so much for us?"

OUT THERE

Somewhere, Out There, he is - just a boy, that's all -
(Laughter sparkled in his eyes - he was always singing!)
Just a boy who answered when he heard his country call;
(Somewhere, Out There, he is - how my thoughts go winging!)
Ready to do or dare,
(Like sunlight was his hair!)
Just a boy, a smiling boy,
Somewhere, Out There.

Idle my wheel, to-day, hushed is my spinning -
(Ah, but his eyes were blue - blue as the sea!)
Somewhere Out There he is --- Losing - or winning?
(Boy with the carefree heart, come back to me!)
Blood-red the cannons flare,
(God, can you hear my prayer?)
Keep him, my boy, from harm -
Somewhere, Out There.

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

Photo by Raljan Studio

E. R. Carswell, Greencastle, Ind., sends the following in further explanation of Matt. 24 : 34, recently discussed in the Mail-Bag: "'This generation,' in the language of Hebrew time, signifies the generation of Jesus. But Isaiah, at 53 : 8, asks, 'Who shall declare his generation? For he was cut off out of the land of the living.' His generation was incomplete, therefore, when 'cut off.' But after Gentile time shall have run its course—limited to the coming of Christ for his church-bride—Israel's time will be resumed and the 'seven years,' of Daniel's nine will fill out Christ's generation that was broken off by his death. And it is in that 'seven years,' the finish of his generation, that all that is predicted in Matt. 24 after verse 6 shall be enacted. Taking the suggestion in Isa. 53 : 8, and distinguishing between Hebrew and Gentile time, the solution is evident. In Daniel, 9th chapter, when the angel laid out the divisions of the 490 years into 49 for the rebuilding of the temple and 434 that terminate at the cross—the 'cutting off' of the life and generation of Jesus—and then overleaping the heaping centuries to the final seven years, he significantly promises: 'seventy sevens (490 years) are determined upon thy people'—Daniel's people, Israel. Finally, in further confirmation, we know that none of those things centering about the setting up of the abomination of the Desolator'—the Antichrist to come—have ever come to pass. Our Lord will end Gentile time by his coming. Then Jewish time will strike its hours again, and the 'seven years' that will fill in up to his return with his saints to reign will give the finish of the 'generation' of our text, which will record the bulk of what is foretold in Matt. 24."

C. H. E., Williamstown, Pa. A large portion of the Old Testament is Jewish history, including wars of conquest, national punishments, etc. The New Testament is the record of the Gospel plan for the world's redemption, the Saviour's advent, life, teachings, death and resurrection, the founding of the apostolic church and the setting up of the Kingdom in the hearts of men. The Old Testament dealt with a world under the old dispensation of law and with little spiritual illumination; the New Testament gave the Gospel of love and redemption to a lost world, "bringing life and immortality to light." It taught the law of love and human kindness and of living at peace with all men. Yet even in the New Testament the fact that world disturbances and quarrels would inevitably come is recognized; also that, toward the end of the age, such conditions would be intensified.

Mrs. L. E. F., Coopersburg, Pa. How old was Joshua when he took command of the children of Israel, immediately after Moses' death? He was 110 years old when he died. I would like to know how long he was leader of the Israelites.

Joshua was born in Egypt. Authorities differ, some assigning the date of his birth to the year B. C. 1698, and others to 1693. He was about forty when the Exodus occurred. Josephus, the Jewish historian (Antiquities, Book V, Ch. 1. 29), states that Joshua was in his 110th year when he died, forty of which he lived with Moses, and that he was commander for twenty-five years. Allowing a margin for his actual birth-date, in view of the discrepancy already referred to, Joshua would appear to have been eighty to eighty-five years old when he succeeded Moses.

Reader, Jackson Mills. The printed pledges mentioned in your letter have not been received. Please forward, with full name and address.

Mrs. W. T. P., Mineral, Va. Please repeat the Bible verses which were touched by the lips of President Wilson at his first inauguration.

Ps. 119 : 43–48: "And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments. So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever. And I will walk at liberty: for I seek thy precepts. I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed. And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved. My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes."

Mrs. W. A. B., Columbus, Ohio. Many of your readers will enjoy and appreciate the series of articles in your magazine on the history and fulfilment of the prophecies of the Bible. Why is it that so many ministers, even to Billy Sunday, keep so silent on that subject, especially on the world-war, (was it not prophesied?) when they claim to believe every word of the Bible from cover to cover?

Doubtless the reason why so many ministers avoid discussing prophecy is that the subject is not only one of vast proportions, but incomprehensible to any mind, even the ablest, that has not spiritual enlightenment. Every student of prophecy knows how those who have written on the subject conflict with each other on so many points that it is difficult to find any two in agreement. Thus, the whole field of prophecy has become largely a controversial one. There are a few, however, who have approached the work in the right spirit, and have sought the aid of divine wisdom in their efforts. Dr. Gray, whose articles on the Mountain Peaks of Prophecy the Christian Herald is now publishing, may be expected to deal with the whole subject.

Constant Reader. There are recognized two plans for Bible study in connection with the public schools: the North Dakota plan and the Colorado plan. In both of these plans credit is given for Bible Study in the Sunday school. Indiana also has a Bible study plan similar in its general lines to the two others. In the North Dakota plan the Bible cannot be taught on public property; no state funds can be used to pay for such teaching; the course of instruction is entirely voluntary; the state examinations are only in reference to the history and literature of the Bible, the religious teaching being entirely in the hands of the Sunday school teacher and promoted by the state Sunday School Association; and no passage of Scripture is referred to in the syllabus which is not found in the King James Version, the Revised Version, and the Douai Version.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank inserted, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THIS BLANK.

The subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books.

The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35. The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David, $2.50; "Limpy," $2.25; The Wicked John Goode, $2.40; Luther in Light of Recent Research, $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $4.50; with Genuine Morocco Binding, $5.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

The Venice of the "happy-go-lucky days" as seen from the island of San Giorgio

How Venice Keeps Aerial Watch

By REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D.

IN the old happy-go-lucky days before the war, the Venetians used to turn night into day, in order to entertain the travelers who flocked to see their "glorious city in the sea." It was when night had fallen that the music-boats, brilliantly lighted with colored lanterns, appeared on the Grand Canal and in the Basin of St. Mark. Soon they were surrounded by hundreds of gondolas, filled with happy travelers, enjoying the song and music and the gay and picturesque scene,

> "Where nothing comes to drown the human voice,
> But music, or the dashing of the tide."

Now, alas! all is changed. There are no travelers and no music-boats. Early in the evening all lights in public places and in private houses must be shaded or extinguished. Gondolas and boats are all tied up at their respective traghettos. Venice becomes strangely silent and still:

Then when St. Mark's clock strikes midnight a call clear and distant is heard. It brings a speedy answer. Again call and answer are rerepeated. They are heard by every one as they go circling round the city. They are the words: "Per l'aria! buona guardia!" "All'erta! sto!" ("On the air! Keep a good watch." "Alert! I am.") They are uttered by the night-watchmen from their coigns of vantage throughout the city. "I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the daytime, and I am set in my watch whole nights." But what has Venice to do with watchmen and sentinels? As Ruskin has said, "The sands of Venice never sank under the weight of a war-tower. And of all the towers which are still seen rising, like a branchless forest from her islands, there is but one whose office is other than that of summoning to prayer." Venice now has watchmen, because the ingenuity of man, divorced from God and right, has invented new instruments for the taking of human life and the destruction of property. Venice, secure from attack by sea or land, is now liable to be assailed from the air. Therefore these watchmen are set to keep a sharp lookout skyward, to look well to the air, so that they may give timely warning to the citizens should they see or hear the approach of any hostile airplane. They call to each other hourly so as to make sure that no one is asleep, and that all are alert and watching.

THESE hourly calls are therefore to the Venetians welcome ones, even though they should disturb their slumbers. They assure them that they are being cared for and guarded; that while they are quietly resting, the watchmen are alert and active. "Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh, and also the night." Day is dawning, but soon the day will close, and night will come again. Our watch knows no cessation. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which will never hold their peace day nor night."

The Venetians thus get timely notice of the approach of danger, so that they may take measures to save their lives. In other cities, when aerial bombardments take place, the citizens run for safety into underground cellars and store-places. But, as is well known, Venice has no cellars nor underground places. Around the houses and below the houses there is water. One can hardly dig a few feet below the surface anywhere without coming to water. For this reason the ground floors of the houses are made of cement, so as to be impermeable to water; but should any flaw or crack appear in them, the water soon discovers it and comes bubbling up through it. Venice thus lacking underground cellars, a substitute had to be found for them. Fortunately, it possesses many strongly arched passages, and in these the authorities have provided what are called luoghi di rifugio (places of refuge). They are built of wood and sandbags. They have been constructed in every quarter of the city, and signboards on every corner point out the way to them. And so, when the watchmen sound the alarm on their trumpets, the people, like those of old flying from the avenger of blood, can run into these refuges and be safe.

© Underwood & Underwood

The Venice of today. A lighter putting off with supplies for a warship

IT is all important that the watchmen should be alert and vigilant, for Venice is liable to be bombarded from the air at any moment. As the province of Venetia borders on Austria, all its cities, Venice, Treviso, Padua, Vicenza and Verona, are exposed to this danger. But Venice, being in the vanguard, being nearest the fighting line of any of them, is the one in greatest peril. Besides, it presents a target to aerial bombs which no other city does. It is true, it has not a few open breathing-spaces, like the great Piazza of St. Mark, and like the campos, originally the burying-places around each church; but still it is a city like Jerusalem of old, "compactly built together," its 50,000 or 60,000 houses occupying but a comparatively small area. And then its houses are almost all buildings that have a special value from an historical, architectural or artistic standpoint. Thus bombs dropped on Venice may be expected to yield

Continued on page 709

Along the Coast of the Philippines

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

FERNANDEZ HERMANOS was made in Dundee, the filthiest tub that I ever did see; the fare it is high and she has a bad roll, but she's all you can take when far Sulu's your goal. We took the dare of a missionary (who should have known better) to take a fortnight's trip almost to Borneo, on a boat that registers 742 gross tons and carries almost that much cargo.

When I ordered my passage at the office, they asked if I had seen the boat. I replied that it had not been my pleasure. Whereupon the agent suggested that I might save myself a lot of displeasure if I had a look at the steamer before I paid my money.

"It's a pretty poor passenger boat," he said.

"Eureka!" I have found one steamship agent who tells the truth. It is a fact. The Hermanos is the poorest passenger boat I ever traveled on, and the fare is the highest I have ever known to be charged on anything that so nearly resembled the Ark in cargo and so little resembled it in size. The inter-island boats in the Philippines, like all other boats this year, are making money so fast that agents can afford to turn away six-foot passengers in the hope of filling the space they would occupy with money-making cargo.

We sailed three hours late, with our Plimsoll mark a foot under water. We had a list that made the deck look like the stage set for a hill-climbing contest and a speed that rivaled that of a high-priced car proving its flexibility in the midst of Fifth Avenue traffic at five o'clock P.M.

The Fernandez Hermanos has eight cabins and sixteen berths, few of which are ever occupied, as the heat drives those who buy space below decks up into the air, where they roll and toss on folding camp cots and try to sleep.

MY guide and counselor, the missionary, reaped poetic justice for his advice, for he lay in the dining saloon for thirty-six hours, trying to drive out the feeling that the boat was going to sink, with the hope that she would.

Cebu was our first stop, three hundred and sixty miles from Manila. We made it in just fifty-four hours. Cebu is one of those thriving places whose literature bears all the earmarks of a Chamber of Commerce report. One of the things that Cebu boasts of is its fine wharf. They make a great deal of the fact that today the palatial liner can slip up to the wharf on the sly and get rid of its cargo before the customs officials have waked up, whereas it was only ten years ago that boats had to lie out in the harbor and have the cargo transhipped into lighters.

We slipped up to the wharf all right. It took us from six in the morning until six at night to unload half the cargo of a ship whose gross tonnage is 742. I have seen lighters used in several scores of ports and I never saw such slow work as that.

But, then, I had never seen the Filipino workman at his task before. As a snap judgment, made after only two weeks in the islands, I would say that a Japanese woman or a Chinese coolie could give a Filipino a month to rest up and feed up for a piece of work and then beat him so badly in the first hour that he would never catch up. Of course, Cebu is in the tropics, but so is Singapore; and I'll back a Singapore Chinaman against a Cebu Filipino any day.

As another snap judgment, it seems to me that Uncle Sammy has been pretty good to his little brown brother of the islands, without having done that little brown brother any too much good. In short, the Filipino strikes me as unbearably lazy. He has had roads built for him, schools run for him, good government and peace secured to him and an unusual measure of confidence placed in him. He has graduated from almost no clothes into spotless white, with patent leather "kicks," a clean shirt and a resplendent tie, so that he looks like the swell member of a pair of black-face comedians. He has had "sitting-down" jobs created or discovered for him and has taken with remarkable alacrity to the ice-cream soda habit, just like any other cultured being. He has learned to speak English very well and has been trained into a really good athlete. But as far as I can see so far, he is not much changed since the days when he dawdled into school, followed by a servant to carry his books and ink bottle. I doubt very much whether he will work as hard or as intelligently to make something of himself and the islands as Uncle Sam has worked for him.

A typical village church in the Philippines

One other little remark I would like to make now, not because it expresses eternal truth, but because it appeals to me as sound, and that is, that the Filipino is no more our "little brother" in the Pacific than is the Japanese or the Chinaman. He is not as ingenious, as industrious or as progressive as the Japanese, nor is he as industrious or honest as the Chinaman. In one respect the Filipino surpasses the Chinaman or the Japanese, and that is in his wife. She is freer, more progressive and less of a beast of burden than are her sisters in Japan or China.

Cebu is a small city of Catholic churches, relics of a past, and well-constructed roads and parks, monuments of the present. It has an old fort whose hoary walls serve as a sunshade for the army tennis players, and a small pavilion in which the first mass in the islands was held by Magellan.

You can travel a long time in Japan or China without recalling your elementary education in history, but when you land in the Philippines you run smack against some really famous historical personage like George Dewey or Mister Magellan. Three centuries of Spanish occupation of the Philippines spotted the islands with churches, made a Virgin the idol of the masses, and gave womanhood a value which it has in no other part of the East.

THE most famous religious relic in the Philippines is the Santo Niño, or Holy Infant. It is kept under triple lock and key in a great crumbling church which is named after it. It is a small wooden statue, supposed to have been dropped from heaven. Its two feet of stiff idolatry is clothed in showy silken robes, and the color of its face proves beyond a doubt that Jesus was a brown man. Every year there is a large pilgrimage to Cebu in which this holy statue is the center of attraction, but in the big procession he takes second place behind the statue of the Virgin.

At Cebu, as at Jerusalem, the more modern priests say quietly that of course they do not believe in all this superstition and idolatry, but that the people demand it. I have seen Catholics in many a difficult field doing a noble work and living lives of sacrifice and usefulness. But when any church perpetuates, because of popular demand or popular support, such insincere and barbarous religious rites as those at Cebu, it sacrifices that sincerity which is the center of every religious emotion or experience, and lays itself open to a charge of securing money under false pretenses in the name of truth.

FROM Cebu I went across the bay to the island of Mactan, where Magellan met his death while aiding his Cebu friends in a fight against twice their number, but I did not see the monument that has been erected on the spot where the great navigator and explorer fell. My visit to Mactan was for the purpose of seeing Dean C. Worcester and the Viscayan Refining Company, whose factory for the production of coconut oil is the model plant of the islands. Mr. Worcester is one of those honest men who would rather tell the truth than play politics. He is doing well in the Philippines and has a Mayon Volcano, Albay, Philippine Islands. A beautiful sight from a safe distance large cattle ranch in Mindanao, near Cagayan. His home is one of comfort, refinement and cheer. It was not till I was leaving that I had the opportunity to ask him what he thought of the Jones Bill.

"It puts an end to what promised to be a most interesting experiment in colonial government, and sacrifices efficiency in a worthy work to sentiment," he said. When I asked the same question of the governmental officer whose length of service and sanity of action make him the best official authority in the islands, he replied: "Mr. Williams, I am an appointive officer under the government, and the Jones Bill has become law."

But when I met Dr. Worcester, he was worried neither by problems of government nor by those of coconut-oil refining. He was having a Moro viente fitted up with new outriggers prior to Evinruding over the sparkling waters between Cebu and Mactan.

"Notice the lines of that boat," he said enthusiastically. "Those people knew how to build a boat for speed and light draft. We came up the inlet yesterday with a small sail and a light breeze and left the launch far behind. There ought to be some fun when we get our portable motor into her."

MR. WORCESTER is one of those well-informed men who make no attempt to shoot a broadside of technical knowledge at the first encounter. With his sandy Vandyke and half-moon spectacles, he looks the tolerant professor rather than the government official or factory manager. I like a man who can open a short interview by pointing out the beautiful lines of a native boat, hewn from a single log and unpainted, with bamboo outriggers tied on with rattan.

A Moro viente, shaped from a single log, with bamboo outriggers tied on with rattan. But—how it can go!

The factory is up to the minute. The boiler-room, open to the air on three sides, is cooler than most, though a tropical sun beats down upon its high roof. There are the latest generators and other machines, shining and clean, for the refining of transparent, tasteless coconut oil from copra, or coconut "meat."

Good copra runs nearly two-thirds pure oil by weight and the problem is not only to get all the oil possible, but to extract all that can be expelled from the oil-cake, which is poorer in quality if it contains much oil. The copra is re-dried, cleaned and crushed, pressed and re-pressed until it leaves the building as clear, smooth oil, free from odor and taste, and stone-like oil-cake which has given up all but four per cent. of its oil under the compelling pressure of five thousand pounds to the square inch.

Outside the factory are several huge tanks, containing more than a million dollars' worth of coconut oil. The factory is running at half its capacity for lack of ships to carry the oil to America and the oil-cake to Holland.

A thriving factory with three eight-hour shifts and good pay caused quite a boom in the village where it is situated, a boom in which store-keepers and dance-hall proprietors reaped the major share of the profits. Three warnings to the food dealers failed to prevent the ravages of the H. C. O. L., which is not confined to America; and the company has just opened a company store, which, contrary to the accepted practice of company stores, furnishes wholesome food, firewood and other necessities at actual cost.

King Constantine Abdicates

Alexander, the new king

Constantine I, deposed king

EVER since October, 1915, when Germany, Austria and Bulgaria attacked Serbia, and Britain and France landed troops at Salonica to march to the support of the sworn ally of Greece, King Constantine has been a problem to the Entente, and perhaps the purposes of the Entente have been an equal problem to the king. He protested against what he held to be infractions of his sovereignty, and the Entente sent ultimatum after ultimatum, until it seemed almost necessary to coin some other word to represent finality in diplomacy. The king's protests received courteous but firm replies, without any change in the facts, and the ultimata of the Entente were answered with equal courtesy and with definite promises, some of which were kept, but many of which were disregarded or evaded. In October, 1916, Venizelos protested against the course of the king. Crete and other Greek Islands declared their independence. The Venizelos provisional government was formed at Salonica. Preceding the establishment of the Venizelos government there had been a treacherous attack upon British and French marines and sailors who had been landed to preserve the peace in Athens and Piraeus, an attack which almost led to open hostilities between Greece and the Entente, but which resulted in negotiations by which it was arranged that the troops of Greece were to be withdrawn into the Peloponnesus, and most of Thessaly was to be under the control of Venizelist and Allied troops. This agreement was kept, but Constantine was suspected of activities in support of the enemies of the Entente. It was charged that German submarines were being permitted to establish supply bases on Greek soil, that wireless communications were being maintained between Athens and Berlin, and that Constantine and his imperial brother-in-law, the emperor of Germany, were acting in accord.

AS the situation became more and more impossible, demands increased for the subtraction of Constantine from the throne and the creation in Greece of a government which would not constitute a constant threat to the expeditionary army of General Sarrail at Salonica. In April a conference was held in Switzerland between ministers of the Allied countries, and it was arranged to put in the hands of France negotiations which would eliminate Constantine. France sent M. Jonnart, a member of the Senate and a former cabinet minister, as the Entente commissioner to Greece. Immediately upon his arrival at Athens he presented to King Constantine, through Premier Zaimis, a demand for his abdication, which included the elimination from the monarchy of Prince George, the eldest son of Constantine. On June 12 Premier Zaimis delivered to M. Jonnart, as the commissioner of France, Great Britain and Russia, the following letter:

> "The Minister and High Commissioner of France, Great Britain, and Russia: Having demanded by your note of yesterday the abdication of his Majesty, King Constantine, and the nomination of his successor, the undersigned, Premier and Foreign Minister, has the honor to inform your Excellency that his Majesty the King, ever solicitous for the interests of Greece, has decided to leave the country with the Prince Royal, and nominates Prince Alexander as his successor."

Coincident with the demand for the abdication of Constantine, French and British troops were landed in Thessaly and on the Isthmus of Corinth. They were not opposed. Had this action been deferred until the fast-ripening grain crops of Thessaly had been garnered, Constantine would have been in a position to defy the Entente blockade for a considerable period.

IT was announced that Constantine and his son with their suites would be taken aboard a British warship and landed in Italy, proceeding thence to Switzerland. King Constantine in 1912 was the national hero of Greece, coming to the throne through the assassination of his father during the turmoil of the Turkish war. He had led a victorious army into Macedonia, capturing Salonica and a Turkish army three times the size of his own. There was an ancient Hellenic prophecy that Greece would be restored to her former splendor under an emperor named Constantine, whose consort would be named Sophia, and when he came to the throne with his Queen Sophie, the eye of all Greece was turned toward Constantinople, and saw there the Cross replace the Crescent above St. Sophia. The marriage of Sophie to young Prince Constantine was one of the last strokes of Bismarck's diplomacy, and although the acceptance by her of the Greek religion caused a breach for a time between her brother and herself, the history of the last year and a half shows that Bismarck planned more wisely than he knew; for the constant threat of Constantine's possible action has been the standing reason in all the chancelleries of the Entente for the comparative inaction of the great force in command of General Sarrail in Macedonia.

CONSTANTINE was born August 3, 1868; was educated largely by German tutors, and received much of his military education by attendance at maneuvers in Germany. Whatever his sympathies may have been, he was firmly convinced that the defeat of Germany was impossible, and there is reason to believe that his course since he refused to abide by the treaty between Greece and Serbia in October, 1915, has been inspired as much, perhaps more, by a desire to shield Greece from the horrors of annihilation than from any sympathy with, or desire to help, the Central Powers.

Realizing the sympathy of the Greek Liberals with the Entente, the king, in contempt of England, France and Russia, the guarantors of the constitution and of his throne, had dissolved the Chamber in February, 1915, declaring that the government and the Chamber, which were pro-interventionist, did not represent the country. The resulting election returned an even greater Liberal majority, but the king refused to convoke the Chamber, and dismissed it. Being finally forced to obey the Liberal majority, he ordered a mobilization of troops in September, 1915, when Bulgaria entered the war; then he ordered a new election while the troops, the majority of whom were Liberal, were under the colors and could not vote. Then he again dismissed the government, dissolved the Chamber, and held still another election under the auspices of his loyal troops, at which election the Liberal party declined to vote. It is understood that Prince Alexander, who has taken the oath as king of Greece, and who was born in 1893, is in sympathy with the Venizelist movement and with the Entente.

CONSTANTINE, the deposed king, in a statement published by the New York Times, says:

"To have forced Greece into the war would have been the easiest way to my personal glory and benefit; but I, 'the absolutist, the autocrat, the believer in the divine right of kings,' as my opponents are prone to call me, was held down and nailed down to a pacifist policy simply because all the people of Greece who will do the fighting when war comes are against this war, and against sacrificing themselves in a vain effort, which will do nobody good.

"They call this struggle a fight for the rights of the weak and the oppressed, and yet they want us to believe that Greece is neither weak nor oppressed, when in fact we fare little better than Belgium. Is it in order to uphold our constitutional liberties? Rubbish! The present war takes little account of such small matters. Your liberty and your constitution count only when they are of any use to the Entente in a material way. If your Parliament stands for war, it is good; if it votes for peace, it is merely a band of crooks in the pay of Germany. These high-sounding names for lofty ideals and popular liberties have value only when they serve to rouse a people and march them to the slaughter house called nowadays 'the front.' If for the same ideals people want to sit quiet and mind their own business, then they are nothing."

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

© Underwood & Underwood

This lake in a shell-hole is all that is left of the river that once turned this mill-wheel, on the Ancre battlefield in France. The mill is gone and the forest is reduced to a few battered trees

RUSSIA PLANS REFORMS. A council of sixty-one members under the presidency of F. F. Kokoshkine, a member of the Duma, met in Petrograd on June 11. This council was assembled to draft Russia's permanent constitution and also to solve the immediate problems bearing on the questions of nationality and of the transfer of lands from the nobles to the peasantry. The council includes deputies from the army and from all political parties, representatives of the Jews, Ukranians, Poles and other races, and a representative of the women. The proposed election law of Russia contemplates universal, equal, secret and direct voting by both sexes. It was announced that the Czar and members of the former ruling family would be permitted to vote on the same basis as other citizens of the new republic of Russia. Judges of petty courts will be elected, and women are to be eligible for election as magistrates. Small units of self-government are to be organized within the zemstvos. The Russian commission to the United States, headed by Boris A. Bakhmeteff, reached a Pacific port on June 13. The Root and Stevens Commissions to Russia both reached Petrograd on June 13. Mr. Root, addressing the Council of Ministers at Petrograd on June 15, said, "America sends another message to Russia—that we are going to fight and have already begun to fight for your freedom equally with our own, and we ask you to fight for our freedom equally with yours." In reply to a move for separate peace made through a Swiss Socialist, the Workmen's and Soldiers' Council on June 16 declared itself irrevocably opposed to a separate peace, and on June 17, the Duma was reported to have passed, in secret session, a resolution for an immediate offensive.

IMPORTANT BILLS PASSED. The Senate on June 13 passed the Urgent Deficiency Bill, appropriating $3,281,000,000 for military uses. The House passed the Webb Export Bill authorizing combinations for the carrying on of export trade. This will permit the creation of export trusts, which are considered necessary if America is to compete in the markets of the world as at present organized. The Senate on the preceding day passed the Administration Espionage Bill, which had already passed the House. No further attempt was made to provide for a press censor. The bill gives the President the power of embargo. The bill also gives the government control over shipping under the American flag. Spying, interference with foreign commerce, breaches of neutrality, shipments of arms for unlawful purposes, the injuring of vessels in foreign commerce, and the disturbance of foreign relations are provided against, with appropriate penalties. New restrictions are imposed upon passports, and the bill provides for censorship of mails, and for an extension of the use of search-warrants. The Senate Finance Committee in further discussion of the War Revenue Bill turned its attention in the week ending June 17 to the consideration of the excess profits tax, from which it is expected to raise about $500,000,000 a year. A graduated tax was planned on profits in excess of the average profits for 1911, '12 and '13, the tax running from 5 per cent. to 50 per cent.

LABOR URGES FOOD LAWS. Representatives of organized labor called on the President, June 11, reporting danger of serious unrest among the workingmen of the country unless food administration legislation were soon passed. It has been shown conclusively that there is no proper relation between retail prices and prices paid to the producer. The Food Control Bill as reported to the House makes the President practically a food and fuel dictator. The President would have sweeping powers to regulate transportation, storage, distribution and sale of foodstuffs and fix minimum prices to stimulate production, but the provision for the fixing of maximum prices was dropped from the bill. The President could prevent hoarding, and could suspend entirely exchanges and boards of trade in which speculation in foodstuffs might create artificial prices. The bill also gives the President power to limit or prevent entirely the use of foodstuffs for the manufacture of alcoholic and non-alcoholic liquors. Every effort was promised to pass this important legislation before the growing season was too far advanced for it to affect production.

Behind the Storehouse Door

FOR ten weeks a man plus the power of God has been drawing New York to a huge wooden tent on upper Broadway. In next week's Christian Herald Billy Sunday will give you his personal estimate of the campaign.

From the next Mountain Peak of Prophecy we will see, with Dr. Gray, "The Promise of the Coming Kingdom in God's Covenant with David."

Cotton and sulphur are mighty important these days. The food supply and munitions may decide the great conflict. Frank Carpenter has stood between the cotton rows and has seen the sulphur mines. He tells about them next week.

The Neighbor's League was crowded out this week, by the episode in Greece, but we will meet it in an early number.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

ARRESTING THE SLACKERS. The period of leniency for men who failed to register under the selective draft law ended on June 11. The Provost-Marshal General ordered vigorous and progressive enforcement of the penal laws against all who failed to register. The latest reports available indicate a total registration in excess of 9,500,000. A conscription bill was introduced in the Canadian Parliament, June 11, a sufficient number of men to maintain the Canadian units on the fighting front having failed to volunteer.

LIBERTY LOAN OVERSUBSCRIBED. As a part of the nation-wide campaign to insure the complete subscription to the $2,000,000,000 Liberty Loan, the old Liberty Bell in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, led off on Flag Day, June 14, in a nation-wide peal of bells in behalf of the loan. This was the first time in forty-one years that the voice of the first Liberty Bell had been heard. Every agency in the country that could be organized effectively was operated at high pressure in order that the world might know that Uncle Sam is no financial slacker. The Boy Scouts of America, 300,000 strong, engaged in a house-to-house canvass, and patriotic women, banks and commercial houses united in a final effort, which added to previous subscriptions throughout the nation resulted in a total subscription of $2,900,000,000. The loan was a great popular success, the total number of subscribers reaching nearly 3,000,000.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. General Pershing reached Paris on June 13, being welcomed by the civil and military authorities, and being tumultuously received by a throng who lined the boulevards through which he passed. In a brief speech he told the French that America was "in the war to do her share.". . . . M. Viviani, French Minister of Justice, declared in Paris on

Continued on page 708

The Children and the Kingdom

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

DOWN through the slums the push-carts are selling watermelons again, and hot corn, and hokey-pokey. Down through the slums the sun of June-time is beginning to assert itself with fiercely burning radiance. Children, less than half clothed, sit languidly on the sidewalk, women in calico wrappers lean against the door-jamb of each dingy tenement. Somewhere, never very far away, a new baby is crying fitfully; everywhere there are dented, over-full garbage cans and swarms of busy flies. A small boy with a bit of a cart trundles a rapidly melting piece of ice through the scorching streets and smaller boys follow him half eagerly, hoping that it may fall to the street and splinter into tiny cool pieces. Down in the slums the summer has come at last—after the long winter and the scarcely spring-like springtime—has come reluctantly, but with redoubled fierceness.

Every morning I come through the East Side—past Rivington, and East Houston, and Clinton Streets—along Avenue B, and then Avenue A. Sometimes I even go through Delancey Street and the Bowery. I usually ride in a slowly moving trolley car; but once in a while, when there isn't a car waiting, and I have quite plenty of time anyway, I walk slowly and carefully (one walks carefully on the East Side to avoid stepping on sleeping babies) down the over-crowded streets. Sometimes I pause to look in at the shop windows, for there are lovely frocks tucked away behind the smudged glass of many a shop window.

IT was in front of a dress shop that I saw Pauline. I didn't recognize her at first. One sees so very many small girls on the East Side. But she knew me at once.

"I seen you two years ago . . ." said Pauline by way of greeting.

"Where?" I questioned, marveling at the child's memory. "Where did you see me two years ago, honey?"

"It was in the country that I saw you," Pauline informed me gravely. "In the country. I was just thinking"— she pointed to a vividly blue frock in the show window—"that that dress looked like the sky they have in the country. We don't never see that kind of a sky here!"

The mission visitor brings to Broome Street the call to the country. "We all want to go," cry eager voices, and the hands agree

Looking back over a vista of days and weeks and months I discovered that I did remember Pauline—a smaller Pauline, but with the same thin little face and the same claw-like hands and the same eyes that seemed always to be questioning life and the meaning of life.

"You're the little girl," I asked, "who so loved to watch the river. You're—Pauline."

"Yes," the child laughed. "I was jus' crazy over that river. I never seen clean water—before. The East River's gray an' brown. That river was blue an' green . . . I uster watch it . . ."

We were silent for a moment, there in front of the shop window. And then, quite suddenly, Pauline spoke, in her sad, slow little voice.

"I did wanta go last summer," said Pauline, "an' then—there came th' p'ralasis—an' us kids couldn't leave—here. My lil' sister"—Pauline stared hard at the smudged shop window—"my lil' sister took sick. She—she didn't get better. An' I had t' stay here, 'thout her. Do you s'pose," Pauline's voice was wistful, "that I'm too big ter go ter th' country this year?"

I looked at her through the certain mistiness of eye that troubles me sometimes. I looked at the pipestem legs of her, the thin arms, and the peaked, hopeful face.

"No, Pauline," I told her. "You're not too big!"

Some one was calling from a window, and Pauline turned sharply. "They want me," she said hurriedly, "Good-by, lady!" And she was gone. No, not quite gone, for at the corner she turned and looked back at me.

"It must be grand now," she called back, "in the country!"

THE infantile paralysis last year kept many small children from going to Mont-Lawn, the Christian Herald's Home. Many little hearts that had been able to sing in anticipation through a long year of bitter cold and almost more bitter heat were disappointed. You, friends of mine, who—many of you—have the country at your very door, cannot realize how those little hearts ached. Ten days in God's own out-of-doors doesn't, perhaps, seem like a very great treat to you. But those kiddies, some of them, dream of Mont-Lawn and pray for Mont-Lawn as we dream of and pray for heaven. Mont-Lawn is heaven to many of them; that's why it's called the "Children's Paradise."

A clean bed, wholesome food, a breeze, and green grass, and flowers growing in the open, is by way of being almost a habit to us. But to the children of the New York slum districts it's a new, vivid, wonderful sensation. To the children who sleep on fire escapes, who eat, some of them (and this is true!), from piles of refuse, who play in alleyways and dart back and forth from under the feet of truck horses, it's like a fairy tale come to life.

It is over a score of years since Mont-Lawn first opened its doors to the little ones of the city. Some of you have followed its progress ever since it was started, but others of you, who have just been interested for a short time, will be glad to know that more than three thousand children have been entertained there every year—that more than three thousand children have there been given a vision—a vision that will help them to be better men and better women—a vision that will give them something to live up to. A gift to Mont-Lawn is a gift to the whole Kingdom of Childhood. Think it over, and when you are planning your summer outing, decide to send one little child to the country as your protégé.

"HOW," a woman asked me once, "do you people find something new, every year, to say about the Children's Home?"

Oh, friends of little children, we don't have to find new things to say about Mont-Lawn. There are so many new things every year that force themselves on our attention—new problems, new cases, new situations, new sensations! The children of the slums are a never-failing source of colorful story and incident and anecdote. The children of the slums—wistful, eager-eyed, searching for something that they've never been able to find, reach out across the gulf between us and give us

Continued on page 710

Uncle Sam Advises the Farmer

The Department of Agriculture Gives Timely and Practical Suggestions on Food Production and Conservation

(Upon request of the Editor of the Christian Herald, the Department of Agriculture has specially prepared the following article continuing the one published last week.)

ANOTHER quick means of increasing the meat supply of the nation is the growing of more poultry. The statement was made at the important agricultural conference at St. Louis that the poultry products of the United States could be doubled within a year. Few farmers practice a systematic plan of disposing of their fowls after they have ceased to be productive. Efforts should be made to dispose of all females when their best laying days are over. This would place a large quantity of poultry meat on the market. Farmers are urged to caponize the cockerels not intended for breeding purposes. This will increase their size and supply a more desirable poultry meat. All chickens that are to be marketed should be fattened before they leave the farm. The production of ducks is a quick way of increasing the meat supply. Ducks frequently weigh from five to six pounds at ten weeks of age. Proper sanitation of poultry houses and freedom from insect pests will prevent loss from disease. Chickens utilize waste products, and more attention to poultry would help increase the food supply.

"DON'T sell your breeding animals unless you can replace them immediately with better ones," is the message of the Department of Agriculture to farmers and stockmen everywhere. Record prices for livestock have proved tempting to many farmers who have let the high prices for feedstuffs unduly influence them to sell even their breeding stock. Such a short-sighted policy strikes at the foundation of the country's livestock industry. Farmers are urged to maintain and increase their breeding herds and to grow and feed cheaper roughages. Feeds not available or needed for human consumption should be used as largely as possible in feeding livestock. Stockmen are urged to apply to the Department of Agriculture at Washington or the state agricultural colleges for information as to the most effective and economical methods of feeding livestock under existing emergency conditions.

Since hogs afford the quickest means of increasing the meat supply, great emphasis is being placed upon saving the breeding sows and breeding them to bring fall litters. Fall litters with common-sense management are profitable. The pigs should come in early fall, September or October, so that they may be weaned and have attained sufficient growth to shift for themselves before cold weather arrives. The period of gestation for a sow is approximately 112 days. This means sows must be bred for fall litters during the months of May and June. All sows should be bred. Scruples over immature sows should be forgotten. By breeding young gilts this spring, the feed given them during the summer will have been more completely devoted toward food production. It will help to produce a greater meat supply and a supply ready for market six months earlier than if they were not bred until fall.

FRUIT, either in the fresh, dried, canned, preserved, or jellied form, is a food product of recognized value. Directly concerned with the production of good food are the spraying operations for the control of various insects and diseases. Owners of many small home orchards have not adopted spraying operations or do not give sufficient attention to the work. Every fruit-grower, large or small, has it in his power to save his fruit from loss by insect and fungous pests, and thus add materially to the food supply of the nation. Orchardists can obtain full directions for spraying their trees from the United States Department of Agriculture, or the state experiment stations.

In his appeal to the women of the United States telling them how they may best serve the nation, the Secretary of Agriculture urged every woman to help feed and clothe the army and to supply food to those beyond the seas by practicing effective thrift in her own household.

Women can practice necessary food

Continued on page 709

The Two Paths

*A SERMON BY REV. R. A. TORREY, D.D.

TEXT—I John 2 : 17. "The world passeth away."

EVENTS have a voice. They frequently speak with a voice of thunder that makes the most careless stop and listen. Certainly the war that is now shaking the whole earth speaks in tones both loud and clear. The one message above all others that I have heard sounding in my ears almost from the outset is the same as that which God spoke in his Word nearly nineteen centuries ago, and which is recorded in our text.

In the light of the events that have been taking place in Europe, how transitory everything that belongs to this world appears! The flower of the young manhood of England, France, Germany and Austria have been destroyed by the millions; cathedrals, palaces, fortresses have crumbled into dust; the very earth has been desolated, and great fortunes have vanished. How unreal and transitory earthly possessions of every character appear in the light of these events! God by his providence is emphasizing the truth so plainly uttered in his Word. Men would not listen to the Word of God; so God is speaking to men by the facts of history, and the warning voice of world-wide war is crying aloud to men and women in all lands, "The world passeth away!"

There can be no greater folly than that of sacrificing the permanent for the transient. Many a man has sacrificed lifelong peace of conscience for the momentary gratification of some appetite, and everybody said, "What a fool!" But the man who sets his affections upon this present world, rather than upon the eternal God and upon the eternal good that He imparts, is the transcendent fool. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

I wish that text might burn itself into the memory and heart of every man and woman here, and it will if you are wise. Happy is the man who shapes his life according to this great truth. This text gives us three conclusive reasons why wordliness is utter folly.

FIRST of all, worldliness is utter folly because "the world passeth away." The experiences of every day of our lives is a commentary upon these words. How fast the world and all that is in it passes! Take, for example, wealth. How it slips through men's fingers! A man is a millionaire today, a pauper tomorrow. When I first went to Chicago I was introduced to a man with whom I was expected to have somewhat intimate relations, who, on the day that I was introduced to him, could have retired from business worth two million dollars. But adversities came, and he was soon absolutely penniless. His case was one among many of a similar character that I have known. How many men there are who once were in affluence, but who today are suffering for the very necessities of life!

Take the applause of men. Most of us court the applause of our fellow men, and long to be admired for our genius, or our scholarship, or our legal or commercial ability, or some other kind of ability, or for our eloquence, or for something else; but if there be anything in the whole world that is fleeting it is the applause of men: How many men we can all think of who were once popular idols but today are utterly despised or forgotten! Worldly pleasures are more fleeting still. A night of gayety is soon followed by a morning of emptiness and disgust. How brief indeed is the longest worldly enjoyment! Take power over men. Many of us long for that; we long to be first in politics, or in business, or in society, or in the church. But power does not last. A few weeks ago the Czar of all the Russias seemed to be the most powerful man in the world. Today he is stripped of all power, and the laughing-stock of the earth; and there are others of the most potent rulers in the world who today occupy a place of eminence, but in a few months may be deposed and despised. "The world passeth away."

The world passeth away in four ways: 1. By loss. Today you have it, and tomorrow it is gone. The most insignificant causes may operate to sweep away a man's fortune in a day. Sudden and unexpected turns in the market might make half the millionaires of America paupers tomorrow; indeed, they are likely to do so in the next six months or a year. When I left Minneapolis to go to Chicago, there were certain men who were the rulers of the financial world in that city. The panic of 1893 came and left many of them practically penniless. My own father in twenty-four hours, by a bank collapse, lost everything he had in the world. He went to bed one night worth a large amount, and awoke the next morning penniless.

2. "The world passeth away" by loss of power to enjoy it. A man may still have the world but lose his power to enjoy it. He has it, yet he doesn't have it. As far as he is concerned, it has passed away. For example, there are men today of great wealth who by reason of ill health, old age, insanity, or some other cause, get no enjoyment out of the world. The healthy man of thirty, who has two thousand dollars a year, gets more enjoyment out of it than the broken-down man of sixty, who has two thousand a day. One of Chicago's richest men died an imbecile in an asylum. He had spent years there and his millions were worthless to him. The world had passed away for him for all the millions he was reputed to be worth. How many old men of wealth there are in Chicago, New York, and other cities! How much enjoyment do they get out of their money? One of New York's millionaires offered a million dollars to any one who would restore his eyesight.

3. "The world passeth away" by death. How much good does any one get out of the world after he is dead? I may be a millionaire, but if I am a dead millionaire all the good it does me is that it makes it pretty sure that there will be a row among my relatives over my will. The man who is a millionaire tonight and dies tomorrow is not worth a cent day after tomorrow.

4. "The world passeth away" by destruction; that is, the world itself shall be destroyed. Everything in this old world is doomed; it is under sentence of destruction. The modern traveler wanders through the ruins of ancient wealth and pomp and regal splendor. I have wandered for hours among the ruins of ancient castles, where once gathered the beauty and pride and gaiety and chivalry, the pomp of military greatness and political power of bygone days, and I have watched the snail crawl over the walls, the only inhabitant of a once noted palace. And some day every palace, every great building, all our monuments and all the glories of which we boast, will lie in ruins, and the people who now live for these things, where will they be? In hell. "The world passeth away." What fools we are to live for this world, for its wealth, for its pleasure, for its fame, for its power; it does not last, it passeth away. By the loss of it, by loss of power to enjoy it, by our own departure from it by death, by its ultimate destruction, it passeth away.

OUR text gives a second reason why worldliness is utter folly: because the world does not satisfy while we have it. Not only does the world pass away, but "the lust thereof," that is, our desires for it, and our enjoyment of it. The world does not satisfy. We can not keep it long, and it does not satisfy while we do keep it. Where is the man whom wealth has satisfied? Men have amassed fabulous fortunes, but where is the man who has been satisfied with his wealth, no matter how great it is? There is not one! A happy millionaire is a rarity, and when you find a millionaire who is happy, it is not his wealth that has made him happy. Barney Barnato rolled in wealth, but he was so utterly miserable in spite of his wealth that his friends had to employ a man to follow him wherever he went to keep him from committing suicide, and one day Barnato seized his opportunity and flung himself into the ocean to drown the misery of his empty and wretched heart. A fat purse may fill your belly but it can not fill your heart. A full purse never means a full heart. Do the pleasures of this world ever satisfy? Go to the ball and look on at the dancers. Are the people there happy? Are they satisfied? Go to the gambling-room. It is often elegantly furnished; wine sometimes flows like water; but are the devotees of the gambling-table happy? What is the name that men know the gambling-place by? "A gambling-hell," and it well deserves the name. Do fame and applause satisfy? Is any great general in the war, with the fame and applause and power that have recently become his, satisfied with the vast power that until recently was his? Are we in our smaller spheres satisfied with the applause that comes to us? The man who lives for the world in any form, lives for that which does not satisfy and for that which does not last. Worldliness is utter folly. The man who lives for this world, for its wealth or its pleasures, its power, its fame, or anything it can give, is not wise.

OUR text gives a third reason why worldliness is utter folly, and that is because, while the world does not last, and while it does not satisfy while it lasts, there is something that does last and that does satisfy; that is, DOING THE WILL OF GOD. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." What we have seen about the world is dark; it fills our hearts with sadness and gloom, especially in these days, when all the accumulated wealth of man is being squandered in the destruction of his fellow men; but let us look at the bright side, for there is a bright side, a gloriously bright side. "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." That certainly is not gloomy; that is glorious! Wealth will vanish, pleasure will cease, palaces will crumble, all man's pomp and pride will pass away, our earthly life will end, but if I am doing the will of God, I will live on and on and on forever. Oh, what fools we are to set our hearts upon things of a day when we can have the things eternal!

Here are two men: one is living for the things of this world and he gets them. See him, as he adds his hundreds to his hundreds, his thousands to his thousands, his millions to his millions. See him, as he builds and decorates and adorns and furnishes his city home. See him, with his vast country estate, his magnificent palace and his lawns and gardens and forests and lakes. See him with his limousines and his private yachts and motor boats. See him at his table, laden with everything that the high-priced chef can conceive. Now he has all. But wait; we go forward a few years, he is dying. As he lies there with his head bolstered upon the pillow, everything is the costilest silk and the finest linen; diamonds shine from his person; his wife, as she bends over him, is elegantly appareled, and diamonds flash on her fingers and in her ears and around her neck. How much are they worth to him? Now he is dead. What was he now? Nothing. Poor fool! But here is another man who has lived for God; he has done God's will; he has had the joy of the Lord every step of the way, and now he is dying. The room is very plainly furnished. There is a cheap mattress on his bed and a cheap pillow beneath his head. There is no silk and no fine linen here. The wife who stands beside that bed is plainly dressed, wears no jewels, but there is the light of faith and joy in his eyes and in hers. Now he is dead. No, he is not dead, he has just begun to live. The instant he closed his eyes upon this world, he opened them in the glory world, and eternity stretches before him. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Each one of us has to say for himself whether he will live for the world or live for God. To live for the world is consummate folly; to live for God is the highest wisdom; to live for the world is to make a failure of life, an utter shipwreck of life. But that is not the worst of it; it is to make an utter shipwreck of eternity. To live for God is to make a glorious success of life, of the life that now is, and the life that is to come.

BUT what is the will of God, which we are to do if we are to abide forever? Our Lord Jesus himself has answered in John 6 : 28, 29. "Then said they unto him, what shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, this is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." God's will, which we must do if we would live on forever, is simply to believe on his Son Jesus Christ; that includes all else. If you do not believe on Jesus Christ, if you do not surrender life and thought to his divine control, you can not please God; all else that you may do will not satisfy God if you refuse to obey at the first point of his will, that you believe on his Son, Jesus Christ; but if you do this all else will follow. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Do this and you will live forever. Our Lord himself tells us this over and over again. For example, he tells us in John 5 : 24, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life, and cometh not into judgment, but hath passed out of death into life." Listen again, John 3 : 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Two paths lie before each one of us. The one path, the path of living for this world, the path of setting one's affection upon wealth, or worldly pleasure, or anything that this world can give; this path leads to disappointment and barrenness and desolation here, and to disappointment, barrenness, desolation and eternal poverty hereafter, for sooner or later the world will pass away. The other path—the path of whole-hearted obedience to the will of God, of whole-hearted faith on Jesus Christ—that path leads to peace and joy and abounding satisfaction here, and to endless life and endless peace and endless joy and endless glory hereafter.

Which path will you take? "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

---

*Dean of the Bible Institute, Los Angeles, Calif.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Silken Strings and Cart-Ropes

SUNDAY, July 1. Isa. 5 : 18. "Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope!" That is always the order of moral degeneracy. We begin by toying with iniquity, we end by being bound by it. When a liner is nearing the dock a light cord is thrown across the gulf. A heavier line follows the light line, and then a heavier one still, until the mighty vessel is held in bonds. And that is how our communion with iniquity begins. It begins in a fellowship as light and flimsy as a gossamer thread. We say of the first frail thread, "I can break it whenever I like!" And, all unrecognized by us, the thin thread becomes a more complicated line, until it becomes as a cart-rope which binds us in servitude.

Now no man, when he begins to fondle iniquity, ever purposes to be bound by it. If the cart-ropes were brought out at the beginning of our trespass we should all recoil in fear, and turn hastily away. But the tempter does not begin with cables and chains; he begins with cords of vanity. In Tennyson's "Vision of Sin" the youth who is made captive is first of all ensnared by his vanity. "From the palace came a child of sin, and took him by the curls and led him in." That is to say, a little flattery was the first agent of servitude. A few compliments were passed, and the youth was on his way to ruin. But the poem ends with the gloomy spectacle of a wretched cynic dragged about by cart-ropes in the most tyrannical bonds.

No one ever intends to be a drunkard. The drunkard's degradation does not begin with cart-ropes, but with attractive cords of vanity. It begins in agreeableness, in light conviviality, in something done in the name of good fellowship. No one ever intends to be an inveterate gambler. Gambling begins as a mere condiment to the feast, adding a little spice to the game. And then the condiment begets a fierce appetite, and it becomes more important than all the rest of the feast. No one ever intends to become a confirmed liar. A liar begins his degradation in smooth words, in vain compliments, in unworthy flatteries. He indulges in easy expediencies, and in so-called white lies which do not carry even a suggestion of a succeeding chain. All forms of iniquity begin their preliminary scouting with light threads, colored threads, gay ribbons; but the baser, blacker servitude is on the way.

The great secret of moral and spiritual safety is to be able to discern the silken cords of vanity and not to touch them. We must exercise our imaginations, and we must always see the cart-rope at the end of the fragile line. If we play with the threads we are surely undone. We must know the evil one when he approaches us with fairy webs, and we must turn away in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. And there is no surer way of acquiring a healthy vigilance than by companying much with Jesus, and becoming one of his intimate friends. Communion creates likeness, and in the wisdom and strength of the Lord we can practice his resistance, and share his glory. J. H. J.

Possessing Our Possessions

MONDAY, July 2. Obadiah 17. "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." These words imply the possibility that we have an unclaimed inheritance as the children of God. And indeed most Christians have. When we look over the books in savings-banks, it is rather strange to find many dormant accounts. Years ago somebody started an account in the savings-bank and forgot all about it, and it has gone on accumulating interest and remains unclaimed. There are many dormant accounts in Christian experience. Have we joy? Have we peace? Have we freedom? If not, these are among the unclaimed possessions which by the exercise of persevering faith we may acquire.

The verse suggests also the possibility that our possessions may unduly possess us, whereas mere possessions, that is to say chattels, things, were never meant to possess us, but rather to be possessed. We must consider nothing our true good which can be taken away from us. The expression, "to catch a Tartar," comes from that old story of the soldier who called back to his comrades, "I have taken a prisoner." They said, "Bring him in," and he replied, "He won't let me." The fact was, his prisoner had taken him. The miser does not possess his possessions, but is possessed by them. Both beautiful and wise is that old prayer, "So teach us to pass through things temporal that we may not lose things eternal."

Our possessions in Christ are beyond measurement or calculation. "All things are yours." Prophecy is ours, for it testifies of Jesus. History is ours, for it is only a spacious corridor through which the Lord Christ advances to the conquest of the world. Life is ours, for it affords us an opportunity to serve the Master. Death is ours, for it shall strip us of our threadbare garments and prepare us to enter the Palace of the King. C. C. A.

A Fool's Lips

TUESDAY, July 3. Prov. 18 : 6, 7. "A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes. A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul." The literal rendering of this text is very descriptive of the unwisdom of the meddler: "The fool's lips come with quarrel." He comes for the purpose of mixing himself up with a dispute that does not concern him. Quarrel is on his lips as he approaches; you can almost see it. When he opens his lips, it is as when a bomb had been hurled between the combatants; the strife waxes hotter; the settlement of the dispute is put farther off because of the uncalled-for interference of the fool. Or there may have been no quarrel at all, but a contentious person coming in soon has people at sixes and sevens by his rasping remarks. In the end the unsocial habit of meddling proves a boomerang: when men realize that the meddler is a disturber of their peace, that he has kept them from reaching an understanding, they turn upon him with just indignation, because they are aware that in order to remove the strife the meddler must first be removed. The reward of the unbridled tongue is "strokes" and "destruction." These words need not always have a physical meaning, though in not a few instances they express what literally happened to the meddlesome person. Often there are gentler but no less effectual measures possible for silencing the meddler. Truly, a fool's lips are the snare of his soul. He endangers his life by his inconsiderate speech. Men despise and hate him for his meddlesomeness. May the grace of God put a lock upon our mouth when there is about to be a quarrel, and whenever we do speak on such an occasion may we speak as peacemakers for the edification of all who hear us.

W. H. T. D.

Nothing to Fear

WEDNESDAY, July 4. Ps. 23 : 4. "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Many years ago, when the writer thought his work was done, the hills of eternity looked inviting. It seemed the natural thing to do, to mount up on wings,

> "To rise to worlds unknown;
> And behold thee on thy throne," and to sing with the celestial company,

> "Rock of ages, cleft for me,
> Let me hide myself in thee."

I felt some as Bishop Foss said he did: "Sickness and death seem the easiest and most natural thing in the world." All fear was swallowed up in loving desire to join the redeemed.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath in such an hour. Dr. Backus, president of Hamilton College, when told he had only half an hour to live, exclaimed, "Is that so? Then take me out of my bed and place me on my knees and let me spend that time calling upon God for the salvation of the world." And there, like Livingstone in Africa, by his bedside, he was caught up into the heavenly company. After such near approach, one dwells more in the heavenly presence. His conversation is where his heart is; his songs, hopes and thoughts are about that country. A saint once said, "Only an inch of time remains, and then eternal ages roll on forever." One feels like using every moment for God's glory after having had a look into the life forever. E. W. C.

Unconscious Drifting

THURSDAY, July 5. Heb. 2 : 1. "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away from them." Every one of us must have his dreamful hours, but as Lord Bacon said, "In this theater of human action, it remains only for God and angels to be lookers-on." Indeed, God is no mere looker-on in his universe. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Nor are angels mere spectators. "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

We live in a world of activity. Atoms and molecules jostle each other. Ether waves are vibrant. Nature knows no such thing as inaction. If these things be true, this world is no place for the soul in love with languor. Our life is so ordered that no one of us can drift into fortune or culture or character, though we may drift away from them. It requires only a casual knowledge of life to discover that there is a drift away from goodness and away from truth. A neglected garden is full of weeds. A neglected soul is soon the haunt of every evil thing.

There must be an initial impulse to resist the drift to evil. The word of the Lord came to a prophet, saying, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet." It was a challenge to moral strength and spiritual erectness. Is a life of resistance difficult? Doubtless. And yet we have it in our power to fix our moral habits, to create our spiritual environment. And no one of us can be "strong in his purpose and pure in his strife, and all life not be stronger and purer thereby."

C. C. A.

The Talebearer

FRIDAY, July 6. Prov. 18 : 8. "The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly." Here too the literal rendering brings out by a fine metaphor the evil of slander: "The words of the whisperer are as dainty morsels." The slanderer acts as if he had something of great importance to communicate which he could not trust to every ear. Moreover, he seems to bestow a special favor upon us by taking us into his confidence. He merely breathes his information into our listening ear. He may also veil his report in much circumlocution; he may only suggest a possibility, not declare a fact. He may insinuate. Woe to the unsuspecting person who accepts the slanderer's offered delicacies, who swallows the sweet gossip! He is taking poison that will enter his most secret thought and vitiate his innermost life.

Social life in any organized community, even in the hamlet, is built up on mutual confidence and fairness. Men who are to live together must take each other as they are and try to understand each other. This is the very least that is required. They should also believe not the worst but the best of each other, and they will do this if they are Christians. The slanderer, therefore, destroys the foundation of all social intercourse between man and man. He is not only the enemy of the people whom he misrepresents but of the entire community. He is a menace not only to the peace of mind of individuals but to the public peace. When the slanderer can do his disastrous work with the modern means for disseminating news, the extent of the actual and possible evils which he may create for a nation, for the entire world, is awful to contemplate. God pity the person who becomes the victim of slander, and give us the grace to shut our ears resolutely to the whisperer and to repress every rising slander of which we become aware. W. H. T. D.

Price of Redemption

SATURDAY, July 7. I Cor. 6 : 20. "For ye are bought with a price." "Jesus paid it all" is welcome news to insolvent debtors. When we were slaves to sin, he purchased our pardon. When we were stained with guilt, he opened the fountain of cleansing. Wanderers in a far country, he himself became our way home; yea, he walks with us in sweet companionship and blessed guidance.

What can we do for Him who bankrupted himself, became poor that we through his poverty might become rich? Shall we despise our benefactor, refuse his gifts, deny his loving kindness, reject his offer of liberty? Such ingratitude would be indescribable folly. What child could thus push aside the mother who bore him, loved and reared him, and ever watched over him? But a mother may forget her child—he will not forget thee.

> "I gave my life for thee;
> What hast thou given for me?"

We have peace by his blood, ransom by his cross, heaven by his love. Your freedom is purchased, but, alas, you may love slavery better than freedom, the serfdom of Egypt better than the glory of Canaan, the bondage of Satan better than the liberty of the sons of God.

Well may we exclaim, "Blessed Jesus, who bore our sins, carried our sorrows, was touched with the feelings of our infirmities, endured the cross for us, was glad to pay the price of our redemption that we might live unto him and with him in the everlasting life!" E. W. C.

Don't break the back of today with yesterday's failings and tomorrow's forebodings.

And summer pauses while a gleam from heaven hovers near!

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

More Light on the Bible

ARCHEOLOGY is by no means a recent science, but the Christian use of archeology is more recent than some people suppose. It has remained for our generation to derive new light on old Scriptures from the remains of art, architecture, monuments and implements which have been discovered in the rubbish-heaps of the East. Egypt, Babylonia and Assyria were the three great nations which preceded the development of the Israelitish people. Interwoven with Old Testament history are references to the Hittites, Moabites, and Phœnicians. Much light has been thrown on many unique and otherwise mysterious texts by the scraps of knowledge turned up by the spade of the excavator. Not a few doubtful statements of Scripture have been confirmed and innumerable "dark sayings" have been made plain.

Dr. George A. Barton, professor of Biblical literature and Semitic languages in Bryn Mawr College, has written a notable book with the attractive title, "Archeology and the Bible," which is published by the American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia. Dr. Barton's purpose is to summarize and popularize the information derived from excavations in Bible lands, and to present the material in such a way as to be of service to Bible students.

Most readers of the Christian Herald are already familiar with the "Sayings of Jesus," discovered a few years ago at Oxyrhynchus, in Egypt, by Grenfell and Hunt, two English excavators. Not so well known are the El-Amarna Letters, inscribed on clay tablets in Babylonian characters, discovered by accident on the east bank of the Nile about two hundred miles south of Cairo. They open an entirely new vista in the history of Palestine and give us a notion of Jerusalem more than 350 years before David conquered it for Israel. It gives one a startling sense of the sweep of history to read letters which were written from Palestine during the patriarchal period. New light is also thrown on New Testament books. For instance, in the year 1909 an altar was discovered at Pergamos in Asia Minor, the home of one of the churches of the book of Revelation, bearing a mutilated inscription, which could not have been very different from the altar Paul saw in Athens, dedicated "To an Unknown God."

In Acts 17 : 6 the rulers of Thessalonica are called in the Greek tongue "politarchs." The accuracy of this term has been called in question, but there are now no fewer than nineteen inscriptions which have come to light, referring to the rulers of Thessalonica as politarchs. Moreover, it has been proved that the census referred to in Luke 2 : 2 was a periodical occurrence, and that it was customary for people to go to their ancestral residences for enrolment. The time seems not far distant, if it has not already come, when archeology may be named among the collateral and presumptive evidences of Christianity.

The Only Remedy

UNDER section 12 of the Army Act it is made a misdemeanor to sell liquor to men in uniform, and the offense is punishable by fine and imprisonment. The New York Times of June 13 states that many violations of the kind are occurring in New York and New Jersey. In one section of Hoboken at six different saloons the soldiers stood in line to get to the bars to drink. This situation can be found duplicated in other states.

The War Department is going vigorously after saloons and disreputable resorts in the zones surrounding the training camps of the army. Last week the notorious resorts at El Paso and San Antonio were closed to protect the morals of the soldiers. This order of the War Department covers the mobilization camps, officers' training camps and all army camps. It will also be applied to naval camps. In his letter to the officials of states and cities the Secretary of War writes that in the training camps will be gathered together a great preponderance of young men who have not yet become accustomed to contact with drinking and the various forms of vice, and who "will be at that plastic and generous period of life when their service to their country should be surrounded by safeguards against temptations to which they are not accustomed. We cannot allow these young men to be surrounded by a vicious and demoralizing environment. I am determined that our new training camps, as well as the surrounding zones within an effective radius, shall not be places of temptation and peril."

For the sake of the young recruits it is well that the causes of temptation should be resolutely removed or suppressed. But that which is bad for the soldier is equally bad for the civilian. At a time like the present there would seem to be no adequate remedy short of actual prohibition. Even the heavy tax proposed to be placed on liquors will fail to check the evil, if vile adulterants can be made to cheapen the stuff. The better way would be to make a clean sweep of it, once for all, and to throw the protecting arm of prohibition around the whole people, so that we may be a sober and efficient nation, fitted to cope with a great emergency.

"Bread Upon the Waters"

"CAST thy bread upon the waters," says the Book of books, "for thou shalt find it after many days." Thousands of readers of this journal have responded to our appeals in behalf of the non-combatant war sufferers in Europe and the near East. Today, their gifts are working in all the zones of human suffering. In no region is the help they have given proving more effective than in Syria and Armenia, as the following letter testifies:

> "American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief,
> "New York, June 5, 1917.
>
> "The Christian Herald:
>
> "I desire to acknowledge receipt of the check for ten thousand dollars in fulfilment of the pledge made in connection with the meeting in the William A. Sunday Tabernacle last Monday night. Your readers may be interested in knowing that this ten thousand dollars will supply the only food available for the next month for five thousand orphans in the Russian Caucasus, and, with your previous gifts to this fund now totaling $55,089.85, will prove a most substantial factor in sustaining the life of hundreds of thousands of refugees in Western Asia, until they may be rehabilitated and restored to self-support.
>
> C. V. VICKREY, Secretary."

It is gratifying to know that, even amid the perils and uncertainties of war, the stream of benevolence which has been flowing from America to Europe has continued unchecked and that it is accomplishing good results. It is surely a great privilege to engage in such a work as that described in this letter.

A Muddled Situation

THERE is something radically wrong back of the food control situation. Congress is accused of holding up the bill which calls for an appropriation of $15,000,000 "to carry out the requirements of the measure." There is a strong element lustily demanding a minimum price on foodstuffs with no maximum, and an equally large element as lustily demanding a maximum price with no minimum.

Carl Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, says that "food gamblers, some of them men of immense wealth," are at the capitol, seeking to defeat the food bills. Herbert Hoover, Food Administrator elect, says the food shortage abroad is growing acute; while Joseph Hartigan, Inspector of Weights and Measures, declares such vast quantities of foodstuffs have never before been stored in New York.

Why no action is taken either at Washington against the food lobbyists, who must be known to Vrooman, or in New York against the food gamblers, who must be known to Hartigan, is the pressing question. Vigorous prosecution of these and searching investigation of their methods might wondrously clarify the whole situation.

Is Your Minister Overworked?

ONE of our denominational contemporaries, the Lutheran, of Lebanon, Pa., thoughtfully calls attention to the fact that, while practically the whole world of workers is striving toward an eight-hour day, the ministers are a notable exception. Indeed, there would seem to be no place in the average pastor's experience where an eight-hour day could possibly be made to fit in. His year's actual service would cover 534 days instead of the calendar number. He devotes on an average 156 days to sermons and study, 78 days to writing, 52 Sundays to services, 20 days to church finances, 75 days to parochial visitation, 30 days to the sick, 25 days to calls which he cannot avoid paying, 39 to civic and community work and a like number to unclassified duties, besides the time consumed in the inevitable routine of weddings, funerals, christenings, church conferences, Bible school, and a long line of incidentals. For this endless round of activities there are not enough hours in the twenty-four; yet, for the faithful performance of all, he usually gets a very meager salary, for the income of the average preacher—unless he can eke it out somewhat by literary work, for which he has but few opportunities—seldom exceeds that of a worker in a bakery or a carshop, and is considerably below that of an artisan in any of the regular trades. And this comparison applies to all of the denominations, big and little. There are, of course, ministers who are well paid, but these are exceptional cases.

The Lutheran has made out a good case in its showing for the underpaid and overworked preacher. When one remembers that the preparatory training for the pulpit is an arduous and costly one, it would seem that the outcome should be proportionate to the service rendered. What the minister needs, and deserves, is not an eight-hour day, but a fair living salary. The clerical professional, faithful and self-sacrificing, should not be at the foot of the list. He deserves better recognition and fuller appreciation.

Real Investments and Real Dividends

OUR faiths and beliefs, our habits of thinking, our attitude of mind—these are our real investments in this life. And as they are, so must be the dividends we draw.

We attribute too much importance to environment, to outside influences, in the shaping of our characters and our lives.

Our characters and our lives unfold, like the rose, from within.

As the stream flows out from the hidden spring, so each life flows out from the inner mind.

If the spring is pure, the stream is pure; and as the mind is, so is the life.

Our every thought is an investment—the only real investment we can make—and like it will be our dividends.

These in the aggregate, noble or base, true or false, make up our fortunes or our failures.

According to his thought investments, each one of us may make himself a millionaire of cheerfulness, of charitable impulse, of human helpfulness, or he may make himself a moral bankrupt and a miserable pauper.

For, after all of the so-called "practical" things are said—after all the gold in the world is weighed—the real riches of this life, our dividends of real substance, are the spiritual satisfaction and the moral uplift we gain in our hearts, and the satisfaction and uplift we give to the hearts of others.

Bees That Are Bandits

A NEW JERSEY man is accused by his neighbors of keeping a species of bees that, instead of honestly making honey from flower and clover bloom, thievishly plunder the hives of all the working bees in the neighborhood.

It is asserted that this man, although he has not kept an honest bee in seven years, regularly sells more honey than any other bee man in the Delaware Valley.

No doubt these allegations will surprise most people. The bee has been commonly looked upon as incorruptibly honest and as an unvarying model of industry. Indeed, it was from the bee that man first learned that industry and honesty go through this world hand in hand.

The man, or the bee, that won't work is bound to have unhealthy views and improper practices regarding the rights of property. The degrading effects of idleness have long been observable in man. But it has been thought that the bee is of a higher order.

If a story had come from New Jersey, or anywhere else, telling that a gang of men had been making their living, not by work, but by plundering the savings of industrious people, not the slightest surprise would have been excited. Men are a good deal given to that sort of thing everywhere.

But it appears that bees can suffer degradation as well as men. And, according to the charges made in this case, whisky entered into the degradation of the bees just as it does into that of men. It is claimed that the bees were fed on "doped" honey in order to make thieves of them. The drunken bee becomes a bandit. Befuddled with booze, he refuses to work and turns to riotous living.

We fondly claim great superiority for the human mind over the mind of the bee. Certainly, it is superior under normal conditions. But it seems that booze brings them to the same level so far as the more essential qualities are concerned.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

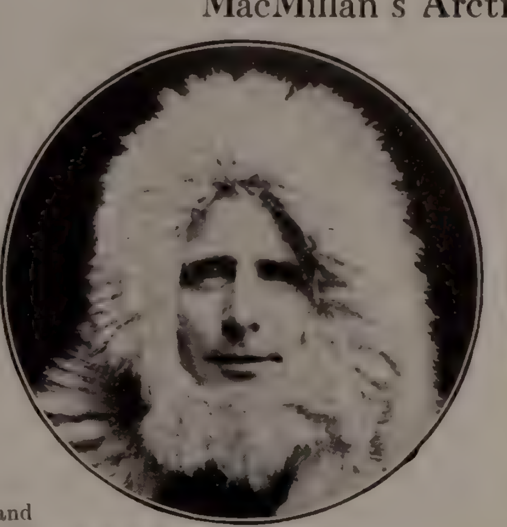
Earthquake Destroys San Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, the capital of the little republic of Salvador, was entirely wiped out by an earthquake the night of June 7. At six o'clock that evening, with its residences and open plazas, its parks and public buildings, and its lovely natural scenery, it was one of the most beautiful cities of Central America. At six the next morning it was a mass of ruins, with scarcely 100 houses standing, and 60,000 people homeless. In the convulsion the neighboring volcanoes poured out lava, boiling water and ashes. A region for thirty miles around the capital was devastated, including the towns of Quepaltepeque, Neiapasuchichoto, Paisnal, Armenios and Mejilcanos. Among the ruins was the magnificent capitol, which cost $5,000,000, and the American legation building. The records of the legation were saved. Fire caught and swept over the business portion of the city, but was gotten under control. The most fortunate thing about the calamity is that there was little loss of life. San Salvador was founded nearly 400 years ago, in 1528. It has had bad luck with earthquakes. In 1854, as a prosperous city of 25,000 population, it was so completely wiped out by an earthquake that it was taken twelve miles away, and the capital was called New San Salvador. Four years later, the city went back to the old site with the old name. It was visited by violent earthquakes in 1873, 1879, and 1891. Salvador is the smallest and most thickly populated of all the Central American republics. Like most of Central America, it has been tortured by tornadoes and earthquakes. May God and his good people aid the afflicted inhabitants of the wrecked city of San Salvador. May the damage soon be repaired. There was an earthquake in Palestine which Josephus said was so severe that it tore a mountain into halves. There is this reference to it: "Yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah." (Zech. 14 : 5.)

MacMillan's Arctic Explorers Safe



Dr. D. B. MacMillan

Capt. Bob Bartlett

ON July 2, 1914, Dr. Donald MacMillan, the explorer, and other members of the Crocker Land Expedition organized by the American Museum of Natural History, the American Geographical Society and the University of Illinois, left New York on the sealer Diana in search of the unexplored land which Admiral Peary thought he saw on his way to the discovery of the North Pole. Lieutenant Fitzhugh Green, Jerome Allen and Maurice Tanquary returned a year ago, having accomplished the hazardous sledge trip of nearly 1,500 miles, which has been repeated in full by Dr. Hunt and in part by Elmer Ekblaw. MacMillan and J. S. Small alone remain in Etah, but they have been joined there by Dr. Hovey and Captain Comer. A year of silence caused the deep fear that MacMillan and those left with him had been lost, and a ship was being arranged to be sent in search for them. The silence was broken the other day by a cablegram from Dr. Hunt at the Faroe Islands, stating that MacMillan and his party were safe at Etah, Greenland. About July 1 a third relief ship, the Neptune, a steam whaler, will be sent either from St. John or Sydney, Nova Scotia, and will be commanded by Captain Robert A. Bartlett, who was with Peary when he found the top of the world. A week or so after Hunt's cablegram announcing the safety of the party, a message came from MacMillan himself. The message begins: "All well at Etah, headquarters Crocker Land expedition. Relief ships of 1915 and 1916 failed to reach us. Dr. E. O. Hovey and Captain George Comer arrived by power boat from North Star Bay in September. Will spend year with us. Hunt and Ekblaw proceeding home by way of South Greenland and Copenhagen. Have good warm house, plenty of fuel and adequate supply of food until August, 1917. A third ineffectual attempt at relief will compel us to resort to Eskimo mode of living—an igloo for shelter, skins for clothing, and meat for food." The message continues at length, a graphic and thrilling report of the trips finding "Crocker Land" a "mirage land," but discovering six new islands, and mapping and exploring the Finlay Islands seen by the ill-fated Sir John Franklin over sixty years ago, but never touched by the foot of a white man. The message reports the splendid work done by the scientists in their various departments, and those who sent out the expedition say its results will be worth all it cost. We see here illustrated man's mastery over nature. However far men may go to the north or south, to the east or west, the Gospel shall follow them, according to this prophecy: "He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel; all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God." (Ps. 98:3.)

Cedar Log 1,380 Years Old

A LARGE cedar tree, probably thrown over by the wind, fell in a great forest in Washington and was found by wood-choppers recently without any marks of decay in it, not in petrified form, but in good natural condition, although a tree which was standing astride the log had 1,380 annual rings. The woodsmen found the log so sound that they determined to cut it up into shingles for the market. What a story the log could tell, if it could speak, of the long procession of people that came upon the stage and departed during its life of between one and two thousand years! The Jews knew the durability of the cedar and used it in their choicest buildings. The king's palace was made of it. "David said unto Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in a house of cedars." (I Chron. 17 : 1.)

Rich Indian, Liberty Loan

WITH nearly $800,000 on deposit to his credit in the United States Treasury and in a dozen or more banks, and with a monthly income of nearly $50,000, Jackson Barnett, sixty-three years old, a full-blood Creek Indian living near Henryetta, Okla., offered through his guardian, Carl J. O'Hornett, to invest most of his fortune in Liberty Bonds. His guardian telegraphed to Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma, urging that steps be taken to authorize the investment. The son of a Creek chief, Barnett lived the life of a nomad of the plains, fishing and hunting and avoiding all contact with the white settlers. When Indian Territory became Oklahoma and lands were allotted to the Creeks, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Seminoles and Cherokees for farming purposes in the eastern section of the state, Barnett indignantly refused to accept his land, which nevertheless was allotted to him, explaining that it was fit only for coyotes and jackrabbits to starve on. One day about 1905 oil was discovered in the vicinity of Barnett's land, and a few months later a company of eastern capitalists applied to the Department of the Interior for a long-term lease of Barnett's allotment. In due time the lease was executed, and by its terms Barnett has ever since received part of the proceeds of the sale of oil, money being deposited in national banks of Oklahoma to his credit. He seldom spends more than $50 a month for provisions, and what is left he distributes cheerfully among the less fortunate Indians of his tribe. This richest Indian in the world was wise and patriotic in his offer. No money is more secure than that invested in the Liberty bonds. Uncle Sam is the safest institution on earth. Money is as necessary as men in the conduct of the war. Ten million as superb young men as ever trod the earth stand ready to give lives for the flag, and a hundred million of people stand just as loyally behind them with the money necessary for the campaign. It is likely that before these lines are read the Liberty loan will have been subscribed. But millions more will be needed, and a loyal nation will supply them. June 3 was Liberty Bond Day in many of the churches, and some of the ministers preached from this text: "And proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." (Lev. 25 :10.)

Y. M. C. A. War Fund

A STATEMENT has just been issued by the National War Council of the Young Men's Christian Association that it has already raised nearly $2,000,000 of the $3,000,000 needed to carry into effect the extensive war program which the Association has worked out for the comfort and instruction of the soldiers and sailors of the United States. The other million will be cheerfully given. What a beautiful work so magnificently provided for. God speaking to and blessing young men by young men! The young men of the Association and the precious boys in the ranks may well listen to the words of the apostle: "I write to you, young men, because ye are strong." (I John 2 :14.)

Poet Lampton Dies

COLONEL W. J. LAMPTON, journalist, who called himself the "Plain Poet of the People," died in his bachelor quarters in the French Y. M. C. A. in New York May 30. Eighteen years ago the New York Sun editorially announced that Lampton was the father of the "yawp" type of poetry. The late poet was brilliant, humorous, satirical, tender of heart, and immensely popular. An intimate personal friend of his said: "Well, Lampton was more himself than any human being I have ever known. Affectation was a stranger to him, and utter, almost childlike, naturalness was his rule. He knew practically all the great people of his day in this country, but he was quite as informal and engaging with a cabinet officer as with a waiter. As to his work, its expression was American to the bone. Charles A. Dana of the Sun brought him to New York because of it. Henry Watterson, in the preface to one of Lampton's volumes of verse, said that Lampton always hit the mark. Not long ago Dr. John H. Finley of New York produced from his pocketbook a yellowed clipping of Lampton's famous poem, 'The American Eagle Speaks,' which Dr. Finley had carried around for ten years. Seeking always to reach immediately to the point, his humor was sometimes of the roughest and always that of the man on the street; yet he has written some of the tenderest lines in American poetry, particularly when he wrote of women or of Lincoln." There were immortal poets among the Hebrews. Some of the Grecian poets have few rivals to-day. Paul in his address in Athens makes this reference to one of them: "For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17 : 28.)

Valuable Addition to Plow

A FORTUNATE device has just appeared to aid the farmer in the increased food supply so necessary. A young man, a graduate of the Agricultural College of Minnesota, has just invented a device which greatly lessens the labor and greatly increases the effectiveness of preparing the soil for the reception of the seed. The device can be hitched to any ordinary sulky plow, and in going once over the field the ground is ready for the seed instead of having to make other trips with the harrow and roller to break the clods. It consists of a steel-toothed rotor set to the right of the mold-board of the plow and operated at high speed by a small gasoline motor which is mounted on the frame of the plow. The revolving teeth pulverize the soil and throw it out at the rear evenly so that seeding may be done simultaneously if desired, or immediately following the plow. This tiller can be used as an attachment to the motor plow. The prophet thus refers to plowing the ground for seed: "Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his ground?" (Isa. 28:24, 25.)

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XII—Continued

THE TRAIL OF THE INK

AS soon as possible Burke Denby went to his Aunt Eunice and told her his sorry tale. From her he obtained one or two names, and—what he eagerly grasped at—an address in Boston. Each of these clues he followed assiduously, only to find that it led nowhere. Angrier, but no wiser, he went back home.

The detective, too, reported no progress. And as the days became weeks, and the weeks a month, with no word of Helen, Burke settled into a bitterness of wrath and resentment that would not brook the mention of Helen's name in his presence.

Burke was feeling very much abused these days. He was, indeed, thinking of himself and pitying himself almost constantly. The woman to whom he had given his name (and for whom he had sacrificed so much) had made that name a byword and a laughing-stock in his native town. He was neither bachelor nor husband. He was not even a widower, but a nondescript thing to be pointed out as a sort of monster. Even his child was taken away from him; and was doubtless being brought up to hate him—Burke forgot that Dorothy Elizabeth was as yet but slightly over two years old.

As for Helen's side of the matter—Burke was too busy polishing his own shield of defense to give any consideration to hers. When he thought of his wife, it was usually only to say bitterly to himself: "Humph! When that ten thousand dollars is gone we'll hear from her all right!" And he was not worrying about her comfort—with ten thousand dollars to spend.

"She knows where she is, and she knows where I am," he would declare fiercely to himself. "When she gets good and ready she'll come—and not until then, evidently!"

IN March a line from Dr. Gleason said that he would be in town a day or two, and would drop in to see them.

With the letter in his hand, Burke went to his father.

"Gleason's coming Friday," he announced tersely.

"Well?"

"We've got to settle on what to tell him."

"About——"

"Helen—yes. Of course—he'll have to know something; but—I shall tell him mighty little." Burke's lips snapped together in the grim manner that was becoming habitual with him.

Gleason came on Friday. There was an odd constraint in his manner. At the same time there was a nervous wistfulness that was almost an appeal. Yet he was making, obviously, a great effort to appear as usual.

Not until Burke found himself alone with his guest did he speak of his wife. Then he said:

"You know, of course, that Helen has—er—that she is not here."

"Yes." There was a subdued excitement in the doctor's voice.

"Of course! Everybody knows that, I suppose," retorted Burke bitterly. He hesitated, then went on, with manifest effort: "If you don't mind, old fellow, we'll leave it—right there. There's really nothing that I care to say."

A LOOK of keen disappointment crossed the doctor's face.

"But, Burke, if you knew that your wife—" began the doctor imploringly.

"There are no 'ifs' about it," interrupted Burke, with stern implacability. "Helen knows very well where I am, and—she isn't here. That's enough for me."

"But, my dear boy—" pleaded the doctor again.

"Gleason, please, I'd rather not talk about it," interrupted Burke Denby decidedly. And the doctor, in the face of the stern uncompromisingness of the man before him, and of his own solemn but hard-wrung promise, given to a no less uncompromising little woman whom he had left only the day before, was forced to drop the matter. His face, however, still carried its look of troubled disappointment. And he steadfastly refused to remain at the house even for a meal—a most extraordinary proceeding for him.

"He's angry, and he's angry with me," muttered Burke Denby to himself, his eyes moodily fixed on the doctor's hurrying figure as it disappeared down the street. "He wanted to preach and plead, and tell me my 'duty.' As if I didn't know my own business best myself! Bah! A fig for his 'ifs' and 'buts'!"

CHAPTER XIII

A WOMAN'S WON'T

TWO days after his visit to Dalton, Frank Gleason dropped himself into a low chair in his sister's private sitting-room in the Beacon Hill house.

"Well?" prompted Mrs. Thayer, voice and manner impatiently eager.

"Nothing."

"Nothing! But there must have been something!"

"There wasn't a thing—that will help."

"But, aren't they frightened—anxious—anything? Don't they care where she is?"

"Oh, yes; they care very much," smiled the doctor wearily; "but not in the way that is going to help any. I couldn't get anything out of Burke, and I didn't get much more out of his father. But I did a little."

"They don't know, of course, that she's here?"

"I hope not!—under the circumstances. But I felt all kinds of a knave and a fool and a traitor. I got away as soon as possible. I couldn't stay. I hoped to get something—anything—that I could use for a cudgel over Helen, to get her to go back, you know. But I couldn't get a thing. However, I shall keep on urging, of course."

"But what did they say?"

"Burke said nothing, practically. Nor would he let me say anything. He is very angry (his father told me that), and very bitter."

"But isn't he frightened, or worried?"

"Not according to his father. It seems they have had a detective on the case, and have traced her to Boston. There the trail ends. But they have found out enough to feel satisfied that no evil has befallen her. Burke argues that Helen is staying somewhere (with friends, he believes) because she wants to. Such being the case he doesn't want her back until she gets good and ready to come. He does want the baby. John Denby told me, in fact, that he believed if Burke found them now, as he's feeling, he'd insist on a separation; and that the baby should be given to him."

"Given to him, indeed!" flashed Mrs. Thayer angrily. "And yet, in the face of that, you sit there and say you shall urge her to go back, of course."

Frank Gleason stirred uneasily.

"I know, Edith, but——"

"There isn't any question about it," interrupted Mrs. Thayer decidedly. "That poor child stays where she is now."

"Oh, but, Edith, this sort of thing can't go on forever, you know," remonstrated the doctor nervously, his forehead drawn into an anxious frown.

"I wasn't talking about forever," returned the lady, with tranquil confidence. "I was talking about now, to-day, next week, next year, if it's necessary."

"Next year!"

"Certainly—if Burke Denby hasn't come to his senses by that time. Why, Frank Gleason, don't you suppose I'd do anything, everything, to help that child keep her baby? She worships it. Besides, it's going to be the making of her."

"I know; but if they could be brought together—Burke and his wife, I mean—it seems as if—as if—" The man came to a helpless pause.

"Frank, see here," began Edith Thayer resolutely. "You know as well as I do that those two people have been wretched together for a year or more. They are not suited to each other. They weren't in the first place. To make matters worse, they were both nothing but petted, spoiled children, no more fit to take on the responsibilities of marriage than my Bess and Charlie would be. All their lives they'd had their own dolls and shotguns to do as they pleased with; and when it came to marrying and sharing everything, including their time and their tempers, they flew into bits—both of them."

"Yes, I know," sighed the man, still with a troubled frown.

"Well, they're apart now. Never mind who was to blame for it, or whether it was or wasn't a wise move. It's done. They're apart. They've got a chance to think things over—to stand back and get a perspective, as it were. Helen thinks she can metamorphose herself into the perfect wife that Burke will love. Perhaps she can. Let us say she has one chance in a million of doing so;—well, I mean she shall have that chance, especially as the alternative—that is, her going back home now—is sure to be nothing but utter wretchedness all round."

Frank Gleason shook his head.

"Yes, yes, very plausible—to say, of course. I see she's talked you over. She did me. It really is absurd, you know, when you come right down to it. Here are Burke and his father, my good friends, hunting the country over for Burke's wife and child. And here am I, harboring her and abetting her, and never opening my head. Really, it's the sort of thing that you'd say—er—couldn't happen, you know."

"But it is happening; and so far as their finding her is concerned, you said yourself, long ago, that it was the safest hiding-place in the world, for they'd never think of looking in it. As for the few of my friends who see her, she's merely Mrs. Darling. That's all. Besides, you're entirely leaving out of consideration Helen's own attitude in the matter. I haven't a doubt but that, if you did tell, she'd at least attempt to carry out her crazy threats of flight and oblivion. Really, Frank, so far as being a friend is concerned, you're being the truest friend, both to Burke and his father, and to Helen, by keeping her and protecting her from herself and others—to say nothing of the real help I hope I'm being to her."

"I know, I know," sighed the man, thrusting his hands into his pockets, and scowling at the toe of his shoe. "You're a brick, Edith! It's been simply marvelous to me—the way you've taken hold. Even that first awful Sunday morning last July, when I showed you what I'd brought you, didn't quite bowl you over."

"It did almost," laughed Edith; "especially when she blurted out that alarming speech, after you'd told me who she was."

"What did she say? I don't remember."

"She said, tragically, frenziedly: 'Oh, Mrs. Thayer, you will help me, won't you?—to be swell and grand and know things, so's Burke won't be ashamed of me. And if you can't make me so, you will Baby, won't you? I'll do anything—everything you say. Oh, please say you will. I know you're Burke's kind of folks, just to look at you, and at this—the house, and all these swell fixings! You will, won't you? Oh, please say you will!'"

"No wonder you were struck dumb at her nerve and at mine in asking you to take her in," laughed the doctor softly.

"Oh, but 'twas for only a minute. I capitulated at once, first because of the baby—she was such a dear!—then because of the mother's love for it. I thought I'd seen devotion, Frank, but never have I seen it like hers."

"How is she doing, really, about—well, er—this private self-improvement association of hers?"

"Splendidly! She's a daily marvel to me, she's so patient and painstaking. Oh, of course she hasn't learned so very much—yet. But she's so alert and earnest, and she watches everything so! Indeed, if it weren't really so pitiful and so tragic, it would be perfectly funny and absurd. The things she does and says—the things she asks me to teach her! Feverishly and systematically she's set herself to becoming 'swell' and 'grand.'"

"Swell! Grand!"

"Oh, yes, I know," laughed the lady, answering his shuddering words and gesture. "And—we've nearly eliminated those expressions from our vocabulary now. Burke didn't like them either, she says."

"I can imagine not," observed the doctor dryly.

"Of course all the teaching in the world isn't going to accomplish the thing she wants," went on Mrs. Thayer, a little soberly. "I might teach her till doomsday that clothes, jewels, grooming, and perfume don't make the lady; and unless she learns by intuition and absorption what does make the lady, she'll be little better off than she was before. But she puts me now through a daily catechism until sometimes I am nearly wild. 'Do ladies do this?' 'Do ladies do that?' she queries at every turn, so that I am almost ready to fly off into a veritable orgy of slang and silliness, just from sheer contrariety. I can tell you, Frank, this attempting to teach Helen Denby isn't very easy. If you think it is, you try it yourself."

"Heaven forbid!" shrugged the man. "But I'll risk you, Edith. But, tell me—does she help you any, in any way? Do you think you can—keep her, for a while?"

"Keep her? Of course I shall keep her! Do you suppose I'd turn that child adrift now? Besides, she's a real help to me with the children. And I know—and she knows——"

THERE came the sound of hurried steps, then the sudden wide flinging of the door, and the appearance of a breathless young woman.

"Oh, Mrs. Thayer, they said the doctor had come, and—" Helen Denby stopped short, her abashed eyes going from one to the other of the expressive faces before her. "Oh, I—I beg your pardon," she faltered. "I hadn't ought to have burst in like this. Ladies don't. You said yesterday that ladies never did. But I—I—doctor, you went to—to Dalton?" she appealed to the man.

"Yes, Mrs. Denby."

"And you saw—them? Burke and his father?"

"Yes."

"But, you didn't—you didn't tell them I was here?"

"Of course not! Didn't I promise you I wouldn't?"

Helen Denby relaxed visibly, and dropped herself into a low chair near by. The color came back to her face.

"I know; but I was so afraid they'd find out—some way."

"They didn't—from me."

She raised startled eyes to his face.

"You don't mean they do know where I am?"

"Oh, no. But—" The doctor stirred uneasily. "Mrs. Denby, don't you think— Won't you let me tell them where you are?"

"Do they want to know?"

"Yes. They are trying very hard to find you."

"Of course. But if they find me—what then? Does Burke—want me?"

The doctor flushed.

"Well, he—yes—that is, he—well, of course——"

The red deepened on the doctor's face. "Well, of course, Burke is very angry and very bitter, just now," he explained defensively. "But if you two could be brought together—" He paused helplessly.

She shook her head.

"'Twould be the same old story—only worse. I see so many things now that I never saw before. Even if he said right now that he wanted me, I wouldn't go back. I wouldn't dare to. 'Twouldn't be a day before he'd be ashamed of me again. Maybe some time I'll learn—" She paused, her eyes wistfully fixed out the window. "But if I don't"—she turned almost frenziedly—"Betty will. Betty is going to be a lady from right now. Then some day I'll show her to him. He won't be ashamed of Betty. You see if he is!"

AGAIN the doctor stirred uneasily. "But, think! How can I go on from day to day and not let your husband know——"

Helen Denby sprang to her feet. The wild look of that first night of flight came into her eyes, but her voice, when she spoke, was very calm.

"Dr. Gleason," she began resolutely, "it's just as I told you before. Unless you'll promise not to tell Burke where I am, till I say the word, I shall take Betty and go—somewhere. I don't know where. But it'll be where you can't find me—any of you."

"Oh, come, come, my dear child——"

"Will you promise?"

"But just think how——"

"I am thinking!" choked Helen. "But you don't seem to be. Can't you see how I want to stay here? I've got a chance, maybe, to be like you and your sister, and all the rest of Burke's swell—I mean, like Burke's friends," she corrected, with a hot blush. "And, anyhow, Betty's got a chance. We've made a start. We've begun. And here you want to go and tip it all over by telling Burke. And there can't anything good happen, if Burke knows. Besides, didn't he say himself that we needed to have a vacation from each other? Now, won't you promise, please?"

With a despairing cry the doctor threw up his hands.

"Oh, good heavens, yes! Of course I'll promise," he groaned.

HELEN laughed light-heartedly. She even tossed the doctor a playful glance as she turned to go.

"You see," observed Mrs. Thayer significantly, as the door closed behind her.

"Yes, I see—so far," nodded Dr. Frank Gleason with a sigh. "But I do wish I could see—what the end is going to be."

"It isn't given to us to see ends," responded Mrs. Thayer sententiously. "We can only attend to the beginnings and make them right."

"Humph!" grunted her brother, with some asperity. "I'm not saying I like the beginning, in this case. Honestly, to speak plainly, my dear Edith, I consider this thing one big fool business, from beginning to end."

There was a moment's pause; then very quietly Mrs. Thayer asked:

"Can you suggest, dear, all things considered, anything else for us to do than what we are doing?"

"No—confound it! And that's what's the matter," groaned Frank Gleason. "But that isn't saying that I like to play the fool."

"Well, I shouldn't worry. I'm not worrying," replied his sister, with an enigmatic smile.

"Maybe not. But I'm glad I'm going on that Arctic trip, and that it's just next month. I'd as soon not see much of the Denbys just now," growled the doctor, getting to his feet, and striding from the room.

[To be continued]

The Last Week of the Sunday Campaign

NEW YORK awoke on June 10 to the realization that Mr. Sunday was within a week of the end of his campaign. And New York, which never does things by halves, and which had crowded a big tabernacle night after night for many weeks in weather that struggled to be spring-like with only occasional success; New York, which in spite of the alarms of war was ready to turn its face Godward, to open its heart to the message of the man being used as few men are by the Spirit of God; this same New York crowded the old tabernacle night after night to the suffocation point. That is, it would have been suffocation if the tabernacle had not been so breezily constructed. Thousands stood outside the open doors while still other thousands were forced to go away only to return earlier the following night. Sunday, June 10, was in many respects the greatest day in the career of the evangelist; the total of trail-hitters for the day numbered 3,247, the best previous total being 3,161.

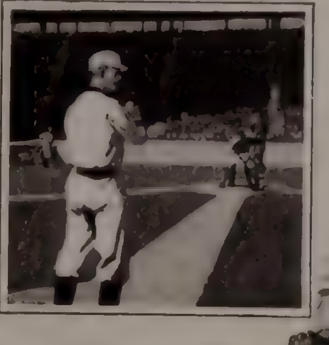
On the afternoon that Mr. Sunday preached his famous booze sermon to men only, Jimmy Kelly, leader on the East Side, and owner of a saloon in Hester Street, was among those present. He looked over the audience of respectable church members and prosperous business men and noted the almost total absence of men showing evidences of immediate intimacy with drink. He was moved with a desire to give Mr. Sunday a chance to tell his story to real drinking men, and he expressed his desire in no uncertain terms. The result was the organization of the "Billy Sunday Bowery Association," which organized a meeting at Hadley Hall on the Bowery on Wednesday evening, June 13. Admission was by ticket, and it was announced that the meeting would be exclusively for rum-hounds and booze-hoisters. It was to be a hand-picked audience, one hundred per cent. in sympathy with Mr. Sunday's subject.

Mr. Sunday went right from the tabernacle after the evening service, reaching Hadley Hall about 10:15. The men had been there since nine and some of them had gotten restless, but a service of song under the expert leadership of John Callahan, with the efficient services of members of Jimmy Kelly's organization, had kept every seat full. It was such an audience as could be seen nowhere else but on the Bowery. Few faces were unmarked; some showed the scars of sin but faintly, others looked as if the next 5c. shock might be the preliminary to Bellevue and the city morgue. Every degree of weakness increased by appetite, of manhood buried in booze, was represented among those men who heard Mr. Sunday's direct attack upon the enemy of their souls and the thief of their manhood. Mr. Sunday did not preach his usual booze sermon, for he told the bunch that they knew a lot more about booze than he did, but he used part of it, and told the story of his own conversion and of the way bad liquor had treated the good men who were with him on the Chicago team at the time he found the Saviour. The men listened as only hungry souls can listen; at first perhaps a little skeptical, because many things are put over on the Bowery. But soon the faces showed confidence, the sincerity of the preacher was striking home, and when Billy said "Come on, boys!" 300 of them pressed forward and grasped his hand with a new determination to be the men they could be in the strength of Christ.

Friday, June 15, also made a record for trail-hitters, the total for the day, 2,743, being the largest week-day total of the campaign. Mr. Sunday, though woefully tired, has been given unusual strength for the final drive against sin and indifference.

BLUE STREAKS

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.



The big league baseball pitcher is a specialist. Constant practice at pitching brought him his skill and success. That is concentration.

In manufacturing likewise, it pays to concentrate. Making one brand of bicycle tire—and making it well—is better than making a great many brands.

Goodyear Makes Only One Bicycle Tire

That Means Better Tires Cheaper

Do you know why bicycle tires have been costing you too much? And why they have not been good enough?

Because manufacturing and selling costs have been too high.

In putting out the Blue Streak Bicycle Tire at $3.25 each, Goodyear struck at the heart of this condition. The Goodyear Blue Streak represents a welcome square deal for the bicyle rider. It is a big, honest value at a fair price.

Instead of making a great many brands Goodyear concentrates on this one high quality tire—the Blue Streak. This single manufacturing standard saves factory costs. The money saved goes into making better tires cheaper—for you.

This one standard tire is sold direct to the Goodyear dealer, saving extra selling profits between the factory and you.

The Goodyear dealer in your town will sell you Blue Streaks. He is your friend. See him. Or write The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, for his address.

Boys everywhere are wearing Goodyear Bicycle Caps. Ask your dealer. They're specially popular with Bicycle Clubs—name of club printed on the cap.

Rugged Tires That Wear Long

Goodyear Blue Streaks are loyal on your bike. Boys say they wear "like iron." There is long wear in the tough two-ply tire body, stout and durable. The treads are of strong rubber blocks with two stout reinforcing strips of fabric under the tread to guard against punctures.

No Side-Slipping on These Tires

A Goodyear Blue Streak is a stranger to dangerous side-slipping. It has a real non-skid tread made of sharp-edged blocks of rugged rubber. These press together and bite the ground, in travel. Press on a Blue Streak tread. You can feel the "bite."

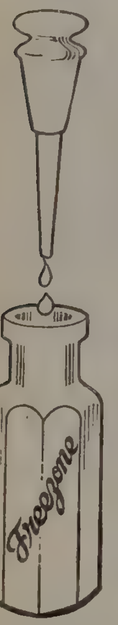
Springy Tires Pedal Easy

Added to Blue Streak durability is resilience. Fine, light fabric, strong but active, goes into them. The two-ply tire body rests in springy rubber. This makes Blue Streaks quick and elastic. Pedaling becomes fun on such tires. They are so easy to push.

Blue Streaks Are Handsome Tires

Every rider wants good-looking tires, too. Goodyear Blue Streaks are handsome tires to match the fine quality built into them. Your friends will notice how your wheel is improved. They are bright and snappy with the clear Blue Streaks along the side.

GOODYEAR
AKRON



Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

Gail Borden
EAGLE BRAND
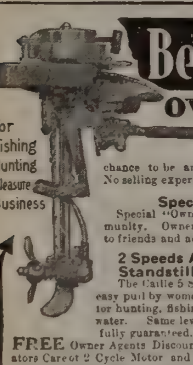
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

"Eagle Brand" enriches your coffee, tea, chocolate or cocoa. Try it—you'll like it.



Be a CAILLE 5 Speed Motor
OWNER AGENT

For Fishing Hunting Pleasure Business

Hundreds of Caille owners have asked to become our agents. We are going to give every one a chance to be an Owner Agent and sell Caille Motors. No selling experience necessary. No office or shop needed.

Special Owner Agent Offer
Special "Owner Agent" discount to one in each community. Owner Agents easily sell 1 to 12 Cailles a year to friends and acquaintances. Get yours at discount now.

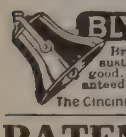
2 Speeds Ahead — 2 Speeds Back or Standstill Without Stopping Motor
The Caille 5 Speed Motor Starter operates with quick, easy pull by women or children. So flexible it can be used for hunting, fishing, pleasure, business in fresh or salt water. Same lever steers and controls. Best materials, fully guaranteed.

FREE Owner Agents Discount, Catalog, Booklet "Installation, Operators Care of 2 Cycle Motor and Equipment," all absolutely free. Act quickly—NOW. Caille Perfection Motor Co., 286 Caille Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
Inboard Marine Motor Catalog on request. Give dimensions of boat.

The Emblem of Democracy
Liberty Ring $1

Symbol of our Allies

SHOWS where you stand in the world-fight for Liberty
Made of Sterling Silver (either French Gray or dull green-gold finish) set with fine quality red, white and blue cut stones
At dealers or send us $1 for woman's ring (illustrated) 50c for misses ring (seven stones) 25c for children's ring (one stone)
Liberty Lapel Buttons for men or Pins for women 25c postpaid.
COHN & ROSENBERGER, Inc.
1328-C Broadway, N. Y. C.



BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D.C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

Ahaz, the Faithless King

International Sunday School Lesson for July 8. II Chron. 28

The Story of a Great Failure

By George D. Allison, Ph. D.

THE twenty-eighth chapter of II Chronicles is the history of a young man who started with every advantage and opportunity and failed completely. It begins with a throne and ends with a dishonored grave. It is a kind of Pilgrim's Progress reversed, the record of a downward path. Therefore it is of value to us as a great warning. Those of us who teach boys or young men must make this lesson count.

Ahaz represents the choice young man on the threshold of his career, twenty years of age, carefully nurtured and trained, now initiated into the responsible work of life. His ancestry was all in his favor, for his father Jotham and his grandfather Uzziah incarnated the best traits of the house of David. His kingdom was extensive and well organized, having a large army and a more considerable foreign trade than ever before. It was a time of petty wars with nations round about, but Uzziah had put the latest inventions and equipment into the Jewish defense, and Jotham had subdued some of the most troublesome neighbors.

Ahaz not only succeeded to the achievements of his family, but he inherited the mighty inspiration of Hebrew religion and the ordered and impressive ministries of the temple, which his father had enlarged and fostered. Still more fortunate was he in having for guide and counselor Isaiah ben Amoz, the greatest of the prophets, a statesman of international mind, now in the fulness of his powers, ready and anxious to make the new reign a success.

The Privilege of Influence

With all these advantages, Ahaz began his administration with a wonderful power to influence the nation and the world for good. This is the greatest privilege of human life—the possibility of influencing the character of others and the social system of our nation. Every Christian has the privilege of influence. We are all kings and priests before God, having a more glorious heritage than Ahaz, a riper system of morality and worship, a manifold larger field than he could have imagined.

Ahaz does not seem to have realized his position. The lessons of the past were lost upon him. He went far astray. Consequently others suffered, as always, and since he was a king the nation paid the penalty of his bad leadership.

The Secret of His Fall

Lack of faith is the key to this failure, as is intimated by our lesson title and the Golden Text, "Without faith it is impossible to be pleasing unto him."

One can see this clearly by studying the verses in Isaiah that tell of the labor of that great hero of faith to inspire his faithless king. Take up Chapter 7 of Isaiah, which parallels verses 5 and 6 in our lesson. Ahaz was in a panic because Syria and Israel had conspired against Judah. Naturally enough, "the heart of his people trembled as the trees of the forest trembled with the wind." The ruler should have set the example of faith in God.

So Isaiah comes to the hesitant monarch as he is examining the water-supply in case of a siege and gives him a message of faith in God. "Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither let thy heart be faint." Who are these enemies that you should be so distrustful? Their power is already waning. Their plot is vain. "It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass." Be calm and look to the Lord in whom your fathers trusted.

Isaiah sums up his convictions in that great saying, as true now in America's perplexities as it was seven hundred years before Christ: "If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established."

Calling Upon the Wrong Helper

History might read differently if Ahaz had been a man of faith. Instead of taking Isaiah's wise advice, the king called in the Assyrians to his assistance. He did not take "God and the right" for his policy, but tried to bribe the cruel and selfish heathen to save his throne for him. When they came they "distressed him but strengthened him not." For they sought only gain, and the wretched king had to strip the temple and the palace of gold and silver to buy their aid; "but it helped him not."

But Ahaz could not seem to learn. The military defeats and the loss of thousands of captives made him desperate but did not drive him to the real source of strength. Isaiah pleads, taunts, denounces in turn. The king tried every device, but not the simple course of a straightforward defense and an appeal to Jehovah. He sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus in the superstitious hope that they might help him as they apparently had helped King Rezin. "But they were the ruin of him and of all Israel."

A Shameful End

The effect must have been demoralizing enough to the people. The foolish king closed the temple of Jehovah and frantically entreated the foreign gods, "and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem." He even sacrificed his own son in the flames of Hinnom, as a human sacrifice to Moloch. Finally the disgusted historian dismisses the shameful story by a reference to other accounts (not preserved for us) and turns to more hopeful days.

The end of the career of Ahaz is symbolized by a strangely suggestive bit of history. Though a king, he was not buried in the royal sepulcher with Jotham, his father, but in the common burying-ground of the city. It was a striking incident to the mind of the chronicler. Not worthy to lie with the righteous dead! For he had been weak and sinful and unable to lean upon the living and true God.

How Unbelief Leads Men Astray

As we look back upon this record we can almost trace a downward path of increasing folly. The men of faith have been men of good judgment, but godless men err just because of their lack of faith. Ahaz, because he did not rely on God, called in the Assyrians, though he must have known their reputation for conquest and plunder. The result was that he never got rid of the false friends whom he had preferred to God, and in a few years the nation fell a prey to them.

Unbelief led him to superstition as well. It is astonishing to find how lack of real religion opens up the way to credulity and fear. Many people begin by professing themselves agnostics and end in various silly isms. Others, not having God, believe in luck and omens and stoop to acts as foolish as Ahaz's performances in taking up the Syrian cult.

Unfaith led him to sacrilege and destruction of the power of the church. He who could not trust God used the precious things of the temple to further his own schemes and weakened the appeal of the national faith to the people of Israel.

To-day we need to take warning from a lesson like this, both as individuals and as a nation. Let us covenant together as Hezekiah and the wise leaders did, that they should seek first God and his will, and not fall into the errors of Ahaz his father.

Bible Class Outline

WHY MEN FAIL

I. They follow bad examples but reject good.

"Ahaz walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made molten images for Baalim. Moreover he . . . burned his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen."

"Ask thee a sign of Jehovah thy God; but Ahaz said, I will not ask." Isa. 7 :11, 12.

II. They do not profit by experience.

"Wherefor the Lord delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria."

"And he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel."

III. They stoop to unworthy expedients.

"At that time did King Ahaz send unto the king of Assyria to help him."

"Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of Jehovah and gave it unto the king of Assyria."

"He sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus."

IV. They serve and trust earthly powers instead of heavenly.

"So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-Pileser saying, I am thy servant and thy son; come up and save me."

CONSECRATED TRUST IN GOD MEANS TRUE SUCCESS.

"I am thy servant and thy son, O God; in thee do I put my trust."

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association.

Summertime Suggestions

FEATURE the summer sessions by solos, an object talk, blackboard chalk talk, phonograph, Gospel or sacred song, stereopticon lesson or missionary slides.

2. Have a hot weather bulletin for announcement of Sunday features, hikes and special news.

3. Select names for special Sundays and announce on bulletin and in newspapers, such as Flower Sunday, Palestine Trip Sunday, Patriotic Day, Old Folks' Day, Bring-One Sunday, Story Sunday, Old-Hymn Sunday.

4. On Old-Hymn Sunday have the story of the writing of several old hymns told by scholars or teachers, and the hymns sung.

5. Have pastor, superintendent, teachers and scholars who may be absent for one or more Sundays send letter or post-card to the school secretary, these letters to be read and the post-cards exhibited on the weekly bulletin board. Later, these cards can be made up into a Sunday school album and looked over by the members.

6. Have a large map on which the secretary can locate by red buttons the absentees who shall write.

7. Form a Hot Weather Brigade to be designated by a special button for faithful summer attendance. At the close of the season all with a perfect record should be honored by mention, and if possible a Hot Weather Brigade social should be held especially for these members.

8. Promote Saturday "hikes" of boys and girls. Let the story of each be told on the bulletin board.

9. Promote a summer camp for the boys and girls on the Boy Scouts and Campfire Girls plan.

10. Have the school send flowers and fruit to sick and shut-ins in hospital and orphanage.

11. Try a summer missionary course from the platform, such as the Missionary Tour of South America of the Missionary Education Movement (Presbyterian Church) or the Sunday School Tour of Japan, published by the M. E. U. (Baptist Church). The maps, illustrations and charts accompanying these lessons make the course very attractive for a summer series.

12. Make different classes or different teachers responsible for different sessions, either for conducting the session or for some feature of it.

13. One Sunday school gave a summer course on the Life of Christ, using reference texts and verses.

14. Plan an August summer picnic or outing for the school, with interesting athletic and social features.

15. Make a goal for the summer attendance and indicate the weekly tally on the blackboard.

16. If it can be arranged, meet out of doors some Sundays.

17. Provide vacation record cards for scholars who will be recorded as attending the Sunday school nearest to their vacation place.

18. Try a summer Bible drill in finding verses and special chapters.

19. When the pastor or superintendent is away, have all scholars and teachers send a postcard to the vacation address, which should be posted on the bulletin board.

20. In the Second Baptist Sunday School of Rochester "Pilgrim's Progress" was given each Sunday of the summer in slide form. That school also threw upon the screen each Sunday a "search question" of the lesson, and the scholars who through the summer answered these correctly received a souvenir on Rally Day.

21. In one New York school the absent scholars send each week to the teacher their thought on the lesson. The thought voted best by the class was sent up to the superintendent to be read, and the point voted by the school as the best of all the classes was rewarded.

22. Print a monthly card for distribution, giving the features for the Sunday sessions, these to be distributed as widely as possible.

23. When the absent scholars leave their addresses, the school secretary can send a greeting from the school to the absentee. The influence of this is obvious.

24. Scholars should be encouraged to write to the secretary a report of the school visited, to be read in the sesssion.

25. A summer attendance contest between schools is sometimes helpful in maintaining interest.

26. One school used as their slogan "One dozen programs for a live summer in a live Sunday school."

The Nation-Wide Evangelistic Field

EVANGELISM has had a new meaning throughout the country during the season just closing. World events, with the constant threat and final culminating fact of the entrance of America into the world struggle, have helped to turn the minds of the people from frivolous attitudes of mind toward eternal things and the truths that have for ages been a refuge for mankind.

Hendrick and Carter held a successful meeting in the Presbyterian Church, Greenview, Ill., and the other churches of the town received great benefit from the campaign.

Following the resignation of Dr. Harris H. Gregg, of the Washington and Compton Avenues Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo., Rev. Geo. E. Guille was secured for two weeks of special meetings in the line of combined Bible study and evangelism.

A very successful evangelistic campaign of three weeks was conducted in Condit, O., by R. Hayes Willis, of Winona Lake, Ind. The church was greatly revived and more than twenty persons have become members.

The churches of Leamington, Ont., experienced a great religious awakening in connection with the E. DeWitt Johnston evangelistic campaign. There were over five hundred conversions.

Twelve churches on the east side of Detroit, Mich., have arranged for a union tabernacle campaign next fall, under the leadership of C. E. Hillis and party. The tabernacle will seat over three thousand persons.

Last month the J. H. McCombe party conducted a campaign in Lowville, N. Y., and more than one thousand persons responded to the appeals of the evangelist. In June the party will be in Toledo, Ia. Mr. L. F. Peckham, who has had charge of the music with Mr. McCombe this season, will be with the Los Angeles Bible Institute this summer.

A great work has been done by the Palmer evangelistic party in Grace Methodist Church, Warren, Pa., special work having been done among the children and young people.

T. Edward Thomas and party have been holding a meeting in Garrett, Ind., and a local committee issued a four-page daily called "The Campaigner." The church has been helped greatly in its membership and many have decided for Christ.

The evangelistic campaign conducted by Clyde Lee Fife and his party in Hopkinsville, Ky., is claimed to have been the greatest in the history of that place.

Burke Culpepper reports an interesting and profitable meeting in Searcy, Ark. Prof. Harold R. Coffin, of Chicago, is now associated with Mr. Culpepper.

Chas. Reign Scoville reports gratifying evangelistic results in Fresno and Sacramento. In the former city, 4,575 people responded to the appeals, a large proportion being first decisions.

The evangelistic campaign in Cortland, N. Y., aroused such interest in the neighboring towns of Homer that the churches there united for a campaign in April under the leadership of Harold L. Stephens for a month. Recently he and his party were in the Canadian "Soo," and in the first three weeks there were more than six hundred conversions and half as many reconsecrations.

Wieland and Geisenheiner conducted a rural campaign at Leslie, Mich., in which more than thirty people made a start in the Christian life or reconsecrated themselves.

Mathis and Vessey conducted a notable revival in Sibley, Ia., 102 members being added to the churches.

C. Fenwick Reed was the evangelist in a union campaign in Stanley, Wis. The large tabernacle was filled, and in spite of unfavorable weather the campaign was successful, with 350 conversions and a general moral and religious uplift in the town. Later the town voted "dry" for the first time.

A. S. Phelps has been conducting a revival in Cassville, Wis., which has brought excellent results to the local churches.

E. P. Loose, in recent evangelistic campaigns in Oregon, Ill., Allegan and East Jordan, Mich., had in the latter place the first week 300 confessions of Christ and over three hundred reconsecrations. The party then went to Big Rapids, Mich.

The pastor of the Second Methodist Church, Racine, Wis., reports a brimful meeting under the direction of Evangelist Geo. Wareham, of Iowa.

The tabernacle campaign conducted by Dr. Milford H. Lyon and party in East Orange, N. J., widened in its scope so that the city of Orange also was included. The meetings continued seven weeks, being held in a tabernacle seating 6,500. There were 6,877 responses to the appeals, a Christian Workers League of 500 members was organized, also 20 gospel teams (four of them in one Presbyterian Church), 25 Bible Classes; 150 boys and 200 girls in the East Orange High Schools were converted.

Bodell and Maxwell report successful meetings in Salem, Ohio, and Williamsport, Ind.

The E. J. Forsythe tabernacle meeting at Brazil, Ind., continued an additional week with many more confessions. The campaign brought Brazil its greatest revival.

E. R. Nance has held interesting and profitable meetings in Woodland Park, Kent and Brighton, Wash.

Dr. French E. Oliver led a union campaign in the Green Lake district of Seattle, and has now begun a promising campaign in Vancouver, B. C.

Pittsburgh, Pa., churches are uniting for an aggressive summer campaign. In addition to the regular evangelistic services, three or more evangelistic institutes will be held for ten-day periods. REV. PARLEY E. ZARTMAN.

TIRE-DOH
REPAIRS

Will Last Longer Than The Tube

©A. A. S. Co., 1917

Tire-Doh kneaded into your inner tube or outer casing is there to stay. It becomes a permanent part of the rubber—firmer, stronger and tougher than the rest of the tire. And Tire-Doh makes repairs where other methods fail. Torn out valve stems that cannot be vulcanized into place are easy for Tire-Doh.

For Inner Tubes and Outer Casings TIRE-DOH Cuts Repair Bills and Adds to Mileage

Tire-Doh-izing is a simple process. No heat to burn or overcure the rubber. No patches, no tools, no danger of ruining the tire. Nothing needed but just Tire-Doh and your fingers—and only a few minutes of your time. You can fix torn out valve stems, arm-long blowouts or pin hole punctures with Tire-Doh. And you can fill up casing cuts, holes and blisters, prevent blowouts and add thousands of miles to the life of your tires by going over your casings occasionally with Tire-Doh.

Motorcyclists as Well as Motorists—750,000 Users

Tire-Doh is not a tire filler. Nothing experimental about it. Seven years on the market and a proved success.

Tire-Doh is made by a secret process. It makes permanent repairs that stretch with the rubber. Tire-Doh repairs outwear the tires.

Tire-Doh-ize Anything That's Rubber

Rubber boots, gloves, coats, hot water bags—all can be mended perfectly with Tire-Doh. And it's fine for electrical insulation.

50c and $1.00 at 10,000 Dealers

Canadian prices 65c and $1.25. Everybody needs Tire-Doh. Better buy two Tire-Doh outfits today and "knead" it too. Keep one in your car and one in your house and have Tire-Doh always handy. If your dealer can't supply you, send us your order direct, together with his name.

Manufactured and Guaranteed by
ATLAS AUTO SUPPLY COMPANY
694 W. Austin Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

AUTOISTS, CYCLISTS AND HOUSEWIVES EVERYWHERE "KNEAD" TIRE-DOH

BOOKS WITH PURPOSE

Order from your Bookstore or from us—Write for our catalog

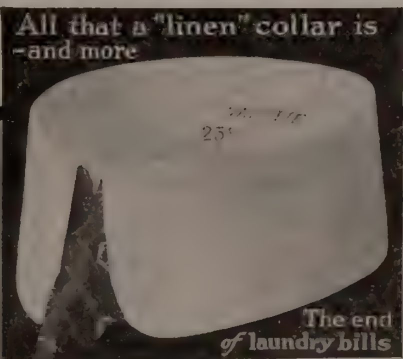
ASSOCIATION PRESS
124 East 28th Street
New York

Out-of-Door Books

Swimming, Life Saving, Camping

AT HOME IN THE WATER—Illustrated.
By G. H. Corsan [Cloth $1.00; linen lined paper 25 cents]
LIFE SAVING
By George E. Goss . . . . (Buckram $1.00)
CAMP and OUTING ACTIVITIES
By Cheley-Baker . . . . (Buckram $1.50)
CAMPING FOR BOYS
By H. W. Gibson . . . . (Buckram $1.00)

And other camping books



CHALLENGE
CLEANABLE* COLLARS

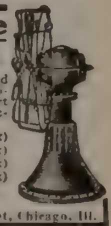
Undaunted by the summer rains. Motor grease, dirt and perspiration cannot harm. Stitched edge effect and dull linen finish. Ever-white. Non-wilting. All the looks and goodness of your linen collar—without the laundry bills and bother.

Selected styles, half sizes. 25c. each, your dealers or by mail. State size and style.

A booklet on request.

The Arlington Company
725 Broadway, New York
DU PONT



Runs on Kerosene

Alcohol, Gasolene or Gas

A most remarkable invention

No electricity, wires or springs. 1917 Improved patented Models. Runs 8 hours for a cent on kerosene. Quiet—convenient. Brings genuine comfort and satisfaction. Ideal for the sick. A proved success. The Wonder Fan. 2 Models. 8 Sizes.

A { 12-in. $16.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
16-in. $13.50, Alcohol or Gas only (Gas $1.50 ex)
B { 16-in. $19.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
21-in. $22.50, Any Burner (Gasolene $2.50 ex)
F. O. B. Chicago. Cash with order only.

KEEP COOL

LAKE BREEZE MOTOR, 571 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1983 Ry. Exch., Chicago

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE

Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, and cheap.

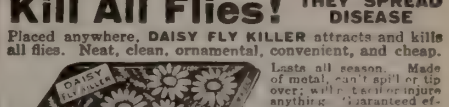
DAISY FLY KILLER

Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Ask for

Daisy Fly Killer

Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express, prepaid, $1.00.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.



IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted. The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by

MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

40 designs—all steel. Handsome, costs less than wood more durable. We can save you money. Write for free catalog and special prices.

KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
499 North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

The Lazy Muscles That Cause Constipation

By R. H. SINCLAIR

It is now agreed by all of the great authorities that constipation is not a disorder of the stomach or even of the small intestine, but of the large intestine or colon.

Under normal conditions, this large colon, which is about five feet long and shaped like a horse-shoe, extracts the liquids from the waste matter entrusted to its care and promptly passes the residue on.

But unfortunately, due to our sedentary lives, the colon has gradually become so lazy from lack of exercise, that it is unable to perform its functions.

If we were able to live outdoors and to exercise vigorously every day, our colons would handle their work properly; for exercise is the greatest and most satisfactory colon stimulant known.

To most of us, sufficient daily exercise, however, is not possible. We have neither the time nor the inclination. Instead, we dose ourselves with laxative drugs, mineral waters, and other nostrums, with the result that, while we get temporary relief, we not only aggravate the condition, but find that repetitions of the same dose later fail to produce results.

But relief, even when obtained, is not sufficient. To maintain health and efficiency, it is absolutely of paramount importance to create and maintain, day in and day out freedom from intestinal poisons; and this is impossible with laxatives.

There is a new way, however, to keep the colon sweet and clean—a way which hàs the same effect as vigorous exercise, yet without the inconvenience or time-consuming features of exercise. And the results are even better because the treatment is localized.

The principle upon which this new method is founded is the same as that used in massage. We all know that massage has the same effect as exercise—it stimulates the nerves and strengthens the muscles. Colon massage as practiced by osteopaths has proved wonderfully effective.

This new method of massaging the colon involves the use of a device called the Kolon Motor—a mechanical masseur, the face of which is shaped to fit over the colon when placed against the abdomen. You merely put the Kolon Motor on a door or wall, lean up against it and turn the handle for a few moments. The face rotates with a scientific waving motion which immediately stimulates the colon and causes proper functioning. A couple of minutes in the morning each day is all that is required and unless your experience is different from the hundreds of other users you will feel like a new person after the very first application.

Before the Kolon Motor was offered to the public a number of well-known physicians were acquainted with its merits and used it in their practise. Without exception the results were most gratifying—in fact, every physician who has tested the Kolon Motor endorses it most highly.

Martin's Method, Incorporated, Dept. 156, 105 East 30th Street, New York has prepared a booklet called Colon Cleanliness, which they will be pleased to send gratis to all readers of this magazine. In this booklet the Kolon Motor is clearly illustrated and its application shown. It also contains a scientific discussion of auto-intoxication, and explains why and how the Kolon Motor produces such assured results. Letters from well-known physicians relating their experience with the Kolon Motor also form a part of the book.

There may be some who scoff at the idea of colon hygiene and its direct relation to health and efficiency, but the wiser ones will write for this free book and learn what this wonderful device is accomplishing for so many others. (Advertisement.)

FINAL WARNING

TODAY—JUNE 27th

Is the Last Day for Mailing in Sets of Answers in the BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

Directions for Submitting Sets

When you have your chosen verses entered to your satisfaction, and your name and address have been carefully signed, then make a record of each verse submitted for each picture, and keep this record home. It is not necessary to copy the actual words of each verse for this home set—you may just note each verse by Book, and chapter, and verse number.

Whether you are using an Answer Book, or competing free, keep this home record of your submitted verses.

Also keep home a checking sheet. If you are using an Answer Book, cut out the checking sheet (page 64) and keep that home with your record of answers; if you are competing free send in to us for a checking sheet at once, enclosing a 2 cent stamp for postage.

Do not fold or roll your set of verses. Wrap them up flat.

And be sure you put first class postage—letter rate — on the set. Better have it weighed, to be certain.

Your Part in Checking

When all sets of verses have been received we will go over them carefully, cull out the different verses submitted for the pictures, and submit this list to the Committee of Judges. The Judges will, after due consideration, designate which verses shall be known as the officially best verses for the pictures. This list of correct (best) verses will then be published in the Christian Herald, and participants will compare it with the record they have kept home of the verses they submitted, and thus see just how many best and how many incorrect verses they sent in. They will mark the results down on their checking sheets, and send in the sheets to us, for verification. By having participants help us in the checking work we will be enabled to announce the winners within a much shorter time than would be possible if all this labor devolved upon us.

REMEMBER! You must mail your set of verses by June 27th at the latest. Sets mailed as late as June 27th will be accepted even though they may arrive after that date.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 698

June 10 that it was the duty of the men of the present generation to concede equal rights to women, and above all the vote. . . . One hundred and one men, representing every Irish faction and class, will compose the convention which is expected to settle the Irish question. . . . Plans of the government contemplate the training of a force of aviators to be sent abroad at the rate of 1,000 a month beginning in September. . . . The second course of instruction at the officers' training camps will open August 27 and close October 26. The War Department is reported as preferring men of mature years as students at these later camps. . . . China at last reports appeared to be fast drifting into another civil war; the presidential mandate dissolving Parliament was finally promulgated on June 13. The military leaders of the southern provinces telegraphed President Li Yuan Hung that they no longer recognized his authority. Japan and England did not see fit to participate with the United States in an endeavor to bring the Chinese factions together. . . . The wooden ship plan has not been launched without some differences of opinion. Following a declaration of General Goethals, which implied that the plan as a whole was not feasible and that the government Emergency Fleet Corporation would bend its energies largely to the production of steel vessels, two subordinates declared that it was not only feasible but might prove the deciding factor in the war. Later it was announced that contracts had been let for sixteen of the wooden ships, making 104 ships already contracted for, of which fifty-four are to be of wood, thirty-two of composite construction, and eighteen of steel.

The President's Flag Day Speech

IN an address at the Flag Day celebration in Washington on June 14, President Wilson told why the United States was at war, and outlined some of the grievances against Germany which forced the United States from its neutrality to belligerency. The speech was, in part, as follows:

"My Fellow-Citizens—We meet to celebrate Flag Day because this flag, which we honor and under which we serve, is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a nation. It has no other character than that which we give it from generation to generation. . . . We are about to carry it into battle, to lift it where it will draw the fire of our enemies. We are about to bid thousands, hundreds of thousands, it may be millions, of our men, the young, the strong, the capable men of the nation, to go forth and die beneath it on fields of blood far away—for what? For some unaccustomed thing? For some new purpose, for which this great flag has never been carried before, or for some old, familiar, heroic purpose for which it has seen men, its own men, die on every battlefield upon which Americans have borne arms since the Revolution? . . .

"It is plain enough how we were forced into the war. The extraordinary insults and aggressions of the Imperial German Government left us no self-respecting choice but to take up arms in defense of our rights as a free people and of our honor as a sovereign Government. The military masters of Germany denied us the right to be neutral. They filled our unsuspecting communities with vicious spies and conspirators and sought to corrupt the opinion of our people in their own behalf. When they found that they could not do that, their agents diligently spread sedition amongst us and sought to draw our own citizens from their allegiance—and some of those agents were men connected with the official embassy of the German Government itself here in our own capital. They tried to incite Mexico to take up arms against us and to draw Japan into a hostile alliance with her—and that, not by indirection, but by direct suggestion from the Foreign Office in Berlin. They impudently denied us the use of the high seas and repeatedly executed their threat that they would send to their death any of our people who ventured to approach the coasts of Europe. . . . What great nation in such circumstances would not have taken up arms? Much as we had desired peace, it was denied us, and not of our own choice. This flag under which we serve would have been dishonored had we withheld our own hand."

After discussing the beginning and development of the war the President tore the mask from German peace efforts and disclosed what he termed "an intrigue for peace." He concluded as follows:

"The great fact that stands out above all the rest is that this is a people's war, a war for freedom and justice and self-government among all the nations of the world, a war to make the world safe for the peoples who live upon it and have made it their own, the German people themselves included; and that with us rests the choice to break through all these hypocrisies and patent cheats and masks of brute force, and help set the world free, or else stand aside and let it be dominated a long age through by sheer weight of arms and the arbitrary choices of self-constituted masters, by the nation which can maintain the biggest armies and the most irresistible armaments, a power to which the world has afforded no parallel and in the face of which political freedom must wither and perish.

"For us there is but one choice. We have made it. We are ready to plead at the bar of history, and our flag shall wear a new lustre. Once more we shall make good with our lives and fortunes the great faith to which we were born, and a new glory shall shine in the face of our people."

Progress of the World War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE most important event of the week was the forced abdication of King Constantine of Greece on Tuesday, June 12. A few days before, Italian troops occupied Janina, 100 miles south of the Macedonian battle line.

Without commenting on the fact that, in place of George, the eldest son and Crown Prince, Alexander, a younger son, has succeeded Constantine, nor on the reported desire of Constantine to proceed to Italy on a British warship, it may be said that a complete revolution was accomplished in Greece, and that it is probable that Greece will soon hereafter enter the war on the side of the Entente powers. The Allies have an army of considerable size, variously estimated at from four to six hundred thousand men, now on the Macedonian front, and the Italians have been bringing large reinforcements over from Italy, perhaps as many as 200,000, thus bringing the total up to the neighborhood of 700,000. To this number may be added the Greek army—the united forces aggregating a million men.

THE Russian situation is unchanged. The Kronstadt declaration of independence from the provisional government remains in force, and several other districts and cities of Russia during the past week have taken similar action. Naturally, under such conditions, no military events of the slightest importance took place during the week on either of the Russian fronts in Europe, or in the Caucasus, nor on the Rumanian. The Mesopotamian and South Palestine fronts have not even been mentioned in the week's cables.

The British official report of the operations of the submarines for the week shows an increase: 22 vessels over 1,600 tons as compared with 15 the week before; 10 under 1,600 tons compared with three the previous week; six fishing vessels as against 5. The Italian statement also shows an increase in vessels lost through this cause.

On Wednesday, June 13, a very extensive air raid was made by the Germans on London. According to the British report no military or naval damage was done, but over 100 persons, including many women and children, lost their lives and some 500 more were wounded. A peculiarly unfortunate feature of the raid was that a bomb fell directly on a schoolhouse, with sad results. The objective of the Germans in these raids is probably Woolwich arsenal, a vast depot of explosives, but the results of the raids up to the present time seems to have been, from all we learn, merely to kill non-combatants. In the last few raids no Zeppelins have been employed, only aeroplanes.

THE Austro-Italian front, after occasional stiff fighting in the past month, has relapsed into a monotonous semi-activity, mostly artillery duels. The most important of these clashes was on the Trentino front, northwest of Asiago, wherein the Italians captured some advanced trenches of the Austrians and took some 500 prisoners.

On the western front on Friday, June 8, the British made an important thrust forward, after a preliminary bombardment lasting nearly two weeks, and the blowing up of mines containing over a million pounds of high explosives on the German lines on the front extending from Wytschaete south to Messines. Messines is just under two miles from Wytschaete, and both towns are located on the western slope of a hill, whose height is the only elevation in a wide stretch of country. Its loss deprives the Germans of a very important observation point, which commanded the whole countryside, east and west, for many many miles around. The Germans, according to their own bulletin, have fallen back to a line running south from the bend of the canal north of Hellebeke to a point in the basin of the east-and-west running river Doube, about one and a third miles west of Warneton, which town is on the railroad connecting Armentières with Menin. The ultimate objective of this offensive may be said to be the compelling of the evacuation of the city of Lille by the Germans.

How Venice Keeps Aerial Watch

Continued from page 695

to the enemy a maximum amount of mischief. And thus, while other cities in Venetia have been bombarded once or twice, Venice has been bombarded dozens of times.

Before the authorities "set the watchmen" at their posts, these bombardments wrought considerable damage. Several churches, such as the Scalzi, Santa Maria Formosa, SS. Giovanni and Paolo and S. Pietro, were unroofed, and some palaces were in part destroyed. Unhappily, too, a few lives were lost. But of late nothing has happened. The watchmen have always been able to give timely warning of the approach of hostile aircraft, and the anti-aircraft guns have ever succeeded in driving them off. Last week a squadron of hostile airplanes twice attempted to raid the city, but were prevented from doing so.

Of course, the Venetians know that a higher protecting Power is needed to guard the city than these sentinels. They know that they are but instruments in the hands of Him who rules or reigns over all the peoples of the earth. "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchmen waketh but in vain." And His aid is sought and obtained.

And now to apply the lesson to ourselves. This call, "All'aria; buona guardia!" ("On the air, keep a good watch!"), can be applied to others than those Venetian city sentinels. We can hear it addressed to ourselves. For are we not all watchmen? How often did our Lord exhort his disciples to be watchful? "What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch."

And our Lord's exhortation to watch has reference also to the air. It is toward the clouds of heaven we are called to look. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." And the time of his coming is uncertain. "Watch, therefore, for ye know not at what hour your Lord should come . . . at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning." And yet our Lord described troublous times as marking the epoch preceding his coming. "Tell us," said his disciples, "what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" "Take heed," is our Lord's answer, "that no man deceive you. . . . And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. . . . For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." Christ's words seem applicable to the present time, when nearly all the nations and kingdoms in the world are at war. Therefore, how important it is that we should lay to heart his exhortation and watch. So that when he appears, when he calls, we may be able to answer like the Venetian sentinels: "All'erta, Sto." ("Alert! I am.") "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth." "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching." "Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober." "So when Christ, who is our hope, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory."

Uncle Sam Advises the Farmer

Continued from page 699

thrift by educating their families to abandon food prejudices and to make use of the nutritious but less familiar foods in the daily diet.

BY MAKING corn a bigger factor in the daily diet housewives can help make up for the shortage in wheat. Corn is a great natural bread-stuff of the country, but has not been used for human food nearly as much as its valuable nutritive qualities warrant. This is because many persons never have taken pains to learn to use corn. "Try a wheatless breakfast tomorrow, and then extend the wheatless idea to other days and meals," is the suggestion of the dietary specialists. Corn meal can be used in many attractive ways. Any housewife can secure Farmers' Bulletin 565, "Corn Meal as a Food, and Ways of Using It," by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture. It has been found that very palatable and nutritious bread may be made by using corn meal with wheat flour. Many new ways of using corn meal are being tested. The use of corn in every household will help to conserve the wheat supply.

Much attention is being given to canning garden stuffs and fruit for home use. The relative shortage of tin cans and glass jars means that every housewife must use all sorts of jars and bottles available, that she must concentrate products, so that each jar or can will hold as much food as possible.

Most of the more durable vegetables can be held for winter in piles in the garden, or in cheaply constructed cool storage rooms in the cellar. Many of the ordinary garden vegetables may be preserved in a dried form. Practical tests of ways of drying food products have been made by the food specialists, and published information will soon be available to all who write for it.

(The Christian Herald will gladly forward the names of all persons who desire specific information on any subject on the production of food or its wise utilization and conservation to the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, which will send very valuable information in the form of bulletins and special circulars.)

New Ideas About Child Training

By R. H. SINCLAIR

THE father or mother who doesn't sense in its full meaning the God-given responsibility of bringing up children is making a mistake which may easily lead to everlasting sorrow for both parent and child.

Character is not born but builded. You as a parent are the architect of your child's character—the constructor of its future career, for upon character depends success. Abraham Lincoln, perhaps our greatest American, once said: "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my mother." Great men before and since Lincoln have said the same thing, and how truly they spoke!

Reversed methods of training could have turned many a ditch digger into a financier and many a financier into a ditch digger. And this difference is not one of school training but of training right in the home from the time the child is born until it leaves home.

And yet we have never until recently given any really scientific study to this great question. Thousands of parents are daily using wrong methods, which can easily destroy their children's chance of happiness and success. And the pitiful part of it all is that they don't realize the irreparable harm they are doing.

The trouble has always been that we have not searched for the cause of disobedience, the cause of wilfulness, the cause of untruthfulness, and of other symptoms which, if not treated in the right way, may lead to dire consequences. Instead, we punish the child for exhibiting the bad trait, or else "let it go." As a result, we do the child an actual wrong instead of helping it. What we should do is to attack the trouble at its source.

The new system of child training is founded upon the principle that confidence is the basis of control. And the five fundamental principles involved are: suggestion, substitution in choice, parental initiative in cooperation, parental expectation and parental approval.

Under this new system children who have been well-nigh unmanageable become obedient and willing, and such traits as bashfulness, jealousy, fear, bragging, etc., are overcome. But the system goes deeper than that, for it instils high ideals and builds character, which is of course the goal of all parents' efforts in child training.

Physical punishment, shouted commands, and other barbarous relics of the old system have no place in this modern school. Children are made comrades, not slaves, are helped, not punished. And the results are nothing short of marvelous.

Instead of a hardship, child training becomes a genuine pleasure, as the parent shares every confidence, every joy and every sorrow of the child, and at the same time has its unqualified respect. This is a situation rarely possible under old training methods.

And what a source of pride now as well as in after years: To have children whose every action shows culture and refinement, perfect little gentlemen and gentlewomen, yet full of childish enthusiasm and spontaneity withal!

To put in practice these new ideas in child training, strange as it may seem, takes less time than the old method. It is simply a question of applying principles founded on a scientific study of human nature, going at it in such a way as to get immediate results without friction.

The founder of this new system is Professor Ray C. Beery, A.B., M.A. (Harvard and Columbia), who has written a complete Course in Practical Child Training. This Course is based on Professor Beery's extensive investigations and wide practical experience, and provides a well-worked-out plan which the parent can easily follow. The Parents Association, a national organization devoted to improving the methods of child training, has adopted the Beery system and is teaching the course to its members by mail.

An Invitation to Join

At this time an invitation is being extended to earnest fathers and mothers who would like to join the Association and learn the methods which are proving so universally successful with children of all ages from babyhood to man and woman-hood.

Life membership in the Parents Association which has no dues entitles you to a complete course in child training by Professor Beery, in four handsome volumes of approximately 275 pages each. This course must not be confused with the hundreds of books on child training which leave the reader in the dark because of vagueness and lack of definite and practical applications of the principles laid down. It does not deal in glittering generalities. Instead, it shows exactly what to do to meet every emergency and how to accomplish immediate results and make a permanent impression. No matter whether your child is still in the cradle or is eighteen years old, these books will show how to apply the right methods at once. You merely take up the particular trait, turn to the proper age, and apply the lessons to the child. The younger the child the better. You cannot begin too soon, for the child's behavior in the first few years of life depends on the parent, not on the child.

Membership in the Parents Association gives you, in addition to the special Four-volume Course in Practical Child Training, the following privileges:

First: Unlimited free use of the Association's advisory service in the solution of perplexing problems in Child Training.

Second: Mail service which will consist of Special Bulletins to be issued from time to time, containing the newest findings of the Association's Board of Experts, and relating the experiences in child training of other members of the Association, thus keeping each member informed as to the progress being made in this important and far-reaching work.

Third: Authoritative advice as to the children's books, schools, camps, and all matters pertaining to educational methods.

Fourth: Unlimited free use of the Association's Purchase Service Bureau, through whom all educational books, whether school text-books, or books treating on the mental, physical or moral development and training of children can be purchased. This service will be free and members availing themselves of it will find by comparison of prices, that they secure the benefit of publishers' trade discounts.

Before becoming a member of the Parents Association you are privileged to examine the Four-volume Course in Practical Child Training without the slightest obligation, and without even making a deposit, in order that you may be sure that the work of the Association is along the lines of which you approve, and that the course contains exactly what you want.

Here is the offer the Association is making for a limited time: If you will fill out and mail the application form printed below, without any money, the complete Course in Practical Child Training will be sent by return post on five days' approval. Examine it carefully and then, if you feel you can afford to be without it, send it back and you will owe nothing. If, on the other hand, you are as well pleased as the thousands of other fathers and mothers who are turning to it each day for guidance, send only $2 at the end of five days and $2 a month for four months—only $10 in all. On receipt of the first payment you will be enrolled as a member of the Association, and will receive a certificate of membership.

If you are truly anxious to make the greatest possible success of your children's lives, you owe it to them to at least look at this course, which you may do, in accordance with this offer, without risking a penny. I must urge you to act promptly, however, as this offer may never be made here again.

(Advertisement.)

APPLICATION BLANK (NO MONEY REQUIRED)

THE PARENTS ASSOCIATION, Inc. Dept. 26, 449 Fourth Avenue, New York City

You may send me, carrying charges prepaid, your complete Four-volume Course in Practical Child Training, by Ray C. Beery, A. B., M.A. for five days' free trial. If it meets with my approval and I decide to become a member, I will send you $2 five days after delivery of the four-volume Course, and $2 a month for four consecutive months in full payment for Membership and Course. If I do not care to subscribe, I will return the books within five days after their receipt. It is agreed that when I send the first pay ment you will at once send me a life membership certificate and that the $10.00 is payment in full, and there are no additional dues or assessments whatever.

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

NOTE: If full payment is made at one time after the free examination of the four-volume Course, you may deduct 10% ($1.00) when sending remittance. (Advertisement.)

Swift's
"Silverleaf" Brand
Guaranteed
Pure Lard
Swift & Company

Have flaky, tender pie crusts

Are your pie crusts so light, so tender and flaky that they fairly melt in your mouth?

If not, it is because you are using a shortening that is too soft. This makes the dough sticky, impossible to handle lightly, and the crust is tough. On the other hand shortening that is too stiff does not work smoothly into the flour. It forms tiny lumps and the crust is coarse and grainy.

You can get shortening that has exactly the right consistency. Swift's "Silverleaf" Brand Pure Lard makes a dough that works successfully and mixes into the flour with velvet smoothness.

With "Silverleaf" Brand Pure Lard you will be amazed to see how much more delicious your pies are. Your family will say they never before knew how delicate, how flaky, pie crusts could be!

Swift's "Silverleaf" Brand Pure Lard
Swift & Company, U.S.A.

"MY FEET!

"What is wrong with them? Something awful — surely! My shoes are agony. I can't bear to walk."

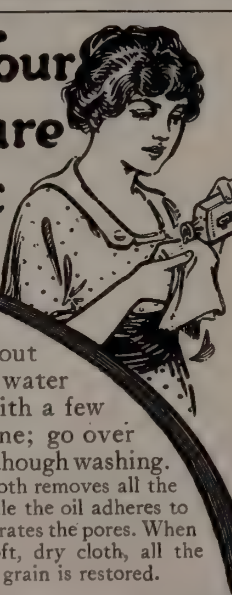
Here's the sad climax of a foot-tragedy that occurs wherever people wear heeled shoes.

It's not the end, however. The wonderful new FOOT BALANCE relieves weak, falling arches and restores them painlessly and permanently to good health.

Ask for Free Book

WALTER F. JORDAN & CO.
120-X Boylston St. Boston

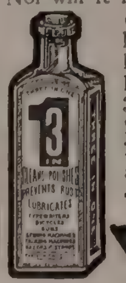
Give Your Furniture a Tonic



When your furniture gets that dull, sickly appearance, try this: Wring out a cloth in cold water and sprinkle with a few drops of 3-in-One; go over the furniture as though washing. The water in the cloth removes all the dirt and stains, while the oil adheres to the wood and penetrates the pores. When polished with a soft, dry cloth, all the smothered delicate grain is restored.

3-in-One Oil

can be used on the finest furniture without misgivings as to acids or chemicals. 3-in-One has no disagreeable varnish odor. Nor will it rub off and soil the daintiest clothes. Besides this, 3-in-One has 78 other uses, full particulars about which will be sent FREE with a sample bottle of 3-in-One Oil. Write for them. Sold in all good stores in 50c, 25c, and 1 oz. (small size) bottles; also in the Handy Oil Can, 25c.



Three-in-One Oil Co.
165 CF. Broadway, N. Y.

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

Young People's Topics for July 8

Tried and Proved

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Heb. 6:9-20 (Promise Meeting)

OH, how lightly we promise! "Will you do this for me?" is answered by a hearty "sure!" and then, when the time is ripe and the thing is undone, the only excuse is "Oh, I forgot!" And sometimes we say we are sorry, and sometimes we are. There are promises that are made only after hours of prayer, hours sometimes marked with tears, and these promises we nearly always keep; but even our most solemn promises sometimes fail because we are human, and weakness is human. But the promises of God are sure. In all the ages men have found them certain and steadfast. Abraham believed the promises of God and became the Father of the Faithful, and from Abraham's day to this men have been proving the faithfulness of God's word. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is a final answer to any whose faith wavers. Christ himself came as the fulfilment of God's greatest promise to the race. By accepting him as our Saviour we promise by implication to give our lives to his service. The church and every enterprise connected with it is weaker today than it should be because this implied promise is largely unkept; because the service he has a right to expect is performed half-heartedly or not at all. In large measure the promise of God is made contingent upon performance by those who claim the promise; and we, if we would know the full blessedness of the promises of God, must do our part.

Where Are We Placing Our Influence?

Epworth League Topic. Prov. 1:10; Num. 10:29; Rev. 22:17; John 1:46

FEW of us realize that we have any influence, yet there is no one so obscure but that some one else is looking to him and following him. The tiniest sprout in a growing garden casts a shadow all its own. The most obscure among us wields an influence for good or for ill which may be eternal in its outreach, for the force of influence is unending. If you, by your influence, lead some one else to do something unworthy, to lower his standards of conduct, or to compromise his conscience, you may start a strain of unworthy living which will extend through generations. If, on the other hand, you speak the word that will hold an associate true to his conscience and to the right as he sees it, you may be laying the foundation for generations of godly lives. Those of us who claim Christ as our Saviour cannot be too careful of our influence. If we would count for him as we wish to, we must stand for everything that is right and against anything that is debatable. We should be ready to support every public movement that makes for righteousness, and if we stand firmly for the right as God gives us to see it, we will find that we have exerted more influence than we ever thought we had; while if we permit ourselves to be careless, we may awaken suddenly some day to the terrible truth that some life has been ruined through our willingness to compromise.

A few years ago in a Western city a woman who for forty years had taught in the grammar grades of the city schools, and whose life had been obscure as lives go, finished her course in human things. The pallbearers included a banker, a judge, a congressman and three leading business men, while hundreds more of successful men acknowledged their debt to this quiet little woman, who taught honesty along with arithmetic, and ideals along with language, and virtue with history. You cannot tell how far your influence will reach, but you can be certain of the direction in which it will lead.

The Children and the Kingdom

Continued from page 699

something startlingly new, every day, to write about.

And then, each year, there is something new that is really very old—their need. For the children need to know that life is worth while, that there are green fields and kind hearts. That there are songs to sing, and friends for the asking, and a God to love!

Oftentimes, at Mont-Lawn, I think of One who sat beside the roadside and drew little children tenderly into his arms. They weren't all of them spick and span, plump, pretty little children, I'm sure! Some of them, I think, may have been wan and ragged and dirty. And yet he said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Oftentimes, at Mont-Lawn, I feel that we have brought that kingdom very near to earth.

"OF such is the kingdom of heaven," said One
Who paused in the dust of the way,
And gathered the children close, close to his breast,
And taught them to sing and to pray.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven," he said
(A light from God's heaven gleamed over his head).
Ah, where is their kingdom to-day?

Is it, then, a crowded street?
Hear the trolleys coming!
Listen to the measured beat
Of the horse's steel-shod feet;
Hear the steady humming
Of the flies that buzz about,
Darting in and darting out,
Touching bits of filthy meat. . . .
Feel the blinding, scorching heat!

In the gutters must they play?
Must they waste their lives away,
Always seeking, never finding,
Till at last they, never minding,
Close their eyes and with a sigh
Gladly die?

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven," said One;
He smiled as he spoke—ah, I know!
(And over his head the blue sky shimmered down Upon the green meadows below.)
He died on the cross that our souls might be shriven,
And, oh, to his children how much have we given
To cancel the debt that we owe?

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Two Subscribers, Chatham, N Y	$5.00
Presby S S, Hallstead, Pa	5.00
——, Madison, Ind	5.00
"In His Name," Holly Springs	5.00
——, Grinnell, Iowa	5.00
Jno Hughes	5.00
Mrs M S Ames & Friends	5.00
Mrs E E Peck	5.00
Mrs M Murley	5.00
F O Stockwell	5.00
W E Wagner	5.00
Miss C	3.00
Lena Grathwohl	3.00
Mrs M Dills	3.00
Mrs May Striemer	3.00
Mira H Clarke	3.00
E J Hines	3.00
Margaret Booker	3.00
John C Davis	$3.00
W J Treloar	3.00
R C Wilson	3.00
Charles Stabler	3.00
——, Wilkes Barre, Pa	3.00
Tillie Hale	3.00
Mr & Mrs J C Conrad	3.00
Miss Flora S Davis	3.00
Mrs G W Miller	3.00
Mrs L A White Grover	3.00
——, South Westport, Mass	3.00
Mrs J A McKey	3.00
Miss Mabel Jones	3.00
Mrs A Powell	3.00
Subscriber, Hookstown, Pa	3.00
Una M Harbour	3.00
Friend, Katy, Texas	$3.00
Jennie B Hunsaker	3.00
Alice L Seal	3.00
Mrs Celia C McCreight	3.00
R A Holloway	3.00
Samuel Mills, Sr	3.00
E R, Caro, Mich	3.00
Miss Louise McLean	3.00
——, Victorville, Calif	3.00
Ella S Marts	3.00
Miss Rebekah Kilmer	2.50
Carl & Ruth	2.50
F L Sonailes	2.50
Friends, Orange, N J	2.50
Harmony S S, Gum Spring, Va	2.50
Mary E Keefer	2.50
Mrs F C Erickson	$2.50
Miss Maud L Miller	2.50
Marvin J Hansen	2.50
Mr & Mrs L H Parkes & Mrs H L Barnes	2.50
Susie Shumaker	2.50
Mrs J B Jones	2.50
H E M	2.00
Mrs C C Trevett	2.00
John Walker	2.00
Mr & Mrs J M Estes	2.00
Mrs F L Ward	2.00
J H Orr	2.00
Friend, E Douglass, Mass	2.00
L C Porter	2.00
Mrs L J Mathews	2.00
Elizabeth Ames	2.00
——, Salem, O	2.00

Virginia Lawrence	$0.25
Victoria Lawrence	.25
Ross Congleton	.25
Mary C Snell	.25
Mr F M Perrin	.25
E Jewell	.25
John Erickson	.25
E G Schutte	.25
C W Hatch	5.00
Coal Creek Union S S, Beacon, Ia	5.00
Rev W M Maiden	5.00
Mrs E J Smith	5.00
S H Fulton	5.00
Mrs E M Williamson	5.00
Presby S S, Nunda, N Y	5.00
J T Dahle	5.00
Mary Marshall	5.00
C K	5.00
C E D P	5.00
Mr & Mrs W W Lewis	5.00
Mrs W H Ward	5.00
C A Hagaman	5.00
Mr & Mrs Moore Moore	5.00
S C, Iowa	5.00
A C Neal	5.00
Romanus Hadgman	5.00
"Inasmuch," Hancock, Wisc	5.00
A H Byrd	5.00
Mrs W E Gray	5.00
Mabel E Shaffer	5.00
Belle S Armstrong	5.00
Helen E Greaves	5.00
Ella M Evans	5.00
"Friend," S Newbury, Vt	5.00
——, Roseville, Calif	5.00
Jos C Airey	5.00
Jane Bailey	5.00
Mrs Wilbur Bartholf	5.00
Chas Shedd	5.00
Mrs M McKerral	5.00
F L Worthington	5.00
W S Harrison & J O Fenenga	5.00
Henry Narum	5.00
J B Hart	5.00
Mr & Mrs T A De Voss	5.00
Mrs M M Cook	5.00
Friends, Marietta, Ga	5.00
A L Hasselman	5.00
J W E	5.00
Miss Louise C Blume	5.00
M A C, Newburgh	5.00
T O Chisholm	5.00
Woman's Missy Soc., Old Orchard Cong. Ch., Webster Groves, Mo	5.00
In the Name of Mrs B E Barksdale	5.00
Mr & Mrs Lee Critchfield	5.00
Dan Mosier & Family	5.00
Sarah Lehman	5.00
Mr & Mrs Rubingh	5.00
Mrs Abbigael Keating	5.00
W H Dean	5.00
Mr & Mrs H S Williams	5.00
Mrs J W Weaver	5.00
Mrs & Miss Barnett	5.00
A W Kimball	5.00
Mrs Ruth A Silsby	5.00
Mrs Mary C Fairchild	5.00
B F Cloyd	5.00
E F Bartholomew	5.00
Ruth E Griffith	5.00
J G Stamm	5.00
Friend, McClelland, Ia	5.00
Mrs W T Stewart	5.00
Mrs Sue A Adams	5.00
Mrs Sallie H Vance	5.00
Mrs W H & Ramey Hickox	5.00
——, Newark, N J	5.00
Evelyn A Jones	5.00
Mrs W Pelton	5.00
Mrs Lillian Russell	5.00
Mrs G Gadbersen	5.00
Mr & Mrs L C Benedict	5.00
Friend, Lorain, O	5.00
Mrs H N Day	5.00
J L Rogier	5.00
Mrs A B S	5.00
Friend, Oil City, Pa	5.00
Mrs George H White	5.00
C L Christianson	5.00
J J Mannel	5.00
Olaf Grindahl	5.00
J P Nordstrom	5.00
Mrs S J Filbey	5.00
Mrs O C Williams	5.00
Julia C Berdell	5.00
C D Marchant	5.00
"Lelandites"	5.00
L Barmore	$5.00
Miss Edith W Gray	5.00
Mrs Belle Tedford	5.00
Agnes Forth	5.00
David F Sloan & Family	5.00
J Peterson	5.00
Miss Brown	5.00
John C Hale	5.00
E M P	5.00
Mrs Laura O Graham	7.00
S S, Ref Presby Mission, Robstown, Tex	4.00
Coal Creek Ch, Emporia, Kan	10.25
W F Pool	8.00
Mr & Mrs B R Betz	2.60
Reader, Salisbury, N C	9.00
Friend, Summit Hill, Pa	.95
G, Barrington, R I	6.00
Geo E Vanderhoof	4.00
——, Sterling, Nebr	.75
L Wick	1.40
Mrs Louisa Case	1.80
R P S S, Hetherton, Mich	19.34
Beulah Bapt S S, Gloucester, Va	6.00
Evangelical Assn Ch, Tontogany, O	7.13
In His Name, Camrose, Alta, Can	6.00
Laura Weber	4.50
S S Cl, Fruitvale, Calif	.65
Wm James Smith	4.00
S S Cl, M E Ch, Lincoln, Kans.	1.75
Martin Andersen	8.00
Olive Gooley	8.00
"Well Wishers," Canal Fulton, O	15.14
Grace Evang Ch & Friends, Findlay, O	23.00
E H Knauff	6.00
——, Lake Mills, Iowa	.20
Thos A Sawyer	3.50
Class of Little Girls, Helena, Okla	2.10
Mrs Mary Osborne	6.00
Wm Krueger & Jean Rowell	9.94
J B S	26.50
S Stepp	1.25
——, Rootstown, O	6.00
Annie Caruthers	12.00
H C Berger	1.25
Mrs L J Tyler	7.00
Misses Bakerville	12.50
Mrs J M Greaves	1.75
Elton Philathea S S Cl., Delevan, N. Y	13.00
Friends, Pleasant Valley, Okla	1.20
Men's Bible Cl, Christian Liberty Ch, Terhune, Ind	14.40
Charles Carr	.60
Mrs A Eastman	4.00
Cashmer Ch, Indian Mills, W Va	23.55
Raymond W Hoffman	2.10
E B Bowman	12.00
Presby S S, Valley Head, Ala.	5.30
Mr & Mrs Chas A Williams & Mr E S Hadley	12.00
Presby S S, Dunmore, Pa	42.75
Mrs G D M	.24
Mr Townsend	4.00
Subscriber, Nomine Grove, Va	6.00
David Lautz	4.00
First Meth S S, Gadsden, Ala.	12.00
Mr & Mrs Homer Conner & Sons	12.00
S S, Annette, Calif	7.00
——, Middleburgh, N Y	6.00
Bapt S S, Darlington, Wisc	5.25
H C Smith	4.00
Meth S S, Menominee, Mich.	13.00
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	9.00
L & F J	4.00
Tom and Eva	.95
T M Getchell	6.10
L H Dean	3.50
Mrs S A Winter	4.00
Fleming Bros	7.50
Ray Hubbs	12.00
H W C	18.00
Ella V Coffman	5.15
Friend, Sauk Center, Minn.	.30
Edward B Reese	4.00
Julian Hatch	4.00
Annot Lyle Kerr & Sisters	1.10
Bible Cl, First M E Ch, Atlantic City, N J	40.00
Mrs J D Clark	$4.00
Bapt S S, Deanville, Pa	12.04
Mrs A J Allen	8.50
James W Green	100.00
English Luth Ch of the Reformation, Milwaukee, Wisc	50.00
F Mehring	50.00
"In His Name," Hamilton, O	50.00
Union Ch, Balboa, C Z	50.00
Mrs David Sterrett	25.00
Mrs L A Lelean	25.00
Katherine Millner	25.00
Mr & Mrs E E McDonald	25.00
J C Campbell	25.00
Two Friends, Chambersburg, Pa	25.00
Miss Mary E Green	25.00
Henry Tobias	25.00
Mrs Julia Nelson	25.00
Mrs J E Westerland	25.00
Friends, Rochester, N Y	25.00
David McLellan	20.00
Mrs J Blair	20.00
Thos J Hughes	20.00
Mrs C Wing	20.00
Wm F Baughman	20.00
Alex G Williams	20.00
Mr & Mrs D K Hyatt	20.00
Mrs V Miller	20.00
Mrs G W L	20.00
Mrs Julia A Moore	20.00
Blue Mountain College, Blue Mountain, Miss	15.00
Friend, Pella, Ia.	15.00
Mrs S M Glenn	15.00
Mrs J R & Fred W Williams	15.00
J W Smoots	15.00
A G Klein	15.00
Mr & Mrs S J Paulsen	15.00
Miss I M Douglass	15.00
Mr & Mrs F P Clare	15.00
Mrs A H Carey	15.00
Mrs Atherton Clark	10.00
Mrs Ella G Boyer	10.00
——, Syracuse, N Y	10.00
Mr John A Tate	10.00
Mr & Mrs John R Guffey & Sister	10.00
Uncle Will & Aunt Kate	10.00
Miss Anna Horsch	10.00
J H Lehman	10.00
D R Stokes & Sister	10.00
Sherman Remer	10.00
T H Turner & Family	10.00
Hugh Clemans	10.00
Lizzie C Souders	10.00
Mr & Mrs Madison Edwards	10.00
Linus Penzel	10.00
Mrs Emma A Every	10.00
J & E Thompson	10.00
Friend, Luverne, Iowa	10.00
——, Akron, O	10.00
——, Phila, Pa.	10.00
Elizabeth Grime	10.00
Greenville-Peniel Orphan Home, Peniel, Tex	10.00
James E Perry	10.00
Mr & Mrs W C Stryker	10.00
——, Russelville, Ky	10.00
Dr W G Dietz	10.00
W H Chandler	10.00
Miss A B Barefield	10.00
M E Kelsey	10.00
M G Charles	10.00
Mrs Mary Newbill	10.00
John J Bushey	10.00
Jennie S Johnson	10.00
Hugh Riddell	10.00
Chas P Wolf	10.00
Mrs E Brundige	10.00
L W	10.00
Rev C A Cooke	10.00
Mrs Amos Sturges	10.00
D M Bare	10.00
Mabel J Spencer	10.00
D R McRae	10.00
H N G Bentley	10.00
J P Kritline	10.00
Margaret Betyemann	10.00
"In His Name," Los Angeles, Calif	10.00
John Bath & Family	10.00
Geo W Holroyd	10.00
Mr & Mrs Henry J Pennings	10.00
Chas E Gilson	10.00
J D Lord	10.00
C I Stoner	10.00
Mrs Harriet Peer	10.00
Mr & Mrs Merton Hunt	10.00
C S Moore	$10.00
Mrs J N Goozen	10.00
Mrs Ellen G Hadley	5.00
Jr Philathea's, M E Ch, Whittier, Calif	5.00
K S	5.00
W Lawton	5.00
Mrs K M Nourse	5.00
Friend, Herndon, Va	5.00
Mrs John Rawlings	5.00
Mrs Mary Osborn	5.00
Mr & Mrs S H Wells	5.00
J E Walker	5.00
Walter T Evans	5.00
Mr & Mrs Hanford	5.00
J C Sydenham	5.00
——, Alpena, S Dak	5.00
L J Kiser	5.00
Miss Sarah Polk	5.00
P J Miller	5.00
S M Ball	5.00
Mrs E E Coles	5.00
Miss Frances Baldwin	5.00
J N Foster	5.00
John Drysdale	5.00
J L Vandiver	5.00
——, Orleans, Vt	5.00
Mary E Gerould	5.00
Wm Thiessen & Family	5.00
Anna Lansdown	5.00
Mrs E H Moore	5.00
Mrs Joanna Hope	5.00
Thorvald Sorensen	5.00
Mrs H E Brown	5.00
W M Chesnut	5.00
Mrs M V Beaujean	5.00
N D M Montana	5.00
Mrs M D La Force	5.00
Friend, Long Beach, Calif	5.00
I & F Thomson	5.00
Ida Brown	5.00
Mrs Irene Safford	5.00
Friend, Buchanan, Mich	5.00
Estella Blanchart	5.00
Mrs R Horton	5.00
S C L	5.00
Friend, Frederick, Md	5.00
Mrs J E Sherman	5.00
H V Ecksall	5.00
Marguerite Elder Steele	5.00
Rev J P Nesbit	5.00
Friend, Ironton, O	5.00
Zelia M Walters	5.00
Louise Moore	5.00
Miss H E Snodgrass	5.00
A M E	5.00
Mrs H S Olin	5.00
Mary Essig	5.00
N C Williams	5.00
Mrs C R Losi	5.00
H E Fish	5.00
Mrs E W Riley	5.00
Mrs A E M K	5.00
Subscriber, Cutler, Ind	5.00
Subscriber, Phila., Pa	5.00
G. W Thompson	5.00
Mrs C H Everett	5.00
D L Raymond	5.00
Mrs E Borden	5.00
Don C McMullen	5.00
S E L	5.00
Reader, Dupuyer, Mont	5.00
W G Hudson	5.00
——, Dayton, Wash	5.00
Mrs J H Clark	5.00
Charles N Schneider	5.00
Mrs L G McCoy	5.00
Miss Emma Reynolds	5.00
Mr & Mrs H R Shaw	5.00
Mrs D Smythe	5.00
F Wallis	5.00
Mrs A M Erixson	5.00
School, Commack, L I, N Y	5.00
C H Lincoln	5.00
Mrs Jennie P Whites	5.00
G W Nance	5.00
Francis A Hunter	5.00
J D Saville	5.00
Mr & Mrs Harry Watkin	5.00
M A Switzer	5.00
Subscriber, St Louis, Mich	5.00
Clayton Wright	5.00
Oscar Graunaman	5.00
Mrs Kate Cash	5.00
John A Himes	5.00
Mrs Alice M Burroughs	5.00
H Bradford	5.00
L H Durling	5.00
Mr & Mrs J S Goodban	5.00
Christian Wirkler	5.00
W W Rauk	5.00
L M Frame	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

"You can't scare me!"

Gold Dust dissolves the grease

I am only a plain little woman, I know—and you are the big old dishpan.

You try to tie me down three times a day—but I know how to make short work of you.

First, I scrape all the dishes and stack them.

Next, I try to have the water good and hot—but even if it's lukewarm I don't have to worry.

Then I stir in a tablespoonful of Gold Dust. Now I am ready for the washing.

My Gold Dust takes right hold of the grease and the grease fairly slips off the dishes. The rest is easy. My dishes dry quicker because they are cleaner. With my Gold Dust I always feel prepared—it does just what I expect of it. No, friends, the dishpan doesn't scare me!

Suppose you order a package of Gold Dust from your grocer and see how much dishwashing time it saves for you. If you wish Gold Dust results, be sure it is actually Gold Dust.

GOLD DUST

The Busy Cleaner

Gold Dust is a saponaceous powder with unusual cleansing properties. As Gold Dust contains no gritty substance, it dissolves thoroughly in either hot or cold water.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
MAKERS

GOLD DUST
GOLD DUST

Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work.

Both Worthy of the Name

Firestone

TWO TIRES, cord and fabric. Each dominant in its class. Both deserving of the Firestone imprint. Whether you equip with Firestone Cord or Fabric Tires, you can be certain of the grip of the road that gives driving confidence, the additional resilience that creates the extraordinary comfort known as luxury, the stubborn resistance to wear that assures Most Miles per Dollar. Seek the name Firestone and you'll end tire difficulties.

FIRESTONE TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY
Akron, Ohio
Branches and Dealers Everywhere

Firestone Cord
NON SKID

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

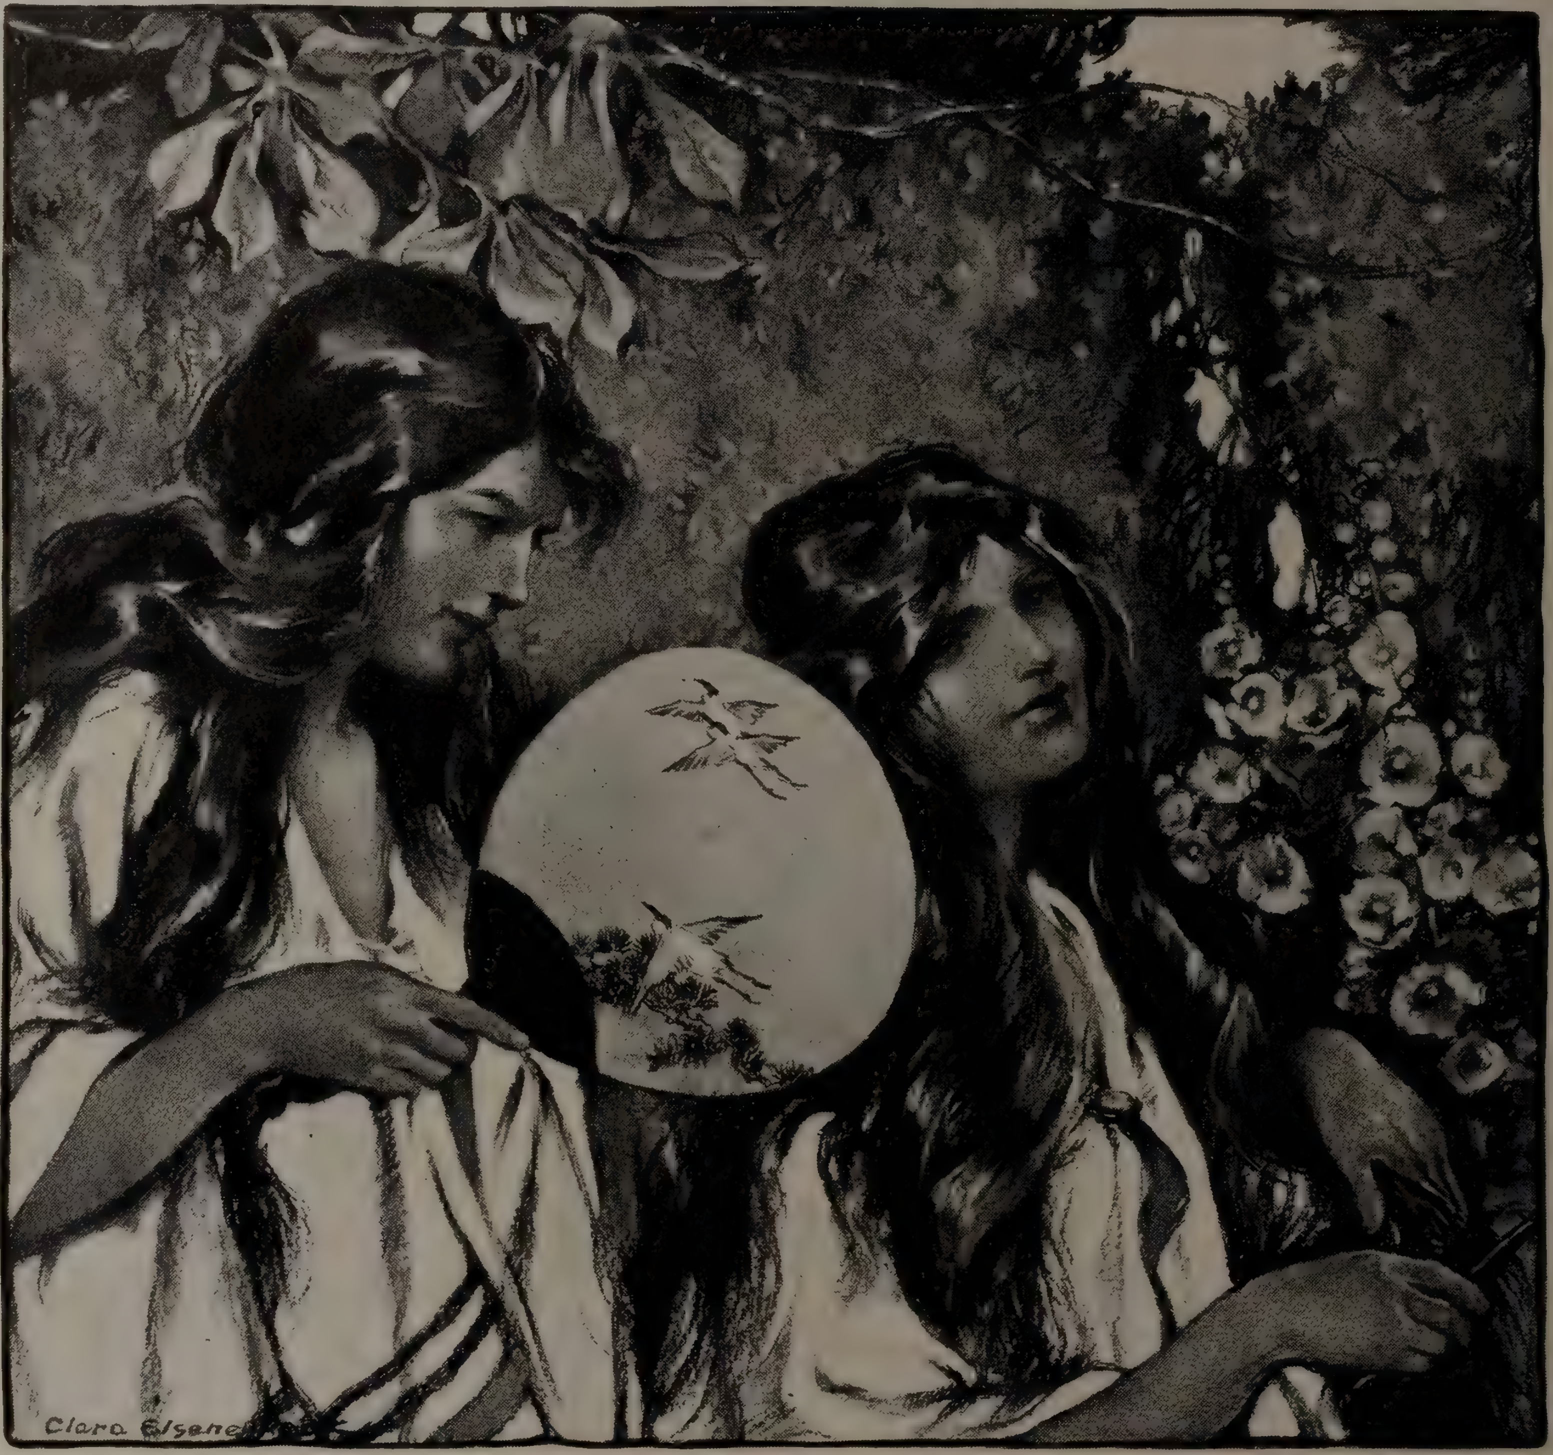
NEW YORK, JULY 4, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 27. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

© Fred H. Kiser, Portland, Oregon

SUNSET OVER THE TRAIL AT THE HEAD OF LAKE ST. MARY, GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA

The silver fish dart in a stream as limpid as a tear,
And summer pauses while a gleam from heaven hovers near!



COPYRIGHT 1917 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNAT

WARM sunshine, summer air and Ivory Soap make a shampoo fit for the softest, silkiest hair in the world. And of the three, Ivory Soap is indispensable because nothing can take the place of its smooth, white, bubbling lather.

The Ivory lather is easy to apply and easy to rinse. It cleans hair and scalp thoroughly. But it does not make the hair dry and brittle nor does it affect the natural oily secretion. The following directions will help you.

Ivory Soap Shampoo

Make a warm suds with Ivory Soap paste. (See recipe inside wrapper.) Saturate hair and scalp. Rub the scalp with the paste and dip the suds over it. Rinse with spray or cup, gradually cooling the water. Dry by rubbing, in the sun if possible, but do not use strong heat.

Ivory Paste

IVORY SOAP . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}\%$ PURE

IVORY
IT FLOATS

Factories at Ivorydale, Ohio; Port Ivory, New York; Kansas City, Kansas; Hamilton, Canada

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Billy Sunday Reviews the Campaign

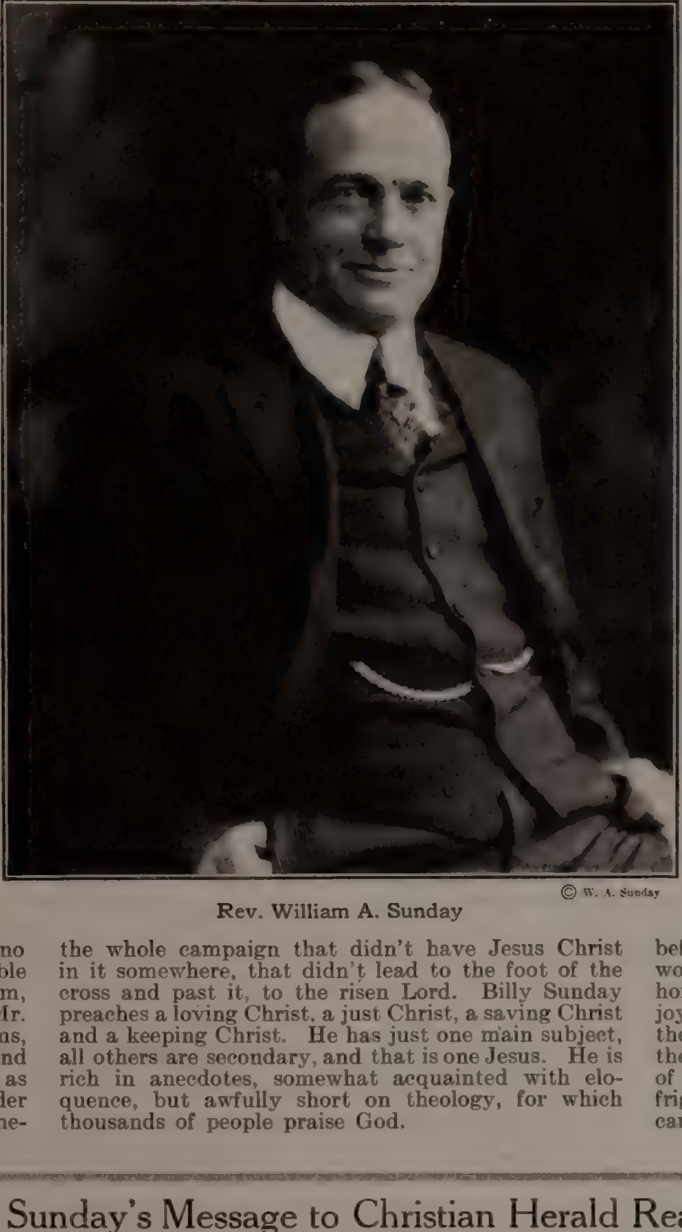
"GOOD-BY Billy! God bless you!"

This was the farewell, shouted across the big tabernacle by the last big audience to the little "big" man who had just said "Good night and Good-by." Handkerchiefs waved, hands were held upward toward the platform where Billy Sunday waved his parting to the people for whose eternal happiness he had worked, as few men work for anything, for a long ten weeks, ended all too soon. There were tears, too, in that last greeting and Billy's own eyes threatened to spill over once or twice as he realized the depth of the affection back of that full throated adieu. The great New York revival campaign had ended? No. Only the first phase of it. But Mr. Sunday had done his part, had done it well and 3,326 people had sealed his ministry on that last night by pressing forward, in seemingly endless streams, to grasp his hand and to acknowledge their allegiance to his Saviour. On the last day, in three big services 7,228 people had "hit the trail," and the grand total of the campaign was 98,264, the greatest total in the history of Sunday campaigns. Philadelphia yielded 51,135, Boston 50,828, Detroit 46,102 and Buffalo the last campaign before New York, 42,204. The free will offering, which Mr. Sunday divided equally between the American Red Cross and the Army Y. M. C. A., totaled $118,000 at the close of business June 18. Boston gave $48,903, Philadelphia $41,724, Buffalo $32,258 and Detroit $27,192. The operating cost of the New York campaign was $150,000.

In the early days of the campaign, we gave the readers of the Christian Herald a somewhat detailed story of the preliminary work connected with the enterprise. During the campaign we have shown the workings of parts of the great organization which Mr. Sunday has built up to supplement his own work on the platform. Without the organization, Mr. Sunday might preach the same sermons for the same number of nights and have nothing much to say good-by to. A Sunday evangelistic campaign is Billy Sunday, plus a most efficient organization, plus, over all, the Spirit of God. Without the Spirit, Mr. Sunday might talk his head off and the organization might use up all the automobiles in town and there wouldn't be real converts enough to fill a patrol wagon.

But the Spirit of God is there. He is the power back of the whole intricate machine. Billy Sunday is God's man, doing God's work and God is blessing him and is using him as He is using no other man in this generation. It would be impossible to sit in the press-box, right alongside the platform, night after night, as the writer did, watching Mr. Sunday, searching his face, analyzing his mannerisms, learning to love him, without becoming more and more confident that the power in that frail body, as fit as any human body can be, but worked harder than any human body ought to be, was something more, something higher than mere human enthusiasm in a great work, or human vanity seeking the plaudits of the crowd. Day after day as those intent eyes shot their penetrating fire into the upturned faces of unnamed thousands, the hunger for souls flamed up in them and he who watched with sympathetic eyes could almost see the heartache that tore the vitals of the preacher, as he knew that hundreds hesitated and held back although other hundreds were pressing down the trail.

THE sermons of the last week were all aimed pretty much at the fellow who hesitated, who procrastinated, who was satisfied with his good intentions for some to-morrow. The last sermon was the one printed in part in last week's Christian Herald. The text the night before was Mark 12 : 34, "Thou art not far from the Kingdom." Billy said "Lots of people are so near the Kingdom they can almost look into Heaven; but they've got to take the last step by faith in Jesus Christ," and "A fellow who desires to know the will of God is never left in the dark." These expressions are typical. There wasn't a sermon during the whole campaign that didn't have Jesus Christ in it somewhere, that didn't lead to the foot of the cross and past it, to the risen Lord. Billy Sunday preaches a loving Christ, a just Christ, a saving Christ and a keeping Christ. He has just one main subject, all others are secondary, and that is one Jesus. He is rich in anecdotes, somewhat acquainted with eloquence, but awfully short on theology, for which thousands of people praise God.



© W. A. Sunday

Rev. William A. Sunday

Some people see only Mr. Sunday's mannerisms, but his platform movements are as sincere as is the rest of his message. When he drops on his hands and his toes and leans over the edge of the platform to talk to the Devil, it is because he has some very definite things to say to that gentleman, of whose personality Mr. Sunday has no doubt whatever. When he winds up and delivers an imaginary in-shoot at a theoretical batter, it is because he has a message which he wants to put home, and he does it. When he stands with one foot on his chair and the other on his pulpit, it is because of his deadly earnestness, because of his determination to lift his audience out of their lethargy and self-satisfaction, because of his intense desire to make them see the utter foolishness and damning certainty of sin. Billy Sunday never makes a useless motion.

BUT what draws the crowds? Not Billy alone, we can admit that without detracting one iota from his honors. The organization produces the crowds. That is what it is for, one thing anyway, to produce the crowds and to bring them to the tabernacle prepared in mind and heart for the message. Noon meetings on the streets and in the shops carried the message of the Christ to men in all quarters of the city. Then from these same shops there come delegations and from the delegations came trail hitters. Mr. Sunday added to his party for the New York campaign a man who had "hit the trail" in Kansas City, A. B. MacDonald, editorial writer on the Kansas City Star. "Mac" had been doing some gospel team work since the K. C. campaign but he was up against something new in the street meeting work in New York. Experienced men from the Y. M. C. A. gave him all the advice they could, he was not to mention religion or he'd lose his crowd, he mustn't talk over ten minutes, he mustn't answer questions or argue. At his first meeting, after the cornetist had played a tune or two, "Mac" motioned to a couple of hundred men who were keeping just outside the danger zone and called, "Come closer, fellows, I want to tell you what Jesus Christ has done for me." And three hundred of them crowded around his car and listened for twenty-two minutes while he told them how the Saviour had taught him to pray and to believe and had taken from him the craving for drink, had kept him from gambling and had cleaned up his language which before had been fully seasoned with well chosen "cuss" words, and more than that had given him a happier home than he had ever known and a life that was all joy and sunshine. Those fellows listened eagerly, they asked interested questions and he answered them, and when at last the whistles blew for the end of the lunch hour those men, who should have been frightened away by religion, crowded around his car to receive copies of the Gospels which he was able to give away by hundreds through the thoughtfulness and generosity of the New York Bible Society. This Bible Society, by the way, offered a khaki-bound testament to each trail hitter who had no Bible at home, giving away altogether 48,613 testaments and 47,000 Gospels.

A SIMILAR work was conducted in the laundries and the clothing factories and the stores and other places where women worked, the women of the party and other good speakers among the New York women bringing to the women and girls the same message which the men of the party were carrying to the men and

Continued on next page

Billy Sunday's Message to Christian Herald Readers

NEW YORK is a wonder! It has always been so, measured by its fast pacers and money barons, but it is equally so for religion. Some wiseacres warned me that it had been the graveyard of every evangelist. Well, you can give "Bill" more just like it.

When I arrived at the "Pennsy" station, thousands greeted us, from John D. Rockefeller, Jr., down to the grip hustlers, and that warmth, enthusiasm and unstinted support continued to the last minute.

The Executive Committee put their hearts and heads into the work, and the thousands of workers performed their part with "pep," and played the game like a pennant-winning team.

I never saw a place where wealth and religion were so synonymous. I never saw people more responsive to the old-time Gospel. God's blessings fell upon the audiences in showers.

Never in my twenty-one years' experience did I see such crowds eagerly "hit the trail." Knockers, excuse-makers and failures must now deliver the "goods" in New York, for this campaign proves that the old town is hungry for Christ, and will flock to Him when He is "lifted up."

Things are started now, AND IT IS UP TO THE CHURCHES TO KEEP IT GOING!

I am profoundly grateful to the friends all over the country who have backed us up with their prayers for this fight; that helped. The old Devil has been routed and God glorified.

Bigger days are ahead. America must turn to God, if the Nation is to live and carry the Gospel of Liberty to all the earth. Liberty Bonds will pay the way. Our red-blooded sons will redeem the world from accursed militarism; but only God can give the victory that will put peace on earth.

The spiritual slacker should be drummed out of the camp; the church tramp should be starved into actual Christian work, and the sermonizer who gives stones for bread should be treated as a traitor. These are days for vigorous preaching, sacrificial living and down-right devotion to Christ.

Fall in, then! Keep step, and, shoulder to shoulder, we will march forward to rout the Devil and enthrone Christ as King in every heart;

W. A. Sunday.

In the Land of Sulphur and Cotton

Two Vast American Industries That Are Vital to Us in the Present World-Struggle

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

AWAY down here on the Gulf of Mexico, several hundred miles west of the mouth of the Mississippi and in about the same latitude as Cairo, in Egypt, lies a little island which has become of great importance on account of the war. The island is a spit of sand three miles wide and a little more than thirty miles long. You could walk across it in an hour and from one end to the other in a day. It lies close to the shore, and in one place so near it that a causeway, over which the trains go in three minutes, connects it with the mainland of Texas. The island lies at the mouth of a great bay almost half as large as the state of Rhode Island. It guards the entrance and thereby furnishes a harbor from which will go out vast quantities of goods to our allies in Europe.

THIS island is Galveston Island, and the harbor is the chief export point for the vast shipments of cotton which will be sent abroad to feed the textile factories of England and France and to supply the munition plants of those countries. The modern soldier is largely clad in cotton; and it takes, it is said, one whole bale of 500 pounds, turned into explosives, to fire a big gun. Last year Galveston shipped between two and three million bales of cotton, and more than half of that went to England. Notwithstanding the submarines the staple has gone forth in a steady and unbroken stream. The value of such cotton sent abroad last year amounted all told to over $183,000,000, and of that more than $40,000,000 worth has gone to Italy and France.

Just now the business of the port is somewhat restricted on account of the war, but when the season is on there will be twenty arrivals and departures of steamers a day. The wharves will be covered with cotton bales and hundreds of men will be packing them so tight into the holds of the steamers that upon starting out each will be a solid mass of cotton. The cotton comes to Galveston on a half dozen trunk lines, which meet at the causeway. It crosses from there to some of the largest cotton warehouses of the world. These warehouses are known as cotton presses. They can store upward of 100,000 bales at a time.

Sulphur, that has been pumped from the wells, in the form it takes as it hardens

THE loading of the steamers is done by skilled men, negroes who receive as much as $50 a week during the season. The packing is so carefully done that a single large vessel may carry as much as 20,000 bales. That means 10,000,000 pounds of cotton, or enough to make a cotton shirt for every soldier now fighting our battles in Europe and leave some to spare.

Texas alone is now raising 20,000.000 bushels of wheat every year, and last year something like 50,000,000 bushels were shipped out of Galveston. The grain comes in also from Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma and states farther west, and it goes out across the Gulf of Mexico and up through the Atlantic to Europe.

In addition to wheat and cotton the Bay of Galveston is fast becoming an export point for lumber and iron. On other sides of the bay are the two ports of Texas City and Bolivar. All three ports, as well as Houston, are in a certain sense tributary to Galveston bay. Houston, although it is fifty miles inland, has a ship canal which it proposes to widen and deepen so that the largest of the ocean steamers can eventually make their way to its wharves.

As I rode along these Galveston jetties I was surprised at their massive construction. The jetties of Galveston are walls made of great chunks, or blocks, of granite dumped down one on top of the other until they have formed huge rock embankments, which hold back the water. Many of the blocks weigh ten or twelve tons each. Nevertheless, at the time of the great storm in 1900 many of these mighty blocks were lifted up by the sea and moved for some distance.

I VISITED Freeport to write of another industry that means much as to victory or defeat in our great war with Germany. Away down in southeastern Texas, at the mouth of the Brazos river and within a short distance of deep water in the Gulf of Mexico, lies a great bed of pure sulphur. The bed is more than 500 feet below the surface of the earth, and it is crowned by a huge dome of rock which has a necklace of quicksand. It reaches only twenty-three feet above the surrounding country and to look at it you would think it only a hill. The deposit of sulphur is just like another great bed that lies under a similar dome in southern Louisiana on the edge of the gulf, and the two deposits are now furnishing 98 per cent. of all the sulphur used in the United States. Each is producing tens of thousands of tons every month, and both will be worked to their full capacity throughout the war.

Sulphur has become vital to our life as a nation. It is needed to make the sulphuric acid which is employed in all high explosives, and it is the basis of acid phosphate, the commercial fertilizer upon which we rely for our food supply. In the past, we bought some of our sulphur from Japan, but this is now going to Russia, where it is used for making munitions of war. We once got the most of our supply from Sicily, but that was cut off when the Louisiana mines were developed, and of late we have been making our sulphuric acid from pyrites, the most of which we have been importing from Spain and Portugal. We took from those countries last year a million and a quarter tons, but the supply has been cut off by the submarines, and it will have to be replaced in large part by these sulphur mines.

Just now, we are using more sulphur than ever before. Our usual consumption has been in the neighborhood of 300,000 tons per annum. Last year we used more than three times that quantity, and the bulk of the excess went into high explosives for the projectiles shipped to our allies. From the Freeport mine a quarter of a million tons was shipped to one munition factory, and large contracts have been placed for the future.

The fertilizer companies will need more than one million tons of sulphur for the acid phosphate required by the farmers; but their supply will be restricted by the amounts needed in the munitions factories and it may be also by our shipments to Europe.

Sulphur is used also in many manufactures. Prior boys of New York. Every man in the party, even Homer Rodeheaver, who can do more than sing, conducted shop meetings every day that an appointment could be made. Then Miss Frances Miller conducted a slightly different work for employed women. Meetings were held week days from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M., at three churches, with an evening conference once a week. In a later issue Miss Sangster will have a story about this work, which is being continued.

Continued on page 725

Billy Sunday Reviews the Campaign

Continued from preceding page

Miss Gamlin's work with the boys and girls, about which Miss Sangster told you in the Christian Herald of June 6, brought other delegations, the co-operating churches, the Bible classes, the various Missions, schools, banks, great business houses, all sent delegations; and in each delegation there were sure to be a number of good Christians, some lukewarm church members and some non-Christians, who came largely to make a showing for the house, but who, thousands of them, heard the voice of God in the words of His messenger and left the tabernacle saved and ready to serve. Many converts began their service by working up new delegations and so the wheel kept turning and the delegations kept the tabernacle crowded and the Holy Spirit working through Mr. Sunday, and the ushers and the choir and the Secretaries and the personal workers, did the rest.

THE doors opened for the last meeting about a quarter of six on Sunday evening June 17. The open spaces about the tabernacle were already filled with a waiting crowd which surged in through the doors and almost swamped the patient force of ushers. Rody appeared a little after six and soon the old tabernacle was ringing with songs New York has come to love as they are loved in many another city in the old U. S. A., with "Brighten the Corner," "The Brewer's Big Horses," and "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart," as perhaps the favorites.

A Kind Message from "Ma" Sunday

WE consider the success of the New York campaign phenomenal. Trying to explain it on any basis whatever, without reckoning God's power, would be utterly useless.

Both Mr. Sunday and I deeply appreciate the personal expressions of friendship and sympathy which have been extended to us so generously by all classes of people, from the richest to the poorest. We find what we always have known: that the human heart is just the same in a great metropolis as it is out in the little village on the plain; yet our experience has made it more vivid than ever.

My hope and prayer for those who have accepted Christ, as their personal Saviour, is that they will grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and will become a tremendous power in the various churches where they will find their homes. And I pray that the new converts may find the churches warm-handed and open-hearted to receive them, and that they will work together in harmony and unity for the up-building of the kingdom.

(Signed) MRS. W. A. SUNDAY.

Billy came in about seven o'clock as the sun, slowly dropping in the west, was sending his slanting rays through the ventilators and windows of the old tabernacle, filling the building with golden glory, and making the incandescents almost ashamed of themselves. It was fitting that this last meeting should begin thus, with the blaze of the pure light of heaven. Each member of the party had been received with an ovation from the crowd. but the minute Billy was seen coming through the aisle toward the platform, the whole audience of upwards of 20,000 people was immediately upon its feet, handkerchiefs came out and hands and handkerchiefs waved, while cheer followed cheer, and those who couldn't yell whistled, and Billy laughed and was happy.

It was a happy crowd, and when Bishop Luther B. Wilson of the M. E. church made the usual announcement regarding Mr. Sunday's gift of his own special offering to the Red Cross and the Army Y. M. C. A., and when he urged the big audience to make the gift one of which New York should be proud, they cheered again, When Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., made the final announcement for the Executive Committee, conveying their thanks to the officials of the city, to the 3,000 faithful members of the choir, to the 3,000 ushers, the 1,100 secretaries, and the 2,000 personal workers, each of whom had done his share faithfully and cheerfully, when he told of the success of the campaign and of the love for Mr. Sunday which filled every heart, the big crowd lost itself again in enthusiastic acclaim, recognizing in the speaker not the multi-millionaire of 26 Broadway, but an earnest Christian man, seeking to serve acceptably the Christ whom he acknowledged as his Saviour.

At the end of his sermon, Mr. Sunday leaned on his pulpit for his final prayer of the New York campaign. It was a characteristic prayer, in part as follows:

"Oh, Jesus, thank you! Thank you for your plan of redemption, for your salvation, which I have been

Continued on page 730

THE PROMISE OF LOVE

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—II Timothy 1:1. "The promise of life which is in Christ Jesus."

HERE is a man face to face with what the world calls death, and yet almost the first words of his last letter express a quiet, sunny exultation in the assurance of life. It is the season when he is face to face with Nero. On the one hand the master of legions, the arbiter of destinies, the callous, bloody murderer, steeped in unfathomable vice; and on the other hand an old man, poor and unknown, bruised and bowed with many afflictions, weak and almost friendless. And yet in the heart of the apparent weakling there is born a message buoyant with inspiring joy, steeped in sunny serenity, and warm with the assured possession of indestructible life. The sword and the malice of Nero cannot touch the apostle's treasure. Imperial injustice cannot rob this man of his inheritance. His treasure is "laid up in the heavens." Nero cannot despoil his life, for "his life is hid with Christ in God." The executioner's arm is impotent.

Mark the suggestive setting of my text. In the middle of it there is the precious treasure "life." On the one hand of the treasure is the incorruptible "promise," and on the other the invincible "Christ." It is as though the treasure were enclosed in a wonderful casket, safe and indestructible. To get at it, in order to despoil it, one would have to destroy the "promise" and to overcome the "Christ."

"THE promise of life." What is this life? The only deathly, deadly thing is sin. Whatever truly lives does so because sin has no place in it. Where sin is, death is; the absence of sin is the presence of life. Life, therefore, is freedom from spiritual disease. Life is health, haleness, wholeness, holiness. The "promise of life in Christ Jesus" is therefore the promise of a character incorruptible and undefiled. Now, holiness has two primary characteristics. They may almost be described as its negative and positive features. On the one hand it denotes freedom from disease; on the other it signifies the attainment of strength. Negatively it is an emancipation; positively it is an education. Let us glance at the negative aspect. The Word of God speaks of the sovereignty of sin as a "kingdom of darkness." The unholy are the citizens of the kingdom, and they are described as the pitiable victims of its tyranny and its filth.

The kingdom of darkness is a tyranny; its victims are held down in the most awful oppression and servitude. They live in what the psalmist calls "a horrible pit." But they are not only enslaved, they are also defiled. They are the children of degradation, they live and move in the "miry clay." These are the primary aspects of the kingdom of the night. Its victims are imprisoned and unclean. Now, the negative side of holiness is the attainment of freedom, an emancipation both from the despotism and the impurity of the kingdom of the night. The vocabulary of emancipation alternates between these two ministries. We are "delivered"; we are lifted out of the horrible pit. We are "washed"; we are cleansed from the miry clay. We are "released" from the servitude; we are "cleansed" from its degradation.

Emancipation has its complementary ministry in education. The freed may be the maimed. The liberated may be the imperfect. When the slave of the Southern states was emancipated he was only an emancipated babe, with sleeping and sluggish capacity and endowment. He needed all the ministries of culture to lift him out of his babyhood, and bring him into the larger stature of the matured life. It is even so with the soul. Its emancipation leaves it infantile; its powers are undeveloped; its endowments are unpacked. The positive acquisitions of holiness consist in the unfolding of this dormant and hidden wealth. My religious discernments are in need of culture. My sense of the Infinite requires refinement. My perception of God must be sensitized. The more exquisite tendrils of my spirit must be drawn out that I may "apprehend the length and breadth and height and depth, and know the love of God which passeth knowledge." My moral discernments are in need of culture. My sense of duty requires invigorating. I require a keener discernment between the self-seeking and the disinterested. My intellectual discernments are in need of culture. The power of seeking and acquiring truth requires strengthening.

A man's intellectual enlargement is greatly helped by the moral growth. "Thought expands as by a natural elasticity when the pressure of selfishness is removed. The moral and religious principles of the soul, generously cultivated, fertilize the intellect." My social discernments need to be cultured. My affections require enlargement and purification. They must receive purity and dignity. They must be converted from wavering instincts into fine and illumined principles. I need not go further in enumerating the parts of my personality that are in need of enrichment. Suffice it to say that holiness is more than spiritual freedom; it is spiritual culture. The once-while slave is not only liberated, he is reaching out to all goodness and righteousness and truth. Holiness is, therefore, aliveness. This is the promise of life in Christ Jesus.

"THE promise of life." We speak of the promise of spring, but the real promise of the spring is not to be found in the first early flower which timidly appears above the half-warmed earth. The first flower is a token of the promise, but the promise of spring is found in the warmer breath, in the raised temperature, in the changed temperature, in the increased energy which is subtly moving about the roots of things. I visited some porcelain works the other day. I was taken into the show-room, which was full of exquisite specimens of finished ware. Just outside the show-room there were samples of the raw material out of which the chaste and delicate objects had been made. There was the clay, and there the flints, and there the bones. Was this raw material the promise of the perfected goods? No, the promise of beauty was not in the bone or flint or clay, it was in the workman's thought, and skill, and taste, and affection.

JESUS AND I

"I CANNOT do it alone;
The waves run fast and high,
And the fogs close chill around,
And the light goes out in the sky;
But I know that We Two Shall win in the end—
Jesus and I.

"Coward and wayward and weak,
I change with the changing sky,
Today so eager and bright,
Tomorrow too weak to try:
But He never gives in,
So We Two shall win—
Jesus and I." —Anon.

It is even so with the promise of life, the promise of holiness, of spiritual aliveness. It is not found in some little grace which has risen within my spirit; some small affection, some tiny flower of truth. My promise of holiness is found in my Master Workman, in his thought and skill and unfailing love! "He is able"; the promise is found in the Workman's power. "My thoughts toward you are thoughts of good"; the promise is found in the Workman's thoughts. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification"; the promise is found in the Workman's purpose. "I have loved thee with an everlasting love"; the promise is found in the Workman's affection. I have hope of final apprehension of holiness, because for this very holiness I have been "apprehended of Christ Jesus my Lord."

"THE promise of life in Jesus Christ." This is the seat of the promise. The secret of life, of aliveness, of holiness, is fellowship with Christ. All the language of holiness is the language of fellowship and communion; "believe," "know," "eat," "drink," "love." To be in communion with the Master is to receive the ministry by which holiness is attained. To sincerely desire to be in Christ is to be already in him. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst . . . for they shall be filled." Being in Christ we continually receive from him the resources by which we become possessed of the beauty of holiness. His "love" steals into us like a river. "I am the water of life." He washes us without ceasing. Who has not noticed the wondrous cleansing of the tide-washed rocks? And the tidal flow of spiritual influence will continually wash my life and keep it free from all kinds of defilement.

Perhaps a more tender image will serve my purpose better. I went out into my garden this morning and every blade of grass had been washed into newness of life. The cleansing ministry had come as dew. "In Christ" I shall receive this gentle ministry of cleansing, and all the commonplaces of my life will be beautified by the ministry of spiritual dew. In Christ I shall receive continual sustenance. "I am the bread of life"; he will satisfy my needs, and at the same time he will feed my hunger and encourage my aspiration. In Christ I shall receive continual illumination. "The words that I speak unto you. . . are life." His converse with me in my daily walk will be a power of renewal, and my communion with him will strengthen my powers of spiritual vision.

By this wonderful fellowship we shall at last attain! "God is faithful who promised." Let us offer ourselves in full and complete surrender to the ministry of the Lord, and our emancipation will be succeeded by a spiritual education, and across our fair heads shall be written at last the triumphant words, "Holiness unto the Lord."

---

*Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

The silver fish dart in a stream as timid as a tear,
And summer pauses while a gleam from heaven hovers near!

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

The Nevsky Prospect, in Petrograd, once the boulevard of autocrats is now the parade ground of democracy. This picture shows a demonstration for the Government

War Preparations. Brigadier General George O. Squier, chief signal officer of the army, reported to Congress on June 15 that $600,000,000 was needed for the development of a great fleet of air-craft to be built at the rate of 2,000 a month, both training and battle-planes. It was announced that automobile and typewriter factories were to be utilized for the manufacture of aeroplane parts, and that the first consignment would be delivered about November. A detachment of French war pilots recently reached America to assist in training the American pilots for the great fleet. . . . The controversy regarding the wooden ship-building program was taken in hand by the President on June 19. On June 23 it was reported that the President had given General Goethals full authority to proceed with the building of steel ships; but with instructions to build as many as possible of wood. . . . Vice Admiral William S. Sims, U. S. N., took general charge of all the allied naval forces in Irish waters on June 19, to act in that capacity while the British naval commander-in-chief was absent from his post. . . . On June 20, two American destroyers returned to their base in British waters with eighty survivors of two torpedoed British ships whose S.O.S. had called the destroyers on a dash of more than 200 miles. . . . Steps looking toward the end of anarchistic efforts tending to embarrass the government were initiated on June 15, when Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman were arrested in New York and held in $25,000 bail each. Records seized at the same time gave the authorities a large number of names of active anarchists. . . . The Senate on June 16 passed the War Railroad Bill which provides additional penalties for obstructing traffic and gives the President power to direct that preferential treatment shall be accorded commodities necessary to a successful prosecution of the war. . . . President Wilson on June 20 designated the week June 23–30 as recruiting week, and called for 70,000 volunteers to bring the army up to war strength. Since April 1, 121,363 men have been recruited. . . . It was announced on June 15 that the government had decided to commandeer all steel ships under construction in private yards. It was reported that 2,000,000 tons were under contract and that the Shipping Board was expecting to turn out 3,000,000 tons in eighteen months, steel companies having agreed to furnish sufficient steel. . . . The War Department on June 20 opened bids for 35,000 motor trucks. Prices varied from $1,031 for one-ton trucks to $4,600 for five-ton. Three concerns, The Pierce Arrow Motor Company, The Hurlburt Motor Truck Company, and The Nash Motors Company, each offered to build the whole 35,000.

Only a Week Away

THE Philippines are threatened with independence. The Jones Bill says they must govern themselves some day. Manuel L. Queson, president of the Philippine Senate, talked with Maynard Owen Williams. See next week's Christian Herald.

The reproach of illiteracy is being removed from the mountain folks of Kentucky and the South. Cora Wilson Stewart, the discoverer of the "Moonlight School," will tell you about it next week.

City folks talk of "back to the farm." There is a city in which there are 200,000 gardens. You will know which city next week.

"Wasted Yesterdays" is the title of the beautiful and timely sermon by Dr. David James Burrell in next week's Herald.

Just for good measure, there will be a whole page of world events in pictures.

Control of Food and Fuel. It was announced on June 19 that the President had decided to exercise in full the powers conferred upon him by the embargo clause in the Espionage Law. His action was decided upon in order that exports of food from this country might be put under control, before they reached a volume that would threaten our own food supplies as well as our ability to render service to our allies. All exports will be made subject to license under approval of the Exports Council, of which Herbert C. Hoover is to be the head, with representatives of the State, War, Navy and Commerce Departments. It was announced that articles of consumption for export would be apportioned both by articles and countries, and it was intimated that the control over exports might be extended to cover the routing of vessels listed under American registry. Lord Rhondda, the new food controller of Britain, on June 19 was quoted as saying: "In this war, and especially at this stage, food power is co-equal with man power. In the main, the solution of the problem of Great Britain's food supply lies in America. I am sure they will not 'let us down.'" . . . The Federal Trade Commission on June 20, in a report to the President and Congress on the coal situation, urged a gigantic scheme by which the government should take control of all coal and coke production and distribution, and of all the rail and water transportation systems in the United States. Under the scheme, the coal producers would receive a uniform profit per ton, and the transportation companies a reasonable rate of compensation for the public use of their property. According to the commission, lack of unified control is resulting in the use of coal cars for other commodities and in the idleness of many cars, in the disorganization of the bituminous industry; anthracite is being used for manufacturing purposes where the softer coal is usually burned, and in the mines of both grades of coal running below capacity because of shortage of cars and uncertainty of deliveries. The report of the commission indicates that nothing short of government control will prevent a partial fuel famine and exorbitant prices to householders during the coming season.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Four Million Liberty Loaners. Final figures on the Liberty Loan show that over 4,000,000 people subscribed $3,035,226,850. Allotments were made on a percentage basis, subscriptions of $10,000 and less receiving 100%, the percentage diminishing to about 20% on subscriptions of $25,000,000, of which there were three.

England Frees Irishmen. It was announced on June 15 that all of the prisoners taken in the Irish rebellion on Easter Monday, 1916, would be released, without reservation. On June 18 large crowds in Dublin welcomed the prisoners with an enthusiasm that approached the nature of a riot, the police arresting two men who had climbed the walls of the ruined post office to raise their Sinn Fein flag. Irish unionists and nationalists on June 20 selected delegates for the Irish Convention. William O'Brien, head of the "All For Ireland" party, refused to participate in the convention, declaring that it could only inflame and intensify Irish discontent and throw blame on the Irish people for the government's own failure. The Sinn Feiners also refused to participate.

Chinese Situation Improves. Reports from Peking on June 20 indicated a probable peaceful settlement of Chinese internal troubles, the provinces of

Continued on page 729

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

III God's Covenant with David, or the Coming Kingdom

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

OUR first mountain peak of prophecy was coincident with the first promise of redemption, in the garden of Eden (Gen. 3:15). Approximately 2,000 years elapsed before the second came into view in the promise to, and the covenant with, Abraham in Canaan (Gen. 12:15). The promise and covenant were a divine means for the execution of the original promise in Eden. Another millennium has very nearly slipped away ere the third mountain peak appears in the history of David.

Abraham has now slept with his fathers. Isaac, his son and the heir of promise, has done likewise. The same is true of Jacob and Joseph, the other patriarchs. Their descendants, the Israelites—or the Hebrews, as they are now called—are a great multitude of people dwelling in Egypt. From their cruel bondage under Pharaoh they are delivered by the hand of Moses. They are settled in Canaan, the land of promise. Hundreds of years have passed in which they are ruled by Judges. But they have desired a king to be set over them like the nations roundabout; and at length David, the son of Jesse, a "man after God's own heart" (1 Samuel 13:14), is strongly seated upon the throne.

The Lord has given David rest from all his enemies, and one day, as he meditates upon it in his palace at Jerusalem, there comes into his heart the desire to build a magnificent temple there to the glory of Jehovah. But God will not have it so, and He sends Nathan, the prophet, to reveal His mind to the king. This is recorded in the second book of Samuel, chapter 7. But it is at verse 10, particularly, that the prophecy begins which attaches itself to the covenant God made with Abraham and which carries forward still further the plan for the redemption of the race.

II.

Let us examine this prophecy. God will appoint a place for His people Israel—"a place of their own," in which He will plant them, and from which they will move no more. "Neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more." God will cause them "to rest from all their enemies." Manifestly, the fulfilment of this is still future. They were in "a place of their own" when it was spoken to David, but not as yet were they planted there. They were moved soon afterwards and have been moving ever since. Their time of rest has not come, for "the children of wickedness," i.e., the Gentile nations, have not ceased afflicting them to this day.

But the Lord says further to David, "I will make thee an house." David will not be a builder just now, but God will be a builder, only the house that God will build for David is not a material one of wood and stone, but an earthly dynasty. "I will set up thy seed after thee * * * and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for My Name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." (12, 13.)

This suggests Solomon at first, but really "a greater than Solomon is here." Solomon's kingdom was not established forever. Indeed, the next verse settles the prophecy as applying to Jesus Christ, the seed of the woman promised in Eden, and the seed of Abraham in whom "all the families of the earth shall be blessed." In that verse, God says, "I will be His Father and He shall be My Son," and the inspired author of Hebrews quotes this as fulfilled ultimately in the Son of God. (Heb. 1:5.)

III.

Let us now look for the fulfilment of this prophecy. Solomon, the immediate successor of David, died. In the days of his son, Rehoboam, the kingdom is divided as a divine chastisement upon it for the sin of idolatry which had entered into it. There are two kingdoms now: Israel, or the Kingdom of the ten tribes, and Judah, or the kingdom of the two tribes. Three hundred and fifty years have rolled around since God's covenant with David, and now the Assyrians have come down and carried Israel into captivity, never again to be restored to her own land as a separate kingdom. A century and a half later, or a little less, the same fate is visited upon Judah at the hands of Babylon.

But since God had said that His Son should sit upon the throne of David, Judah as the kingdom of David must be restored again to make that true. Therefore in seventy years, according to the prophet Jeremiah (29:10), she is permitted to return (2 Chron. 36:22, 23). And now more years pass away, half a millennium indeed, and the promised Son does not appear. Judah is still a vassal, first to Babylon, then to Persia, then to Greece and at length to Rome. But one day, when Cæsar is at the head of that Empire and Herod, the usurper, represents him in Judea, the angel Gabriel is "sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth; to a virgin, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David. And the virgin's name was Mary."

"And the angel said unto her, fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call His name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called, the Son of the Highest. And the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David. And He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1:26-33.)

Surely the hour has struck! But alas! "He came unto His own and His own received Him not" (John 1:11). Instead of the crown they offered Him the cross. "He is despised and rejected of men." and they hid as it were their faces from Him (Isa. 53:3). He now becomes the nobleman who must go into a far country to receive his kingdom and to return (Luke 19:11). He is crucified, dead, and buried and the mourners go about the streets. Two of His disciples on the way to Emmaus are moaning because they "trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." (Luke 24:21.)

But lo! He has risen from the dead and has appeared to His disciples, going in and out among them for forty days. It must be His purpose, now, to take to Himself the reins of government and set up the promised kingdom. One day they put the question to Him, saying, "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1:6.)

But once more there is disappointment and waiting. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

"And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld, He was taken up; and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

"And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as He went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen Him go into heaven." (Acts 1:7-11.)

IV.

Were the disciples mystified? If so, the mystery was deepened afterwards. At first, they went about their business of witnessing, when the Holy Ghost had come upon them, confining their witness to the Jews only. It was to them—the descendants of Abraham—that the kingdom had been promised, and to none other was the gospel preached.

But a great persecution arose, driving them out of Jerusalem, and they went everywhere preaching the Word (Acts 8:1-4). The Gentiles began to hear it, and with the same results as in the case of the Jews at Pentecost (Acts 11:15).

What could this mean? Was the privilege of the kingdom for them, as well as for the Jews? A council of the church must be called to consider it (Acts 15). Peter at this council relates his experience in the household of Cornelius, the centurion, and Paul and Barnabas also declare "what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them." When lo! the Holy Spirit comes upon James, the presiding officer, and reveals in outline the whole plan of God in the premises for this age and that which is to come. The mystery at length is solved.

"Men and brethren, hearken unto me," said James. "Simeon (i.e., Peter) hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His Name. And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written: After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men may seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my Name is called, saith the Lord Who doeth all these things." (Acts 15:13-17.)

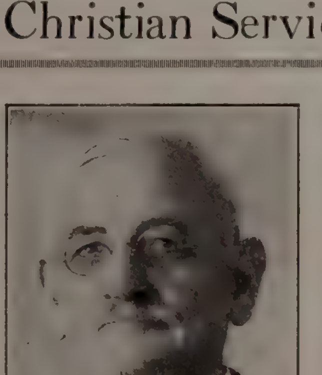
Study this program, and see that God is not now, and in this age, setting up the kingdom promised to David, but doing something else. What He is really doing is taking out from among the Gentiles "a people for His Name." Or, as collateral scriptures explain, He is building up His Church which is called the Body of Christ (Eph. 1:22, 23). The time will come, and may be very near, when this Body will be complete, and the church will be taken out of the earth, caught up "to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:16-18). "And to this agree the words of the prophets," as James says; namely, that "after this," or in other words, after the Church has been translated, Christ will return to the earth, and in Him God will set up the kingdom of David which is fallen down. That is to say, God's covenant with David standeth true, as recorded in II Samuel 7, but the time is not yet. The church must be translated first, and Christ must come again.

The next mountain peak of prophecy will make this clearer to us, bringing before us as it will the converging line of Gentile history.

A Life of Christian Service Ended

THE Rev. Henry Otis Dwight, LL.D., one of the best known authorities on missionary problems in the near East, a man of distinguished learning and wide experience, passed away at his home in Roselle, N. J., on June 19th, at the age of 74 years.

Dr. Dwight was born in Constantinople, Turkey, in 1843. He was the son of Harrison Grey Otis Dwight and Mary Lane Dwight, missionaries of the American Board. He entered Ohio Wesleyan University, but shortly left college to enlist as a private soldier, September, 1861. He participated in a number of battles of the Civil War. At the disbanding of the army in 1865 he was aide-de-camp to General Force, division commander in the Army of the Tennessee. In 1867 he was sent to Constantinople by the American Board as business agent of its missions in Turkey. In 1871 he was transferred to editorial work in the publication department of the mission, later serving as secretary of the mission committee of publication. He wrote, translated, or revised many tracts, school books, and religious books in the Turkish language; and he also edited and carried through the press in six years the great English Lexicon of the Turkish Language, written for the mission by Sir James Redhouse, which is now the standard in use in Turkish government offices and the embassies. He also compiled the new hymnal in Turkish that is now used by all Turkish-speaking congregations.



Rev. Henry Otis Dwight, LL.D.

Dr. Dwight, as an ordained minister of the Congregational Church in the United States, held a pastorate during 1880 and 1881 in Morrisville, Vt. In 1883-84 he was a member of the Committee which revised the Turkish version of the Bible. During the sixteen years from 1882 until 1898, he was secretary of the Constantinople branch of the Evangelical Alliance, and did much to aid the cause of religious liberty for Turkish subjects when worship was forbidden. From 1886 to 1899, he was the representative of the missions of the American Board in negotiations with the Turkish government in behalf of the educational and publication enterprises of the Board, then threatened with extinction. In 1896 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Amherst College.

Dr. Dwight was the author of two books on Turkish life, and a monograph on the Treaty Rights of American Missionaries in Turkey. He was also editor-in-chief of the new Encyclopedia of Missions, in 1904, and compiled the Blue Book of Missions for 1905 and 1907. In 1907, he accepted the position of Recording Secretary of the American Bible Society in New York, and retained his connection with the Society until his death. His long experience in the near East and his familiarity with missionary conditions in Turkey, have frequently been of the greatest service to the Christian Herald. In the great Bible Study Contest of 1916, he rendered excellent service as a member of the Board of Judges.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The First Fourth

MORE than a year had passed since the epoch-making day at Lexington and Concord. For the colonists it had been a year of feverish anxiety and activity. Ticonderoga and Crown Point had been taken. Bunker Hill had claimed its 1600 dead. Washington had taken command of the patriot army. The British had been driven out of Boston.

Yet the colonies were still bound together with but a rope of sand. The thought of final separation from the mother country, of permanently relinquishing the privileges of British citizenship, was by no means popular. There still was hope that the wrongs of the colonists might be redressed. The Tories, great in number, in wealth and in influence, would not listen to talk of separation. The Quakers and Moravians were opposed to war as sinful and would content themselves with such redress as might be obtained through remonstrance. Others, willing to go to any extreme where there was chance of success, could see no hope.

The Continental Congress discussed the question long and keenly. On the 7th of June a resolution had been introduced declaring "That the United Colonies are and ought to be free and independent." Seven colonies had voted for it; six voted against. Greater unanimity was indispensable.

All through June the debate was waged. Then came the great day—July 4, 1776. The delegates took their places early in the morning and the doors were closed. It was decided to remain in session until the issue should be settled one way or the other. Three millions of people waited.

"CLANG!" The big bell in the dome of the hall spoke sharply. The locked doors were thrown open and the delegates came pouring out with faces flushed but jaws set.

"CLANG!" The sound rang out again and with its music mixed a vast roar of cheers from the streets.

"They sign! They sign!" came in a shout that shook the building.

"CLANG!" The big bell that first pealed liberty was cracking its throat for joy.

"CLANG! CLANG!" Another brazen throat in a church tower took it up.

"CLANG! CLANG! CLANG!" All the steeples in Philadelphia were shouting to one another now.

The tidings flew from street to street, from house to house, from chamber to chamber. Wherever it went down came the king's arms, from court house, from market place, from tavern, to give glory to bonfires.

It took wings to the north and south—to New York, where a leaden statue of King George was quickly cast into bullets—to Williamsburg, where in the royal palace Lord Dunmore had built, sat Virginia's first patriot governor, Patrick Henry. It was read to the army amid exulting shouts. It nerved men's hearts to steel.

What had come was transformation. Where had been doubt was confidence. Where had been cross-purpose was unity. It was a spark blown by the wind of destiny, and it illumined the torch. It lightened the shadows that had been over a people, its impulses and aspirations. It lit forge fires throughout the land, and in their glare, face to face, thereafter stood two passions, one lustful, one sublime, both naked and unashamed—oppression and liberty.

Lexington, Concord, Ticonderoga and Bunker Hill had taught the world to know the hearts of the American patriots. The Declaration of Independence taught the patriots to know themselves.

Mr. Hoover on Food Spoliation

SEVERAL months have past since Congress began its inquiry into the high cost of living. Up to the present time, nothing has been accomplished to improve the situation. A few weeks ago, Herbert C. Hoover, a clear-headed, practical man capable of dealing with big problems, took up the subject, by invitation of the President. His vast experience in relief work was a valuable asset in dealing with the big question of the nation's food supply. What he discovered in these few weeks, he disclosed in an address before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, in which he explained the Food Administration bill. The story was one to arouse the nation to the need of immediate action by Congress for the protection of the people against the most colossal scheme of spoliation that has yet come to light.

This country, Mr. Hoover said, has been experiencing "unprecedented prices and rampant speculation" in foodstuffs. The speculators have been looting the public at the rate of $50,000,000 a month, for five months in succession. Thousands of men are implicated in this game of plundering a nation by seizing control of the necessaries of life. He showed that, even in some of the warring countries of Europe, bread is 25 per cent. lower than the price the American householder pays for it; and other articles are in proportion. America's entire canned output of vegetables and fish for 1917 has already been disposed of to these speculators, even before it could reach the canners. He warned the Senate that these men, who have already robbed the people of $250,000,000, will force up prices to unheard of heights in the coming months, unless curbed by the strong hand of the government. Wheat, sugar, flour, potatoes, and all the principal commodities are involved in this gigantic game of plunder.

As Mr. Hoover is the administration's choice for the office of Food Administrator, he wisely took the opportunity to tell the Committee that the Food bill did not propose, as has been widely asserted, to establish a food dictatorship. The object of the bill, which is one of the most important measures now before Congress, is food regulation and conservation. The purpose is to mobilize the people, in order to carry out suggestions given them by the government officials and to "decentralize the functions of the administration and centralize those of food regulation in the various states." This unequivocal disclaimer of any purpose to erect a food dictatorship comes opportunely. The spirit of the country is opposed to dictatorships in any form whatsoever. There has never yet arisen an emergency in which the American people has failed to grant, through their representatives in Congress, ample power to meet it.

An Upbuilding Christianity

AN Ohio reader sends this query: "What do you conceive to be the real duty of the Church of Christ in the present crisis?" This is a very broad question and one which should not be answered without due consideration. There are churches today which seem to regard the present opportunity as one to fill their coffers to overflowing, while the great stream of national generosity is still at the flood. There are others, and we are glad to believe that they form the larger number, that are facing the problem seriously and with a deep sense of responsibility.

Yet, if we go to the only reliable source of enlightenment, it should not be difficult to realize the true mission of the Church today. The Church's charter is found in the Gospels. There it is shown, so clearly that all who read may understand, that the Church's duty is to preach the message of salvation to all nations, to shepherd the sheep and to do all that lies in our power to fulfil the great task of setting up Christ's kingdom on earth, which He Himself began. This is the Church's supreme mission, the crowning duty and the highest service. It includes not only the recognition of Christ's spiritual kingship, and that He is our Redeemer who has bought us with a price, but the spread of His truth in other hearts, everywhere, to the end that men may find peace with God and with their fellow-men. For love and peace and service are essential elements in the teachings of the Church's Founder, whose advent had angelic announcement of peace as a prelude, and who left, as a parting bequest, His divine peace in the hearts of His followers.

To be wholly faithful to this task, the Church should preach a Christianity which is not destructive, but reconstructive. Jesus came not to destroy life, but "that they may have life and may have it abundantly"—that the present life might be a fuller one, and the eternal life assured. He came to invest our humanity with a new and nobler purpose, and to make life more meaningful and worth living than it had ever been before. With the Kingdom of Heaven in the hearts of men, they begin here and now the life eternal. And there is the blessed assurance, in conclusion, that His kingdom is to be an everlasting kingdom, in which peace, love and concord are to have their development. Though the whole world may lie in wickedness, His followers are not to be "fashioned according to the world," for He has "made foolish the wisdom of the world."

A Danger Point

THERE has been a notable revival of interest in the millennial prophecies during the last few months. Multitudes of good, earnest Christians have begun to "search the Scriptures" and to consult the expository writers With all the world in turmoil, it was inevitable that impressionable minds should be led to do this. The conviction that we are living in the very heart of the greatest period of prophetic fulfilment has come to them with a strange, new force that is irresistible. And right here a danger point is encountered. Jesus himself sounded a warning to those who, led away by enthusiasm, were liable to fall into error. False prophets and teachers, he told them, would arise, claiming to be authoritative interpreters of the mind of God and expositors of his Word, yet who, being themselves spiritually unenlightened, would be incapable of guiding others aright.

In the lifetime of many who read these lines, we have seen notable expositors of prophecy who, led away by the temptation to shine before the world as revealers of the divine plan and purpose, were compelled with shame to acknowledge their failure before men. Yet we must be careful not to be carried away with the idea that prophecy is hopeless and unprofitable study. It is the duty of all who love God to make themselves familiar with his Word, not only for its supreme value as a rule of life, but as the sole authoritative source of revelation of the mission of Jesus to the world. He is the central Figure upon which all lines converge, and the divine Interpreter of the prophecies that run like a thread of gold through the Scriptures. We need the reinforcement of divine wisdom and enlightenment in the study of prophecy, and in that study we should associate ourselves only with those who seek for adequate spiritual equipment earnestly and reverently. Nor should we forget that a special blessing is promised to those who read and hear and keep the messages of prophecy in their hearts, giving no heed to fantastic, dogmatic and unspiritual interpreters, but asking aid of a higher wisdom in their sincere efforts to learn the whole will of God toward men.

A Rich Field for Taxation

SOME idea of the enormous bulk of the excess business and excess profits enjoyed in this country by reason of the war is gained from the following table showing certain American exportations for the nine months ending March, 1917, as compared with those for the corresponding period, 1914. The figures are furnished by the National City Bank of New York.

Exports	1914	1917
Brass, and mfrs. of . .	$5,691,280	$295,472,214
Autos, commercial. . .	861,654	33,741,573
Total cars.	38,369,776	118,176,951
Chemicals, etc.	19,791,302	136,235,801
Explosives.	4,719,543	640,632,102
Billets, ingots, etc. . .	679,334	96,160,384
Firearms.	2,713,014	66,087,238
Tin plate.	2,359,550	18,110,952
Wire.	5,980,495	38,140,972
Leather.	26,806,750	90,750,341
Sugar.	1,445,554	57,394,826

These are stunning increases in business and in profits, due to the war, and they are being still further enhanced by the war's continuance and our participation in it.

On the other hand, the cost of the war to our nation promises to be stupendous, and, if we are not very careful, the vast burden of this cost will have to be borne by the great body of our common people, who will also have the fighting to do.

The above partial list of excess war profits indicates very plainly where, in justice, a large part of the war cost should fall. Those who are so hugely profiting by the war should be forced to bear their full share of the war's cost. They can easily be reached by taxation. These huge profits are as plainly in sight as is the common citizen's little home or the farmer's plow.

A Western Pastor on Religious Journals

COUNT me for the future one of your new-found friends and subscribers, who deeply regrets that hitherto he has not been numbered among your large Family of Constant Readers.

As I think it over, it strikes me as singular how it came to pass that during 25 years residence in New York City (till one year ago), I had not discovered the unequalled merits of the Christian Herald as a Family Religious Newspaper, and all the more so because during this time we had no distinctively denominational paper (Presbyterian) that in my personal judgment measured up to the standard or filled the bill of particulars to be enumerated in the make-up of such a paper—and I speak out of an experience in the editorial chair, some years ago, of one of our denominational religious weeklies that has lost its identity since that time by absorption, first with the Westminster of Philadelphia, and more recently with the Interior of Chicago and New York, to which I am not a subscriber. I will not enter on details, but simply summarize by saying that the past few months' careful reading of the Christian Herald has won for you a loyal friend for all the future.

Ardmore, Okla. Rev. J. G. Patterson, D.D.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Stillness of Great Relationships

SUNDAY, July 8. "Be still, and know that I am God." I think it is permitted us to reverse the order of the psalmist's words, and we shall gain an additional aspect of the inspiring truth. When we know that He is God we shall most certainly be still, and we shall find quietness in mind and heart. The consciousness of a vast relationship is the very secret of a noble and fruitful stillness. I remember walking across the intervening mile between Loch Lomond and Loch Long. Loch Lomond is an inland lake, and when I left it its waters were disquieted and boisterous, lashing the shores with angry waves. Loch Long is an arm of the sea, and its waters were perfectly calm, and I could look through its lucid depths and see the seaweed rooted on the rocks beneath. And the life of the soul, when it is like a small, measurable lake, is easily disquieted, and little disturbances toss it into convulsions. But when the soul knows God, when it recognizes its vast relationships, when it feels the tidal flow of the infinite within the waters of the breast, it has the secret of a great calm, and the little things leave it undisturbed. When the soul knows God it can be still.

And once more it is the man with the big consciousness who can quietly set about the humblest tasks. We sometimes say that little men can do the little things. Perhaps we ought not to be so sure about it. Perhaps it requires royal greatness to do little things as though they were great things. We read of some little men who would not wash one another's feet. "And Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God; he laid aside his garments, and took a towel, and girded himself," and began to wash the disciples' feet. But mark that marvelous consciousness: "Jesus, knowing . . . took a towel!" The little men were not great enough to do it. Not one of the dwarfs would kneel to the service. If they had known the Lord their souls would have been quieted and ready for any ministry. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." And this quietness is born of a sacred knowledge of the Lord. "This is life, to know thee." J. H. J.

The Boldness of Love

MONDAY, July 9. I John 4:17. "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." Perhaps we are not so much tormented by the fear of judgment as our fathers were in the days of Puritan preaching. Yet ignoble fear fills many a mind and nameless fear haunts many a midnight pillow. Have you never heard it said, "I am so happy, things are going so smoothly, life has been so pleasant, I fear something is going to happen"? Just what the logic of such a fear may be it is difficult to determine. Do we mean to argue that God's goodness is limited? Is it in our secret thought that God may be jealous of our happiness? Only a heathen view of life can justify such a warning as was uttered by a nominal Christian who said, "Don't boast, or your luck may turn." How different the mental attitude of one who says to God, "My times are in thy hands." He lacked nothing of beautiful Christian faith who said, "I believe in the ultimate decency of things; yea, though I woke in hell, I should still believe in the decency of things." He had learned the truth that gave Job the holy boldness to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Faith that lacks boldness lacks love; for "there is no fear in love, and he that feareth is not made perfect in love." C. C. A.

His Hand in the Harvest

TUESDAY, July 10. Ps. 65:11. "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness." Many men have been studying the conditions of the crops in our land since early spring. Our government through its Bureau of Agriculture has watched the condition of the fields and made periodical reports about them. The speculators at the exchanges in our large cities have estimated the probable yield of the tilled area of the country. Nearly every trade has somehow related its enterprises to the year's harvest. The farmer himself, now that the end of his summer toil has arrived, may engage in some cheerful calculations upon the reward of his labor. It only remains that all look up from the year's gift to the Giver. Whatever the size of the harvest may be, it is God who bestowed it. The autumnal glory is the crown which he places on our summer fields. He started the vegetation. His silent laws of nature were at work during those long months while the crops ripened. Wherever fertility and abundance is observed, there he has paid the field a visit. He has paced the furrows unseen by men, and the creature has responded to the call of its Creator: it has leaped into life, has grown and prospered. His hand of benediction has been extended over our fields and orchards. He has made them smile at us as evidences of his goodness.

The shouts of the reapers, therefore, should turn to fervent doxologies. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!" every waving corn-field, every fruit-laden tree is calling to us. The harvest-home ought to become a season of profound spiritual joy and gratitude. Care and worry should flee apace at the sight of such kindness as the Father in heaven shows us every year. The gifts which he has thrown into our lap we should employ in his service, and thus put the crown of the year back on his own head by our willingness to obey his holy word and by our charities. W. H. T. D.

Loving and Living

WEDNESDAY, July 11. Isa. 38:17. "Thou hast loved my soul up from the pit." Hezekiah when told by Isaiah that he must die, wept sore and prayed unto God. The answer came, "I will add unto thy days fifteen years." Then Hezekiah sang a song of praise, "Thou hast loved my soul up from the pit of corruption; for thou hast cast all my sins behind my back. The living shall praise thee as I do this day."

It was God the Father's love that spared the king; he loved him up from the grave, loved him away from his sins, loved him out of the hand of his enemy, loved him with an everlasting love.

When Christians live the love of Christ, we love souls up from the pit of ruin. A certain Christian Japanese teacher did not dare to teach Christianity to his pupils. He just lived the message, loved the scholars, wept when he read the Bible to them, and ever prayed for them. He literally loved them to Christ.

How beautiful the home life when parental love wins all the children into the kingdom of the Christ, when the earthly father is like the heavenly, when we live the message as Jesus did! He lived all he taught and loved more than he could tell. If nothing else is ours but God's love, we are rich indeed. Love fears no overcoming power; it triumphs over death, hell and the grave. It is independent of prison cells, of wide distances, of all time and space.

When Jesus showed the Father to men, it was in a single sentence—"God so loved." Our love is but as the dewdrop of the ocean, but it is the same love lifted by the Sun of Righteousness and coming down like the rain on human hearts. It is like the atmosphere, ever encompassing the soul, surcharged with life and love and blessing. Shall we not breathe it, believe it, receive it, and thus be like the infinite Lover of men? E. W. C.

Outgrowing Childhood

THURSDAY, July 12. Eph. 4:14. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine." Childhood is beautiful. Its physical lines are beautiful. "Curved is the line of beauty." The helpless dependence of childhood is beautiful. Its innocent trustfulness is beautiful. Painters have exhausted their inspiration in portraying childhood at its best. And since Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," and "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein," childhood has been the peculiar ward of Christianity. Childhood in Christendom is something vastly better than in lands to which the message of Jesus has not fully come. And yet the beauty of childhood is turned to mourning if the physical and mental characteristics of childhood are not outgrown in time. Arrested development of a child is a calamity. When old people go back to childish habits of thought and speech, we pity them. Childhood is beautiful only when it is timely.

The apostle affirms, "When I became a man, I put away childish things." Normally a child passes through a process of evolution involving three stages: world consciousness, self-consciousness, and social consciousness. Yet this does not exhaust the capacity of a personality for growth. There is an additional stage which philosophers call God-consciousness, in which, unsatisfied with the world and self, realizing social needs and the spiritual needs which underlie them, we devote our powers to the consideration of the Ultimate Reality. This is the sphere of religion. Thus is manhood built. The first complete statement of the child may thus be worded. "The world is"; the second, "I am"; the third, "Other people are"; the last, being no more children, we affirm with boldness and freedom, "God is." So the cycle of life is complete and there stretches before the full-grown personality the prospect of angelhood. C. C. A.

Instinct and Holy Law

FRIDAY, July 13. Jer. 8:7. "The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle and the crane and the swallow observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord." The annual phenomena of the migratory birds returning to their nesting-places in northern latitudes with the advent of spring can be observed with profit. And God wants us to observe it. The Bible introduces many references to the brute creatures, to plants, to stars, to aspects of the skies, etc., and oftentimes points great moral lessons by means of them. In this instance the birds which obey with surprising regularity the instinct which the Creator has implanted in them are cited to make man realize the abnormal relation into which he has come to God by being a servant of sin. God has provided his last and noblest creature, man, with a more unerring monitor than animal instinct by writing his holy law into man's heart and giving him a conscience to accuse or excuse him. Sin has wrought sad havoc with this inward moral instinct of man. God next declared his righteous and his gracious will to man in a written revelation. Sinful man disregards these also, yea, considers them foolishness.

As if there were no God at all whose judgments he must mind, sinful man follows his own inclinations. He is become a practical atheist. His reason and affections and will have become utterly estranged from God. He will neither repent of his sins when his guilt is exhibited to him in all its hideousness, nor will he believe in the forgiveness of God when that is shown him in all its attractive loveliness. He remains stupidly indifferent, like a block or a stone, over and against the divine threatenings and endearments, or assumes an attitude of pronounced hostility.

The beasts of the field in their blind instinct answer the original purpose of their being better than man who had been adorned with the divine image. He must be invited to learn a lesson even from the ox that knows his owner and from the ass who has not forgotten his master's crib. Shame and remorse ought to seize him when he compares himself with these brutes. He cannot change himself, but God can, and God is willing to bring about the needed reformation by his mighty word of grace. "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned"—that must be the prayer of man in his estrangement from God. W. H. T. D.

Looking Back from the Plow

SATURDAY, July 14. Luke 9:62. "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Looking back generally means going back. The boy being led to jail for stealing oranges exclaimed as an excuse, "O mother, I kept looking at them!" Loitering about Sodom, or looking longingly, wishing you had never left the city of destruction, means that you will soon be rioting again with your old companions. The vacillating, hesitating spirit always fails to achieve. "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel."

Star-gazers never plow a straight furrow. Better a plodder after the plow than an idler and gossiper in the market-place. Remember, you will become a millionaire reaper in the great harvest of souls gathered into Christ's kingdom if you plow on through life. You will then hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

If Jesus had looked back while struggling up Calvary, the whole race would have been wrecked. He knew the Cross was the way to the redemption of the Father's lost children. He gazed onward and upward till he could cry, "It is finished," and then he ascended where we may keep looking unto Jesus in the struggle homeward. Suppose Paul had looked back and left the Gentile world in darkness. He had every human excuse for going back to his old life when he exclaimed, "This one thing I do; I press onward for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

What if Luther had retreated before the empire, the papacy and the nobles of the realm? Behold him, a single, solitary soul, standing in the presence of armies and powers of this world. Hear him cry out, "I cannot do otherwise; God help me!" And then he marched onward to victory.

The King's business requires haste, definiteness of purpose, will and energy. Such are the Die-no-mores of the soldiers of the Cross, who will not be ashamed to stand among the victors on the level plains ot immortality. E. W. C.

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XIV

An Understudy

SOON after the doctor started on his trip to the North, the Thayers closed their Beacon Street home and went to their North Shore cottage. The move was made a little earlier than usual this year, a fact which pleased the children not a little and delighted Helen Denby especially.

"You see, I'm always so afraid in Boston," she explained to Mrs. Thayer, as the train pulled out of the North Station.

"Afraid?"

"That somewhere—on the street, or somewhere—I'll meet some one from Dalton, or somebody that knew—my husband."

Mrs. Thayer frowned slightly.

"Yes, I know. And there was danger, of course! But—Helen, that brings up exactly the subject that I'd been intending to speak to you about. Thus far—and advisedly, I know—we have kept you carefully in the background, my dear. But this isn't going to do forever, you know."

"Why not? I—I like it."

Mrs. Thayer smiled, but she frowned again thoughtfully.

"I know, dear; but if you are to learn this—this—" Mrs. Thayer stumbled and paused as she always stumbled and paused when she tried to reduce to words her present extraordinary mission. "You will have to—to learn to meet people and mingle with them easily and naturally."

THE earnest look of the eager student came at once to Helen Denby's face.

"You mean, I'll have to meet and mingle with swell people if I, too, am—Oh, that horrid word again! Mrs. Thayer, why can't I learn to stop using it? But you mean—I know what you mean. You mean I'll have to meet and mingle with—with ladies and gentlemen if I'm to be one myself. Isn't that it?"

"Y-yes, of course; only—the very words 'lady' and 'gentleman' have been so abused that we—we—Oh, Helen, Helen. The minute you begin to talk about it, you lose it. It's something that comes to you by absorption and intuition."

"But there are things I have to learn, Mrs. Thayer,—real things, like holding your fork, and clothes, and finger nails, and not speaking so loud, and not talking about 'folks' being 'swell' and 'tony,' and—"

"Yes, yes, I know," interrupted Mrs. Thayer, with a touch of desperation. "But, after all, it's all so—so impossible! And—" She stopped abruptly at the look of terrified dismay that always leaped to Helen Denby's eyes in response to such a word. "No, no, I don't mean that. But, really, Helen," she went on hurriedly, "the time has come when you must be seen more. And it will be quite safe at the shore, I am sure. You'll meet no one who ever saw you in Dalton; that is certain."

"Then, of course, if you say I'll have to—I'll have to. That's all."

"I do say it."

"My, but I dread it!" Helen drew in her breath and bit her lip.

"All the more reason why you should do it then," smiled Mrs. Thayer briskly. "You're to learn not to dread it. See? And it'll be easier than you think. There are some very pleasant people coming down; there'll be the Drew girls and Mr. Donald Estey and his brother John."

"They'll know me as 'Mrs. Darling'?"

"Of course—a friend of mine."

"But I want to—to help in some way."

"You do help. You help with the children—your companionship."

"But that's the way I've learned—so many things, Mrs. Thayer."

"Of course. And that's the way you'll learn—many other things. But there are others—still others—that you can learn in no way as well as by association with the sort of well-bred men and women you will meet this summer. I don't mean that you are always to be with them, my dear; but I do mean that you must be with them enough so that it is a matter of supreme indifference to you whether you are with them or not. Do you understand? You must learn to be at ease with—anybody. See?"

HELEN sighed and nodded her head slowly.

"Yes, I think I do, Mrs. Thayer; and I will try—so hard!" She hesitated, then asked abruptly, "Who is Mr. Donald Estey, please?"

There was an odd something in Mrs. Thayer's laugh as she answered.

"And why, pray, do you single him out?"

"Because of something—different in your voice, when you said his name."

Mrs. Thayer laughed again.

"That's more cleverly put than you know, child," she shrugged. "I never thought of it before, but I fancy we all do say Mr. Donald Estey's name—with a difference."

"Is he so very important, then?"

"In his own estimation—yes! There! I was wrong to say that, Helen, and you must forget it. Mr. Donald Estey is a very wealthy, very capable, very delightful and brilliant young bachelor. He is a little spoiled, perhaps; but that's our fault and not his, I suspect, for he's petted and made enough of to turn any man's head. He's very entertaining. He knows something about everything. He can talk Egyptian scarabs with my brother, and Irish crochet with me, and then turn around and discuss politics with my husband, and quote poetry to Phillis Drew in the next breath. All this, of course, makes him a very popular man."

"But he's a—a real gentleman, the kind that my husband would like?"

"Why, of—of course!" Mrs. Thayer frowned slightly; then, suddenly, she laughed. "To tell the truth he's very like your husband, in some ways, I've heard my brother say—tastes, temperament, and so forth."

An odd something leaped to Helen Denby's eyes.

"You mean, what he likes, Burke likes?" she questioned.

"Why, y-yes; you might put it that way, I suppose. But never mind. You'll see for yourself when you see him."

"Yes, I'll see—when I see him." Helen Denby nodded and relaxed in her seat. The odd something was still smoldering in her eyes.

"Then it's all settled, remember," smiled Mrs. Thayer. "You're not to run and hide now when somebody comes. You're to learn to meet people. That's your next lesson."

"My next lesson—my next lesson," repeated Helen Denby, half under her breath. "Oh, I hope I'll learn so much—in this next lesson! I won't run and hide now, indeed, I won't, Mrs. Thayer!"

In spite of her valiant promise, Helen Denby, a week later, did almost run and hide when the Gillespies, the first of Mrs. Thayer's guests, arrived. Held, however, by a stern something within her, she bravely stood her ground and forced herself to meet Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie and their daughters, Miss Alice and Miss Maud. It was not so difficult the next week when Mrs. Reynolds came, perhaps because of the pretty little Gladys, so near her own Betty's age.

Fully alive to her own shortcomings, however, embarrassed, and distrustful of herself, Helen was careful never to push herself forward, never to take the initiative. And because she was so quiet and unobtrusive, her intense watchfulness and slavish imitation of what she saw passed unnoticed. Gradually, as the days came and went, the tenseness of her concentration relaxed, and she began to move and speak with less studied caution. It was at this juncture that Mr. Donald Estey arrived. Instantly into her bearing sprang an entirely new, alert eagerness. But this, too, passed unnoticed, for the change was not in herself alone. The entire household had made instant response to the presence of Mr. Donald Estey.

BECAUSE Mr. Donald Estey was always surrounded by an admiring group, the fact that "that quiet little Mrs. Darling" was almost invariably one of the group did not attract attention. It was Mr. Donald Estey himself, in fact, who first noticed it; and the reason that he noticed it was because once, when she was not there, he found himself looking for her eager face. He realized then that for some time he had been in the habit of finding his chief inspiration in a certain pair of wondrously beautiful blue eyes bent full upon himself.

Not that the encountering of admiring feminine eyes bent full upon him was a new experience to Mr. Donald Estey; but that these eyes were different. It was on the day that he first missed them that he suddenly decided to cultivate their owner.

He began by asking casual questions of his fellow guests, but he could find out very little concerning the lady. She was a Mrs. Darling, a friend of their hostess (which he knew already). She was a widow, they believed, though they had never heard her husband mentioned. She was pleasant enough—but so shy and retiring! Charming face she had, though, and beautiful eyes. But did he not think she was—er—well, a little peculiar?

Mr. Donald Estey did not answer this, directly. He became, indeed, always very evasive when his fellow guests turned about and began to question him. Very soon, too, he ceased his own questioning. But that he had not lost his interest in Mrs. Darling was most unmistakably shown at once, for openly and systematically he began to seek her society—to the varying opinions (but unvarying interest) of the rest of the house party.

IF MR. DONALD ESTEY had expected Mrs. Darling to be shy and coy at his advances, he found himself entirely mistaken. She welcomed him with a frank delight that was most flattering, at the same time most puzzling, owing to a certain elusive quality that he could not name.

Mr. Donald Estey thought that he knew women well. His first hour of intimate talk with Mrs. Darling, however, left him confused and baffled—but mightily interested.

She was a flirt; she was not a flirt. She was sincere; she was hypocritical. She was brilliantly subtle; she was incredibly stupid. She was charming; she was commonplace. She was as clear as crystal; she was as inscrutable as a sphinx—and she was all these things in that one short first hour. At the end of it, Mr. Donald Estey, with a long breath and a frown, but with a quickened pulse, decided that he would have another hour with her as soon as possible.

He had no difficulty in obtaining it. Mrs. Darling, indeed, seemed quite as desirous of his society as he was of hers; yet there was still the elusive something in her manner that robbed it of all offensive eagerness. Again to-day, after the hour's intimate talk, Estey found himself confused and baffled. Nor did he find the situation changed the next day, or the next. Then suddenly he awoke to a new element in the case—the extraordinary deference that was being paid his lightest wish or preference.

At first, doubting the accuracy of his suspicions, he systematically put her to the test, choosing purposely the most obvious and unmistakable.

Blue was his favorite color, he said: she appeared in blue the next day. Browning was his best-loved poet, he declared: in less than an hour he found her poring over "Pippa Passes" in the library. A woman who could talk, and talk well, on current events won his sincere admiration every time, he told her: he wondered the next morning how late she must have sat up the night before, studying the world's news.

MR. DONALD ESTEY was flattered, amused, and curiously interested. Not that what looked to be a determined assault upon his heart was exactly a new experience for him; but that the circumstances in this case were so out of the ordinary, and that he was still trying to "place" this young woman. He was not sure even, always, that she was trying to make a bid for his affections. He was not sure, either, of his own mind regarding her. In spite of his interest, he was conscious, sometimes, of a distinct feeling of aversion toward her. She was not always, to his mind, quite—the lady, though she was improving in that respect. (Even in his thoughts the word gave him a shock: he could hardly imagine a candidate for the position of Mrs. Donald Estey in need of—improvement!) But she was beautiful, and there was something wonderfully alluring in her eager way of listening to his every word. She was, indeed, not a little refreshing. Besides, was she, after all, really in love with him? Very likely she was not. At all events, it could do no harm—this mild flirtation—if flirtation it were! Plenty of time yet to—to withdraw. He had but to receive (apparently) a summoning message, and he could go at once. That would, of course, end the affair. Meanwhile—But just exactly what type of woman was she, anyway?

STILL amused, interested, and contentedly secure, therefore, Mr. Donald Estey pursued for another week his pleasant pastime of finding just the proper pigeonhole for this tantalizing will-o'-the-wisp of femininity; then, sharply, he received a jolt that left him figuratively—almost literally—breathless and gasping.

They were talking of marriage.

"But you yourself have never married," she said.

"No, I have never married."

"I wonder why."

Mr. Donald Estey frowned and stirred restlessly—there were times when Mrs. Darling's unconventionality was not "refreshing."

"Perhaps—the right girl has never found me," he shrugged.

"Oh, Mr. Estey, please, what sort of a girl would be the right one—for you?"

"Well, really—er—" He stopped and stirred again uneasily—there was an almost frenzied earnestness in her face and manner that was somewhat disconcerting.

"That might be hard telling," he evaded banteringly.

"But you could tell me, Mr. Estey. I know you could. And, oh, won't you, please?"

"Why, er—Mrs. Darling!" He gave an embarrassed laugh as he sought for just the right word to say. "You seem—er—extraordinarily interested." He laughed again—to hide the fact that he had said just the wrong thing.

"I am interested. Indeed, Mr. Estey, it would mean—you cannot know what it would mean—if you'd tell me."

"Why—er—really—"

"Yes, yes, I know. I hadn't ought to talk like this. Ladies don't. I can see

Continued on page 728

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Lee's Statue at Gettysburg

BESIDE that field of waving yellow wheat across which General Pickett led his memorable charge against the Union lines at the Bloody Angle in the battle of Gettysburg, there was unveiled on June 8 a bronze statue of General Robert E. Lee, who commanded the forces of the South in that battle. Fifty-four years ago, the Confederate and Union armies met in bloody strife on this field in the decisive battle of the Civil War. This bronze figure of Lee on horseback, the first of a Southern commander to stand on the field of Gettysburg, was unveiled by his granddaughter, Miss Anna Carter Lee. The statue is the gift of the state of Virginia to the nation. Governors Henry C. Stuart of Virginia and Martin G. Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, with their staffs, with a crowd of thousands of Virginians and Pennsylvanians, led by the old boys in gray carrying the Stars and Bars, attended the ceremony. A generation ago the statue of Lee would have been an impossibility in a cemetery dedicated by Lincoln in his immortal address as a monument and resting-place for those who won. This statue is a high-water mark for the nation in its unity, its fraternity, and its equipment for the awful responsibilities of the present. The people of the South love Grant, as those of the North love Lee, and the people of North and South vie with each other in their love for Lincoln. Nothing since Appomattox has so cemented the perfect union needed to make us great and powerful. Of the nation, as well as of the community of the saints, it can be said: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." (Ps. 133 : 1.)

Night Schools in Boston

BOSTON has recently celebrated the 50th anniversary of its night schools. At first they were very crude, with only $1,000 or so to support them. Then they were allowed to be held in the schoolhouses, ample money was provided, and they now teach all grades from the primary to the high school, and practical arts as well. They have greatly blessed the poor and aided in Americanizing the foreign population. There is this mention of the teacher and scholar of olden times: "And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar." (I Chron. 25 : 8.)

Gives Red Cross $1,000,000

CLEVELAND H. DODGE of New York, chairman of the Finance Committee for the Red Cross campaign to raise $100,000,000, has just announced his own personal subscription of $1,000,000 on the condition that twenty-four other persons or corporations subscribe a similar amount. It is understood that this magnificent start will be followed by the other twenty-four, and that the hundred million fund will be assured. A day or two after Mr. Dodge's gift the United States Steel Corporation declared an extra dividend of one per cent. on the common stock to enable the stockholders to make generous subscriptions to the hundred million Red Cross fund, and strongly and officially suggested that the stockholders give the $5,802,028 to the fund. It is expected that a large number of persons will turn their dividends in as a gift to the Red Cross fund, and that other corporations will follow the example. Henry P. Davidson, chairman of the War Council of the Red Cross, issued a statement of some of the things to be done with the $100,000,000. It says: "Next we shall organize base hospitals with personnel and full equipment, in order that they may be turned over to the army upon a day's notice for transport to France. We shall help provide the bare necessities of life to the homeless in devastated France; to aid them to rehabilitate themselves and thus strengthen the man-power of the French army. We shall strive to hearten Russia by providing additional ambulances and other relief for the sick and wounded along the battle-front. We shall try to succor the homeless and wandering peoples of Poland, Lithuania and Western Russia. We hope to extend aid to those who are fighting the battles of liberty in Rumania, Serbia and Italy; indeed, to relieve human misery everywhere among our Allies."

What a gigantic benevolence, and as Christlike as gigantic! Christ was the physician for the body as well as the Saviour of the soul. Any ministry to human suffering, he says, is a ministry to Him. These precious words fell from his divine lips for time and for eternity: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25 : 40.)

Tornado Destroys Munhall's Tabernacle

DR. L. W. MUNHALL, the well-known evangelist, and Professor B. P. Stout conducted a revival campaign in Sylacauga, Ala., in which six churches were united. The meetings were held in a large tabernacle. Sunday evening, May 27, Dr. Munhall, in making the announcements for the following week, said: "Wednesday afternoon I will preach about the devil. Jesus in speaking of him called him the 'prince of the power of the air.' He knows that I will expose him, and, wanting to keep you in ignorance of his characteristics and purposes, he may send a cyclone this way and tear this tabernacle to pieces, so that we cannot have the meeting." Three hours later a cyclone did wreck the tabernacle. Dr. Munhall stood amid the ruins and preached the sermon on the theme he had announced. The calamity was a strange coincidence, but a coincidence simply. There is no Scriptural authority for believing that the devil had anything to do with throwing down the tabernacle. The law of severity is as plainly marked in the natural world as the law of mildness. Now and then the lightning strikes a man, or a church with people in it; now and then a storm blows down a tabernacle; but the lightning and the storm are necessary elements in nature for the purification of the atmosphere. Dr. Munhall preaches good, old-fashioned orthodox doctrine. He does more; he fights for the faith. He has no patience with skepticism. He scores mercilessly those who fool their time away preaching what the Bible does not teach. He preaches a warm gospel of love, and brings many souls to God. The Bible believes in the existence of the devil, and so did Christ, whose experience with him is recorded. "Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (Matt. 4 : 10.)

Bottle from Lost Ship

A BOTTLE was washed ashore at the Orkney Islands the other day which contained messages from the Frederick, an American vessel which started for Archangel, Russia, with a cargo of munitions on January 2, 1916, with Captain Robbins in command and twenty-seven in the crew, and had never been heard from since. One of the messages, dated January 27, 1916, said: "We are sinking in mid-ocean." Others said they were dying. Millions of precious lives, the flower of the world, have been snuffed out in just such an untimely manner. This fearful harvest of death drives the world closer to Christ and the future life, and preaches a pointed sermon to all from this text: "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." (Matt. 24 : 44.)

Tribute to Mother

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary of the Navy, recently wrote a letter to the Y. M. C. A. of Richmond, Va., containing a tribute to his mother which is so tender and beautiful that we quote from it: "I owe every measure of success I have achieved in life to my good old-fashioned mother. In my boyhood days, after the desolation of the war in the South, it was a great struggle for a widow to rear her three boys. With no money, by her energy and ability she earned enough to rear and educate them. When, as a youth in my teens, I found the Wilson Advance for sale, my mother mortgaged her little home in order to help me get the money with which to purchase the paper and enter upon the ambition of my life to be a journalist. There are no greater pleasures in my life than when my mother comes to visit me in Washington, or when I am able to visit her in Goldsboro. When I go to see her at Goldsboro, I am reminded of Harry W. Grady's story of his visit to his mother in Athens, which says, 'I don't think I ever felt happier than when I reached the little home of my boyhood. I got there at night. She had saved supper for me, and she had remembered all the things I liked. She toasted me some cheese over the fire. Why, I had never tasted anything like it since I put off my round jackets. And then she had some home-made candy she knew I used to love, and, bless her heart! I just felt sixteen again as we sat and talked, and she told me how she prayed for me, and thought of me always, and what a brightness I had been to her life, and how she heard me coming home in every boy that whistled along the street. When I went to bed she came and tucked the corners all around me in the dear old way that none but a mother's hands know, and I felt so happy and peaceful and so full of tender love and tender memories that I cried happy, grateful tears until I went to sleep.' My own visits home are not unlike Grady's and I always come away with a new inspiration for tomorrow's duties and a new sense of strength to perform them." This sentiment has an echo in the hearts of millions of American men. On our patriotic anniversaries and in these stirring times it should be remembered that the greatest things in church and state and the sweetest things in individual life grow out of a sanctified Christian motherhood. The appreciation of this Christian motherhood is thus expressed: "Salute Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine." (Rom. 16 : 13.)

FROM ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER

Conducted by MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

The Woman's Place

SHE used to sob and look at us quite wistfully, and say
"I do not wanta be a girl! I wanta run an' play
"Out with th' boys—I wanta shoot a pistol 'r a gun!
"I do not wanta be a girl. . . . I wanta have some fun!
"I wanta buy a box o' caps, I wanta buy a string
"Of cannon crackers shiny red an' big as anything—
"I wanta see th' rockets whiz, until they hits th' sky,
"Oh, lil' girls don't have no fun. . . .
"I don't see why!"

She came to me a month ago, her mass of curly hair
Was piled up high, her skirts were long. She murmured, "Is it fair,
"That I should be obliged to stay at home—to cook and sew—
"When all the heart and soul of me is just one ache to go
"Across the sea to join the fight—to wave a flag and do
"My duty like our soldier boys, until this war is through!
"I've begged to do my bit but they—they do not think I can!
"A woman's is a stupid place—
"I wish I were a man!"

Today I saw her in the street—she ran and touched my hand,
And very low, she said to me—"At last I understand—
"The Woman's place is here, today, she has so much to do. . . .
"Ah, she must hope and work and pray, until this war is through.
"Our boys are on the battle-field—a thousand miles away—
"Our battle-field is here, with us, and win we must today!
"Each sweetheart, mother, sister, wife, must give her bit of cheer,
"By being brave enough to smile!
"The woman's place is here!"

The Woman Behind the Flag

I SAW a picture of Betsy Ross today. It wasn't a famous picture—it wasn't even the copy of a famous picture. It was only the reproduction of a simple drawing of a prim little lady, sewing on the soft folds of a great flag.

It was nearly a year after Independence Day that Betsy Ross, at the request of General Washington, made a flag for her nation. The idea of the flag was conceived at the meeting of a small committee of famous men, but it was the woman's touch—the light hand, holding a needle, the skilful, delicate stitches—that made the flag possible. And so, as I stood before the little picture of Betsy Ross I felt a sudden thrill of Patriotism—a sudden spirit of fellowship and kinship, almost, with the stars and the stripes.

Our flag nowadays is fluttering everywhere—from office building and school, from church and public hall. And as I see it waving majestically on the breeze, I think of the woman hands that shaped it—of the woman heart behind its glowing colors.

Betsy Ross was the first woman behind our flag. She it was who, setting neat little stitches one after the other, made the red bars stand out so bravely from the spotless white ground. Betsy Ross was the first woman behind our flag, but she wasn't by any means the only woman!

I see them every day, the women who stand in the shadow of the Stars and Stripes. I see them in the offices where many of them are giving up lunch hours to knit army jackets and wristlets out of uninteresting gray wool. I see them in the slums where they are helping the families of men who have been called to the colors. I see them in prayer meetings asking God—sometimes silently—that His will may be done, but that the boys they are sending may come back again smiling to them.

And then, sometimes, I see an old woman with silver hair standing on the street corner as a regiment files past. I see her, with her gaze straight ahead on the line of marching figures—a gaze that sees, in the whole column, only one marching form. And I know that she is thinking of a little baby that she rocked tenderly to sleep in some dim yesterday.

Ah, yes, I see them everywhere—the women behind the flag. I feel the throb of their heart-beats in many a letter that reaches my desk; I feel the mist of their tears under many a brave phrase that they write to me. I feel the bravery that glows straight out of each soul, I feel the faith and hope in every hand that clasps my own.

It is the men who go to fight that our flag may still deserve to be called "the flag of the free." But it is the women behind the flag—the woman hands and hearts and souls—that by toiling and sacrificing and giving and smiling and praying make our banner the glorious symbol that it is!

Miss Hannah L. Wessling

IN this troubled time, when the high cost of living has made our daily bread a very vital problem, indeed, Miss Wessling's official position has assumed a great importance. For she is the expert chemist who prepares and tests Uncle Sam's new recipes for bread.

The raised rate on wheat flour has resulted in flooding the Bureau of Chemistry with queries from women who are seeking a substitute for it. The problem was turned over to Miss Wessling and she has solved it by discovering that some twenty-four products other than wheat and corn can be used to produce flour that makes palatable bread. Fellow-workers, who sample her breads, declare that her peanut loaf is the best of all!

Another problem is to find out what farm products, now being wasted, can be utilized as bread material. Miss Wessling has made a bread containing a high percentage of potato flour, a flour long used in Scandinavia, which promises to offer the solution of the utilization of thousands of undersized potatoes now being wasted on the great farms of the West.

The Women's War Work Council of the Y. W. C. A.

EVER since this country first faced the possibility of an active part in the European war, the National Board has been confronted with an immense responsibility for helping to safeguard moral conditions in the neighborhood of training camps and for providing for the welfare of women of varied industries in the unusual conditions created by the war. The far-reaching plans of the Young Men's Christian Association can only be realized as the girls and women near the camps realize their duty to uphold the highest standards of honor and character. It is an exceptional privilege to so direct the spirit of youth and patriotism that it may be a power and not a danger in these days of trial. To this end, the National Board has authorized the creation of a National War Work Council of one hundred women, consisting in part of National Board members and Field Work representatives and in part of women of varied interests not at present connected with the Association, that together they may plan and work to meet this great need.

Industrial Mobilization in Ohio

KATE DAVIS, President of the "International People's Aid Association," writes:

"I have been privileged to serve on the first war boards by invitation of the Secretary of the Department of Labor, and have organized the city of Cleveland for the Industrial Mobilization of Women.

"Who are the women who are going into shop and factory? Who will do the menial task, the heavy work that will drain the body of vitality and dull the brain with weariness? Whose will be the sacrifice freely given to the country in a time of desperate need?

"Will it be the woman from the luxurious home, who is so ambitious and so patriotic about the beginning of this government service work?

"One group planned a long list of society functions to raise money to support the registration work. They thought that the middle-class women could be danced into shop and factory to keep the wheels of industry revolving.

"It took only one newspaper report of the work to make every woman interested understand that the wrong course was being pursued.

"Another woman, with less diplomacy, on the platform with the club leaders of the city declared that the federated clubs and the suffragists could mobilize foreign women enough to supply the farms of the state with the necessary help for the summer in a short time.

"Are the club women going into the shop, and on the street as conductors and motormen? Is every woman going to do the work that her country needs at this time? Are we women who are leaders in this most important service willing to work in the field, to produce the food that will keep the wolf from the door in this country, that will keep the women and the children of other countries alive and the men in the trenches until the world slaughter has made world imperialism and world militarism impossible?

"Women will find themselves. A universal sisterhood and sympathy and understanding will be born from the common anxieties, griefs, suffering and obligation of these times.

"The federated church leaders and many, many ministers beside are on the Cleveland, Ohio, Board for emergency service. The women of the churches are making special study of food conservation plans."

Canning and Preserving

THE woman who, during July and August, puts up a stock of jams, jellies and preserves for the following winter will be interested in these recipes. They are all carefully tested and delicious.

SPICED GRAPES

7 lbs. of grapes.
3 lbs. granulated brown sugar.
1 cup vinegar.
2 tablespoonfuls of ground cinnamon.
1 tablespoonful of ground cloves.

Weigh the grapes, wash, and pulp.

Cook the pulps until seeds are loosened—then press through a sieve.

Cook skins until pulps are done.

Combine strained pulps and skins, add vinegar, sugar and spices and cook slowly until thick.

APPLE GINGER

4 lbs. apples.
4 lbs. sugar.
2 cups water.
1 oz. green ginger.
3 lemons.

Wash, quarter, and pare apples. Cut into small chips.

Make syrup of sugar and water.

Put apples, ginger and lemon into the syrup, and boil until the apples are clear (about two hours).

PRESERVED YELLOW TOMATOES

3 lbs. small yellow tomatoes.
3 lbs. sugar.
Juice of one lemon.

Peel the tomatoes, add the sugar and let them stand over night or for an approximate length of time. In the morning drain off the syrup and boil it until the scum ceases to rise. Put in the tomatoes and boil them slowly for twenty minutes, then take them out and continue to boil the syrup, adding the lemon juice.

Put the tomatoes into jars and, when the syrup has thickened, pour it over them.

Seal at once.

In the Land of Sulphur and Cotton

Continued from page 716

to this war 70 per cent. of our product was consumed in making wood pulp and news-print paper. Sulphuric acid is a necessity in refining petroleum. It is employed in the making of sugar, and also in steel, iron and coke manufacturers. In connection with lime it forms the lime-sulphur insecticide which is used everywhere in our orchards, and it means the success or failure of our fruit crop. It is the basis of so many different industries that we must have it in order to live.

And now we come to the discovery of these great deposits of sulphur at Freeport. They were found shortly after the oil began to spout on Spindle Top Hill. The petroleum deposit at Beaumond, which began the oil industry of the southwest, lay under a great dome of rock, and it was associated with sulphur. Capt. A. F. Lucas, who discovered that oil, conceived the idea that he could find oil under any similar dome along the gulf coast. There were many of them and he explored a great number. Among others he sank a well into the dome under which this sulphur lies. It was then known as Bryan's mound, and it lay here in the prairie only twenty-three feet above the low coastal plain.

Captain Lucas has told me how he sank the well into the mound and how, after he had gone down about 900 feet, there came a rush of vile-smelling poisonous sulphurated hydrogen gas, so strong that it polluted the air for miles around. It was strong enough to kill a mule and was deadly to man and beast. It drove the miners away from the well, and it kept on flowing for months.

Loading cotton at Galveston, stevedores packing the bales in the hold

ON a little hill in the distance from Freeport we see what seems to be enormous factories with tall derricks about them and oil tanks nearby. Between us and the buildings great mountains of light yellow stand out against the blue sky. The factories contain the machinery which heats the hot water and forces it a thousand feet down into the earth: the oil tanks are filled with the fuel oil that furnishes the great heat necessary for melting the sulphur; and the mountains of yellow are massive blocks of sulphur built up by the streams of lemon-yellow gold, which are pouring forth day and night all the year through.

The mines require 4,500 barrels of oil every day, and there are 90,000 barrels in the tanks which stand over them.

The factories are really great hot-water plants. They are filled with huge boilers which burn more than a million and a half gallons of oil every week and heat from 8,000,000 to 12,000,000 gallons of water a day. This water must be raised to a temperature of 332 degrees, 120 degrees above boiling. It is then pumped down into the ground through pipes a thousand feet long at a pressure of 250 pounds to the square inch. It goes through the beds of sulphur and melts them to a liquid, which the compressed air machines force to the surface. By chemical assays it is proved to be over 99 per cent. pure sulphur, and it is sold on the guarantee that it is 99½ per cent. pure.

Here is one huge block of sulphur that covers more than an acre and is more than forty feet high. It is a mighty cube of light yellow as clean as a canary bird fresh from its bath. It has the cubic contents, I should judge, of a half dozen large flats. Near by it is another which is 200 feet wide by 300 feet long and as high as a four-story house. It contains almost two and a half million cubic feet and it weighs about 100,000 tons.

IT takes a well flowing about six weeks to make a block, which at current prices is worth in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. As I figure it, the company is now mining something like 2,000 tons of sulphur a day and its product is about one-half of all the sulphur of the United States.

These sulphur mines form one of the four great sources of supply of sulphur known to the world, two of which are in the United States. The other United States source, as I have said, is the Union Sulphur Company of Louisiana, which has a capacity about equal to this. Until recently Sicily had been taking care of the needs of Europe and Asia. It had on hand prior to the war 650,000 tons of sulphur on top of the ground. It now has less than 140,000 tons, of which 40,000 tons are promised to France. The remainder it refuses to sell.

The deepening of Freeport harbor, at an estimated cost of $455,000, will give the Southwest another important gateway to the Gulf of Mexico. Freeport will form an additional outlet for the cotton and grain of this part of the world and the sulphur will probably bring chemical plants and sugar refineries here on account of its cheapness. The sulphur mines alone have a pay-roll of $30,000 a month and this will be increased by the demands of the war.

The Reformation Celebration

THE Reformation of the sixteenth century and the present world conflict are just 400 years apart. The quadricentennial of the former is observed this year, with well-planned celebration programs in all Protestant churches, which culminate on the 31st of October, the day when Luther posted the famous ninety-five theses.

When Congress had taken its momentous step, it was thought by some that now was the time to definitely postpone the celebration. How the Joint Lutheran Committee—constituted by three of the leading Lutheran bodies in America and joined in many of their plans by five other Lutheran bodies—met the situation is indicated by the recent proceedings of the regular session in Philadelphia. The presidents of the three national bodies, within a week after a state of war was declared, had sent out to the Lutheran church a proclamation in behalf of the three General Lutheran bodies in America, affirming their loyalty to the President and Congress, and recommending to the congregations in our cities and towns that they unite in forming American Red Cross chapters in their respective communities, and that they offer up prayers that the war may end with honor to our country and in an early and perpetual peace.

This action was unanimously approved by the committee. The matter of postponing the celebration next received attention, but was quickly rejected. The reasons for proceeding with the Jubilee are obvious. From its inception, the observance was of religious and not of political character. It was felt that a celebration such as this would be a steadying factor in our national life at a time when it is greatly needed. That the spirit of the celebration will be even more sober than had been anticipated accords well with the world situation, and attention is called to this in a resolution sent by the committee to the Lutheran Church: "The Committee on the quadricentennial of the Reformation, in view of the chastening hand of war, which has been laid upon our beloved land, and the deep sorrow that has come upon so many of our brethern in the faith in the various lands affected by the conflict which has so long been raging, recommends:

"That, during this Jubilee year, every celebration of the great event whence has come the civil and religious liberty which has given our nation its being and distinctive place among other nations be tempered by the remembrance of the sufferings of the present time, accompanied by earnest prayer for the church, the nation and the world, and be directed towards a general return to the religious principles of the Reformation, in the reapplication of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in its purity and simplicity to the needs of a sinful and dying world."

The most important action of this committee, and perhaps the most important action involving the Lutheran church in America for the last half century, was a series of resolutions which outlined steps toward the unification of the three large Lutheran bodies responsible for the work of this Quadricentennial Committee. At the very first meeting of the committee, a motion was made by one of the laymen to the effect that one of the features of the celebration should be the unification of the three branches in 1917. This was two years ago, and the time for decided action seemed ripe now. The unification in the matter of principles and doctrines had been accomplished for several years as a result of the earnest efforts of the clergy in particular. This paved the way for a merging of departmental interests and of the unification of the three organizations.

A Committee on Constitution has been appointed, at the request of the Quadricentennial Committee, by the presidents of the three bodies in interest. This committee is to frame a constitution which will be submitted to the General Synod in June, to the General Council in October, and to the United Synod in the South in November. It is fully expected that actual unification will take place during this year, so as to make the Reformation Jubilee year all the more memorable. When the bodies are united, it will knit together into one organization 3,439 ministers and nearly one million confirmed members of the Lutheran Church in America. It will bring under one administration such departments as Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Inner Missions and the Publication Boards of the three present organizations; will mean much economy in men and means, and will greatly increase the effectiveness of the work in general.

The Constitution

SENATOR BORAH of Idaho, in a statement in the New York Times, makes this plea for inviolability of constitutional rights:

"I think it was something of a shock to this country that as soon as the people were called upon to fight it was practically announced that all discussions, all expressions of opinion, should be under the surveillance of the government. And now comes the startling, the almost hideous proposition that peace, that which we all hope for and all right-minded people pray for, shall be one subject upon which the American people shall not exchange views and concerning which there shall be no discussion.

"Then followed, naturally, of course, the proposition that in time of war we have no Constitution, that everything rests in the discretion of the Executive and Congress. When the question was asked, how could people be denied the right to express their opinion when the Constitution is clear and unmistakable in its terms, the reply came, the only reply that could be made, that during the war the guarantees in this fundamental law relative to liberty of speech and of private rights were in some way or other suspended; that, like Mohammed's coffin, they floated about in the upper air just beyond the reach of the people and would descend again only at the nod of the Congress and of the Executive. The doctrine is advanced that every citizen, his property, his rights, his liberty, his life, are after the declaration of war the playthings of Congress and the Executive.

"Speaking with entire personal respect for those who entertain such an opinion, the doctrine seems to me perfectly monstrous. Our Constitution was not only made for war as well as for peace, but it was made sufficiently efficient for the purposes of war. It was made by men entirely familiar with war and the duties and obligations and responsibilities of a people at war. The powers plainly granted are efficient and sufficient to carry on war and to call forth and utilize all the powers of a people.

"The Constitution is the property of the nation and not of those who temporarily enjoy office. It contains no provision which is in conflict with any other provision. It provides no method under which modifications or amendments or suspensions can be had save through and by the consent of the people.

"The people adopted it not only as a restraint for those in power, but as a restraint upon the people themselves—that in the hour of passion, excitement or war, in times when power would be claimed and coveted, there might be a compass to steer us through the storm and maintain through it all the rights and liberties and freedom of the people. To make the Constitution the plaything of the hour, the occasion of peace or war, is infinitely more menacing to the happiness and future welfare of our own people than foreign foes."

Sylvan Lake—Yellowstone National Park

Why You See More Goodyears

Doubtless you have noticed the prevalence of Goodyear Tires on the motor cars in your town.

It is a country-wide condition—more Goodyear Tires are sold in America than any other brand.

Doubtless you have wondered why Goodyears are so prevalent—what lies back of their popularity.

The reason is nothing else than the high merit of the tires themselves.

Goodyear Tires excel in those phases of performance essential to satisfactory tire service.

They deliver extreme mileages, at a minimum of delay, inconvenience and expense.

They are large of girth and thick of tread—they travel easily, safely, with comfort.

They are stout and enduring—under the hardest usage they wear stubbornly and slow.

You should use Goodyear Tires—you will find them the tires of superior value.

You should be part of that vast and satisfied company of users who have found them the premier tires of the world.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

Hezekiah, the Faithful King

International Sunday School Lesson for July 15
II Chron. 30

The Story of a Great Revival

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

BACK of every great moral movement is a consecrated personality. Here we have the tale of a real religious awakening planned and carried out at the behest of a good king. What a contrast with the shifty, vacillating policy of the faithless Ahaz do we get in our lesson today! Last week we had a study in degeneration; now we get the inspiration of conscientious, well-prepared upbuilding.

Hezekiah's Training

How did this man come to be so different from his father? It is one of life's riddles that while good men may have bad sons, bad men may also have good sons. Yet there are two indications of other influences in the making of King Hezekiah's character. The first is his mother, whose name and lineage is given by the Chronicler. Even if she was not the daughter of that Zechariah "who had understanding in the vision of God" (II Chron. 26:5), she is undoubtedly mentioned because of her pious influence.

The other, and many believe the chief, factor in Hezekiah's life is the training and guidance which Isaiah gave the young prince. The appeals for faith in Jehovah which the father never heeded bore rich fruit in the soul of the son. The ministry to youth was worthy of Isaiah's best, as it is of our best, and it is encouraging to remember that Isaiah lived to be the trusted counselor of his princely charge and to see him do the very work the prophet most desired.

A godly mother and a religious education! One is reminded of the result in other royal lives, for example Louis IX. of France, called St. Louis, the best monarch of his times, whose preparation was in the hands of Blanche of Castile and sincere men of God.

Where the Reform Began

According to the book of Chronicles, the royal reformer began his work by cleansing and preparing the temple itself. This, of course, was because his predecessor had perversely ignored and desecrated the national shrine. The altar fires had long since gone out and the holy place was filled with rubbish. What an allegory the words make of the godless life in individual or church! In countless lives the incense of prayer has not been burned, and the heart has gradually filled with unholy interests.

But this is even true of churches as well. For example, so Wesley found the English church of his day, ofttimes the very buildings defiled. Many a church of today needs to have some Hezekiah awaken it from its lethargy, open wide its doors to opportunity, and rouse its members with the challenge, "My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him, to minister unto him, and that you should be his ministers, and burn incense."

Before the revival can reach the unsaved the church must be purified. "Put out the uncleanness from the inner part," ordered the king. So "they gathered their brethern, and sanctified themselves, and went in according to the commandment of the king, to cleanse the house of the Lord." There must be a consecrated few, priests unto God and men, who will begin in themselves the great revival. Then the church must be delivered from pettiness and selfishness, and hallowed to serve, before the attempt is made to get the people in.

Gathering the People

We read that it was in the first year and the first month that Hezekiah "opened the doors of the house of the Lord, and repaired them." But it took determined and persistent work before the house was filled. At the first public service, there was a sufficient display of interest to encourage the king, considering that "the thing was done suddenly" (II Chron. 29:36). But he did not stop there but resolved to call the whole nation to rally at the altar of God. He went further than that and sent messengers to the distressed remnants of the Northern Kingdom which had been overrun by the Assyrians. He thoroughly advertised religion throughout the whole territory within his reach.

The results were varied, as they always are. Even the royal patronage and authority, coupled with the great spiritual message recorded for us in II Chron. 30:6-9, did not bring in everyone. Some communities treated the bearers of the evangel rudely, "they laught them to scorn and mocked them." But the men who were on the king's business did not falter. Despite the misunderstanding and wilfulness of many, "nevertheless certain men of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun humbled themselves and came." We must be as wise in our day as the Chronicler and rejoice in certain men from the far country of sin.

"Also upon Judah came the hand of God to give them one heart, to do the commandment of the king and of the princess by the word of Jehovah." The immediate neighborhood of the restored Temple responded almost to a man!

The Great Passover

The great national religious festival of the Jews had fallen into the general neglect under Ahaz. Hezekiah wisely used it as the central feature of his movement. It has always been a kind of annual revival season of Hebrew religion, anyway, and lasted long enough to get the cumulative effect of days of prayer and worship.

Since it was too late for the regular date of the feast of unleavened bread, it was held at a set date one month later. As soon as real spiritual insight comes we see that the outward details are not essential.

Probably the greatest service we can render America in the present international crisis is to revive the Lord's Day and to fill the churches everywhere with a worshiping people. Even so Hezekiah, faced by a foreign danger is represented by Chronicles as rallying his people to the national religion and to confidence in the care of God.

Spiritual Sincerity Above All Ritual

We have already noted that the usually punctilious Jews changed the Passover date. More than that they admitted a multitude of people who had not been able to make the ceremonial preparation usually considered necessary! When our souls are deeply stirred we relegate ritual and forms to their proper secondary place. Never was a Passover more acceptable to God and blessed to men, "yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it is written." In default of formal preparation, "Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, the good Lord pardon every one that setteth his heart to seek God, Jehovah, the God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary."

One of the best features of our great modern revivals has been the relegation of non-essentials to the background. Sectarianisms are held in abeyance, for men see that the attitude of the soul to God is the important thing, and forms of baptism, church organization, and creed have a relatively minor place. In New York City the example of so many diverse elements at work together in the Billy Sunday campaign is alone worth the financial cost of the movement. People who do not agree in details are rejoicing to see the co-operation of those who never got together before.

The Aftermath

We may discern three noteworthy results of Hezekiah's national revival mission. These should be the outcome of every similar work in community or nation. (1) A Spirit of Prayer. (2) Religious and Moral Reform. (3) New Constructive Work.

The Key to Hezekiah's Character

Ere we leave this lesson we must look upon the two closing verses of Chapter 31 for their description of this man of God who used his great opportunities as fully as Ahaz had thrown his away. One describes his character with the words (Revised Version margin) "good and right and faithfulness itself." This seems to leave no room for more, because goodness and rightness and faithfulness nearly cover the ground. But the other verse, Chapter 31:21, gives the key to his success, in an additional quality we sometimes lack, "And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered." Wholeheartedness, enthusiastic thoroughness, no dilly-dallying, no wonder that he scored a great achievement.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World Sunday School Association

Round Table Questions

QUESTION. How would you interest a class of live boys, fourteen to seventeen years old, in missions?

Answer. There are two ways I would suggest. First, relate them by correspondence with a Sunday school class of similar age on the field, say in Japan, Philippines or South America. This you can do through writing to the Missionary Education Movement of your Foreign Board, or through the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower. In this way the class will be put in touch with the condition and needs of real young people on the mission fields. Second, have the boys meet weekly or monthly to listen to the reading of some stirring missionary story. I know of a class of boys of about this age that have been meeting weekly to listen to the reading of "The Black-Bearded Barbarian," and at its conclusion they were eager to start in with another book, such as "Makers of South America."

Girls' classes of the same age can read in the same way "Ann of Ava."

Question. Can you suggest some activities for boys and girls of the teen years along missionary lines?

Answer. 1. Furnish a missionary room in your Sunday school with curios, etc., from the mission field. You can secure these through the Missionary Education Movement of your church. In the First Baptist Church of Portland, Oregon, which I visited, the Sunday school classes were taken in succession to such a room for a missionary talk. As a result the gifts to missions by those classes was quadrupled. 2. Support child in hospital war on foreign field. 3. Support boy or girl in blind asylum or in school. 4. Gather post-cards, illustrated text cards, wall rolls, etc., to be sent to Sunday schools abroad to increase attendance and interest. Write Samuel D. Price, World's Sunday School Association, for names of missionaries to whom this material can be sent. 5. Write Mr. Price for names of missionaries who need such helps as stereopticons, cameras, etc., for their work. 6. Furnish walls of Sunday school with pictures of Livingstone, Carey and other missionaries. 7. Gather magazines for hospitals or seamen's homes in this country. 8. Let the class arrange and carry through a missionary program in the school or department. 9. Name the class after some missionary. 10. Decorate class- or school-room with missionary maps or mottoes. 11. Send a Thanksgiving or Christmas box to some missionary. 12. Send Testaments to soldiers through World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Question. I am a Sunday school teacher and want to give a talk on Modern Methods of Rural Sunday School Work. Is there anything better than "The Village and Country Sunday School," by Fox, for material?

Answer. Fox's book is good, but a more recent book on the rural school is "How to Run a Little Sunday School" (Ferguson). Other good books are "The Rural Sunday School and the Teens" (Alexander), "Rural Department Leaflets" (New York State Sunday School Association, 50c., Albany). "The Day of the Country Church" (Ashenhurst, $1.00), "The Church of the Open Country" (Wilson, 60c.), Chapter 19 in "The Superintendent and His Work" (Brown, 50c.).

Mr. Brown will answer any inquiries in relation to this department.

◆

Young People's Topics for July 15

What Would I Do With a Fortune?

Epworth League Topic. Luke 12:16–19; 15:11–13, I Sam. 25:5–12

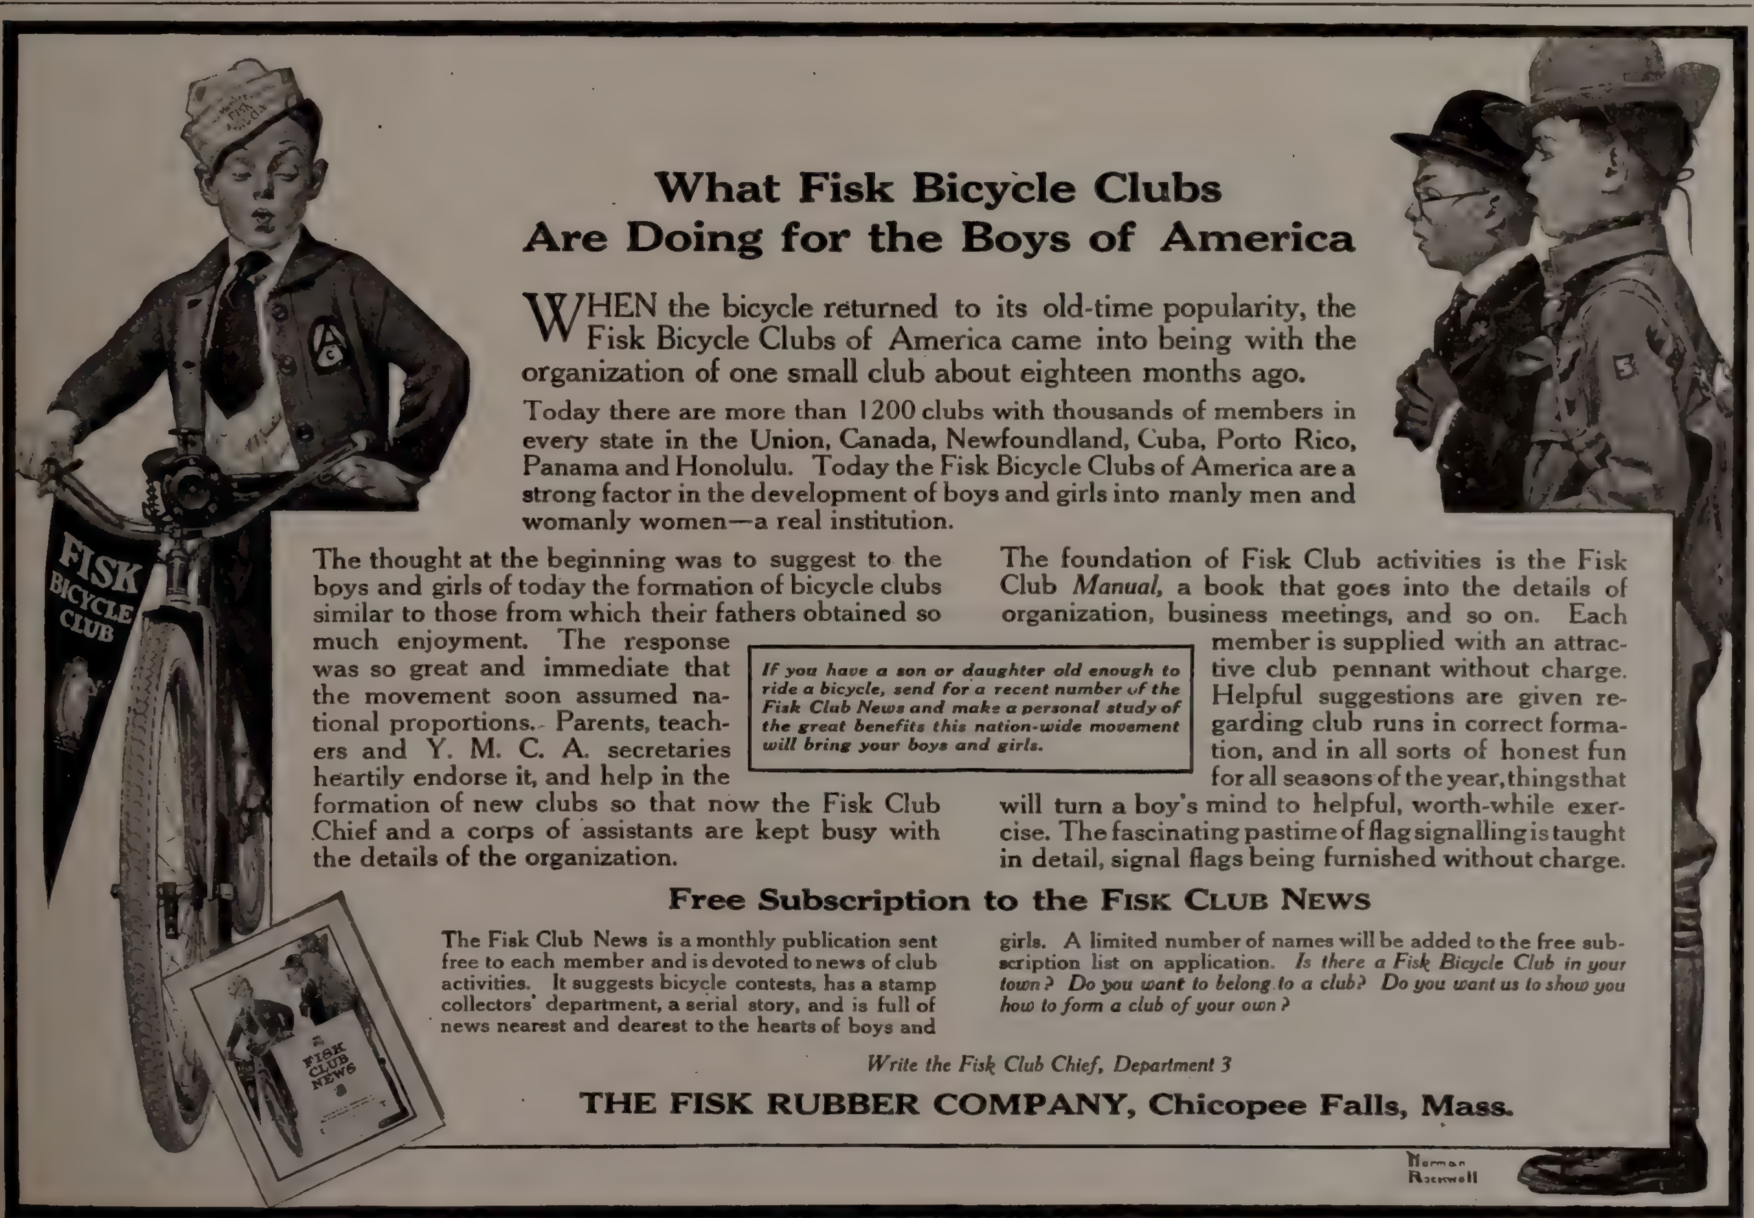
MOST of us have dreamed of the great things we would do if we were rich, and many of us have before now criticized, perhaps harshly, the use that those who are rich are making of their money. The job of being a rich man is a very difficult job, although most of us who have never tried it think it would be easy. The rich man must put his wealth to work, and in putting it to work he must employ other men. It is very easy for money to blind the holder of it, and no matter how benevolent his intentions toward those who work for him, the rich man will find himself being constantly accused of grinding the face of the poor for a little wider margin of profit. Sometimes he will have to admit that it is true. If he keeps his money for investment or gives it away, he is accused of being a "tightwad" or a spendthrift. He may even lose his faith in human nature through attempting to foil the ingenious schemes hatched by impecunious people for securing some of his money. Whether he gives or gets, he will be the target of criticism and the victim of a certain degree of disappointment. There are in America men and women of great wealth who consider their wealth a trust, and who seek not only to be sure that living wages are paid in the plants from which their profits come, but that their income is applied to the purposes of the Kingdom through gifts to colleges, hospitals, churches, missions, and individuals who may be in need. Some of New York's wealthiest people dress plainly, live simply, and give their time, talents and money very largely to services of helpfulness. All of us think we would do likewise, if fate or fortune should smile on us. Many, however, might prove to be like the man who built larger barns in order that we might hold for ourselves all that we had and all that we might gain. Others of us might put the prodigal son to shame with the speed of our squandering, while still others of us might be as heartless as the man who turned David's couriers away.

There is one precaution which, if taken, will insure us against the misuse of money, should it become ours. If we are wholly and sincerely consecrated to the service of Christ, if all love of self and pride of position have been replaced in our hearts by love of mankind and a single-minded purpose to serve, it will be perfectly safe for Providence to place large funds in our hands; otherwise the fine ideals we cherish today might fall before the temptation that comes inevitably with good fortune.

God Our Helper

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ps. 121

WHY do we fear when God is our refuge and strength, when we know that he neither slumbers nor sleeps, and when he has promised to shield us from all evil and to preserve our soul? The story of the Garden shows Adam and Eve in fear because of sin. The story of Elisha's servant shows him in fear because of lack of vision; the lamentations of Lazarus's friends showed lack of faith. But Christ is the world's cure of sin, and salvation brings both vision and faith; and we who are conscious of the saving power of Christ should neither fear nor fail. Do we face difficulties? Is the thing required of us beyond our strength? God is our helper; where our strength ends, his begins. In him our weakness becomes strength; our humanity, plus his divinity, is irresistible. The arm of the Lord is not shortened; his strength never fails. While we serve him, he is our helper.



What Fisk Bicycle Clubs Are Doing for the Boys of America

WHEN the bicycle returned to its old-time popularity, the Fisk Bicycle Clubs of America came into being with the organization of one small club about eighteen months ago.

Today there are more than 1200 clubs with thousands of members in every state in the Union, Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, Porto Rico, Panama and Honolulu. Today the Fisk Bicycle Clubs of America are a strong factor in the development of boys and girls into manly men and womanly women—a real institution.

The thought at the beginning was to suggest to the boys and girls of today the formation of bicycle clubs similar to those from which their fathers obtained so much enjoyment. The response was so great and immediate that the movement soon assumed national proportions. Parents, teachers and Y. M. C. A. secretaries heartily endorse it, and help in the formation of new clubs so that now the Fisk Club Chief and a corps of assistants are kept busy with the details of the organization.

If you have a son or daughter old enough to ride a bicycle, send for a recent number of the Fisk Club News and make a personal study of the great benefits this nation-wide movement will bring your boys and girls.

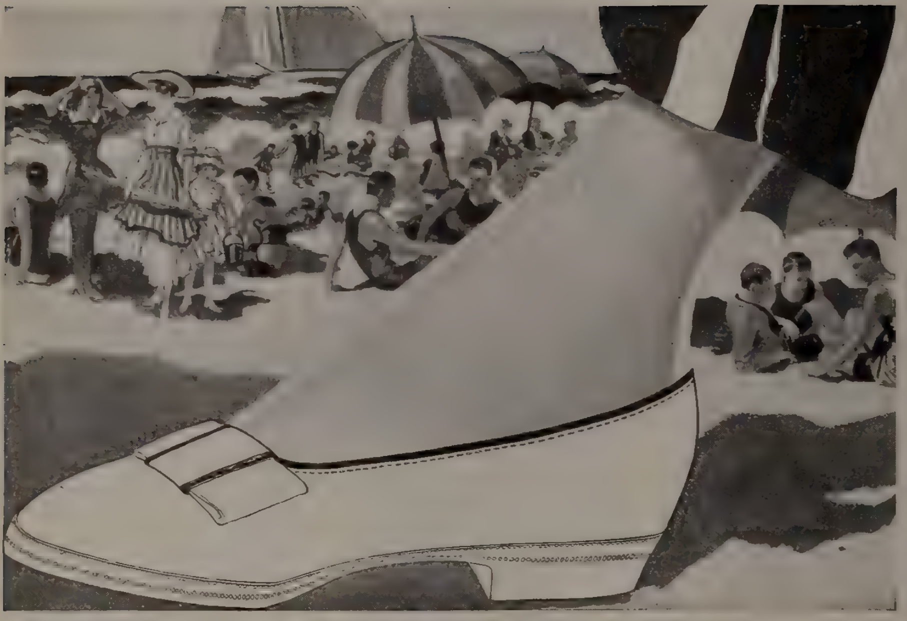
The foundation of Fisk Club activities is the Fisk Club Manual, a book that goes into the details of organization, business meetings, and so on. Each member is supplied with an attractive club pennant without charge. Helpful suggestions are given regarding club runs in correct formation, and in all sorts of honest fun for all seasons of the year, things that will turn a boy's mind to helpful, worth-while exercise. The fascinating pastime of flag signalling is taught in detail, signal flags being furnished without charge.

Free Subscription to the Fisk Club News

The Fisk Club News is a monthly publication sent free to each member and is devoted to news of club activities. It suggests bicycle contests, has a stamp collectors' department, a serial story, and is full of news nearest and dearest to the hearts of boys and girls. A limited number of names will be added to the free subscription list on application. Is there a Fisk Bicycle Club in your town? Do you want to belong to a club? Do you want us to show you how to form a club of your own?

Write the Fisk Club Chief, Department 3

THE FISK RUBBER COMPANY, Chicopee Falls, Mass.



Keds

Make Their First Bow to You

THEY bow to you—discriminatingly well-dressed American woman! It is a new name—one which we will make it worth your while to remember. In your mind we would have you confidently associate the name Keds with all that is fine in workmanship and all that is graceful in shoes

Keds for you will cover all day-time occasions—home wear; golf, tennis and all other outdoor games; for ordinary walking or "hikes"; for yachting and riding wear, and plenty of other styles just as prettily suitable for wear with morning frocks and daintiest house gowns, at home or on the country-club porch.

The tops of Keds are of the firmest and finest of cool canvas, giving these shoes full elastic support. Then they have rubber soles which make them delightfully flexible and durable. No shoes are more comfortable or prettier for warm weather.

Ask at your shoe shop to be shown Keds. They mean style, service and economy for all the family—styles for husband and kiddies included.

TODAY we are proud to invite every woman to wear any one of these brands of Keds. Ask for them by these names, according to the price you wish to pay:

NATIONAL Keds From $1.50 per pair

CAMPFIRE Keds $1.25 to $2.00

CHAMPION Keds $1.00 to $1.50

Each grade carries with it the reputation of the largest rubber manufacturer in the world.

United States Rubber Company
New York

Why Buy

Here are three mighty good reasons why you should buy Buckskin Tires in preference to any other on the market:
First—Because they are made by skilled workmen of the finest possible rubber and fabric.
Second—Because they are guaranteed for 4000 miles.
Third—Because, by buying direct from factory you save fully 30%.
We have a special offer to make. Write for booklet telling about it—also price list. 14

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO.
East St., Carrollton, O.
Western Distributing Office
1436 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago

BOOK FREE

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

GORDON
A RELIGIOUS COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
SCHOOL OF MISSIONS
National, Evangelical, Interdenominational, Vocational, Cultural. New fireproof building, with dormitories in Boston's finest educational district. Catalog. Address Dean NATHAN R. WOOD, GORDON BIBLE COLLEGE, Boston, Mass.

5¢ TRIAL SIZE
VAN'S NORUB
MEANS NO RUBBING WHY DO YOU RUB?
WASHED CLEAN WITHOUT RUBBING

Let VAN'S NORUB do all your hard wash day labor. If your dealer cannot supply you, write for above Free package, sending us his name and address.
VAN ZILE CO., Dept. C, West Hoboken, N. J.

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S MACARONI

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

Baby wants you to know he has arrived. Better send him one of those cute "Chase" baby cards. Nothing better nor cheaper
For Sale Everywhere or Direct
Send for Catalog 227
ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway Street Boston, Mass.

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 722

it in your face. But it's because I want to know so—because I must know. Please, won't you tell me?"

WITH a quick lifting of his head Mr. Donald Estey pulled himself sharply together. Flattering as it was to be thus referred to, this flirtation—if flirtation it were—had gone quite far enough. He laughed again lightly and sprang to his feet.

"Couldn't think of it, Mrs. Darling. Really, I couldn't, you know!"

"Mr. Estey!" She, too, was on her feet. She had laid a persuasive hand on his arm. "Please, you think I'm joking; but I'm not. I really mean it. If you only would do it—it would mean so much to me! And don't—don't look at me like that. I know I'm not being proper, and I know ladies don't do so—what I'm doing. But when I saw it—such a splendid chance to ask you, I—I just had to do it."

"But—but—" The startled, nonplussed man stuttered like a bashful schoolboy; "it really is so—so absurd, Mrs. Darling, when you—er—stop to think of it."

She sighed despairingly. "Then, if"—she spoke hurriedly, and with evident embarrassment—"if you won't tell me that way, won't you please tell me another? Could you—would you—Am I any like that girl, Mr. Estey?"

Mr. Donald Estey was guilty of an actual gasp of dismay. In a whirl of vexation at the situation in which he found himself, he groped blindly for a safe way out. Of course young women (young women such as he knew) did not really propose to one; but was it possible that that was exactly what this somewhat remarkable young widow was doing? It seemed incredible. And yet—

"Am I, Mr. Estey? Or do you think I could—learn?"

"Why, er—er—"

"I mean, would you—could you marry—me?"

Every vestige of self-control slipped from the tortured man like a garment. Conscious only of an insane desire to flee from this wretched woman who was about to march him to the altar willy-nilly, he quite jerked his arm free.

"Well, really, Mrs. Darling, I—I—"

"You wouldn't, I can see you wouldn't!" There was a heartbroken little sob in her voice.

"But—but, Mrs. Darling! Oh, hang it all! What a perfectly preposterous situation!" he stormed wrathfully. "I don't want—to marry anybody. I tell you I'm not a marrying man! I—" He stopped short at the astounding change that had come to the little woman opposite.

SHE was staring into his face with a growing terror that suddenly, at its height, broke into a gale of hysterical laughter. She covered her face with her hands and dropped into the chair behind her.

"Oh, oh, you didn't—you didn't—but you did!" she choked, swaying her body back and forth. The next moment she was on her feet, facing him, a new something in her eyes. The laughter was quite gone. "You needn't worry, Mr. Donald Estey." She spoke hurriedly, and with all the wild abandon of her old self. "I wasn't asking you to marry me—so you don't have to refuse." Her voice quivered with hurt pride.

"Why, of course not, of course not, my dear lady!" He caught at the straw. "I never thought—"

"Yes, you did; and you was floundering around trying to find a way to say no. I wasn't good enough for you. And that's just what I was trying to find out, too,—but it hurt, just the same, when I did find out!"

"Oh, but, Mrs. Darling, I didn't mean—"

"Yes, you did I saw it in your eyes, and in the way you drew back. Only I—I didn't mean you. I never thought of your taking it that way—that I wanted to marry you. It was some one else that I meant."

"Some one else?" The stupefaction in the man's face deepened.

"Yes. You don't know him. But they said you was—were, I mean, like him; that what you liked, he would like. See? And that's why I tried to find out what—what you did like, so I could learn to be what would please him."

THE petted idol of unnumbered drawing-rooms blinked his eyes.

"You mean you were using me as an—er—understudy?" he demanded.

"Yes—no—I don't know. I was just trying to walk and talk and breathe and move the way you wanted me to, so I could do it by and by for—him."

Mr. Donald Estey drew in his breath.

"And I'm going to." She lifted her chin determinedly. "I'm going to! And now you know—why I asked you what I did. I was hoping I—I had gained a little in all these weeks. I've been trying so hard. And before you came, when Mrs. Thayer told me you were like—like the man I love, I determined then to watch you and study you, and do everything the way you liked, if I could find out what it was. And now to have you think I was asking you to—to—As if I'd ever marry—you!" she choked. The next moment, with a wild fling of her arms, she was gone.

Alone, Mr. Donald Estey drew a long breath. As he turned, he faced his own image in the mirror across the room. There was a quizzical smile in his eyes.

"Donald, me boy," he apostrophized, "you have been rejected. Do you hear? Rejected! But what an extraordinary young woman!" His eyes left the mirror and sought the door by which she had gone.

Mr. Donald Estey did not see Mrs. Darling again during his stay. A sudden indisposition prevented her from being among the guests for some days.

To be continued

A Missionary Hero Gone

A SERIOUS loss in foreign mission work is suffered in the recent death of Captain Luke W. Bickel, reported from Kobe, Japan. Captain Bickel was well known as the skipper of the "Jesus Ship," the little steamship Fukuin Maru, or Glad Tidings, in which in the last eighteen years he visited practically every nook and cranny of the coast and islands of the inland sea. For five hundred miles the field which he alone occupied stretches along the coast of Japan. With $6,000 a year, he covered a territory containing a hundred thousand square miles. His parish included a million and a-half of souls, and every year he reached tens of thousands of hearers with the message of God's love and man's responsibility.

Every year there sprang forth a few dozen souls to carry forward the work he was establishing or to enter a government school and help make the secular institution a center of Christian training. A definite standing for Christianity was made in four hundred and twenty towns and villages. In sixty-two places, regular Gospel work was established, with unpaid laymen zealously in charge and finding their real reward in humble Christian service. He established Sunday schools, kindergartens and industrial work, women's societies, men's societies and night school classes, and the prime appeal to all was the direct message of the Master. In hundreds of coast villages, on the islands of the waters and at many points inland Captain Bickel was known and loved by the natives as mentor, counselor and friend, whose great heart was in the welfare of the people among whom he worked.

Captain Bickel's early life was spent on the sea, where he went to restore a feeble constitution. He entered missionary work in 1898, and has since conducted his unique and blessed work in Japan under the American Baptist Foreign Mission Board. He was 48 years of age. A very interesting account of his missionary work in Japan was written by Maynard Owen Williams, which appeared in the Christian Herald in its issue of January 31, 1917.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 718

Yunnan and Kwang-Tung, which were the backbone of the secessionist movement, had notified the central government that they now favored cooperation toward a peaceful settlement. President Li Yuan Hung issued a decree calling for an immediate new election. During the time between the election and the convening of the new Parliament, it was expected that the present government under President Li would remain in power, although it was said that General Chang Hsun, the head of the seceding military governors, would probably stay in Peking. General Chang Hsun is said to be virtually dictator of China. It was reported from Tokio on June 12 that Japan regarded the future of China as interwoven intimately with her own, and that she eventually hopes to secure recognition by the powers of her special and paramount position in China. In other words, Japan is moving toward the creation of a Monroe Doctrine for Asia, similar to that which the United States has maintained for itself in regard to South America. The Department of State on June 15 authorized the announcement that Japan would shortly send to the United States a diplomatic commission, to be headed by Baron Ishii, formerly Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Turmoil in Spain. The Spanish province of Catalonia is reported to be in almost open rebellion against the crown, many factions declaring for complete independence. The trouble is said to have begun with infantry officers at Barcelona who demanded promotion for merit instead of by favoritism. The people are said to be with the army in its demands, to which the premier acceded, his cabinet resigning.

Czar's Officials Under Arrest. The provisional government in Russia took severe measures against the high officials of the old régime who were accused of breaches in the laws of the empire. Indictments have been returned against former Prime Minister Sturmer, and General Rennenkampf, who was defeated by von Hindenburg in East Prussia.

Russia and Belgium. The Belgian Commission to the United States was received in Washington on June 17 and the Russian Commission on June 19. President Wilson expressed to the Belgians "our solemn determination that on the inevitable day of victory, Belgium shall be restored to the place she has so richly won." Baron Moncheur, the head of the mission, expressed Belgium's deep gratitude for the American relief work and for the new assurance of further American aid. The Russian commission was headed by Ambassador Boris A. Bakhmetieff, who declared the Provisional Government was bending every effort toward the active prosecution of the war.

The Government Vs. Big Business. Big business is reported as getting nervous over the attitude of the government toward prices for war necessities. The President appears to be determined that, with America's best giving their lives, those who stay behind shall not make undue profits. A conference was held in Washington on June 21 between the President, Chairman Denman of the Shipping Board, General Goethals, John J. Farrell, President of the United States Steel Corporation, and three members of the Council of National Defense. Chairman Denman has been insisting upon a price of not more than $65 a ton with a preference for a price of $56 for steel for the new merchant fleet, $65 being the price agreed upon for naval construction. The steel companies claim that plates now cost $45 a ton and $95 a ton had been asked for the rapid delivery required by the Shipping Board.

Food Bill Under Debate. The Food Administration Bill was under discussion in both the House and the Senate during the week ending June 24. The House consistently refused to accept amendments to the bill, which was reported to be gaining supporters as the debate proceeded. Representative Gillette of Massachusetts, acting Republican leader, explained his support of the bill by saying that he used to believe in the law of supply and demand, but that, with the demand far greater than the supply, hoarders could demand any price they pleased, and the new situation demanded new laws. Senator Sherman opposed the bill in the Senate, calling it idiotic, and declaring that it was being pushed by union labor at the expense of the farmer. The general trend of the debate indicated that the bill would probably be changed before its enactment by the elimination of the authorizations for the requisitioning of factories, mines and other plants, for the fixing of wages, and for the regulating of private consumption and by the exemption from the hoarding provisions of food-stuffs stored by growers, while further provisions would be added to prevent speculation. In the House on June 22 a drastic anti-conspiracy provision was written into the bill which provides a fine of $10,000 and two years imprisonment for any person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges to limit transportation or supply, to restrict the supply or distribution, to prevent or limit manufacture or production or to enhance the price of necessities. The bill passed in the House June 23, 365 to 5 after a provision for total prohibition had been inserted.

Fragments of News. Investigations by agents of the Internal Revenue Department revealed that the tax on the profits of munition plants levied by the last Congress had been widely evaded and that the collections as a result of the discovery of these evasions would be increased by twelve or thirteen million dollars. The first returns totaled $26,500,000. . . . President Wilson, because of the delay in the enactment of food control legislation, gave Mr. Hoover full authority to take any steps necessary for the organization of the women of the country and for cooperation of men engaged in the distribution of foods, in a voluntary mobilization of all the forces in the country for the saving of food and the elimination of waste. . . The Federal Bureau of Education has made an exhaustive report of negro education in the South, and reported on June 18 that the greatest need of the negro was rural education, training in agriculture and simple trades, rather than advanced knowledge. The report states that three-fourths of the 8,500,000 negroes in the South live in rural communities and that 3,000,000 negroes are engaged in agricultural pursuits, but that nevertheless the South does not produce enough food for itself. . . . An American armed steamer arriving at an eastern port June 22, reported a battle with a German submarine on the trip from Liverpool. The captain was sure the submarine had been sunk.

◆

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE British report of submarine sinkings for the week ending Sunday, June 17, shows a considerable increase in the number of vessels over 1,600 tons sunk. The total, 27, is larger than that of any week since April 28. In smaller vessels a decrease of five from the previous week is shown. In tonnage the indicated aggregate of last week is about 140,000 tons, or at the rate of 560,000 tons per month. This British report only comprises British vessels sunk in the war zone around the British isles, and does not include losses to neutrals and the other belligerents.

According to British official figures given out, it was shown that since Feb. 17, 1917, to June 10, 1917, German submarines had sunk in the war zones 322 British steamers of over 1,600 tons, 135 of less than 1,600 tons, 78 fishing vessels and an unknown number of sailing vessels. The tonnage of all these vessels is estimated to aggregate 1,750,000. This is seven-eighths of all the vessels built in the world in the year 1916. If to this the losses of all other belligerents were added, as well as those of the neutrals, the total would be very greatly increased and would approximate the enormous figure of 3,000,000 tons. According to the London Economist, the United Kingdom owned some 10,000,000 tons out of the international available total of 24,000,000 tons at the end of 1916."

The expelled king of Greece, Constantine, has reached Lugano, Switzerland. Many Greeks of importance, ex-cabinet ministers, generals, bishops, etc., have been expelled from Greece and several hundred others placed under surveillance, practically prisoners. As far as known, however, the country is reasonably quiet,

The Russian situation remains much the same as heretofore. The provisional government is making every effort to render itself master of the country and of the army; but these efforts are continually being thwarted or opposed by one or the other of the numerous factions. As far as the military situation goes the Russian, Rumanian and Caucasian fronts have been almost completely inactive all the week.

Nothing has come to us from Mesopotamia, and the only news from southern Palestine is that the Italians are sending troops thither to aid the British in their campaign against Jerusalem.

On the Austro-Italian front during the week there have only been insignificant artillery duels and skirmishes.

The western front has suffered no great change during the week. Toward the channel on that portion of the front held by the Belgians there has been more activity by the rival artilleries than usual. On the British portion of the front, toward the end of the week, the Canadians gained some ground immediately southwest of Lens. Further south, south of the Scarpe river, near Monchy-le-Preux, in the early part of the week the Germans ousted the British in certain advanced trenches, but in the latter part of the week were in turn expelled by the British.

On the French portion of the front nothing has happened which affects the positions previously held.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING.
The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

Make Reservations Now For Season of 1917

The office in the Annex will be open daily to accommodate guests who desire to inspect the hotel and make detailed arrangements.

The New Ocean House Swampscott Mass.

Greatly enlarged, rearranged and beautified. Many new and interesting features planned for the coming season.

Our descriptive booklet mailed on request.
E. R. Grabow Company, Owners and Managers
131 State Street, Boston, Mass.

Among the Workers

THE movie, or "cinema" as it is called there, has become an extraordinary social influence in England. In the villages which have grown up around the "coal-pits," in which many of the houses consist of only one room, and lack all the evidences of civilization, one can always be sure of finding a public-house and a "cinema." Some of the proprietors of these cinemas do not charge a coin for admission in the case of children. Instead of money, the child presents a bottle, which is sold to the manufacturers of liquor, and afterward returned to the public-house of the same village, to begin again its round to the parent of the child, to the movie, to the distillery, and back to the saloon.

A PIONEER of India missions, Mrs. Charlotte Lewis Roundey Hoskins, passed away at Hartford, Conn., recently, in the eightieth year of her life. In 1867, under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, she went to the mission field, where with her husband she spent thirty-six years as a missionary in the Northwest India Conference. Mrs. Hoskins translated many hymns and other religious works into the native languages. She was president of the India Women's Christian Temperance Union. During the latter years of her life she was unable to attend church, and the sermons of the Christian Herald were her chief solace.

THE Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations has passed a resolution urging all its constituent bodies to celebrate the great Luther Quadricentennial in a fitting manner. Practically all the Protestant Sunday school children in the world will take part in the anniversary. The Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union and Christian Endeavor Society expect to take similar action, as well as the women's missionary societies of the various churches. The New York Quadricentenary Committee has arranged a program for the churches of the area dominated by Greater New York, which runs from April 1 to October 31.

MISSIONARY C. N. Bateman, of Baraca, Kilpauk, Madras, India, writes acknowledging the receipt of a gift from Christian Herald contributors, and tells of training the native children of the mission to go out into the surrounding villages and sing and testify for Christ. On a recent festival day they walked seven miles to a central village, where they preached and sang to very good audiences, afterward selling Scriptures and distributing hundreds of tracts. The boys have organized a volunteer preaching band. The mission is endeavoring to erect a building for boys under instruction, with a view to fitting them for spiritual work in the future.

THE Sunday school of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, founded May 23, 1817, held its centennial celebration on the four days from May 20 to 23. Mr. George Cleeland has been its superintendent for thirty-seven years. It has sent sixteen of its boys to the army and navy in the War of 1917. The church was organized in 1799 and incorporated in 1803, and supports missionary pastors in Porto Rico and Korea, and Rev. John T. Reeve is the thirteenth pastor in the 118 years of its existence as a congregation.

◆

Bill Sunday's Campaign

Continued from page 716

the poor medium to express. I have so dreaded this, to pray for my last time here, but, Jesus, I am thankful for what you have done. Thank you, Jesus Christ, for the great throng, for the men of the Navy Yard, the shops, stores, black and white, native born and illiterate, that have pressed down here to Broadway to this tabernacle. . . . Good-by! We say it when ships sail out, when friends depart, when the hearse drives up, but we never will say it in Heaven. . . . Thank you, Lord, for the newspaper boys, the editors. I wish I could tell you how much they have helped us. Maybe we all will hang around the gate, and I'll learn you are from New York and you hit the trail back there, and we'll talk it over in Heaven. Lord, won't it be great! Good-by, preachers. If I said anything that hurt you—well, maybe you deserved it. Good-by, ushers, choir, secretaries, boys at the door, cops—you're good scouts—firemen, too. Good-by, John—I mean Mayor Mitchel—Woods, Adamson, Interborough, Fifth Avenue buses, thank you for the lot, whoever owns it, Speers, Rockefeller, and all the rest. . . . Good-by to New York, Jesus, and bless her always. Amen."

Mr. and Mrs. Sunday left New York City at 11 o'clock Monday morning, being given God-speed by upwards of 2,000 of their friends, new-found in the metropolis. They went to their home at Winona Lake, Indiana, but it was their plan to spend the summer at a ranch in the Hood River District of Oregon. Mr. Sunday's next campaign begins in Los Angeles, California, September 2. LOUIS E. ORCUTT.

◆

Merry Moments

SHE KNEW WHAT TO TAKE. Five-year-old Mary, who is always anxious to be in everything that goes on, lives in a small town where the long-suffering minister still endures donation parties, to make up his back salary. Just before the last one she begged eagerly:

"Can't I take somethings too, muvver?"

"No; if your father and I take something, that will be plenty."

But the child could not bear to give up the idea, so she ransacked the whole house for something suitable. Finally she appeared before her mother with a worn and faded dress of her own.

"Please, muver, can't I take this? See, it's not a speck of good for anything," she urged.

OH FOR A REFUGE. Little Alice had a pet bantam hen, and she often watched her go to roost. One evening Alice was taken to prayer-meeting and her mother was much embarrassed when she said aloud, "Muvver, don't you wish we could go up a pole to s'eep wif banty?"

Gospel Hymns and Songs

the great new gospel song book that will be used in the evangelistic campaign to be conducted this Fall by

"Billy" Sunday
at Los Angeles

and in all the 1916-17 campaigns, is now ready and is unquestionably a triumph of gospel songbook making. Rodeheaver songbooks are built for front rank service in forceful, intensive, effective evangelistic warfare and in this book has been marshalled a batallion of songs and hymns that will lead from victory to victory when mustered into the service of any live, red-blooded pastor and congregation and churches that need an infusion of new life and vigor will be well on the way to become live, red-hot propositions when they enlist the forceful, efficient aid of this great gospel songbook. It is edited and compiled by the two leaders in the gospel song field—Homer A. Rodeheaver and Chas. H. Gabriel.

Gospel Hymns and Songs is issued in three bindings and shipped promptly at the following prices:

Cloth 35c, limp 25c, manila 20c per copy, postpaid
Any quantity, per copy, not prepaid: Cloth 25c, limp 18c, manila 15c

EXAMINE AT OUR EXPENSE

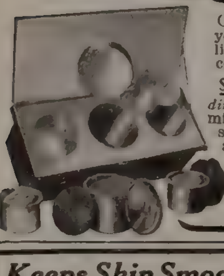
You may examine GOSPEL HYMNS AND SONGS by simply stating where you read this offer, what binding you desire and that you will return in good condition in 15 days or remit the single copy price. If an order for 50 or more copies is entered, the sample copy is yours FREE.

THE Rodeheaver COMPANY

1027 Monon Building
CHICAGO

627 Commercial Building
PHILADELPHIA

Let Me Quote You a Special Price
On My Rapid Fireless Cooker



Cook every meal on it. If you are not satisfied and delighted I will refund every cent. Get my Special Low Factory Price
direct to you. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Full set of famous "Wear Ever" aluminum cooking utensils comes with it. Ask for free book of valuable recipes.
William Campbell Co.
Dept. 2, Detroit, Mich.

Keeps Skin Smooth, Firm, Fresh Youthful Looking

To dispel the tell-tale lines of age, illness or worry—to overcome flabbiness and improve facial contour—there is nothing quite so good as plain
Powdered SAXOLITE
Effective for wrinkles, crowsfeet, enlarged pores, etc., because it "tightens" and tones the skin and underlying tissue. No harm to tenderest skin. Get an ounce package, follow the simple directions—see what just one application will do. Sold at all drug stores.

LEPAGE'S GLUE HANDY TUBES
WHEN A NAIL WONT DO 10c

NEW-CHURCH THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL
48 Quincy St., Cambridge, Mass.
Established 1866. Three years course. College preparation desired. The curriculum includes systematic study of the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg and spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures. Courses by correspondence when desired.
For catalogue and information, address
WILLIAM L. WORCESTER, President.

REDUCE THE COST OF GASOLINE
ONE THIRD TO ONE HALF
FORDS AND ALL OTHER CARS
One-third to one-half MORE MILEAGE and POWER can be secured from cheapest grade of gasoline or even half gasoline and half kerosene by using the Newly Perfected 1917 Model
AIR-FRICTION CARBURETORS
Start your motor instantly and move off at once, even in zero weather, with no "popping", "spitting", or "missing". END your carburetor troubles.
We fit any car without changing present manifold or throttle connections.
ASK your dealer. If he can't supply you, write us direct, sending his name and the name and model of your car.
30% off list price where no representative is already appointed. Ask us about our 30 day trial offer.
Dealers, garages and repair shops make greater profits and give more satisfaction supplying AIR FRICTION CARBURETORS, and spark plugs, than on any other accessories they can handle.

THE AIR FRICTION CARBURETOR CO.
228 Madison St., Dayton, Ohio
Manufacturers of carburetors for pleasure cars, trucks, tractors and motor boats.
Show this adv. to your dealer or repair shop

WANTED:—Old False Teeth. Doesn't matter if broken. $1 to $12 a set. Send by parcel post. Receive check by return mail. C. Block, 717 Shukert Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

ONE DOZEN
GOOD LUCK
FRUIT JAR RINGS

Good Luck Rubbers fit all standard jars
The most important part in your canning equipment is the rubber ring which seals the jar. Cheap rings harden, shrink, crack and let in air, causing the fruit to spoil.
GOOD LUCK
RED RUBBERS
with plenty of live new gum, make a perfect seal, keeping out the air and germs which cause fermentation—the very best rubbers to use with the Cold Pack method taught by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.
Send a 2c stamp for the new edition of our booklet "Good Luck in Preserving," full instructions for canning by the Cold Pack method, and many delicious new recipes. If your dealer does not keep Good Luck Rubber Rings, send 10c in stamps for a sample dozen.
Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co.
Dept. No. 17 CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

SEVEN-CENT MEALS
$1.50 per week per person; 42 meals with recipes and directions for preparing each. 10c or FREE for names of two friends.
Am. School Home Economics, 542 W. 69th Street, Chicago

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER in Colorado writes concerning the coming of Nicodemus to Jesus: "Barnes in his notes on this Gospel says as a part of his comment, 'It is not mentioned why he came by night It might have been that being a member of the Sanhedrin he was engaged all the day. Or it may have been because the Lord Jesus was occupied all the day in teaching publicly, and in working miracles, and there was no opportunity for conversing with him as freely as he desired.' He likewise speaks of the favorable opportunity of teaching personal religion when they were alone. Nicodemus was no coward, for in John 7 : 51 we find him a fearless defender of Jesus according to the Jewish law. In John 19 : 38 we read of Joseph of Arimathea being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, for fear of the Jews. It does not speak thus of Nicodemus. How tenderly Nicodemus must have loved Jesus, when he came with his hundred pounds of costly spices to embalm the body! I have always thanked God for this nightly conversation between the Master and Nicodemus. For through it down the centuries has come this message from the Master's own lips to all the world, 'Ye must be born again.' And following, that none need mistake, the beautiful interpretation of the new birth: 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit.'"

Mr. M. M. C., Mississippi. Every one of the present warring nations has its own theory as to the cause of the war. At present there are engaged in it England, France, Belgium, Rumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Turkey, Italy, Russia, Japan, Portugal, Austria, Germany, and the United States. There are, besides, a number of small states, and the list of nations is growing.

Mrs. B. H., Springfield, Ohio. Please explain II Thess. 2 : 1–12.

The apostle is here explaining away some of the misapprehensions that had arisen from the First Epistle in regard to our Lord's second coming, and he goes on to state that certain well-defined events must precede that last great event. He enumerates some of them: the falling away, the revealing of the man of sin with all his wickedness and signs, delusions of various kinds, and other signs that all is not well in the world. Seeing these signs and portents, the chosen should awake and, like the wise virgins, be prepared against the Lord's day. It would be idle to speculate as to whether or not all signs have been given. Christians should be ever ready.

A. C. H., Elizabethtown, Pa. Please explain Luke 6 : 24–30.

The rich here meant are those that fancy themselves possessed of all they crave and need, and thus have no need of anything, hence no need of a Saviour. They do not consider themselves sinners, and thus they are outside the pale. We assume they are no better nor worse off than the next class spoken of: Those of whom all speak well. A man is known not only by his friends, but also by his enemies. One man of whom all speak well has no enemies, and hence he cannot be a follower of Christ. To be so, one is bound to make enemies of the sinful, the wicked, the doubters and scoffers.

Mrs. R. S. M., Port Blakely, Wash. Please explain I Tim. 2 : 9 and I Peter 3 : 3.

We must remember that the early Christian times were times not only of stress, but also of fine distinctions by a people who had been accustomed to look to externals. The plaiting of the hair and wearing of ornaments having been customary among the wealthy Gentiles before their conversion, they attended services so adorned, which gave rise to offense among their less fortunate and more plainly educated fellow Christians. The apostles call attention to the offense that might arise.

Constant Reader, Amherst, Mass., writes: "In one of your recent numbers you advocate women praying in public. Forty years ago, in my church, the women did not talk or pray in the prayer meetings. When they began, I remember hearing a man remark: 'Personally, I have no objection to hearing a woman talk religion and pray in a religious meeting; but just as soon as they do and continue doing so, the men will stop coming.' There used to be, say, one hundred men at our midweek service when I was a young man; now, there are about a dozen, or even less, and mostly old men. I am sure that the women talking and praying in public meetings has been the means that have helped to deter men from coming. The church next south and the one next west to us have each discontinued the Thursday evening religious service. The men don't come."

We feel quite confident that if our Amherst brother will investigate closely he will discover other reasons for the apathy of the men of his and neighboring churches than that of the activity of the women.

J. St. P., National Military Home, Ohio. Thanks for your letter, with its enlightening suggestion.

Mrs. W. F. T., Paris, Ky. The movement you mention is a cult, or philosophic fad, but not a religion. It cannot appeal to well-balanced, thoughtful minds.

E. R. L., Yucaipa, Calif. We know of no such organization. At the time you mention there was no thought of the United States being involved.

H. M. S., Glenwood, Iowa. There is a wide difference between using the house of God as a place for personal business transactions and profits, as did the money-changers whom Jesus drove out of the temple, and using the basement or other parts of a church building for bazaars, suppers, etc., for the benefit of the church. We have always held that a church which gets along without such aids to financial support is better off for not using them, but we cannot see that they are at all analogous to the practices condemned by Jesus in the case of the money-lenders and other traffickers in the temple

Mrs. J. S. C., Arlington, Mass. 1. Answered in Mail-Bag recently. 2. No one is beyond hope who wants to be saved. The parable of the Prodigal Son applies to all who return. God wants sinners to come to him to be helped (Matt. 11 : 28).

E. E. B., London, Ohio. 1. The prophetical passage you mention will probably be dealt with in the course of Dr. Gray's series of articles on prophecy now running in the Christian Herald. 2. The laws concerning marriage vary in many states. Write to clerk of probate court in your section on the point in question.

Mrs. S. A. M., Santa Rosa, Calif., has this to say concerning the fig-tree: "In the Mail-Bag J. F. B., Taylorton, Md., asked if the fig-tree mentioned in Mark 11 : 13 ever bloomed. All fig-trees may not be the same, but the California fig-trees never have blossoms. There are, I know, three kinds of fruit—a big black and big green and little green, yellowish when they are ripe. I have been in California sixteen years and the first few weeks I kept close watch of a fig-tree. One day I said to a lady, 'I have been trying to find a bloom on the fig-tree, but haven't yet.' and she said, 'No, and you never will, because they never bloom.'"

M. E. D., Eldorado Springs, Mo. 1. Will the destruction of the Caucasian race, now going on in the world-war, be likely to cause the opening of the world's ports to the Mongolian immigrant? 2. Why are the Mongolians, though heathen, more peaceable than the Christian nations? 3. Why is the submarine warfare more horrible than the battlefield? 4. Do Bible students believe the restoration of the Jews and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit is very near?

1. It is still largely a matter of speculation what effect the war will produce on immigration. There are some who believe it will be greatly increased, but that it will open the door wide to Mongolian immigrants seems improbable. 2. China, the great Mongol nation, has long been a lover of peace, although there have been occasional wars, and old Chinese history is one of aggression and conquest. Several of the world's greatest warriors were Tartar Mongols. 3. It is dreaded chiefly because up to the present time nothing has been devised that is capable of coping with it effectively. 4. Very many do so believe.

A. J. A., Fountain City, Ind., writes that he believes the most desirable thing today would be the unity of the Christian Church. "I was gratified to read in the Christian Herald recently an article on the federation of eighteen different denominations into one church What a grand Christian brotherhood, which should teach that true Christianity means more than name or numbers! Denominational prejudice should be eradicated, instead of being worshiped, as it now is in many small villages where there are four and five churches of different creeds, with only a few members in each, and where they are unable to employ a capable minister to teach people how to live a true Christian life. Instead of upholding their own creeds as above all others, all should aim for the same goal, but they now take different roads on account of different creeds and denominational prejudice, which raise a great wall between them."

Reader, Illinois. The passage you mention will probably be treated in Dr. Gray's articles on the prophecies in the Christian Herald.

W. N. H., Export, Pa. 1. Your question contains the answer. God, through his personal representative, Jesus Christ, distinctly tells us to pray and that he will hear us. Why then should not our prayer have its effect on God? 2. The watchman spoken of in Ezekiel who has been spiritually sent by God, not selected by the people. 3. The command in Mark 16 : 15 to preach the Gospel is a command to all believers. Those who cannot go in person must support those that do go. Again, "all nations" means all peoples and all men and women; hence it means our immediate neighbors as well as those distant. We should all of us be preachers of the Gospel, not only by word and by writing, but by our very deeds and example.

C. W. S., Grottoes, Va. You probably mean the verse in Eccles. 11 : 9, "For all these things God will bring thee to judgment." This is not to be regarded as prophetic in the sense of having any reference to the present world-turmoil.

G. H. P., Pittsburg, Pa. We advise all who are interested in prophecy to read Dr. Gray's articles now appearing in the Christian Herald. They will be found a great help and a reliable source of information.

Inquirer, Saskatchewan. There have been many scientists of note in England, in Scandinavian countries, and in Germany. It is impossible to tell with any degree of certainty which country excels in this respect. There are brainy men and women all over the world.

M. G., Elderton, Pa., sends the Mail-Bag a clipping from a Calgary, Canada, paper which reports that the Alberta branch of War Veterans, in adopting resolutions lately, recommended "continued dispensation of rum to soldiers in the trenches." This, if correctly reported, is strangely in conflict with the effort that is now being made, according to leading newspapers, to suppress the drink evil, during the war at least.

A. B. W., Ontario, Calif., writes: "Since the declaration of war all the people are united in making every possible provision to insure the success of the glorious principles which our President has enunciated. There is just one thing which seems to have been overlooked, in which they should be earnestly united. God still hears and answers prayer. I would respectfully suggest that every service of every kind in every church in the United States be opened by two minutes of silent prayer for our President and our beloved country."

J. M. T., Creedmoor, N. C. Did Vashti, the wife of Ahasuerus, do wrong when she refused to come in among his nobles unveiled?

She did not do wrong according to civilized standards, because her refusal to obey such an order before a company of drunken revelers was becoming both the modesty of her sex and her rank as queen, and according to Persian custom, the queen, more than the wives of other men, was secluded from the public gaze. But according to standards prevailing at the time of the occurrence, she did wrong to disobey a royal summons. We cannot imagine the astonishment produced by her refusal in a country and a court where the will of the sovereign was absolute.

R. H. B., Connecticut. The functions of ministers to and ministers accredited by the Holy See must be purely of a religious or semi-religious character, since the Holy See is no longer a political entity. The United States has no minister at the Vatican.

A Farmer, Pompeii, Mich. You are no doubt right in your objections to the high cost of living and money, but we cannot see how under present conditions there is any relief in sight.

A New Home Comfort Idea from a great hotel

Among the big users of Mennen's are a famous string of hotels that have made a name for themselves all over the world for the little "extra" comforts they give.

Not only in the bed rooms, but in the lavatories in all these hotels you will find a can of Mennen's Borated Talcum on the plate glass shelf.

They tell us the cost is not great; but that if it were many times as much they would continue to use it because so many men not only feel satisfaction—but speak of it after a Mennen rub of the hands.

It is antiseptic and healing, because of the boracic acid in it. But another reason Mennen's makes your skin so soft and comfy feeling, is that it dries it so perfectly and so smoothly. Chap from the cold and sunburn from the heat are equally relieved or prevented.

Talcum Powder is so wonderful that almost any kind is good for you. But that which is only mildly perfumed, and combined in just the right proportion with boracic acid, is infinitely better. Mennen's is not only the first borated talcum powder ever made but it is so carefully compounded, after the original formula, and of such excellent materials, that it is doubtful if more than two or three other brands even approach it in quality.

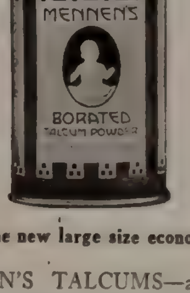
There is no reason for you to take risks with your skin or your guest's or your baby's. Say "Mennen's" to the druggist, and ask him to show you the new, big can.

William Gerhard Mennen

MENNEN'S

BORATED TALCUM

TRADEMARK

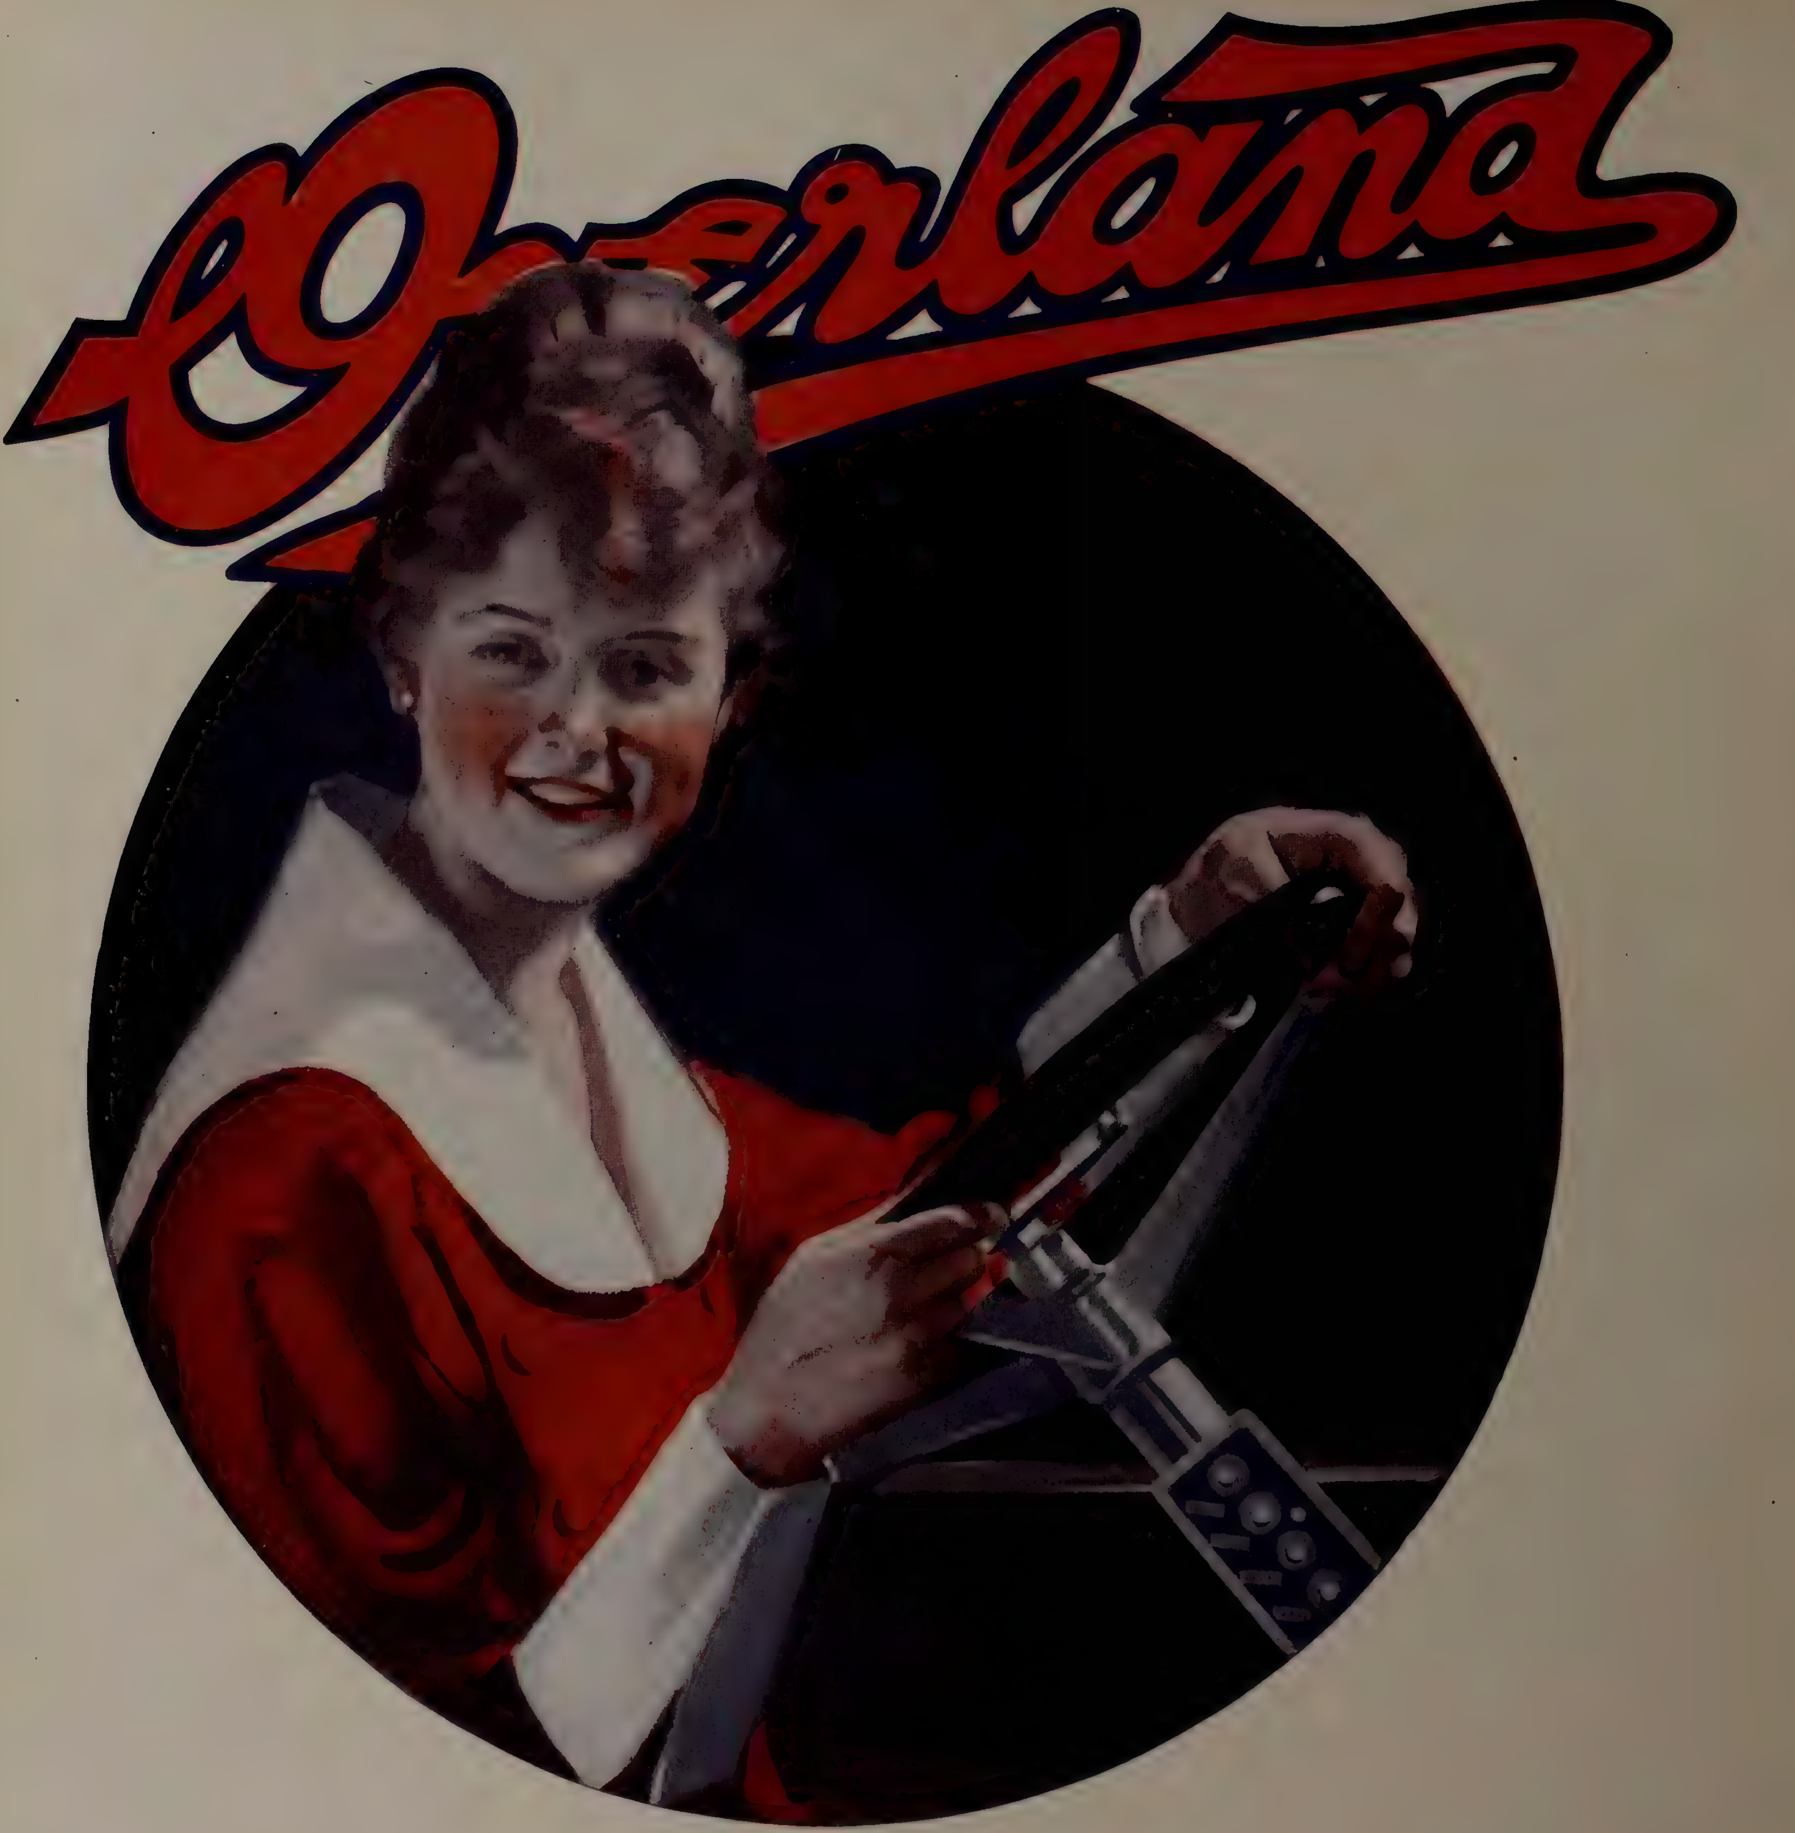


Now in the new large size economical can

MENNEN'S TALCUMS—all with the original borated formula that has never been bettered—include a variety to satisfy every need; Borated, Violet, Sen Yang with a delicate Oriental perfume; Flesh Tint and Cream Tint, each charmingly perfumed; and the new Talcum for Men, a boon after shaving, with a neutral color that leaves the face free from the pallor of a pure white powder. Send 5 cents for a trial can of any one brand, or 25 cents for any five.

GERHARD MENNEN CHEMICAL CO.

Laboratories
927 Orange Street, Newark, New Jersey
Canadian Factory, Montreal, Quebec
Sales Agents for Canada:
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.



The Smile That Won't Come Off

What is her smile worth to you? Probably nothing you could do would bring quite so much gladness into her life as to drive home some afternoon and say "How do you like your new car?"

It would mean her liberation—and a bigger, broader, healthier, happier life for the whole family.

Nothing else would make that smile so nearly her habitual expression.

Isn't that worth far more than it costs?

In the Willys-Overland line of motor cars is the car of her heart's desire which you can buy for her and still keep on friendly terms with your pocketbook.

It is the most complete line of motor cars ever built by any one producer.

And there is a distinct advantage for you in many types built by one producer.

Our total production of motor cars is huge—second only to one other producer of very much smaller cars.

This huge production enables us to distribute costs over a larger number of cars and to produce every type of car with virtually the same proportionate saving as though our entire production was centered on the one model of your selection.

And so you now can have virtually any kind of car you want at a lower price for the value offered than any other producer can deliver.

Look over the Willys-Overland line—you can discern this excess value with half an eye—and you have a wide range of selection.

And after you have made your selection you have the satisfaction of knowing that back of your car you have a company that stands four square for integrity of value in its product throughout the whole of its life in your service.

See the Willys-Overland dealer and make your selection now so that she may begin without delay to wear "the smile that won't come off."

Willys-Knights

Seven Passenger Four, Touring, 121 inch wheelbase
Seven Passenger Eight, Touring, 125 inch wheelbase
Four Passenger Four, Coupe, 114 inch wheelbase
Seven Passenger Four, Touring-Sedan, 121 inch wheelbase
Seven Passenger Four Limousine, 121 inch wheelbase

Light Sixes

Three Passenger Touring-Coupe, 116 inch wheelbase
Five Passenger Touring Sedan, 116 inch wheelbase

Light Fours

Five Passenger Touring, 106 inch wheelbase
Two Passenger Roadster, 104 inch wheelbase
Four Passenger Sport Model, 104 inch wheelbase

Model 85 Fours

Five Passenger Touring, 112 inch wheelbase
Three Passenger Roadster, 112 inch wheelbase
Three Passenger Touring-Coupe, 112 inch wheelbase
Five Passenger Touring-Sedan, 112 inch wheelbase

Catalogue on request. Please address Dept. 723

The Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio
Manufacturers of Willys-Knight and Overland Motor Cars and Light Commercial Wagons

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, JULY 11, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 28. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photograph by John Kabel

It is as still as some vague dream; the sky is calm and clear;
The silver fish dart in a stream as limpid as a tear,

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

E. B. C., Criders, Va. Please explain John 13 : 7–17.

The footwashing by Jesus of his disciples' feet, like the saying which accompanied the act, was symbolical. In the early centuries, in Oriental lands, footwashing stood for kindly service and for comfort and hospitality. A host would wash the dust from his visitor's feet after first removing the sandals, just as we take a friend's hat and coat and hang them up for him. Of course, the specific act varies with changing customs, climate and conditions. We want to show our friends that we have a willing spirit to serve them. Christ emphasized this by performing this service (a universal one in the East) for the disciples, though he was recognized as their Teacher, Master and Leader. It was a concrete sign of his whole message that his followers must be humble and quick to serve others. He did not limit this spirit and motive to one act of life, but insisted that it become the principle of action for our whole lives. The courtesies and kindnesses that hosts show to guests, Christians must show to one another at all times and in all ways, and to all whom they meet. The injunction is not a command, but an exemplary invitation to do likewise when occasion arises. With us the act of footwashing is not necessary, sandals not being worn among us; but there are other services equally humble which we should be ready and willing to render to all who stand in need thereof.

C. F., Richmond, Ind. Paul says there are certain spiritual gifts given by the Holy Spirit (I Cor. 2 : 14; Rom. 1 : 11). When one backslides, it stands to reason that he will fall away, for spiritual gifts can only consistently be in one who is spiritual.

J. L. M., Magdalena, N. M. Please explain Luke 14 : 26.

The word "hate," as has been frequently explained, does not imply an active personal hatred of father and mother. The demand is for supreme love to Christ. Compare Matt. 10 : 37, which gives the same idea from a different angle. The meaning will best appear by noticing the thought "Yea, and his own life also." This cannot, of course, mean that a man should actively hate his life, for then he would have to kill himself to become a Christian. What is meant is that everything relating solely to the material life, as opposed to the life of the spirit, must take a secondary place in the Christian's affections.

A Friend, Hatfield, Pa., G. H. R., Pennsylvania. Whether or not Judas could have been saved had he repented, or whether God could have accomplished his purpose in any other way, are idle speculations. It is enough for us to know that God's wisdom and knowledge are past finding out (Rom. 11 : 33). 2. The pacifist way of looking at our entrance into the present war is now beyond discussion. Our President and Congress decided to go into it, and it behooves all citizens to stand behind them.

M. A. H., Dayton, Ohio, writes: "In your issue of February 28 you made reply to X. Y. Z., Lancaster, Ohio, who was seeking assurance of acceptance and being kept. I felt especial interest in this case, and wonder if through your columns I might offer some promises that have been so helpful to me, with the hope that your reader may likewise claim them. They are:

John 3 : 16. For God so loved the world that he gave. . . .

John 6 : 37. Him that cometh . . . in no wise cast out.

John 1 : 12, 13. If believe—receive—born of God.

John 3 : 36. He that believeth hath (now) everlasting life.

I John 5 : 1. Whosoever believeth is born of God.

John 14 : 16. God gives Holy Spirit to abide forever.

John 5 : 24. Heareth—believeth—is passed from death unto life.

Gal. 3 : 26. Ye are children of God by faith.

Eph. 2 : 8. For by grace are ye saved through faith.

Phil. 1 : 6. He hath begun work in you will perform (continue) it.

II Tim. 1 : 12. Able to keep that committed to His care.

John 5 : 39. Search the Scriptures.

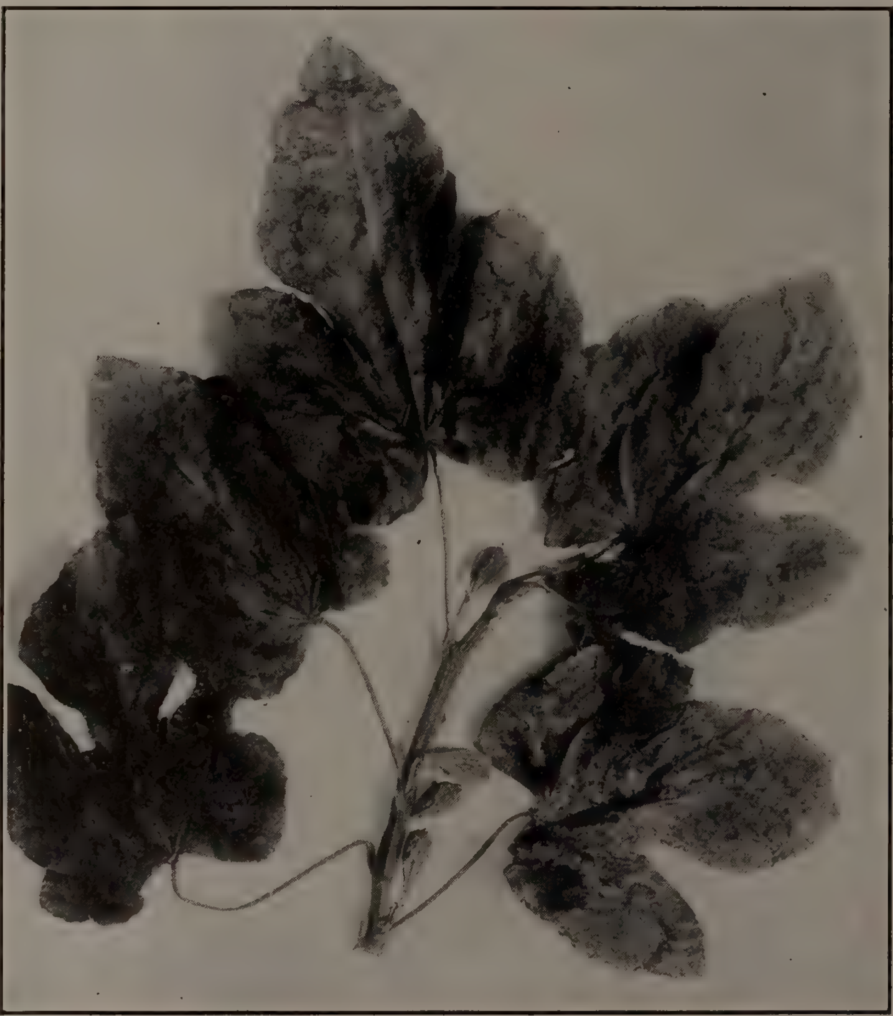
Also read "Kept for the Master's Use," by Florence Havergal. Permit me to express to you my appreciation of your splendid paper, which is such a help to me."

R. B., Pittsburg, Pa. The Sea of Galilee is the second of the three lakes into which the Jordan flows. It is sixteen miles long and six wide, and is skirted by the towns of Julias and Hippo, and by Tarichea and Tiberias. The shores of the sea are singularly uniform, without bold cliffs or winding bays. The bed of the sea is a huge basin. Round the whole shore there is a broad strand of white pebbles, mixed with little shells. The Jordan enters at the extreme northern end of the lake and leaves again at the southern. The whole surroundings are dreary and desolate, as if nature had gone to sleep there, languishing under the scorching heat.

Jennie E. M., Terrebonne, Ore. There have been very few serious obstacles in the way of the relief work. Our information shows conclusively that all remittances, either in food or money, to Belgium, France, Austria, England, Germany, Galicia, and Palestine, have reached their destinations safely. There have been interruptions in Poland and in Serbia, the result of war operations, but nothing has gone astray, although in both of these countries relief work is impracticable at present for obvious reasons. In Syria and Armenia the workers have solved their temporary difficulties by buying food in Russia and sending it overland. The relief cargoes which were detained at Alexandria on account of the submarines are to be sold, and the money, it is believed, will purchase in Russia more than the equivalent of the original cargoes, so that the delay seems likely to become a real gain for the work, after all. The relief committees deserve a great deal of credit for the skilful way in which they have met conditions that were more than ordinarily difficult. God has been over and under the work all the way through, and it is marvelous how the gifts of good people through the Christian Herald have been protected.



The Blossomless Fig Tree

AS many letters have come to us from different parts of the country relative to the Bible passage concerning the cursing of the fig tree (Mark 11 : 13), we publish for the information of our readers a very interesting letter on the subject, received from Mrs. M. C. Rowe, Superintendent, Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Brunswick, Ga., which gives a practical object-lesson illuminating the text. The photograph is made from a fig branch, bearing fruit and leaf, yet without blossom, which was sent to the Christian Herald by Mrs. Rowe.

"I saw in your most valuable paper of January 24 the question: 'Did the fig tree mentioned in Mark 11 : 13 ever bloom?' and I wished then to answer it, but the fig tree in my garden was just putting forth a bud and severe cold killed the tender branches; so I have waited until now, when I am sending you a branch with some green figs on it not yet grown, to show you how they grow. To answer the first question of your inquirer, the fig tree has no blossom. The fig puts forth on the branch with the leaf, and every leaf should have a fig, as you see by the branch I am sending you. So when Christ came to the fig tree with the great show of leaves and no fruit, he condemned it, to show the people what he expected of his followers, instead of a show of righteousness and no fruit of piety in the heart. I have another tree that is overshadowed by a larger tree, and on it there are no figs; which I think represents a young man in a worldly man's office, who never develops his Christian life as he might under other influences. We have several varieties of figs, but all bear as this one does."

H. A., Prince Albert, Sask. Games such as lotteries, raffles, grab-bags and the like, are to be classed as gambling. Such games have no legitimate place in connection with the church. We know there are many who take a different view, but the mingling of worldly with spiritual things is incongruous, nevertheless. An edifice dedicated to the worship of God should be kept free of whatsoever is doubtful and liable to give offense to sincere Christians.

Square Peg, Algona, Iowa. Please explain Matt. 7 : 1 and 20.

"Judge not" refers to harsh, unkind judgment, not to the mere formation of private opinion. In God's judging us he takes special account of this harsh, censorious spirit. "The fruits of false prophets" (verse 20) has reference to their moral influence, and the effect of their teaching on the lives of others.

Reader, Goshen, Va. In Matt. 5 : 20, the Master calls attention to the fact that the Pharisees, despite their precise observance of the letter of the law, did not succeed in keeping its spirit. Christ, having come to fulfil the law, is able to show how, by its spiritual fulfilment, one may have a righteousness far above that of the law itself.

G. E. B., Eugene, Ore. The title would be a misnomer.

G. D. D., Hampton, N. H. If, as you state, four congregations in a town have nothing in their respective beliefs or charters to prevent open communion, there is no reason why they should not practice it.

Mrs. S. W. U., Keene, N. H. 1. Address the Society for Psychical Research, 44 East 23d Street, New York City, for all information. 2. Our Widows and Orphans War Relief Fund is meant to aid non-combatants who have suffered through the loss of their bread-winners or through sickness or privation resulting from the war. 3. Write to the Signal Service Bureau, Washington, D. C. 4. Your last question is outside of our domain. Write to the Scientific American, New York City, for the information.

A. Y., Peoria, Ill. Sabbath desecration is an increasing evil and the neglect of God's house is a subject of the most serious interest throughout our land today.

A. V. C., Dadeville, Mo. According to the best information we have, the walls of Jerusalem are not being rebuilt.

W. W. G., Houghton, N. Y. The battle off the South American coast to which you refer was fought between German and British warships on November 1, 1914. The defeated British fleet was under command of Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock.

E. W., Aurora, Ill. There were several historical writers of the first century A.D. who referred to Christ. These include Tacitus, who wrote of him in Annal XV : 44; Pliny the Younger, in Epistle X : 97; also Suetonius and Eusebius. Lucian, who wrote in the second century, recorded the crucifixion. These writers, dealing with the subject historically, did not discuss in detail the religious beliefs of the Christians. Josephus, who was born 37 A.D., wrote in his Antiquities, XVIII, ch. 3, a brief account of Jesus, his ministry and crucifixion, adding that he "appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold." He adds these words: "He was the Christ." The authenticity of the passage in Josephus has been questioned by anti-Christian writers, but it remains uncontroverted in the pages of the greatest historian of the Jewish race. Eusebius, too, in his Ecclesiastical History, writes of "The wonderful resurrection of our Saviour and his ascension to heaven, which were in the mouths of all men." He calls attention to the fact that none in Palestine could be ignorant of it, and that Pilate in his official report to the emperor Tiberius had informed him of all that had taken place. Philo, another writer of that time, also records the resurrection.

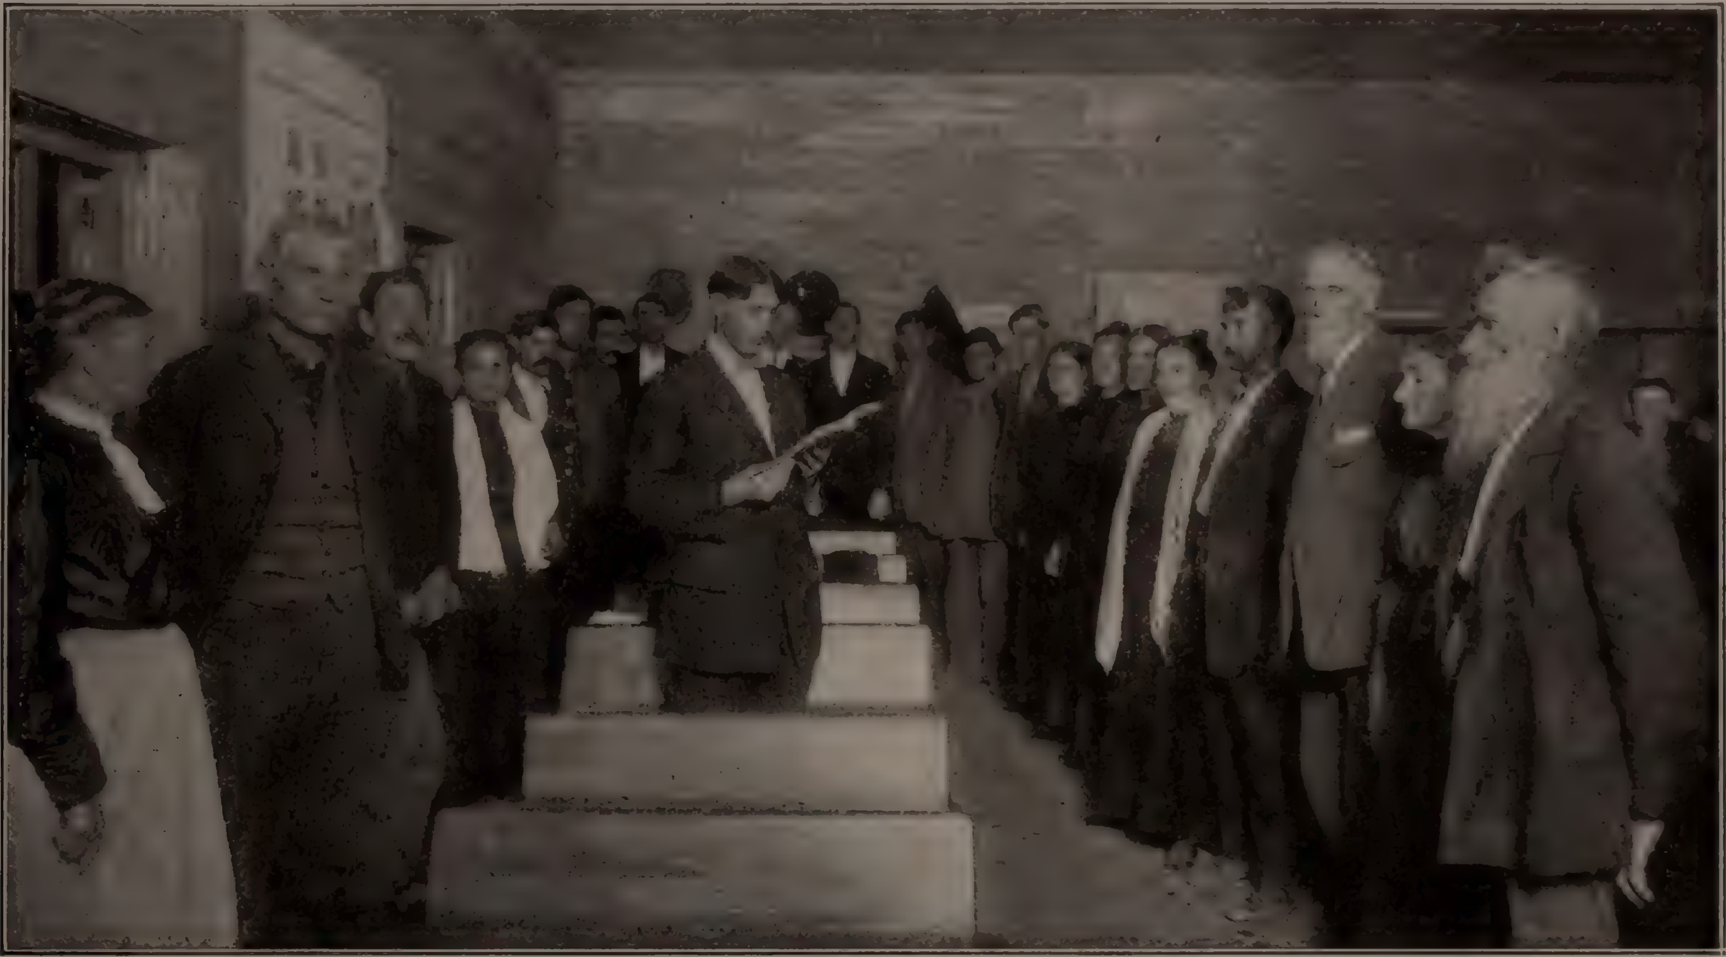
Subscriber, Orosi, Calif. The time for discussion has passed. We appreciate your letter, however, and the motive which prompted it.

C. E. H., Fountain City, Tenn. 1. See answer given above. 2. Christ, having been in all things as we are, "yet without sin," did live a perfect life during his humanity (Heb. 4 : 15). 3. The statement in Luke 2 : 52 is explicit and there is no reason for doubting it. Jesus was subject to human conditions, so far as the divine nature could be subjected. Doubtless he was educated like other boys, and probably his consciousness of divinity would be gradual, and possibly not complete until after the forty days in the desert. His questioning of the doctors in the temple (Luke 2 : 46) is supposed by some authorities to have been not catechizing them, but to obtain information.

A reader in Salem, Ore., writes: "My father, Mr. A. P., of Salem, Ore., who had been a subscriber of yours for nearly or quite thirty years, passed on, to be with the Lord, on the 7th inst. Had he lived here a few weeks longer he would have been ninety years old. Every copy of the Christian Herald, especially during the last few months of his life, he read thoroughly, especially the sermons, and each morning in connection with his Bible readings he read the 'Daily Meditations.' The Herald was the last paper to be laid aside as he neared the end of life. It is a cause for great thankfulness with us that during these years, shut out from public church services as he was on account of deafness, he had always the spiritual help from your paper. His copy was always sent on to others after being read. As his daughter, I wanted to assure you of the great blessing which it has been to him, and also that we shall always remember in prayer the paper and its workers, and see to it that the copy taken so long by father is continued in the home, and then passed on."

Several Readers. At the time of the adoption of the flag resolution by the Continental Congress, June 14, 1777, President Washington is said to have observed: "We take the star from heaven, the red from our mother country, separating it by white stripes, thus showing that we have separated from her, and the white stripes shall go down to posterity, representing liberty." This is the record of the event as preserved in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. One of the first occasions for public display of the Stars and Stripes was on August 6, 1777, when the new flag was hoisted at Fort Schuyler, Rome, N. Y. John Paul Jones is said to have been the first to fly the Stars and Stripes over the high seas, on the Ranger, in November, 1777. There were thirteen stars on the flag during the Revolution, fifteen in the War of 1812, twenty-nine in the Mexican War, thirty-three to thirty-five in the Civil War, forty-five in the Spanish War, and there are forty-eight today. The stripes were changed first from thirteen to fifteen, and then back again to thirteen. It may be surprising to know that our national flag is older than the present British Union Jack, the French Tricolor, and the flag of Spain, and many years older than the flags of Germany and Italy.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME



"Nebuchadnezzar" or "Constantinople"? A "moonlight school" spelling match

The Mission of the "Moonlight Schools"

By CORA WILSON STEWART, Their Founder

THE Civil War disrupted the public school system of the South, and in large territories there were no schools for years afterward. Europe poured many of her illiterates into the stream of foreign immigration to this country. The negroes were for a time denied educational advantages. Lack of child labor laws and compulsory school attendance laws contributed to the making of illiterates. Strange as it may seem, some were made in the schools, for in certain sections children who attended school learned to read and spell and "cipher" without ever being taught to write. Writing constitutes literacy, according to the government standard, being based on the assumption that none can write unless he can also read.

In various ways, there were gathered into this country in 1910 five and a half million illiterates. Were these segregated, they would make a nation larger than Switzerland, or as large as Denmark and Norway combined. It would be a nation without Bibles, without song-books, without magazines or newspapers, without banks, without railways, without pens, pencils or writing paper, and one supplied with only the coarsest commodities of trade. I heard an illiterate woman say that she couldn't recognize a two-dollar bill until she was twenty-five years of age. "Square money," with its printing, is not as popular with them as "round money."

When the census takers were taking the list of illiterates in 1910, the "moonlight school," as a remedy for adult illiteracy, was being evolved. In 1911, the experiment was tried first in all of the schools of Rowan, one of the mountain counties of Kentucky. None is better prepared to witness the result of that experiment than the United States Bureau of Education, which heralded to the world its success in a bulletin entitled: "Illiteracy in the United States and an Experiment for its Elimination."

THE "moonlight school" did not spring out of a theory, it grew out of a human need. It was established through the appeal of the illiterates themselves. When it started, it was assured of the patronage of three: the mother, whose daughter "had gone out West"; the middle-aged man, who "would give twenty years of his life if he could read and write"; and the boy, who would "forget his ballads before anybody come along to set 'em down." These spoke for the world of illiterate mothers and men and song-inspired lads, when they told of the shame and burden of illiteracy, and expressed a burning desire to read and write.

Their appeal was answered by opening at night the doors of the schools all over the country, where volunteer teachers not only greeted them with welcoming smiles, but went out after them and brought them in. A few were expected, but twelve hundred came. Not all of these were illiterates. Some were semi-illiterates and some were half-educated folk, desiring better things. They learned amazingly—first to write their names, of course. This was easy of accomplishment. It was usually learned the first evening. Then to write their own letters and to read the Bible and the newspaper seemed their chief aspirations.

They achieved these so quickly that it seemed almost miraculous. When a woman in Rowan County wrote me her first letter, after but two weeks' instruction and practice, I thought it remarkable; but so many have written since then, after but six or seven evenings in school, that her achievement now seems insignificant. They did not merely read, they devoured books. In three sessions, with active campaigning and lessons given at home to such as would not or could not come, eleven hundred illiterates were taught to read and write. The remaining few in the county, twenty-three in number, were catalogued. When the sick, the blind, the imbeciles and epileptics were deducted, only six who had the capacity for learning were left: four, who had stubbornly refused to learn; and two, who had moved in as the session closed. But, even this pioneer record, once so proudly told, seems inconsequential now; for another mountain county has surpassed it by teaching fourteen hundred in two sessions, and in the lowlands one teacher, single-handed, redeemed in one session seventy-five!

THE Kentucky Legislature in 1914 created an Illiteracy Commission to extend the "moonlight schools" to every section of the State. It was the first commission on illiteracy in the world. "No illiteracy in Kentucky in 1920," said this Commission. One state after another quickly caught the vision. Alabama sounded a statewide slogan, "Illiteracy in Alabama—let's remove it." Oklahoma, with the presumption of youth, said, "No illiteracy in Oklahoma in 1918;" North Carolina said, "Altogether for the elimination of illiteracy from North Carolina;" Mississippi said, "Illiteracy in Mississippi—blot it out;" New Mexico said, "Illiteracy in New Mexico Must Go;" Iowa, with her minimum of illiteracy, began to teach Swedes in her rural districts: Maryland to teach illiterate fishermen on her coasts; California to teach illiterate immigrants; and twenty-two states to teach some, with the ultimate purpose of teaching all.

The mission of the "moonlight school" is to redeem illiterates. It receives the semi-illiterates and others more advanced, but for illiterates it reaches out. If they do not come to the "moonlight school," it goes to them, and they are taught at home by the volunteer teacher or some volunteer assistant. But, usually, they come, and come in overwhelming numbers, with an eagerness in their hearts and a determination in their eyes that know no failure. Their tragic earnestness has sent many a gay and thoughtless teacher into the shadow of the schoolhouse to hide the tears that came at scenes so pathetic—gray-haired men and women, flushed of face in their eagerness to spell the word and excel, shouts of exultation over the feat of writing a name, proud emphasis on every word of a sentence read.

ILLITERACY in this country is more a rural than an urban problem, the proportion in rural sections being double that of the urban. How long it will be until the "moonlight school," with its force of volunteer teachers, can reach and teach the millions, and the city night schools, when provision is made for this class, can redeem the urban illiterates, none can forecast. It seems, at first thought, a stupendous task; but it is the easiest, as well as the most urgent, of the problems that this nation has to solve. Thousands of volunteers are recruiting the army of "moonlight school" teachers, and more and more schools are opening at night each year. The census of 1920 will reveal an appreciable reduction in illiteracy in these states where "moonlight schools" are operating; and the census of 1930, at least, should find that the army of illiterates in the United States had melted away. When it finds this, it will, also, find a new and powerful force promoting schools, building roads, increasing Sunday-school and church attendance, building up trade and swelling the avenues of religious, civic and commercial enterprise.

Opportunity comes late to some folks, early to others. Who knows what leadership may be awakened in this bare room?

The schools need these men and women. They need them to co-operate. "Ignorance cannot co-operate," it is said, and co-operation is the life of public education. The Sunday-schools and churches need these people to attend and support them, to work and worship; the banks need the money that they have hoarded in cupboards or buried in the ground; the newspapers need them as readers, the book publishers need them as patrons and Uncle Sam needs them to patronize his stamp-stores, the post-offices.

But more by far than all the needs of school and church and trade, these men and women need and deserve, for their own sake, to be redeemed. They are barred from life's best things—good books, from letters and from intelligent voting. They are also barred from the reading of God's promises. They are enslaved in a land where Liberty is the boast and pride.

Mrs. Stewart has received many letters from those who have been benefited by the "moonlight schools." She says: "I value these letters more than a fashionable woman would value her jewels."

One woman of Carrollton, Ky., writes thanking the founder of the "moonlight schools." "I have been going seven nights, and have learned to read and write," says her letter. "I am 43 years old and have written my first letter to my mother, the next to you."

Another adult pupil, from Creekmore, Ky., writes: "I can do something this year I could not do last, and that is write a letter."

A resident of Rocky Hill, Ky., age 53, writes: "We are having a 'moonlight school' here. I didn't know all the alphabet when I started to school; but I have learned them all, and now I can read and write a little. I read the first book most through, and I would be glad to have the second. I didn't have a chance to go to school when I was a boy. I think the 'moonlight school' the grandest thing in the world! I am going to keep up my studies until I can read the Bible for myself, and this is my first letter that I have been able to write."

A Kentucky woman writes from Burkesville: "I am 38 years old and I could neither read nor write until I went to the 'moonlight school.' I have had 14 lessons, and can read my Bible and enjoy it."

These are samples of many others, all expressing genuine gratitude for the uplift the movement has given to them, and for the new and wider horizon it has brought into their lives.

Redeeming a City

By JOHN GOODE

"SOULS! Souls! And then more souls." This is the cry raised by the Evangelistic Committee of New York City, of which Rev. Arthur J. Smith is chairman. Bigger and broader and more comprehensive than ever are the plans for 1917. Sunday, April 8, saw the flag unfurled and the campaign launched. Without let-up, day and night, seven days a week until next fall, the good news of a personal Saviour will be flung far and wide from street corners, tents, shops, factories, homes, lawns, parks, halls, and in fact from everywhere that folks stop long enough to listen. The glorious old story, in all its beauty and tenderness and truth, will be told and retold in English, English colored, Bohemian, Slovak, Hungarian, Swedish and Norwegian.

The Committee will operate six big tents and not less than two hundred other centers, where those who know not may learn, and where those who know but heed not may be stirred to immediate and definite action. A million converts! That's the 1917 goal. One Million! The wonderfully constructed foundation left us by Mr. Sunday will be built upon by a closer and more intimate contact with the individual as he lives and works and plays.

The Gospel at the crossroads finds ready listeners

For twelve successive years this evangelistic summer work has been going on quietly, persistently, with ever-increasing results. But the heartening thing about 1917 is that already, before the season is more than half gone, a greater number of people have accepted Christ in these open-air meetings than in any previous full season! Everywhere the people are attentive and open-minded to an astonishing degree. The world conflagration and Billy Sunday have aroused the hearts and minds as never before. Truly is today a harvest time for souls! "Gaiety," it has been said, "closes the mind to the religious voice. Seriousness opens it! Now is the most serious time of the age." And so this organization of faithful workers, keen and alive to its very roots, is laboring here in the metropolis—here, where sordidness and wretchedness dwell next door to goodness and virtue, where in spots rank commercialism has well-nigh driven out all else, where the pull of the dance hall, the saloon and the cheap theatre has been greater than any pull in the opposite direction.

The worker and his cornetist may be found here and there, day and night, relentlessly waging warfare against the powers of darkness, of disbelief, of hypocrisy—in the shop, the factory, the mill. They gather together the neighborhood boys, instil into them bigger, better, brighter ambitions and hook them up with the work of the Sunday schools. They assist established pastors to increase dwindling congregations. They obtain permits from the city fathers for night meetings in front of churches, and supply special speakers and musicians. Assistance is given men's organizations and young people's societies in conducting evangelistic institutes for the study of personal evangelism, the evangelistic message and evangelistic methods that the latent powers of the churches may be developed and put to work. All during the winter months the workers conduct neighborhood Bible Classes right in the homes.

Wherever and whenever the need be found, there also may be found a speaker and a musician gathering in the sheaves, lifting loads that are heavy, lightening hearts that are drear, winning souls for Christ. Let the good work go on and on without cessation, and may the 1917 harvest prove even greater than now seems probable. Let the army of The Cross win this year its biggest victory.

Quezon, the Statesman of the Philippines

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

"REMEMBER, Quezons don't grow on every Philippine bush!"

A prominent editor addressed this remark to a man whose private and official life in the Philippines has covered more than two decades.

Quezon is heralded as "the man of the hour" among the Filipinos and he is undoubtedly the man who did most to secure for them their present measure of self-government and the one to whom the world must look for the strongest hand in shaping Philippine affairs. Adding a most valuable training in Washington as Resident Commissioner to a considerable native ability, Manuel L. Quezon is the most promising figure in the political group centering in Manila. He is a strong friend of the Americans and is determined not to lose the benefits that nineteen years of American occupation and tutelage have given to his fellow countrymen.

By way of working up to more vital things, we began by discussing Catholicism and its effects on the Philippine people. Mr. Quezon was born a Catholic.

"Under the Spanish government, church and state," he said, "were closely connected, and disloyalty to the church was considered as disloyalty to the state—or even as treason. Hundreds of men were punished by the state for offenses against the church, and the priests were arrogant and powerful. Their wealth mounted up to enormous figures, while the people's condition did not improve. With the American occupation there came a separation of church and state, which has been one of the chief blessings following the driving out of the Spaniards. Foreign missionaries of Protestant denominations entered the country and were free to spread their broader outlook among the very people who had felt the oppression of a state church. Competition set in, which not only was a spur to activity on the part of the Catholics, but brought them back to the fundamentals of religious propagation—spiritual life and growth. Thus many were freed from a religious domination that was combined with political oppression; but others, who still remained Catholics, had their eyes opened on a broader horizon. The Catholic Church was improved as a spiritual force by the very force that weakened it as a political power.

"But as the years have passed," Mr. Quezon continued, "a reaction has set in, and the priests, given every chance for the propagation of their faith, at the same time seek to regain the economic and political power which had belonged to the Spanish state before the insurrection. That movement is going on now—an attempt on the part of the Catholic priesthood to regain lost power and re-establish an oppressive surveillance over the people, whose religious life is superficial. Two forces are working among the Filipinos—Catholicism and Protestantism. The Protestants teach a brotherhood of mankind, established by the Fatherhood of God, which points those who love one another to heaven. But the Catholics, in an effort to prevent their people from turning away through a broader grasp of religious freedom, teach that to associate with a non-Catholic is to suffer damnation. It is certain that universal brotherhood is a growing movement, but where does it lead? The Protestants teach that Christian brotherhood leads to heaven. The Catholics, that brotherhood with those outside the church leads to hell. Thus the Catholic Church in the Philippines is the sworn enemy of democracy. And democracy is our political ideal. Protestant missions should be encouraged as an aid to a broader outlook and true democracy. Catholicism is narrowing, Protestantism broadening and conducive to soul freedom."

I HAD listened without interrupting, but there was a question here which I wished made clear.

"Do you mean that the Protestants should work among the non-Christians or among the Catholics?" I asked.

His reply was immediate and decided in its tone.

"Among the Catholics. Even if they do not make converts, the Protestants should work among the Catholics for the soul freedom and democratic outlook that distinguishes the Protestant appeal. The amount that is being done by the Protestant doctors and preachers, by the Protestant dormitories and schools, is tremendous. Silliman Institute is doing more for an enlightened Philippines than the University of Santo Tomas, whose history extends through three hundred years." This statement was made by one who has not yet severed all connection with the Catholic Church and whose frankness is one of his best-known traits.

BUT I had not sought an interview with the president of the Philippine Senate in order to discuss religion alone, and I asked whether, in his opinion the service was becoming too rapidly Filipinized.

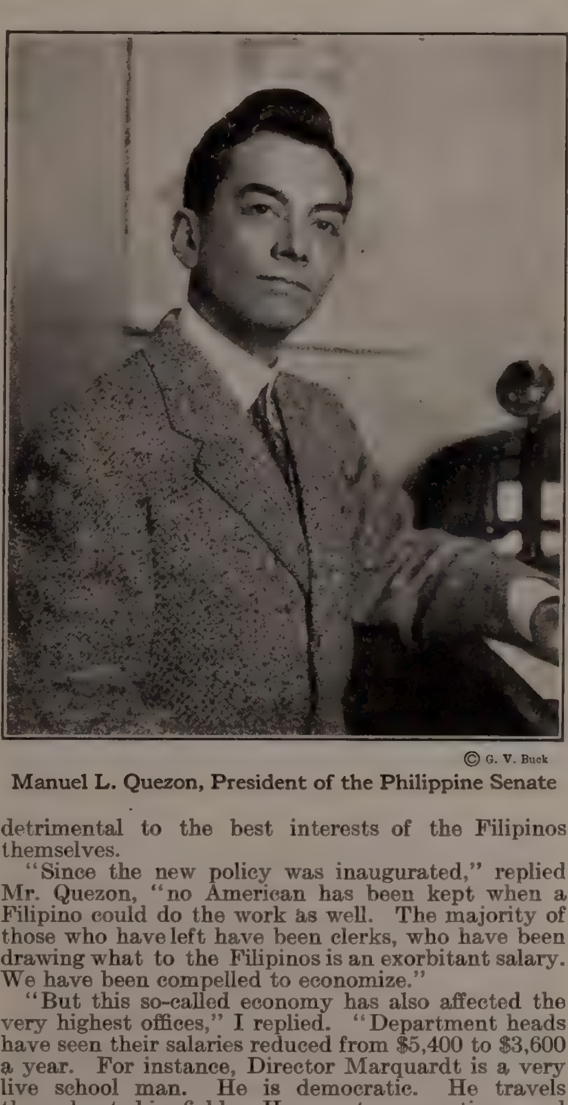
"No."

"How about the statement that there is more Spanish used today than under Spanish rule?"

"There may be more Spanish used, but there is certainly more English used, and we are determined that English is to be the language of the Islands: From one end of the Islands to the other fathers and mothers who cannot speak a work of English, but whose children can, regard it as the 'open sesame' of modern thought."

Later I learned how, in the last session of the Senate before the Christmas holidays, when time was short and business piled up, President Quezon, in a spirited address telling of how on his trip to Europe Spanish was of no use, but English could be spoken anywhere, smashed in no uncertain manner an attempt that was being railroaded through to make it possible to have the constabulary examinations held in either Spanish or English. Quezon practices what he preaches.

I SWITCHED the conversation to the fact that Americans are fading from the service at a very fast rate. I asked if this change was not liable to prove detrimental to the best interests of the Filipinos themselves.



© G. V. Buck

Manuel L. Quezon, President of the Philippine Senate

"Since the new policy was inaugurated," replied Mr. Quezon, "no American has been kept when a Filipino could do the work as well. The majority of those who have left have been clerks, who have been drawing what to the Filipinos is an exorbitant salary. We have been compelled to economize."

"But this so-called economy has also affected the very highest offices," I replied. "Department heads have seen their salaries reduced from $5,400 to $3,600 a year. For instance, Director Marquardt is a very live school man. He is democratic. He travels throughout his field. He courts suggestions and makes good ideas out of poor ones. His heart is in the work he has done for sixteen years. But he is leaving in July. Suppose he should not come back. Where can you get a man who is fitted to direct such an essential work for $3,600 a year? High school principals in America get as much as that in some cases." The dark eyes of the President of the first Philippine Senate met mine squarely as he replied:

"The salary reduction which you mention was designed to meet conditions where Filipinos held offices which were formerly held by Americans. The lowered salary is high for a Filipino. But it was expressly provided in the Salary Act that a higher salary may be paid to get American men, of value to us, to hold office. While no American is being kept when a Filipino can do that work as well, no salary is prohibitive when we seek the services of those who are essential to our development. Director Marquardt is the best Director of Education we have ever had, and we cannot do without an American in his position. We are going to keep him. We will pay ample salaries in order to get good men. This is not a political matter, but a basic principle of governmental efficiency."

ONE of the important questions in giving self-government to the Filipinos is whether they will treat the non-Christian tribes, who number one-eighth of the population, with fairness and liberality. I asked Mr. Quezon whether good treatment for the non-Christian tribes could be looked for if the Filipinos get their independence. He based his prophecy for the future on the present performances of the Philippine Assembly.

"We are treating them well," he said. "It is a matter of pride with us to do so. In the matter of expenditures we are more liberal in our treatment of them than we are in providing for the Christian Filipinos. In the Senate, Hadji Butu can get almost anything he asks for, as the Filipinos are determined to treat the Moros not only with justice but with liberality. The problem of the non-Christian tribes, which was for so many years America's problem, will become our problem, and we realize that the best and quickest way to solve it is to treat the non-Christian races as well or better than the Filipinos themselves. Our present attitude is a testimony to our future action."

Governor-General Harrison and General Hall, who is at the head of the constabulary, both think that the non-Christian tribes are getting fair treatment at the hands of the Filipinos. It is needless to say, however, that such work as has been done by some of the American governors among the tribesmen of the Mountain Province, Mindanao and Sulu can hardly be looked for from the Filipino for many years to come. The pioneer work has, however, been done, and there is a strong probability that peace and good will may be the order of the new day in the Philippines.

IT was hardly necessary to ask the man who had worked hardest for the passage of the Jones Bill whether the passage of "El Bill Jones" had improved the fraternal feelings between the two nations, but his reply, coming as it did the day before America declared war, was of real interest.

"Five years ago," he said, "if America had become involved in war the best she could have expected of the Philippines was strict neutrality. But to-day if America needs our aid the Filipinos will flock to the colors ready to give their lives for the nation that has promised them their independence."

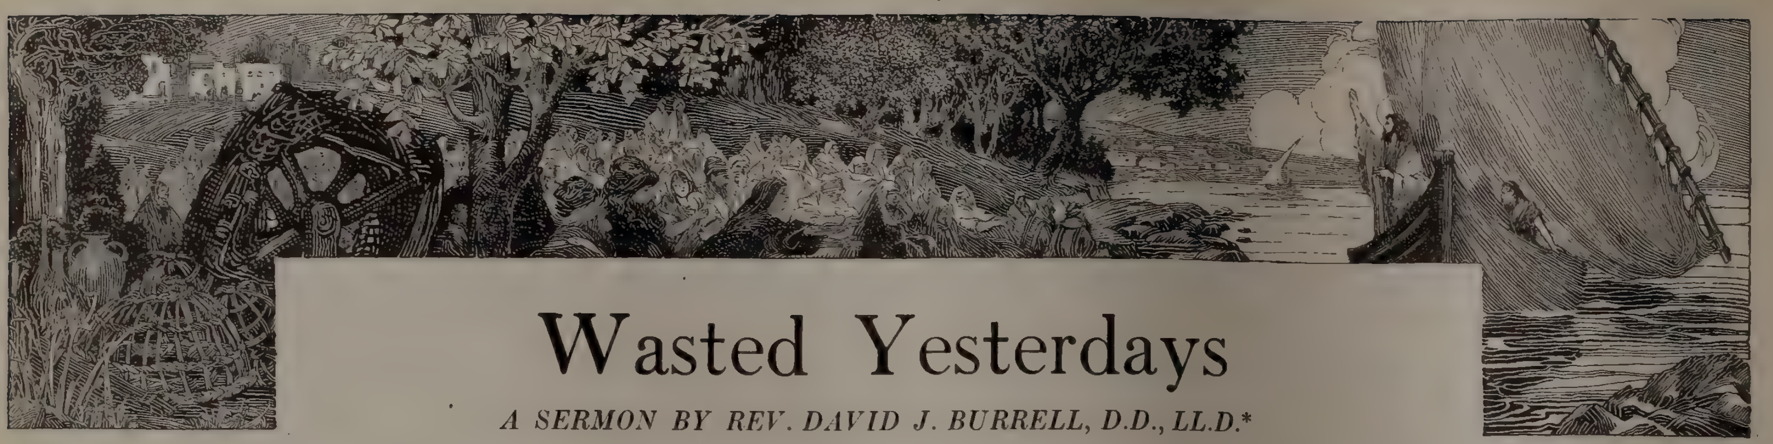
Others have testified to this change in attitude, and there are other illustrations to prove a change of feeling. Five years ago if a Filipino mentioned independence he was cheered to the echo. This year the finest orator among the young Filipinos, speaking before the graduating classes of the University of the Philippines and the large audience that had gathered to witness their commencement exercises, spoke of the coming independence and there was no response on the part of the audience. I asked Mr. Quezon whether the Filipinos were as keen for immediate independence as they were two years ago, and he replied that they were not.

"Two factors enter into the present attitude which were absent two years ago," continued the young statesman. "The larger factor is the assurance, which the Filipino people now have for the first time, that America intends to give us our independence. Never, until the passage of the Jones Bill, were we certain that such was the policy of the United States. The second factor is the feeling of responsibility that has come with the larger measure of self-government and the realization that sooner or later we must be prepared for entire independence. One cannot prophesy with certainty, but there is a possibility that the Filipinos, confident of ultimate independence, will desire a little more time for preparing themselves."

QUEZON is making a fight for clean politics, and he brands the demagogue as the enemy of modern institutions. I have it from a very trustworthy authority that Mr. Quezon refused an offer by many of the leading Americans in Manila to support him for vice-governor, which would have been a large personal victory and the surest step toward being the first president of the Philippine republic. Mr. Quezon has many enemies who smile when he denounces the demagogue, but he is one of the biggest forces and without doubt the most democratic and Americanized force acting in the Philippine Assembly. It will be worth while to watch Mr. Quezon. His impulses seem to be good and he shows promise of being ready to fight for his principles. He is frank and open, with considerable of a Western viewpoint, and a very close friend of Governor-General Harrison.

Mr. Quezon is a Mason, and one of the most remarkable movements in the Philippines at present is the amalgamation of several orders of Masons, so that now the fraternity includes Spanish, Filipinos and Americans meeting in friendly intercourse. General Aguinaldo has just received his thirty-second degree.

Quezon has his faults, but in a lesser degree than most Filipino politicians. He also has sufficient strength of character and true patriotism to place him in the front rank of those young men who must control the destinies of an insular nation, whose position at the hub of the Far Eastern commercial world gives it an importance which is potentially as great as that of Japan, and greater than that of Hongkong.



Wasted Yesterdays

*A SERMON BY REV. DAVID J. BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

TEXT—Gen. 40 : 12. "The three branches are three days."

I SAW the Recording Angel, with pen in hand and ink-horn at his girdle, writing in a book. It was a book of only three leaves, marked respectively "Yesterday," "Today" and "Tomorrow."

On my asking why there were no more, he answered, "Because the longest life is only three days long; its past is all yesterdays, its present is a brief today; and its tomorrow knows no end."

The book was entitled "The Book of Remembrance." In it are recorded the minutest particulars of every life; not merely deeds and words but the secret imaginations of the heart. I asked, "To what end?" "That when all things are brought to remembrance at the Great Assize the ways of the Lord may be justified in the sight of all."

Thereupon I bethought me of my last Yesterday, and of the things which, in this book, were likely to be set over against it.

The day began with blessing. I had slept in God's watchcare, and awoke at his touch upon my eyes. The sun was shining. I was still in the land of the living! My pulse was beating a call to praise, "In thee, O Lord, I live and move and have my being!" As the day wore on my blessings were multiplied, blessings as numberless as the flying moments; food and raiment, strength of body and mind, the pleasures of a happy home, a part in the enterprises of the busy world, privileges and opportunities, and withal a clear revelation of the Source from whom all blessings flow. These were recorded here as on the Debit side of a ledger, all being charged against me.

On the other side of the leaf there were many entries, but few to my credit. It appeared that most of my blessings had been received without the common courtesy of thanks. O base ingratitude! A dog will lick the hand that strokes him; but I, to my shame and confusion of faith, had done less. Not only so, I had crossed the Father's will in countless ways. My sins were all on record; sins of omission and commission, sins of transgression against the holy law, secret and presumptuous sins! Furthermore, I noted an unsuspected list of misused privileges and wasted opportunities. What possibilities of fine achievement had gone to utter waste!

ALL these were written in the book; and, to my dismay I perceived that they were written with indelible ink. The immeasurable waters of the Seven Seas could not wash them out. They were there to stay! And like the ghosts of Richard's victims, they promised to meet me on Bosworth Field. For it is a true saying, "God requireth the past."

Then came to my remembrance the words that Sir Walter Raleigh wrote in his Prayer Book on the night before his execution:

> "E'en such is Time: that takes in trust
> Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
> And pays us back with age and dust;
> Who in the dark and silent grave,
> When we have wandered all our ways,
> Shuts up the story of our days"— our days gone by; our worse than wasted yesterdays!

What then shall I do? Call them back? Alas, they are gone forever! The hands on the dial heed me not: they move straight on. And were it possible to recall the past, this were a dangerous expedient, for—such is the infirmity of human nature—we should probably repeat our errors and recommit our sins.

Or shall I yield to unavailing regret? "Of all sad words of tongue or pen the saddest are these 'It might have been.'" Nay, they are worse than "the saddest," they are the most unavailing. No mill-wheels are ever turned by waters once gone by.

THUS meditating, I looked again on the Book and particularly on the leaf marked "Tomorrow." But I could read nothing there; all being written with invisible ink.

I spoke half aloud. "Will its sun rise for me?" But there was no voice nor answer nor any that regarded. Tomorrow seemed so near; just around the corner, as it were; but no assurance came that I should ever see it.

Then I recalled what Solomon had written, "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." And the wise words of James the Apostle: "Go to now, ye that say, 'Today or tomorrow we will go into such a city and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain'; whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." And also what Jesus said, "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

It is folly, then, to put off until tomorrow what can and should be done today. The part of wisdom, as the ancients were accustomed to say, is to "take time by the forelock." By the same token, "to kill time" is suicidal; and to waste it is crass stupidity. The greatest of uninspired writers makes his most stupid fool watch the relentless moving of the hands upon a dial with "lacklustre eye":

> I met a fool, a motley fool, i' the forest,
> Who laid him down and basked him in the sun.
> "Good morrow fool," quoth I. "No, sir" quoth he:
> "Call me not fool till heaven hath sent me fortune."
> And then he drew a dial from his poke
> And looking in it with lack-lustre eye
> Says very wisely, "It is ten o'clock:
> Thus may we see," quoth he, "how the world wags,
> 'Tis but an hour ago that it was nine,
> And after one hour more 'twill be eleven;
> And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
> And then from hour to hour we rot and rot;
> And thereby hangs a tale."

I TURNED once more to the Book of Remembrance and looked on the leaf entitled "Today." Its record was blank as yet, save for one great word written in letters of gold. The word was "Opportunity."

It appeared that two things are made possible for us by a proper use of the passing day. On the one hand, the sins and blunders of the mislived past may be blotted out and remembered no more against us; and on the other, the future may be safeguarded; on certain conditions. These conditions are three.

First, Repentance: This to clear away the misdeeds of yesterday. But repentance is more than to cry, "Sorrie I am, my Lord; sorrie I am!" Repentance is as far removed from remorse as the tears of Peter from the rope with which Judas hanged himself. A true penitent always translates his sorrow into turning from sin; as when the prodigal, weary of the far country and conscious of his rags and hunger, said, "I will arise and go!"

The second condition is Faith; this by way of preparation for tomorrow. The faith referred to is belief in Christ. Out of the dark night of repentance emerges the Cross as the emblem of hope. In one of Luther's letters he speaks of a dream, in which Satan appeared with the Book of Remembrance and showed him the long catalogue of his sins. "What hope is there," he asked, "for a man with a record like that?" Luther answered, "But look! The mark of the blood! The red hand of my Saviour has been drawn across those sins and they are cancelled; they will be remembered no more against me!" Blessed assurance! The prodigal is now on his way from the far country and is thinking of what he will say; "Father, I have sinned before heaven and in thy sight and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." He needed not to be told that his father loved him; but he never dreamed how much. Make him "as an hired servant," forsooth! That part of his well prepared speech was never delivered: "I am no more worthy to be called thy son———;" thus far and no further. He was interrupted by a welcome that sealed his trembling lips: "his father fell upon his lips and kissed him." No servant he! "My son that was dead is alive again; he was lost and is found!" This is God's message to Little-faith; his message at Calvary to all who tremblingly approach him. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us that"—despite our riotous living in the far country, on our return—"we should be called the sons of God!"

The third condition is Baptism. "He that believeth and is baptised," said Jesus, "shall be saved." Baptised with water? Aye; little or much, it matters not; so long as it is the outward form of an inward grace. To be baptised with the Spirit of Christ is the main thing; that is, with fire, and power, and consecration and newness of life. Baptism, as an ordinance, is the initiatory rite of the Christian Church: it is the open confession of an indwelling trust in Jesus, by which one is enabled to say, "My Lord, my Life, my Sacrifice, my Saviour and my all." It entitled the sinner to a place at his Lord's supper; like the prodigal at home, clad in the best robe and wearing the signet ring, he partakes of fat things.

THESE are the three conditions on which we may rest assured of saving grace. These are the three splendid opportunities of the passing day. Yesterday is gone; tomorrow may never come; today is here. We have come to it as Jacob came to Bethel, a pilgrim fleeing from the past and with no outlook beyond the hills. Friendless and, as he supposed, forsaken of God, he laid him down with a stone for his pillow and dreamed. Blessed is the man who can dream dreams and see visions in the lonely night! Behold a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, on which angels carry his poor prayers aloft and bring down blessings upon him. He is not God-forsaken after all! That ladder is Today; and every man may climb it. All its hopes, bright purposes and aspirations are for us. Thus do "we rise on stepping stones of our dead selves to nobler things."

I heard again the voice of the Recording Angel saying, "I am also the Angel of the Resurrection. It was I who rolled away the stone from the sepulchre in Joseph's garden that the weeping women might know the living Christ and weep no more. Believe in him in whom life and immortality are brought to light!"

IS there one here who has not believed in him? "Today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart as in the provocation." Life is to be had for the taking; but it must be taken when the Lord offers it. He waits to be gracious. "His hands are stretched out still." Today is yours; tomorrow is God's.

Are there Christians here who mourn over their yesterdays and hope for a tomorrow of better things? Live today! If there is a friend whom you would serve, serve him now. Is some one in distress and calling for help? Help him now. Is any duty unperformed? Discharge it now. The Lord has not promised to wait upon your convenience. "Say not it is yet four months and then cometh the harvest; lift up your eyes and see! The fields are already ripe for the harvest; thrust in thy sickle and reap!" The merrymaking in the father's house is refreshing indeed to one who has known famine in the far country: but alas if that were all! The garners must be filled; the wine-press must be trod; the joy of service awaits us.

"Do it now." So runs the legend in many a busy shop and factory. "Defer not till tomorrow to be wise; tomorrow's sun for thee may never rise."

It is poor Christianity to dwell among the shadows of one's wasted yesterdays; and poorer still to build upon the hope of improvement tomorrow. Today is the whole of life. In this moment, for aught we know, may be wrapped up the issues of the endless hereafter. Wherefore, whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, and do it now.

---

*Pastor, Marble Collegiate Church (Reformed), New York City.

My Dream-Boat

THE boat of my dreams I launched away
  In the strength of youth's desire,
On the sea of the years
With its laughter and tears
  And the storms that the Fates conspire.
The boat of my dreams, with a wish for a sail,
  And never a thought of a shoal,
With Hope at the helm,
And the beautiful realm
  Of Happiness for my goal.

I launched away on a sea unknown,
  And the soft breeze filled my sail;
The years flew by
'Neath a cloudless sky,
  And I scorned the rising gale.
But, alas, the fierce winds rent my sail,
  And my dream-boat went astray;
Of my wish bereft
There's nothing left
  But a prayer at the end of the day.

BERNARD HAMBLEN.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Fixedness of Character

SUNDAY, July 15. Jer. 1:18. "I have made thee . . . an iron pillar." That great divine word was spoken to a young prophet who was timidly shrinking from his stern commission. The odds seemed all against him. Principalities and powers were ranked in fierce antagonism. The priesthood was his foe. He had not even the support of the people. "Ah, Lord God, I am a child!" He felt like a broken twig in the fierce current of a river in flood. He felt like a desert-reed in a tempest. And it was just in that season, when his heart trembled before a tremendous task, that the Lord spake to him and said, "Be not dismayed; I have made thee an iron pillar!" The young prophet was divinely equipped for his divine commission. He was to be matched with the hour. His mind was to be established in the truth of God. His heart was to be confirmed in the purpose of God. His will was to be possessed by the holy strength of God. He was to confront all hostilities like an iron pillar—not breaking, not bending, not yielding—invincible to the onslaught of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

In all great crises these divinely fashioned pillars are the salvation of the state. The crises are not always times of war. They may be times of luxury, and apathy, and ease. The grave dangers may abound in Lotusland, in heavy and slumbrous afternoons. There are subtle perils on the Enchanted Ground as well as in Vanity Fair. Indeed, a warrior may fight his way through Vanity Fair and collapse on the Enchanted Ground. And so we need stalwart Greathearts who are invincible in every place and season. We need men and women of absolutely settled and vital convictions, who are "rooted and grounded," as the apostle Paul says in his agricultural-architectural figure—men and women who are able to stand against the enervating airs from the south, and the fierce blasts from the icy north. It is the souls of this order, steady and determined at all times, who are the pillars of a people's hopes.

In his hero lecture on Cromwell, Thomas Carlyle has these words: "Perhaps of all the persons in that anti-Puritan struggle, from first to last, the single indispensable one was Cromwell. To see, and dare, and decide; to be a fixed pillar in a welter of uncertainty: a king among men, whether they called him so or not." And that is the purposed office and distinction of every soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ, and pre-eminently so in the times through which we are passing. We are to be as fixed pillars among folk who are shaking in uncertainty. We are to steady those who are trembling. We are to be strong enough for timid hearts to lean upon. And this glorious strength we are to receive from our Lord as the gift of his grace. He is the fashioner of this royal character, and in his hands the reed which is shaken by the wind is transformed into an iron pillar which cannot be moved.

J. H. J.

Enlightenment and Struggle

MONDAY, July 16. Heb. 10:32. "But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions." There are various terms to describe that event in our lives which we generally call conversion. We have such a synonym in an old song, the chorus of which begins, "At the cross, at the cross, where I first saw the light." God, who is light, floods the soul with his own radiance, and in his light we see not only light but darkness, the darkness of sin, our inner state of gloom. Mystics speak about the Inner Light. John says, "If we walk in the light as God is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." The Christian lives the guided life, the serene life, the victorious life, the illuminated life.

There is an easy view of Christian living which creates the impression that, after our spiritual illumination, there can be no further trouble. No further trouble? That is the beginning of trouble, the commencement of conflict, the starting-point of serious and purposeful effort. A child's first days in school are sometimes profoundly discouraging. Wrestling with his a b c's, he hears older children reading, and, conscious of his own limitations, he is prone to think, "I can never learn to read." But if he be a true learner, his discouragement will urge him to more earnest effort. It is so in Christian experience. The first vision of Christ may depress us. We see the illimitable distance between ourselves and our ideal. Then the fight begins, the fight with self and sin. After we are illuminated, we are appointed to endure a great fight of affliction. The crown of glory that fadeth not away belongs only to him who strives. The more severe the strife, the brighter the crown. Let us rejoice in the hour of our illumination, but, rejoicing, let us re-gird ourselves for the struggle which inevitably follows.

C. C. A.

The Trail of Jesus

TUESDAY, July 17. I Pet. 2:20, 21. "If when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his footsteps." The pilgrim's progress through this life to the life to come may be said to consist in continually picking up the trail of Jesus. He leads on, we follow. The path which we must travel is marked with his footsteps. They tell us that Jesus has passed at this place or that and therefore we are headed in the right direction and are safe in going on. They also tell us that we are in danger the moment we refuse to go on; for we will lose our Guide.

It is comparatively easy and pleasant to follow Jesus when we are asked to do what we like. But when he leads us into suffering and dishonor, when he bids us submit without a murmur to unjust censure, when he demands that we take curses for the thanks we ought to get, and not resent in a spirit of vengefulness the ill-treatment we have received—it is then that our so-called manhood wants to assert itself and our outraged sense of justice begins to remonstrate. Still even into such situations the meek and patient Jesus leads us. Such trials of patience and forgiving love are a part of the yoke which he puts on his disciples, and where his spirit dwells in a generous Christian heart, there even this irksome yoke becomes sweet. God grant us clear and sharp eyes to detect unerringly even in the most doubtful places the trail of Jesus in our walk along life's highway, and may his grace give us the courage to take up the trail and follow it even unto death.

W. H. T. D.

The Music of the Soul

WEDNESDAY, July 18. Ps. 43:4. "Upon the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God." The heart itself is a harp of many strings, responding to all hymns of praise, all instruments of music. If one cannot sing, he can make melody in his heart unto the Lord. Soul music is the most acceptable unto heaven. After all, artistic melody is merely mechanical unless the harp of the heart joins in.

When Christ comes into the heart, it seems as if a thousand angels were playing on the harp of your soul, making every chord vibrate with joy. Holy song is heavenly melody to the responsive soul, just as nature is beautiful to those who can understand her symmetry of form and beauty of color.

What a multitude of choral records are stowed away in the human heart; what anthems of praise, what dirges of sorrow, what pæans of victory! When Jesus' hands touch the heartstrings, he wakens all the depths of melody. Sin is discord; holiness is concord. The love of the Master Musician brings up the harp of the soul to concert pitch so it can join the glorified choir around the throne of God.

Regeneration puts a new song into the mouth of the soul; "unto him that hath washed us in his own precious blood." It is the song of the Lamb of Calvary, the crowned Lord of all. This song on earth has shaken down prison walls, leveled the Jericho walls of iniquity, making evil tremble with its vibrating power.

When the winds of adversity blow upon the Æolian harp of the soul, sacred minor melody thrills the being with sweetest strains of holy comfort. Are we in tune like David's harp of solemn sound? Then are we ready to make the melody of praise unto the Lord our God.

"Hearts once thrilled with thoughts of heaven,
  Hearts to generous actions dear,
Hearts redeemed, and sins forgiven,
  Hearts where love has cast out fear;
Hearts that would be ever raising
  Loving thoughts for love untold,
Hearts on Jesus ever gazing,
  Such as these are hearts of gold."

E. W. C.

The Unharmed Soul

THURSDAY, July 19. I Pet. 3:13. "And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" If these words mean anything, they mean that there is no power on earth or in hell that can permanently injure the life that is in God's keeping. Superficially, such a life may be wounded, bruised, hurt, stung, struck, starved, but none of these things can permanently affect the soul whose springs of strength and consolation are far above all principalities and powers. As Chrysostum said, "The Christian can not be banished, for his home is in heaven; he can not be impoverished, for his treasures are in the skies; he can not be killed, for his life is hid with Christ in God."

The biographies of the saints in all the ages contain on every page indisputable proofs of the perfect safety of those who put their trust in God—not their circumstantial safety, not the safety of their estates, but their soul safety. They are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." One of the most spiritual of our modern apostles of the Christian faith asked that, after he had finished his course on earth, his resting-place should be marked only by a simple stone, bearing his name and the word "Kept." Among the last letters of a distinguished pastor is one containing this testimony: "I know I have done many foolish things in life, but the most inexcusably foolish thing I have ever done has been to fear. Now that I have come within sight of the valley of shadow, I see what the psalmist meant when he said, 'I will fear no evil, for thou art with me.' "

C. C. A.

Overcoming the World

FRIDAY, July 20. I John 5:5. "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" "World" in this text does not denote the complex of kingdoms and empires into which the earth is divided, and the thought here expressed has nothing to do with the imperialistic dream that has haunted some mighty monarch in nearly every epoch of history. Jesus declared that his kingdom was not of this world. Satan, whom Scripture declares a world-lord (Eph. 6:12), offered him the world on a blasphemous condition and was spurned. The term "world" in John's vocabulary has a spiritual meaning: it signifies the principles, aspirations, customs, ways, methods of godless men. These are called worldly, because they live only for this present life and seem to hope for no other.

The principles and practices of Christianity are diametrically opposed to this world. What the world regards as error the Christian knows to be truth; what seems light to the world is darkness to the Christian; the world's joys give the Christian pain. Love of the world, therefore, and Christianity cannot dwell in the same heart. It is a life-question with every Christian whether he shall overcome the world or be overcome by it. One of the two will surely happen. Faith in Christ decides the issue in every instance. The believer declares, "The world is crucified to me, and I to the world." The believer remembers every day the parting remark of Christ to his disciples: "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." The power of Christ goes out to the believer through the word of Christ, and enables him to resist manfully both the enticements and the threatenings of the world, and to overcome every worldly influence in his inner life. Of this power the life of the Christless and godless is void. The world has overcome them so completely that they consider it madness to fight the world.

W. H. T. D.

Witnessing for the Master

SATURDAY, July 21. Matt. 28:19. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." The word "therefore" explains why Jesus sent the disciples forth. It was because all power was given unto him in heaven and in earth. He had all authority to send them and all power to give them, and his own mighty personality to attend them. Therefore Jesus commissioned his apostles and every other follower to "go" and tell the story of salvation. It is a "Go" Gospel, a Christ Gospel, a glorious Gospel of the truth as it is in Jesus. Christ stood for the Holy Trinity when he died for lost men and when he sent men on a world-wide mission. He is a mighty Saviour because he has all love to die, all power to endure, all authority to command, and the all-cleansing blood to wash sins away. Christ is the center and circumference of the Gospel. He is the Christ crucified, raised, glorified, coming again to gather the results of his mighty mission.

Have you obeyed the command of the Captain? Are you going every day, everywhere, witnessing for the Master? Are you ministering with your pen, your tongue, your example, your gifts? Are you using your endowment of divine power to bring back a lost world into his kingdom? It may be you are a deserter, a traitor, worthy of being court-martialed for disobedience to divine orders. Let us ever hereafter be true, obeying the Lord's call to go; keep sacred his commandments, that we may love his appearing and be caught up with him when he comes.

E. W. C.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

The U. S. S. Olympia, flagship at Manila Bay, first vessel to fly the admiral's flag of George Dewey, wrecked June 25 at Block Island, R. I.

Our Boys Arrive in France. Dispatches dated June 27 from a French seaport announced the arrival of the "second" contingent of American troops. The troopships were convoyed through the danger zone, and the troops were received by the frantic cheers of the people of the port. This first force, under the command of Major General William L. Sibert, camped near the port of arrival, but it was expected to go soon to a point near the front for the final training before entering actual service. The troops, all of them "regulars" of experience, were reported as in excellent shape, enthusiastic over their successful trip, and eager for action. Major General Pershing reviewed this first detachment of his troops on the day following their arrival. The American forces will be fed, clothed, armed and equipped by the United States, and will not be a charge upon the resources of the Allies in any degree.

General Pershing and his staff established headquarters in Paris immediately on their arrival in the city, and started to work with characteristic American thoroughness. One of the first acts of the commander-in-chief was the combining of the work of the American Relief Clearing House and the work of the American Red Cross in France. It was announced that the American contingent in France would be under the supreme command of General Pershing, who would work in cooperation with the French and British high commands.

Russia Won't Desert. Things Russian are still more or less uncertain, but the uncertainty seems to be gradually dissolving into a national consciousness favorable to a continuation of the defensive alliance in which the revolution found the Russian state. The pan-Russian Congress and deputies of the Soldiers and Workmen on June 23 voted to abolish both the Duma and the Council of the Empire. With the abolition of the monarchy, both these legislative bodies lost their legal powers. The Russian constituent assembly, which is to be elected September 30 and to convene October 13, will provide new legislative bodies for free Russia. The new ambassador to the United States, Boris Bahkmetieff, who heads the Russian Commission to this country, in addresses before Congress, pledged the whole strength of revolutionary Russia to the battle for democracy. While Bahkmetieff was addressing Congress, Mr. Root of the American Commission to Russia, was addressing gatherings of representative Russians at Moscow and Petrograd, explaining to them America's reasons for entering the war, and the danger to world democracy and the Russian state in particular, that lay in the proposals for a separate peace. Meanwhile, Admiral James H. Glennon, U. S. N., another member of the Commission, was addressing the sailors of the Russian Black Sea fleet, mutinied at Sebastopol, making such an impression, by his clear statement of democratic principles, that the sailors returned to their posts and restored to power all officers save the former commander of the fleet, Admiral Koltchak, whom they distrusted. Mr. Root told the Russians that if the allied armies did their utmost, and the populations stood by, the war might be over in 1918. Charles Edward Russell, the Socialist member of the American Commission to Russia, addressed the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates at Petrograd on June 25, declaring that the United States was fighting only because the democracies of the world were in danger. On June 27, the Council adopted a resolution rejecting all proposals for a separate peace, but declaring for the restoration of peace at the earliest possible date.

Maj. Gen. Wm. L. Sibert

Only a Week Away

"PEANUTS and Cannon Balls." Sounds funny, doesn't it? Frank Carpenter, who has been in Texas, will have something to say next week about both.

Pershing and his troops are in France. Part of the first detachment were "Soldiers of the Sea." You will know what that means when you get next week's paper.

"The Road to Understanding" has proven rather a long lane for Helen and Burke Denby, but the turn is just ahead.

There are riches which do not tarnish. Next week's Christian Herald will bring you a living message from Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., recently elected moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

You were promised a page of pictures this week; you have two pages. Next week there will be two more.

Liquor on the Defensive. During the early days of the week of July 1, the Senate Committee on Agriculture was variously reported as planning modifications of the prohibition amendment to the Food Control Bill. However, on June 27, the committee finally rejected all compromises, and agreed upon the complete restriction of the liquor trade with the exception of wines, the making of which the President was to be given authority to permit under certain restrictions. The bill with the prohibition provision was reported at once to the Senate, and debate began upon it at noon on June 28. It was expected that one of the greatest parliamentary battles in the history of the Senate would be fought over this food bill in which the food question has been suddenly pushed into the background by the "wet" or "dry" issue. Senator Lodge of Massachusetts opened the attack on the bill on its first day of debate, supporting the ban on whisky, but declaring it unwise to stop brewing both because of loss of revenue and because of the fact that beer is the normal beverage of a large element of our population. In order that the country might not be flooded with whisky as the result of the stopping of brewing, the bill provides for the commandeering by the government of all stocks of spirits in the country. President Wilson was reported, on June 29, as having gone on record in opposition to the prohibition of light wines and beer. And latest reports indicated that the bill would be amended to provide for prohibition at the President's discretion.

Olympia on the Rocks. Dewey's famous flagship, the United States cruiser Olympia, ran ashore on the night of June 25 off Block Island, Rhode Island. One member of the crew was killed by a falling hatch. The rest of the crew was taken to Newport and immediate efforts were made to refloat the cruiser, which was badly damaged.

Incompetence Lost Kut. The British public was thoroughly aroused on June 26 by the publication of the official report on the military operations in Mesopotamia which resulted in disaster before Bagdad, and the retreat and subsequent loss of a complete division with General Townshend at Kut-el-Amara. The former Viceroy of India Hardinge, General Duff, former commander-in-chief in India, General Nixon, in general command of the expedition, General Barrow, military secretary of the India office, and J. Austen Chamberlain, former secretary for India, and a member of the War Committee of the Cabinet, were all accused of varying degrees of incompetence. The report showed a series of mistakes and miscalculations, the most serious of which were the failure to provide proper medical equipment and adequate transportation facilities, the failure to relieve Kut being blamed almost wholly upon the breakdown of transportation.

Spain's Finnegan Constitution. Spain's constitution which was recently on again, was reported on June 26 to be off again, the constitutional guarantees having been suspended by the king on the advice of Premier Dato. The action was said to have been taken to meet agitations in various provinces which appeared to be leading toward disaster and violence. A rigid censorship was immediately placed upon all communications, and the exact facts are not available.

Coal at Fair Prices. Four hundred operators in bituminous and anthracite coal fields, meeting in Washington on June 26, were told plainly through Secretaries Lane and Daniels, Mr. Fort of the Federal Trade Commission, and Assistant Attorney General Lewis, that unless they themselves established a fair selling price and a proper regulation of the industry, their output would be taken over by the government. Secretary Lane said: "When your boy and mine are going to the front, it is no time for you to reap an advantage. . . . The life of the nation is at stake and there are greater things than making money." Following these plain speeches, the operators formed an agreement by which a special committee was to be appointed to be composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the coal production

Continued on page 749

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Chicago Plants 200,000 Gardens

By EDGAR W. COOLEY

CHICAGO'S determination to help feed herself as her "bit" in meeting the crisis of the war has resulted in the planting of 200,000 backyard and vacant lot gardens within the city limits. Even before President Wilson had issued his appeal to the American people to increase their production of food, Chicago had taken the initial steps which resulted in one of the most remarkable movements of its kind on record anywhere.

A Garden Bureau instructor telling how it is done. One or two boys will soon be asking, "What did he say?"

A campaign that in six months' time would result in the plowing, fertilizing and planting of ten thousand acres of land within the limits of a densely populated city would be considered a great success. But that this could be accomplished in two months indicates that the organization back of the movement was a most efficient machine. And this is the record of the Chicago Garden Bureau.

Between April 1 and the end of May, 8,000 acres, or approximately one-fourth of the entire vacant land in the city, had been planted to vegetables. To accomplish this result over three hundred garden meetings were held, which were attended by seventy-thousand people; 395,000 pieces of literature pertaining to gardens were distributed, seed at wholesale price was provided for 25,000 persons, and twenty-four tractors and fifty teams were kept busy, day and night, plowing the ground. The enormous demand for gardens is shown by the fact that during that period fully 120,000 people called at the Bureau to secure assistance in procuring ground, and to buy seeds or to have their ground plowed.

THERE had been many independent garden movements in Chicago conducted by organizations or newspapers. To secure concerted action and effective work, the Garden Bureau was organized in April and P. G. Holden was chosen chairman. Mr. Holden, who is director of the Agricultural Extension Department of the International Harvester Company, and has conducted successfully over one hundred agricultural campaigns, some of them state-wide, entered upon his task energetically. There was no time to train men and women, so he transferred to the Garden Bureau a dozen experienced agriculturists. Within twenty-four hours a definite plan was mapped out in all its details and set in motion.

Three hundred and fifty special lecture charts were prepared and about seventeen tons of booklets printed. Public speakers were engaged and a schedule of meetings drafted. During the next three weeks, meetings were held in each of the three hundred public schools and thirty thousand pupils enlisted in the movement. Meetings were held in churches, club rooms, private homes, empty store buildings, and even on vacant lots. Some of the lectures were delivered in six or seven different languages. Pastors of 1,200 churches preached sermons on gardens.

This publicity had the desired effect. Applications for vacant lots began to flow in upon the Bureau at the rate of two hundred a day, rapidly increasing to one thousand daily. Every day's mail brought hundreds of applications.

A TREMENDOUS drive for donations of vacant lots was then inaugurated. Owners were urged either to grow gardens themselves or donate the lots to others. Thousands responded. Patrolmen sent in lists of all vacant lots and the names of the owners, and to the latter a special appeal was made. The Political Equality League of Chicago canvassed the city and secured the donations of many acres of ground.

Plowing was the most serious problem. It was almost impossible to procure teams and in this emergency the International Harvester Company donated the use of nineteen tractor plows and men to operate them. These plows worked every day and many kept at it every night. Fifty teams were hired for plowing lots too small for tractor work. All plowing by tractor was done free of charge; for plowing by teams, a small fee was exacted.

Fertilizing was another difficult problem. An appeal was made to the municipal water-works department and fourteen thousand wagon loads of manure which had been used to protect the fire-plugs during the winter were given free to the gardeners. Manure was also procured through the efforts of the Board of Health, which conducted a clean-up campaign. Some commercial fertilizer was also used.

IN order that the city's poor might be given ample assistance a large quantity of vegetable seed was purchased by the Bureau and sold at the actual wholesale price. The demand was instantaneous and enormous.

For the benefit of dwellers in the congested districts, ten community gardens, ranging from seven to sixty acres, were prepared for planting and allotted to as many families as possible. Many schoolboys organized garden clubs and had land set aside for them. To protect the growing vegetables from vandals or thoughtless children an appeal was made to the patriotism of the public. Large signs were printed and distributed among the gardeners, bearing the words "Honor the Flag by Protecting This Garden as a Part of the Food Supply of the Nation."

The total cost to the Bureau of these two hundred thousand gardens was $33,500, of which $30,000 was donated. The total cost to the public of each garden was 26 cents. If each garden produces $20 worth of food, the aggregate value will reach nearly $4,000,000.

United Work for Our Boys

A FEW years ago a committee of laymen residing on Staten Island neart Fort Wadsworth, which is one of the large and important coast defenses of New York City, joined together under the leadership of the Army Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association of the City of New York to prosecute an effective work among the enlisted men at that fort. At least six denominations were represented, and their cooperation has continued to this day; the number of churches joining the movement has increased, and their cooperation has been strengthened. Since 1909 a systematic and aggressive work has been carried on among the men, which has been a revelation even to its best friends. There are today in the ministry and in other forms of Christian leadership men whose lives were made over and whose Christian spirit was born in that fort as a result of this church unity.

Almost every soldier has a nickname bestowed upon him by his comrades. One of the Fort Wadsworth men, a big husky chap from the Northwest—"Red" they called him, for his jet-black hair indicated a strain of Indian blood—was brought under the influence of the local branch. "Red" was a man who used to express his jubilation by painting the town from time to time when some great athletic victory fell to the fort. The army secretary, a man who lived close to Christ, tried to persuade this young soldier to devote his wonderful physical powers to Christ. It was an entirely new idea, as he had been brought up in a faith that did not emphasize the need of personal service for Christ; but the truth took hold. After "Red's" term of enlistment had expired he became pastor of a church in Massachusetts. A two years' ministry in this place brought forth enlarged accommodations for both church and Sunday school, but the pastor felt the call for a more difficult field, so he left for Calgary, Alberta, where he is today the head of a large and promising church.

A little while ago one of the secretaries received a letter from the wife of a former soldier. She mentioned his recent illness and said that just before he died he talked a good deal of his army life and his conversion. He mentioned the names of those who led him to Christ, and he knelt and prayed as long as he was able. Last of all he sang the hymn, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," and fell asleep. This young widow wanted to know all the particulars of her husband's conversion and the secretary was very happy to tell her about the little room off the gymnasium where God had manifested his presence to this hungry soul, and of the night in the little mission hall in the neighborhood, where frequent meetings were held, when he consecrated his life to God. The widow stated that after he returned to his home from the service in the army he became superintendent of a Sunday school and lived true to God.

The work of this interdenominational committee has not only included financial support, but it has included personal work also. Monthly meetings are held, advice and financial aid rendered and the assistance of the ladies' auxiliary obtained. Through meetings and entertainments on the part of many civilians and young people's societies there has resulted a spirit of friendship which has found expression in church attendance on the part of the soldiers and in some cases church members.

T. S. LAMOREAUX.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

An Opportunity for the Churches

RECOLLECTIONS of the splendid spiritual service rendered by the Christian Commission during the Civil War are naturally revived at this time, and in some quarters the suggestion is made that there is an opportunity for a similar work, on a much larger scale, now open to the churches. Founded in 1861, for the benefit of the soldiers and sailors of the Union, the work of the Christian Commission broadened rapidly until it became an organization of nation-wide influence, rendering services of inestimable value. In the years that have passed since then, we have seen the Y. M. C. A. grow from a seedling to a great organization, with wide-spreading branches. We have seen how well prepared it is for the present emergency, and how promptly its workers became busy in the training camps and near the front. Yet, even conceding the claim that the Y. M. C. A. is able to meet all the requirements for services such as the Christian Commission rendered in the old days, and much more, there are many who will regret that the churches do not have a more direct and personal share in the serious duties of the time. Such a splendid reenforcement it would be to have the two as spiritual allies, working in hearty cooperation side by side—a greater Christian Commission! Such a combination would afford an opportunity for all of the great religious bodies to participate in the highest kind of patriotic service—looking after the spiritual welfare of the youth of the country, who are being called to the front.

Soon we will have an army larger than at any previous time in the nation's history. Much has been said concerning the temptations of the camps and the moral perils to be avoided, and our government is especially exerting itself to safeguard the young men of the nation. But this is a work in which the best men available in all the denominations shall be represented, and we believe the country, as a whole, would give unstinted approval if the church took up the task. In the Christian Commission of the 60's there were many men of large spiritual experience; pastors, evangelists, Christian workers and college professors, all of them consecrated to the work, and the record of what they accomplished lives today as a bright and splendid memory.

War Profits and War Cost

A GREAT war, particularly the greatest of wars, inevitably separates industries into two groups, one stricken, the other enriched, and often vastly enriched, by the cataclysm.

The 104 American business concerns that have made public official reports of their profits for the years 1914, 1915 and 1916 confess the following increases in earnings because of the war:

1914	1915	1916
$263,153,892	$575,045,979	$1,273,992,854

A still more striking showing of the increase in profits among these concerns is seen by dividing certain of these huge profiteers into groups and comparing their net incomes for 1916 with those for 1914:

	1914	1916
31 Steel, Munition and Machinery Concerns.....	$72,154,656	$621,819,291
14 Copper, Zinc, etc., Mining Concerns.........	34,006,345	238,993,938
10 Petroleum Concerns....	37,834,411	130,746,247
7 Automobile and Tire Companies..........	26,166,237	70,985,794
7 Chemical and Fertilizer Concerns............	12,194,112	39,381,208
13 Sugar, Leather, Wool, Rubber and Meat Cos.	47,811,898	116,696,484
2 Shipping Concerns.....	3,208,259	20,177,818
2 Paper Manufacturers...	1,029,399	7,645,105

These are net earnings, and a mere glance shows the stupendous increases, compared with which the increases, if any, in the ordinary merchant's net profits, the farmer's net income and the employe's savings are insignificant indeed.

These are but a part of the excess war profits; many more big profiteers have not yet officially reported. And the profits are still rapidly increasing; those for 1917 will be far above those of 1916. Otto Kahn of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., one of the far-sighted leaders of "big business," estimates that this year there will be war-stimulated profits of $2,000,000,000 in excess of the average profits of the three years preceding our entry into the war.

Even people in control of the great bulk of these war profits are themselves arguing earnestly for a tax upon them. A representative of very large interests suggests a rate of 40 per cent. the first year, 60 per cent. the second and 80 per cent. the third year, if the war should last so long. It must be admitted on all sides that a tax of 50 per cent. on these excess profits, which would yield $1,000,000,000 of the war cost, can be taken without a hundredth part of the hardship that would be caused by further overburdening normal business and taxing the breakfast tables of the poor.

In the past it has been "a rich man's war and a poor man's fight"—for the rich to profit and for the poor to pay. When the poor could pay no longer, the burden was bonded upon their children. This is the history, political and economic, of the world.

In this age of democracy, in this world war for extension of democracy, and more particularly still in this nation, which is the heart and soul of the democratic movement, such injustice must be done away with. Even though there cannot be just sharing of profits, there ought to be just sharing of costs.

Government conscripts the man—calls him out to lay down his life for his country. Certainly excess war profits are not more sacred against conscription than are patriots' lives.

"Nickels at Thirty-seven Cents Each"

WHAT will be lost to the nation in revenue through the new restrictions upon the liquor traffic will be made up many times over through the industrial and human values saved.

Possibly $500,000,000 a year in revenue is sacrificed. Even at this, in giving up the $500,000,000 liquor tax, by abolishing the whole liquor traffic, the nation will save $3,781,097,500 a year in values that were being destroyed by that traffic.

This estimate is an exceedingly conservative one, based on official and scientific reports as to values that are lost in the production and the consumption of liquors. Congressman Charles H. Randall of California arrayed these figures, item by item, in a remarkable speech in the House, opening with the apt observation that in permitting the traffic for the sake of the tax the government would be buying the liquor men's nickels at the rate of $4.49 a dozen, or 37 cents each.

The various foodstuffs destroyed annually in the manufacture of liquors total, according to government figures, $146,000,000. Best available scientific calculations as to lives lost through drinking show a commercial value of $966,720,000. Lost time of 589,000 farmers and wage earners because of drink is worth $539,000,000. Loss through crime, insanity and poverty is $129,377,500. The loss in production of wealth, while capably estimated at over $4,000,000,000, is set down at $2,000,000,000 only. The total amount is nearly eight times that of the tax. And there are many elements of manhood and morality, of incalculable value, that cannot be included in any estimate.

The saving of these values by the restrictions upon the traffic that has been destroying them, regarded from the business viewpoint alone, is good business for the nation.

By No Means

THIS letter from a reader in a Western state suggests a new problem, which is somewhat disconcerting on the surface, at least:—

> "Dear Editor: I would not know how to get along without the Christian Herald. But don't you suppose that such a good Christian paper as the Herald is responsible for many people staying home from church services, and reading their sermon there, and learning much more of a Christian's duty than sometimes when they go to church?
>
> Sedro-Wooley, Wash. F. D. C."

We have always held that it is the duty of every professing Christian to worship God in His holy temple and to "forsake not the assembling." There is nothing that can really take the place of the Word itself, preached with power. In every true church in which a congregation gathers to worship, there is a special message from the pulpit, a spiritual refreshment from the association with Christian brothers and sisters, an uplift in the sweet songs of Zion, and a source of strength in the prayers that are poured out by earnest lips from sincere hearts. A churchless people would soon become a godless people. And we owe it, besides, as an example to others and to our dear ones, to uphold the church and recognize its high spiritual authority by attending its services. It is the appointed means of grace to countless multitudes, who, but for the Church, might never know Christ or realize their need of a Saviour.

No, the sermons in the Christian Herald, splendid as they are—the best evangelical thought of the great preachers of all denominations—are not a substitute for the Church itself. Highly as we value the good opinion our friends have of the Christian Herald sermons, it is not and never has been our purpose that they should become a substitute for church worship, except in localities that are churchless, or in homes where the inmates, through causes beyond their control, may be prevented from attending service. They are calculated, on the other hand, rather to stimulate regular attendance and to create a desire for the full exercise of all the privileges that belong to church membership. It is true that in many localities, remote from churches, these Christian Herald sermons are read in neighborly gatherings, as well as in home circles. They are a comfort to the sick, the shut-in, the churchless, all over this land. But our advice to our Western friend, and to all who may be interested in his inquiry, is to stand loyally by the Church, whether it be one of your own chosen denomination, or a union church, or simply a plain little Gospel gathering where some earnest Christian pastor gives the message which the whole world needs. And we should remember that whether we worship in a splendid temple, or in a plain room, there is the promise that wherever a little band of sincere souls "are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them."

An Educational Testing Time

IN all of those countries that are vitally affected by the war the cause of education has suffered a serious setback. Indeed, in some it is practically at a stand-still. In a recent communication, U. S. Commissioner Claxton of the Bureau of Education calls attention to the importance of maintaining the efficiency of our educational system, which will undoubtedly be subjected to a severe strain. While it is obvious that many professional workers will be taken out of the schools and colleges, and that thousands of students of military age will be called to the colors, all the educational agencies we possess must be maintained, he urges, at whatever necessary cost, "against hurtful interference with their regular work, except as may be necessary for the national defense." No school should close its doors or shorten its term unnecessarily.

Dr. Claxton reminds us that England, France, Italy and the Teutonic empires have thrown into battle a very large per cent. of their trained and educated men, including most of the young professors and instructors in the universities, colleges, gymnasiums, lyceums and public schools. Their colleges and universities are almost empty. It is inevitable that these countries, after the struggle, must face a long period of reconstruction, industrially and otherwise, and if the United States is to be an efficient helper when the testing time comes, we should see to it that our own trained men and women are not retarded now, so that they may be ready and competent to help. All schools of whatever grade, the Commissioner advises, should remain open with their full quota of officers and teachers. Projects for new buildings on any of the usual lines of expansion should be postponed.

These suggestions should weigh with our educational boards and college faculties. Whatever the future may hold for us, the duty of maintaining present educational standards and conserving resources should be kept steadily in view, and all existing facilities should be utilized to the best advantage. It may become inevitable that our school and college systems will have to pass through a severer ordeal than can now be foreseen; but whether this should prove so or not, we can have the satisfaction that comes from present duty faithfully done.

◆

Are you looking for a man's job or only for a salary?

One swallow may not make a spring, but the first swallow often makes a drunkard.

Some people can buy everything but character—that is never on the bargain counter.

It is distance that makes the grass seem so green on the other fellow's side of the fence.

To be kind when none responds, to be good when none appreciates, and to be ready to forgive, is religion.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Potash from Seaweed

THE shutting off of 1,000,000 tons of potash each year, imported from Germany as a fertilizer for American farmers, has set ingenuity to work to repair the loss. The Department of Agriculture is now carrying on practical experiments with hopes of extracting potassium chloride from the seaweed off the California coast, in such quantities and at such a cost as to make its use profitable to the farmers in enriching their fields. This potash fertilizer has advanced in price from $40 a ton in 1913 to $450 a ton. The Government's experimental plant, now in course of construction, is in Summerland, Santa Barbara County, Cal. Congress has appropriated $175,000 for the work. This figure includes the cost of a curious craft, already built, which might be described as a huge seagoing mowing machine. It is equipped at the bow end with great reciprocating knives that work on the principle of the blades of the mowing machine and cut the kelp plants from three to six feet below the surface of the water. The boat in use will contain 100 tons of wet kelp, thus harvested and recut, and she can make two trips a day. The weed is found growing in water to a depth of one hundred feet. The 200 tons of the wet seaweed will make 20 tons when dry, and will yield five tons of potash. If the experiment shall prove successful this summer, then many boats will enter the sea with their mowing machines. Farmers on the Atlantic coast are advised to scatter crude seaweed over their land to enrich it. The richness of the ground has much to do with the yield of the harvest. It was the good ground in the parable that rewarded the sower: "But other fell into good ground and brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold." (Matt. 13 : 8.)

Chinese Lanterns for Dead

A TRAVELER writing in a current magazine tells of beautiful lanterns hung on poles on the banks of a river, by relatives, that the spirits of the persons drowned in the stream may have light and cheer on their journey in the other world. The blessed missionaries are carrying to the celestials Christ, "Who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (II Tim. 1 : 10.)

President Pardons 5,000

ABOUT 5,000 persons at liberty under suspended sentences imposed by Federal courts have received "full amnesty" and pardon from President Wilson, in a proclamation carrying out the recently announced policy of extending clemency in such cases. Without such clemency the persons affected would have been compelled to return to custody. The United States Supreme Court last December held that no Federal judges have authority to suspend sentence. Referring to this mandate annulling the practice of suspending sentences, the President says in his proclamation: "The practice was widespread, and many thousands of persons are now at liberty under such suspensions, never having served any portion of the sentences duly authorized and required by the statutes. Many of these persons are leading blameless lives and have reestablished themselves in the confidence of their fellow-citizens, and it is believed that the enforcement of the law at this late date would, in most instances, be productive of no good." By nature, man is a sinner under sentence of death. Christ died for us that we might receive pardon, which is here promised: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him and to our God who will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55 : 7.)

TO THE OFFICERS AND PRIVATE SOLDIERS OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY
DECEMBER 19 1777 JUNE 19 1778

Valley Forge Memorial Presented

IN the presence of perhaps the most distinguished gathering there since the days of Washington himself, the Washington Memorial Arch at Valley Forge, erected by the Federal government at a cost of $100,000 to commemorate the valor of the nation's first war leader, his officers and soldiers, was on June 19 formally transferred to the state of Pennsylvania. Speaker Champ Clark presented the arch, and Governor Brumbaugh received it with appropriate words. The inscription on the arch of bronze—which overlooks the country for miles about—is taken from the words of Washington, viz: "Naked, and starving as they are, we cannot but admire the incomparable patience and fidelity of the soldiery." Both speakers referred to the willingness of the people of today to endure like sacrifices, to secure success in the present conflict. Speaker Clark, among other things, said: "When our forefathers proclaimed their republic there was only one other—Switzerland—and the fathers were not certain that this one would survive until Christmas. It was an even break whether it would or not. Now, thanks to Almighty God, there are twenty-six republics in the world, and in a very large sense we made them, every one. This republic is the first really great republic that ever existed on the face of the earth. Since Washington on Yorktown's blood-stained heights made good Jefferson's declaration, thrones have been crumbling and dynasties have been fleeing for their lives. How amazingly the country has grown, from the weakest among the nations into the richest and most powerful. The free institutions that have enabled us to grow into what we are we owe to Washington and the patriots of '76, and the spirit that animated them animates their descendants today wherever Old Glory floats." This arch will speak perpetually these words with reference to Washington, and the brave men with him at Valley Forge: "For he loveth our nation." (Luke 7 : 5.)

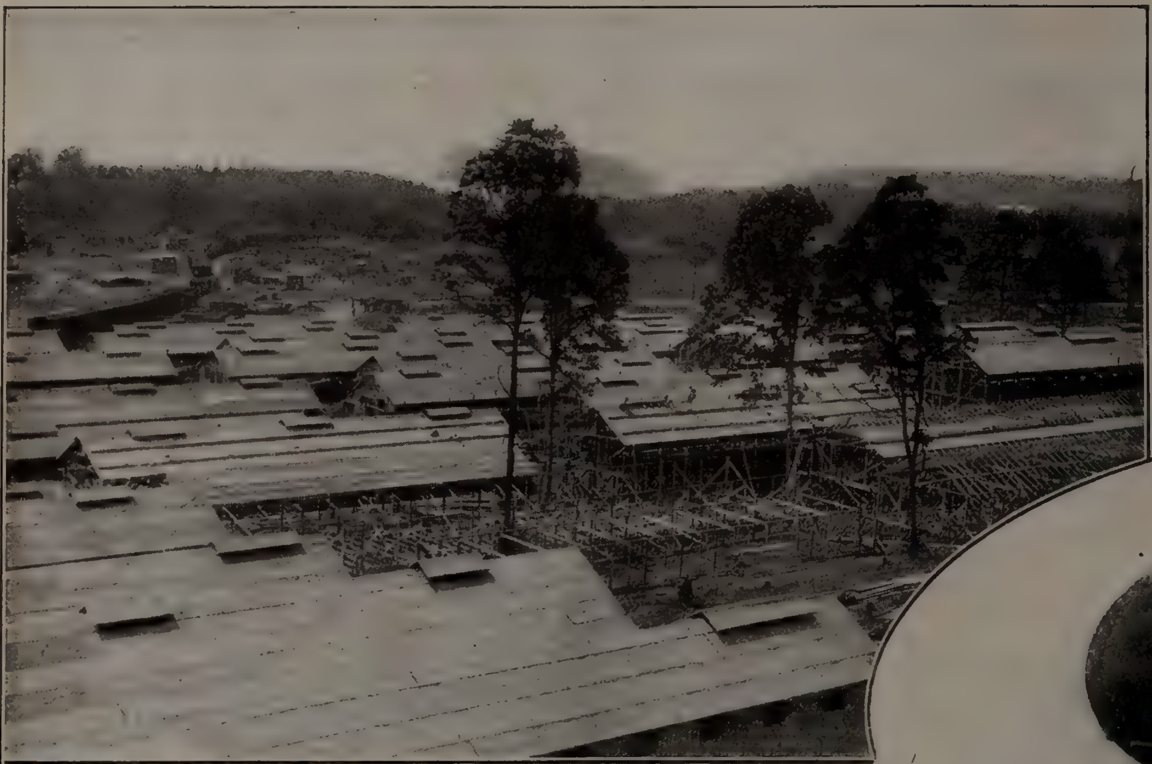
Ruth Law's Miraculous Escape

RUTH LAW had a narrow escape from death, the evening of June 14, when the gasoline tank exploded and enveloped her aeroplane in flames 2,000 feet in air above Lexington, Ill., while she was en route from St. Louis to Chicago. She saved her life by consummate coolness and quickness of wit. Without a moment's hesitation, she pointed the nose of her machine straight down and descended with such velocity that the wind blew out the blaze, making a safe landing on the outskirts of Lexington. She was uninjured save for burns about her face. What a mastery of the air the aviator has, though the perils are still great, requiring the coolest head and the strongest nerve. The destructive gravity of sin can be overcome by man's spiritual nature only when aided by divine help, according to these words: "They that wait upon the Lord . . . shall mount up with wings as eagles." (Isa. 40 : 31.)

The Ruth Cruger Tragedy

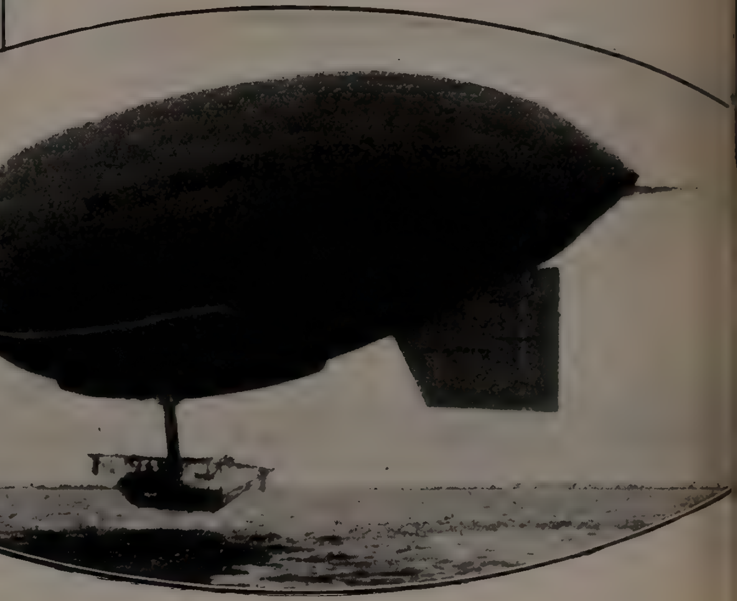
PRETTY Ruth Cruger, a high-school girl of seventeen, went out from her home from the uptown West Side, New York, on February 13 last, and did not return. An alarm was sent out to the city and nation and there was well-nigh universal interest in the mystery. Her father made every possible search and offered a reward of $1,000 for her body, living or dead. Not a word was heard from her. Her parents believed that she had been kidnaped and murdered; the police authorities held to the theory that she was only one of the thousands of young girls that go astray, and had drifted out into the underworld, ashamed to return home or to reveal her identity. On June 16, the mystery was revealed by the finding of the dead girl's body stuffed into a tunnel in the cellar of the motor-cycle shop on West 127th Street, New York, which had been occupied by Alfredo Cocchi. A woman lawyer, Mrs. Grace Humiston, with great keenness and vigor, tracked the body of the school-girl. She did more, she ran into the mystery of why the body was not found at once, and why the murderer was allowed to escape. She did not have the help of the Police Department, but rather its hindrance, and her investigations revealed the fact that the policemen and detectives, whose business it was to have found the body of the girl and apprehended her slayer, had not only blundered in their imbecility, but had been grossly negligent in their investigation, and in the face of strong presumption of his guilt, had permitted the murderer to escape. On the strength of these revelations, the father of the dead girl, in a long, caustic letter, demanded the removal of Police Commissioner Woods, with which demand Mayor Mitchel refused to comply. But a number of the motor-squad police and detectives were suspended, and an inquiry into the case is now being conducted by Commissioner Wallstein, under Mayor Mitchel's order. Mrs. Humiston's feminine but powerful fingers pointed to Alfredo Cocchi who, four days after the murder, was permitted by the police to make his escape back to Bologna, Italy. He was arrested there, confessed his crime, and said that he killed the girl in a jealous rage because she did not respond to his offers of love. The next day he undertook to dash his brains out against the stone wall of his cell, but was restrained by the guard. A committee of eleven is asking the Governor to appoint a committee on vice investigation, and the police of New York and the national detectives are now said to be busy on the Cruger case. Mrs. Humiston says she is certain there are many cases in New York similar to that of poor Ruth Cruger, and she has taken the $1,000 reward money, which she would not receive but sent back to Mr. Cruger, as a gift from him and her to start a fund as a Ruth Cruger memorial foundation for the clearing out of the infamous white slave traffic, and the salvation of girls, many of whom are mere children, from ruin. Let the probe be deep. Let the lightning of an outraged law strike any one who may be in any way responsible for this horrid tragedy or for its concealment. The solution of this mystery calls to mind these words: "Be sure your sin will find you out." (Num. 32 : 23.)

Persons and Events of the Moment



© Harris & Ewing

At the left. One of Uncle Sam's military cantonments, where the war army will be trained, under construction at Quantico, Va.

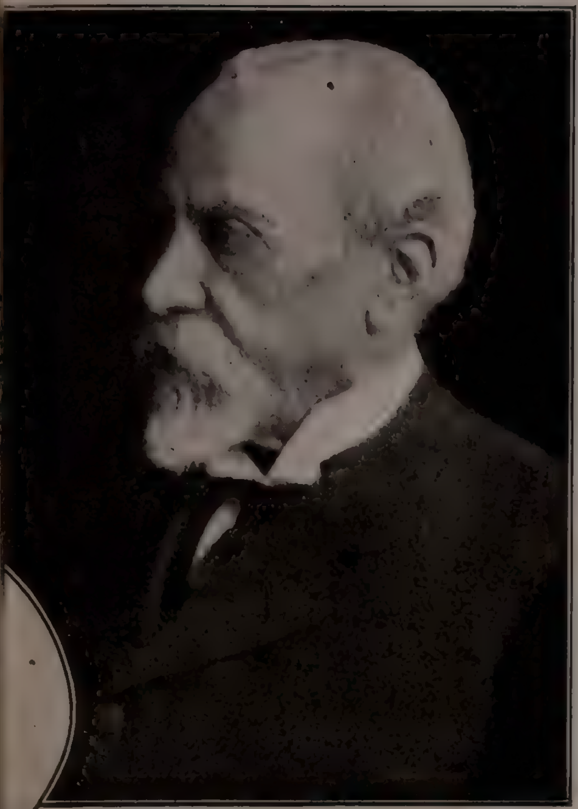


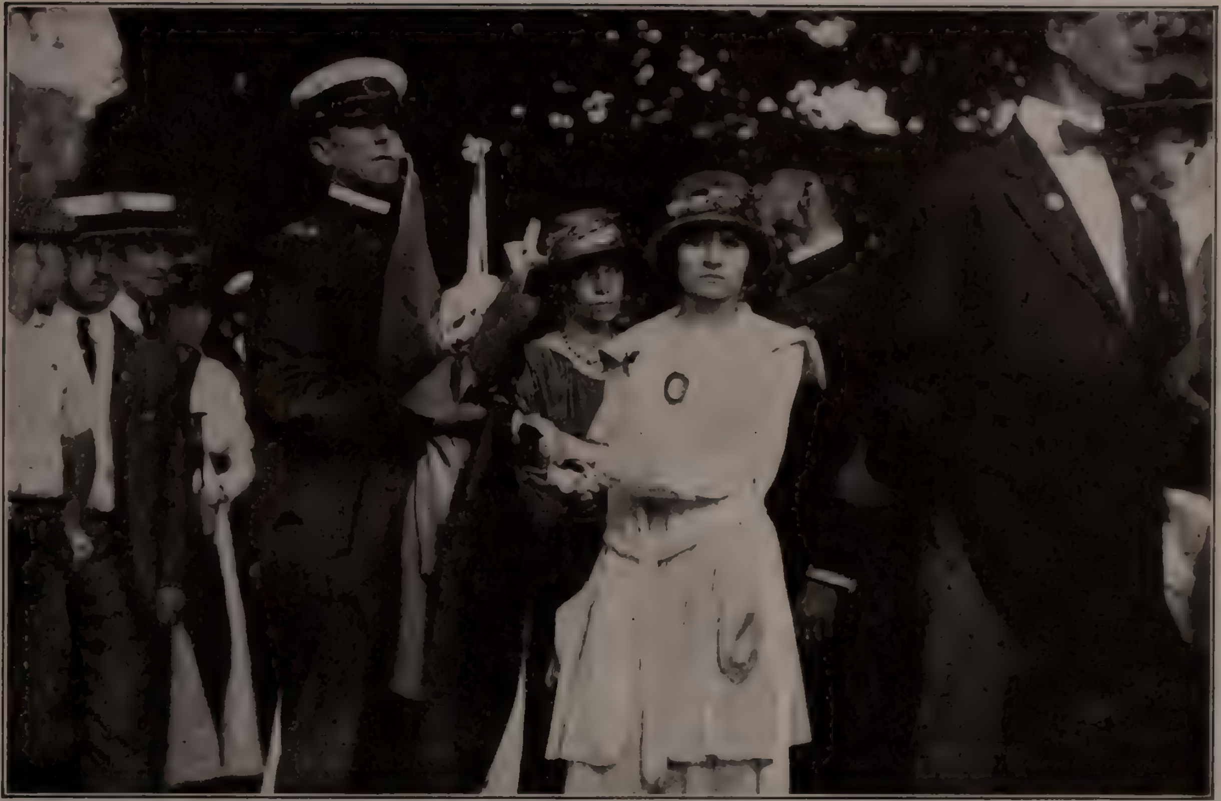
In the oval above. One of the new dirigible balloons, being constructed for the United States Navy, photographed on her trial flight which was reported as more than satisfactory

© Underwood & Underwood

Above. Prince Udine (in uniform,) head of the Italian War Commission to the United States, shaking hands with the chairman of the reception committee at Rosebank, Staten Island. The Commission went to Rosebank to pay their respects to Garibaldi at the recently completed memorial to that patriot, built over the house he occupied while in this country, an exile from Italy. Garibaldi occupied the house at Rosebank for two years during which he worked constantly for the independence of his native land

At the right. Standard bearers of the American Medical Unit carrying "Old Glory" through the streets of London. The Stars and Stripes were officially placed with those of the others of England's allies, in the historic Cathedral of St. Paul's





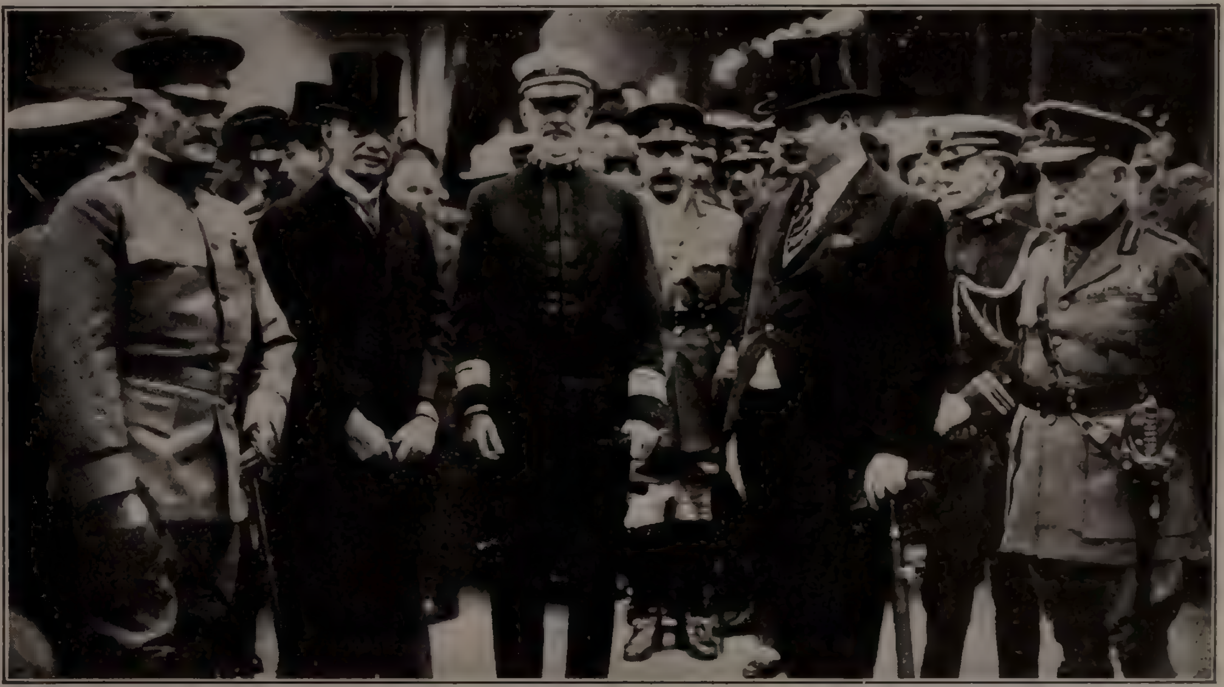
Above. Colonel Gustave Ador, President of the International Red Cross, under whose direction 1,200 voluntary workers are conducting the agency of the Prisoners of War. The agency forwards mail and comforts to prisoners, answers questions as to their whereabouts and keeps on file the prisoners' lists of all the combatant countries

Above at the right. Suffragettes being arrested in Washington for displaying banners and picketing the White House contrary to police orders

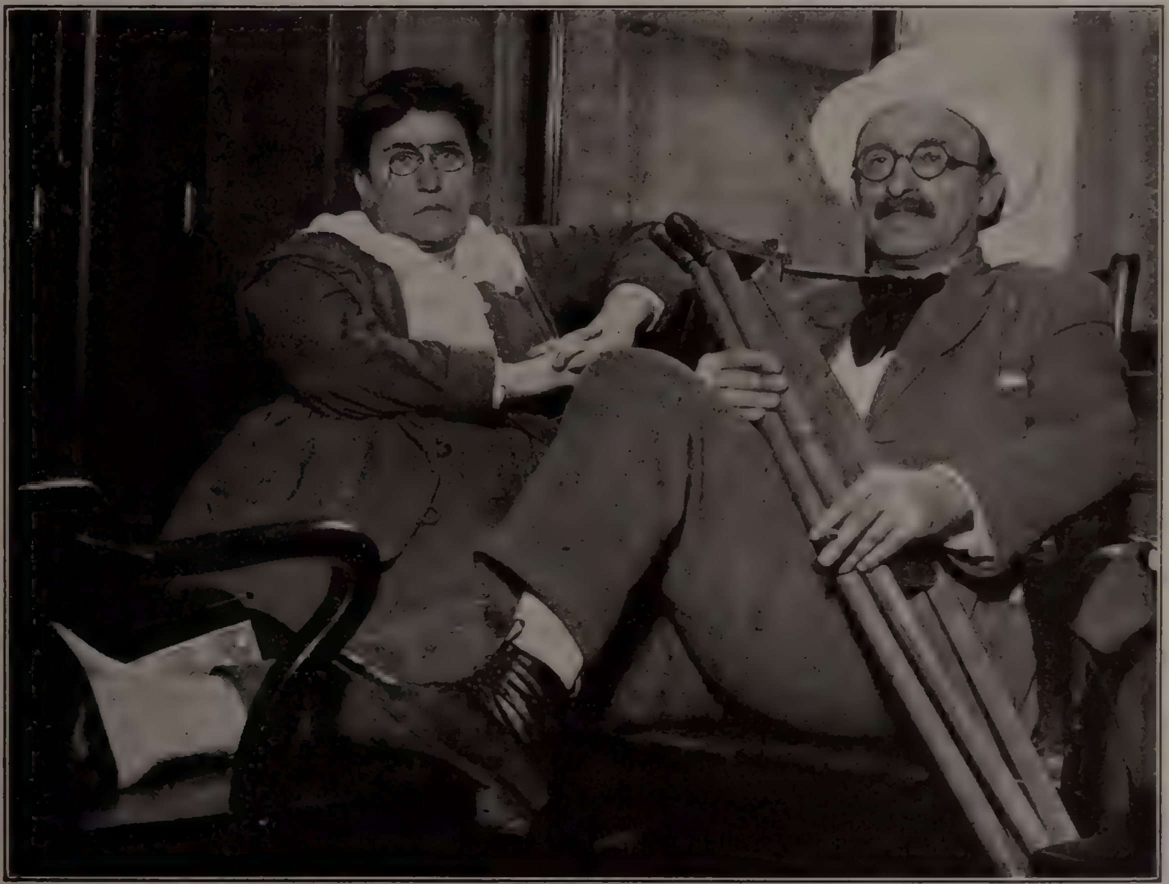
At the right. General Pershing received in England. Left to right: General Pershing, American Ambassador Page, Vice-Admiral Sims, U. S. N., Lord Derby, Field Marshal French

Below at the right. Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, Anarchist Leaders, arrested for opposing the conscription law. They were placed on trial June 27

In the oval below. Mrs. Grace Humiston, the woman lawyer whose persistence solved the mystery of Ruth Cruger



© Paul Thompson



© International Film Service, Inc.

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XV

A WOMAN'S WILL

DR. GLEASON'S Arctic trip, designed to cover a year of research and discovery, prolonged itself into three years and two months. Shipwrecks, thrilling escapes, months of silence, and a period when hope for the safety of the party was quite gone, all figured in the story before the heroic rescue brought a happier ending to what had come so near to being another tragedy of the ice-bound North.

It was June when Frank Gleason, in the care of a nurse and a physician, arrived at his sister's summer cottage by the sea.

For a month after his coming Frank Gleason was too ill to ask many questions. But with returning strength came an insistence upon an answer to a query he had already several times put to his sister.

"Edith, what of the Denbys? Where is Helen? Why do you always evade any questions about her?"

"She is here with me."

"Here—still?"

"Yes. And she's a great comfort and help to me."

"And Burke doesn't know yet where she is?"

"Not that we know of."

"Impossible—all this time!"

"Oh, I don't know. All our friends know her as 'Mrs. Darling.' The Denbys never come here, and they'd never think of looking here for her, anyway. We figured that out long ago."

"But it can't go on forever! When is she going back?"

An odd look crossed Mrs. Thayer's face.

"I don't know, Frank; but not for some time—if ever—I should judge, from present indications."

"'If ever'! Good Heavens, Edith, what do you mean?" demanded the doctor, pulling himself up in his chair. "I knew no good would come of this tom-foolishness! What's the trouble? Hasn't that—er—fool improvement business worked out? Well, I didn't think it would!"

EDITH THAYER laughed softly. "On the contrary, it's working beautifully. Wait till you see her. She's a dear—a very charming woman. She's developed wonderfully. But along with it all has come to her a very deep and genuine, and rather curious, humility, together with a pride, the chief aim of which is to avoid anything like the position in which she found herself as the mortifying, distress-causing wife of Burke Denby."

"Humph!" commented the doctor.

"That Burke doesn't love her, she is thoroughly convinced. To go to him now, tacitly asking to be taken back, she feels to be impossible. She has no notion of going where she isn't wanted; and she feels very sure she isn't wanted by either Burke or his father. Of course the longer it runs, and the longer she stays away, the harder it seems for her to make herself known."

"Oh, but this can't go on forever," protested Frank Gleason again, restlessly. "I'll see Burke. As soon as I'm on my feet again I shall run up there."

"But you've given your promise not to tell, remember."

"Yes, yes, I know. I shan't tell, of course. But I can bring back something, I'm sure, that will—will cause this stubborn young woman to change her mind."

"I doubt it. Helen says she's not ready to go back yet, anyway. Then, too, she has other plans all made."

"Oh, she has!"

"Yes. She's going abroad. Do you remember Angie Reynolds?—Angie Ried, you know—married Ned Reynolds."

"Yes. Nice girl!"

"Well, they're going abroad for some years—some business for the firm, I believe. Anyway, Ned will have to be months at a time in different cities, and Angie and little Gladys are going with him. They have asked Helen and Betty to go, too; and Helen has agreed to go."

"And leave you?"

AT the indignant expression on her brother's face, Edith Thayer laughed merrily.

"But, my dear Frank, I thought you were just threatening to get Helen to leave me!" she challenged.

"So I was," retorted the doctor, nothing daunted. "But it was to get her to go home, where she belonged; not on any wild-goose chase like this abroad business. What does she want?—to be presented at court? Maybe she thinks that's going to do the job!"

"Oh, come, come, Frank, now you're sarcastic!" Mrs. Thayer's voice was earnest, though her eyes were twinkling. "It isn't a wild-goose chase a bit. It's a very sensible plan. In the first place, it takes Helen out of the country—which is wise, if she's still going to try to keep her whereabouts a secret from Burke; for eventually some one, somewhere, would see her—some one who knew her face. She can't always live so secluded a life as she has these past three years, of course,—we have spent the greater share of that time at the beach here, coming early and staying late.

"But that isn't all. Angie has taken a great fancy to both Helen and Dorothy Elizabeth, and she likes to have Gladys with them. The children are the same age—about five, you know—and great cronies. Angie is taking Helen as a sort of companion-governess. Her duties will be light and congenial. Both the children will be in her charge, and their treatment and advantages will be identical. There will be a nursery governess under her, and she herself will be much with Angie, which will be invaluable to her in many ways. And, by the way, Frank, the fact that a woman like Angie Reynolds is taking her for a traveling companion shows, more conclusively than anything else could, how greatly improved Helen is—what a really charming woman she has come to be. But it is a splendid chance for her, certainly, and especially for Betty—her whole life centers now in Betty—and I urged her taking it."

"When does she go?"

"The last of next month."

"Oh, that's all right, then. I shall see Burke long before that." The doctor settled back in his chair with a relieved sigh.

HIS sister eyed him with a disturbed frown.

"Frank, dear, you can't do anything," she ventured at last. "Didn't I tell you she wasn't ready to go back?"

"But she'll have to go—some time."

"Perhaps. But wait. I'm not going to say another word now, nor let you. Wait till you see her."

It was four days later that Frank Gleason for the first time ventured down-stairs and out into the warm sunshine on the south veranda. Hearing a child's gleeful laugh and a woman's gently remonstrative voice,—a voice that he thought he recognized,—he walked the length of the veranda and rounded the corner.

His slippered feet made no sound, so quite unheralded he came upon the woman and the little girl on the wide veranda steps. Neither one saw him, and he stopped short at the corner, his eyes alight with sudden admiration.

FRANK GLEASON thought he had never seen a more lovely little girl. Blue-eyed, golden-haired, and rosy-cheeked, she was the typical child beautiful of picture and romance. A-tiptoe on the topmost step she was reaching one dimpled hand for a gorgeous red geranium blooming in a pot decorating the balustrade. In the other hand, tightly clutched, was another gorgeous blossom, sadly crushed and broken. She was laughing gleefully. Near her, but not attempting to touch her, was a woman the doctor recognized at once. It was Helen—but Helen with a subtle difference of face, eyes, hair, dress, and manner that was at once illuminating but baffling.

"Betty, dear," she was saying gently, "no, no! Mother said not to pick the flowers."

The child turned roguish, wilful eyes.

"But I wants to pick 'em."

"Mother can't let you, dear. And see, they are so much prettier growing!"

The small red lips pouted. The little curly head gave a vigorous shake.

"But I wants 'em to grow in my hands—so," insisted a threateningly tearful voice, as the tightly clutched flower was thrust forward for inspection.

"But they won't grow there, darling. See!—this one is all crumpled and broken now. It can't even lift its poor little head. Come, we don't want the rest to be like that, do we? Come! Come away with me."

The young eyes grew mutinous.

"I wants 'em to grow in my hand," insisted the red lips again.

"But mother doesn't." There was a resolute note of decision in the quiet voice now; but suddenly it grew wonderfully soft and vibrant. "And daddy wouldn't, either, dearie. Only think how sorry daddy would be to see that poor little flower in Betty's hand!"

As if in response to a potent something in her mother's voice, Betty's eyes grew roundly serious.

"Why—would daddy—be sorry?"

"Because daddy loves all beautiful things, and he wants them to stay beautiful. And this poor little flower in Betty's hand won't be beautiful much longer, I fear. It is all broken and crushed; and daddy——"

With a sudden sense of guilt, as if trespassing on holy ground, the doctor strode forward noisily.

"So this is Dorothy Elizabeth and her mother—" he began gayly; but he could get no further.

Helen Denby turned with a joyous cry and an eagerly extended hand.

"Oh, Dr. Gleason, I'm so glad! You are better, aren't you? I'm so glad to see you!"

"Yes, I'm better. I'm well—only I can't seem to make people believe it. And you—I don't need to ask how you are. And so this big girl is the little Dorothy Elizabeth I used to know. You have your mother's eyes, my dear. Come, won't you shake hands with me?"

THE little girl advanced slowly, her gaze searching the doctor's face. Then, in her sweet, high-pitched treble, came the somewhat disconcerting question:

"Is you—daddy?"

The doctor laughed lightly.

"No, my dear. I'm a poor unfortunate man who hasn't any little girl like you; but we'll hope, one of these days, you'll see—daddy." He turned to Helen Denby with suddenly grave, questioning eyes.

"Betty dear,"—Mrs. Denby refused to meet the doctor's gaze—"go carry the flower to Annie and ask her please to put it in water for you; then run out and play with Bessie in the garden. Mother wants to talk to Dr. Gleason a few minutes." Then to the doctor she turned an agitated face. "Surely, didn't your sister—tell you? I'm going to London with Mrs. Reynolds."

"Yes, she told me. But perhaps I was hoping to persuade you—to do otherwise."

Her eyes grew troubled.

"But it's such a fine chance——"

"For more of this 'improvement' business, I suppose," cut in the doctor, a bit brusquely.

She turned reproachful eyes upon him.

"Oh, please, doctor, don't make fun of me like——"

"As if I'd make fun of you, child!" cut in the doctor, still more sharply.

"Oh, but I can't blame you, of course," she smiled wistfully; "and especially now that I see myself how absurd I was to think, for a minute, that I could make myself over into a—a—the sort of wife that Burke Denby would wish to have."

"Absurd that you could— Come, come! Now what nonsense are you talking?" snapped the doctor.

"But it isn't nonsense," objected Helen Denby earnestly. "Don't you suppose I know now? I used to think it was something you could learn as you would a poem, or that you could put on to you, as you would a new dress. But I know now it's something inside of you that has to grow and grow just as you grow; and I'm afraid all the putting on and learning in the world won't get me there."

"Oh, come, come, Mrs. Denby!" expostulated the doctor in obvious consternation.

"But it's so. Listen," she urged tremulously. "Now I—I just can't like the kind of music Burke does,—discords, and no tune, you know,—though I've tried and tried to. Day after day I've gone into the music-room and put in those records—the classics and the operatic ones that are the real thing, you know—but I can't like them; and I still keep liking tunes and ragtime. And there are the books, too. I can't help liking jingles and stories that tell something; and I don't like poetry—not real poetry like Browning and all the rest of them."

"Browning, indeed! As if that counted, child!"

"Oh, but it's other things—lots of them; vague, elusive things that I can't put my finger on. But I know them now, since I've been here with your sister and her friends. Why, sometimes it isn't anything more than the way a woman speaks, or the way she sits down and gets up, or even the way a bit of lace falls over her hand. But they all help. And they've helped me, too—oh, so much. I'm so glad now of this chance to thank you. You don't know—you can't know, what it's been for me—to be here."

"But I thought you just said that you—you couldn't—that is, that you'd—er—given up," floundered the doctor miserably, as if groping for some sort of support on a topsy-turvy world.

"Given up? Perhaps I have—in a way—for myself. You see, I know now that you have to begin young. That's why I'm so happy about Betty. I don't mind about myself any more, if only I can make it all right for her. Dr. Gleason, I couldn't—I just couldn't have her father ashamed of—Betty!"

"Ashamed of that child! Well, I should say not," blustered the doctor incoherently; "nor of you either, you brave little woman. Why——"

"Betty is a dear, isn't she?" interrupted the mother eagerly. "You do think she'll—she'll be everything he could wish? I'm keeping him always before her—what he likes, how he'd want her to do, you know. And almost always I can make her mind now, with daddy's name, and——"

THE doctor interrupted with a gesture of impatience.

"My dear lady, can't you see that now—right now is just the time for you to go back to your husband?"

The eager, pleading, wistful-eyed little mother opposite became suddenly the dignified, stern-eyed woman.

"Has he said he wanted me, Dr. Gleason?"

"Why—er—y-yes; well, that is, he—I know he has wanted to know where you were."

"Very likely; but that isn't wanting me. Dr. Gleason, don't you think I have any pride, any self-respect, even? My husband was ashamed of me. He asked me to go away for a time. He wrote me with his own hand that he wanted a vacation from me. Do you think now, without a sign or a word from him, that I am going creeping back to him and ask him to take me back?"

"But he doesn't know where you are, to give you a sign," argued the doctor.

"You've seen him, haven't you?"

"Why, y-yes—but not lately. But—I'm going to."

A startled look came into her eyes. The next minute she smiled sadly.

"Are you? Very well; we'll see—if he says anything. You won't tell him where I am, I know. I have your promise. But, Dr. Gleason"—her voice grew very sweet and serious—"I shall not be satisfied now with anything short of a happy married life. I know now what marriage is, where there is love, and trust in each other, and where they like to do and talk about the same things. I've seen your sister and her husband. Unless I can know that I'm going to bring that kind of happiness to Burke, I shall not consent to go back to him. I will give him his daughter. Some time when she is old enough, I want him to see her. When I know that he is proud of my Betty, I may not—mind the rest so much, perhaps. But now—now—" With a choking little cry she turned and fled down the steps and out on to the garden path.

"CHRISTUS"

WHO of us but that, many times has wished when reading the beautiful Gospel story that he might have been in Palestine in the days of the Master? Vivid as are the descriptions of the inspired writers, there is still a lingering wish to see the scenes described. When the world was normal and the god of war in leash, thousands impelled by this desire, made the pilgrimage to Oberammergau to see the Passion Play. It has remained, however, for the motion picture to paint the New Testament story in living pictures for the people of today. Taking as a dramatic basis the poem "Christus" by the Italian poet Fausto Salvatori, Cines of Rome produced in Egypt and the Holy Land a picture which has been shown at the Criterion Theatre in New York.

During more than two years a company of Italian players was occupied in the making of the picture. Scenes laid in Bethlehem were filmed in Bethlehem; incidents that happened at Nazareth were re-enacted among the hills of Galilee; and the Triumphal Entry was performed for the picture along the same road which saw the popular acclaim of the Messiah, so soon to be crucified. A number of scenes in the life of Christ were given a setting like paintings by famous artists. The Annunciation was after Beato Angelico; The Nativity, after Correggio; The Baptism, after Perugino; The Last Supper, after Leonardo; The Pieta, after Michelangelo; The Descent from the Cross, after Rembrandt; Mater Dolorosa, after Donatello.

The birth of Jesus was shown in the picture as taking place in a thatched stable, which became radiant with a divine light at the advent of the Heir of heaven. The three Wise Men were shown meeting, each with a considerable retinue, in the desert, and then the long caravan moved briskly away across the desert sands toward the little town in Judea where a king was to be born.

Three times during the showing of the picture, the audience strained forward breathlessly; first when the soldiers of Herod were robbing the mothers of Bethlehem of their children. Mother after mother appeared in the center of the screen, frightened, running from corner to corner, hiding in the half protection of a doorway with her precious bundle in her arms, only to have it dragged from her by the ruthless hand of a soldier of the jealous king. One mother saved her child, and the audience breathed a bit easier as she sank exhausted to the pavement, while the soldiers disappeared around a far corner of the street.

Again after the torture in the guard-room, Christ appeared stumbling along the steep ascent to Calvary, and finally falling under his cross. As he fell an involuntary groan rose from the tense lips of the audience. Then, when the summit of Calvary was reached and the cross was elevated and sank with a lunge into the socket in the rock prepared for it, it almost seemed as if the pressure of emotion was too great, as if you could not stay longer or bear more.

This picture is a remarkable portrayal of a subject rendered exceedingly difficult by the reverent faith of millions. It is magnificently done. It is calculated to strengthen the faith of believers and to end the questionings of doubters. We do not know what plans may have been made for showing it in other parts of the country, but we hope that it will go at least to the larger centers of population, and that many of the readers of the Christian Herald will have an opportunity to see it.

BAFFLED, irritated, yet frowningly admiring, the doctor stalked into the house.

In the hall he came face to face with his sister. She fluttered into instant anxiety.

"Why, Frank—outdoors? Who said you could do that?"

"I did. Oh, the doctor said so, too," he flung out hurriedly, answering the dawning disapproval in her eyes. "I'm going to Dalton next week."

"But, Frank, dear, you can't do anything. You know you promised."

"Oh, I shan't break any promises, of course. But I'm going to see Burke. I'm going to find out if he really is ninny enough to keep on holding off, at the end of a silly quarrel, the sweetest little wife a man ever had, and——"

"I opine you've seen Helen," smiled Edith Thayer, with a sudden twinkle.

"I have, and—doesn't like Browning, indeed! And can't help liking tunes! Oh, good Heavens, Edith, if Burke Denby doesn't— Well, we'll see next week," he glowered, striding away, followed by the anxious but still twinkling eyes of his sister.

In accordance with his threat, and in spite of protests, the doctor went to Dalton the next week. But almost by return train he was back again, stern-lipped and somber-eyed.

"Why, Frank, so soon as this?" cried his sister. "Surely Burke Denby didn't——"

"I didn't see him."

"His father, then?"

"Neither one. They're gone. South America. Bridge contract. Went themselves this time."

"Oh, that explains it—why we haven't heard from them since you came back. I had thought it strange, Frank, that not a word of congratulation or even inquiry had come from them."

"Yes, I know. I—I'd thought it strange myself—a little. But that doesn't help this thing any. I can't very well go to South America to see Burke, just now—though I'd like to."

"Of course not. Besides, don't forget that you very likely wouldn't accomplish anything if you did see him."

So deep was the sudden gloom on the doctor's face at her words that the lady added quickly: "You did find out something in Dalton, Frank! I know you did by your face. You saw some one."

"Oh, I saw—Brett."

"Who's he?"

"Denby's general manager and chief factotum."

"Well, he ought to know—something."

"He does—everything. But he won't tell—anything."

"What did he say?"

"He said that they had gone to South America on a big bridge contract, and that they wouldn't be home for four or five months yet. He said that they were very well, and that probably, when they came back from this trip, they would go to South Africa for another six months. I couldn't get anywhere near asking about Helen and Burke's present state of mind concerning her. He could scent a question of that sort forty words away; and he invariably veered off at a tangent long before I got to it. It was like starting for New York and landing in Montreal! I had to give it up. So far as anything I could learn to the contrary, Mr. Burke Denby and his father are well, happy, and perfectly content to build bridges the rest of their natural existence. And there you are! How, pray, in the face of that, are we going to keep Helen from running off to London?"

"I shouldn't try."

"But—oh, hang it all, Edith! This can't go on."

"Oh, yes, it can, my dear; and I'm inclined to think it's going on just right. Very plainly they aren't ready for each other—yet. Let her go to London and make the best of all these advantages for herself and Betty; and let him go on with his bridge-building. 'Twill do them good—both of them—and will be all the better for them when they do come together."

"Oh, then they are to come together some time!"

"Why, Frank, of course they are! You couldn't keep them apart," declared the lady, with smiling confidence.

"But, Edith, you haven't ever talked like this—before," puzzled the doctor, frowning.

"I've never known before that Burke was building bridges for Hottentots."

"Nonsense! That's their business. They've always built bridges."

"Yes, but Master Burke and his father haven't always gone to superintend their construction," she flashed. "In other words, if Burke Denby is trying so strenuously to get away from himself, it's a pretty sure sign that there's something in himself that he wants to get away from! You see?"

"Well, I should like to see," sighed the doctor, with very evident doubt.

CHAPTER XVI

EMERGENCIES

IN September Helen Denby and Dorothy Elizabeth went to London. With their going, a measure of peace came to Frank Gleason. Not having their constant presence to remind him of his friend's domestic complications, he could the more easily adopt his sister's complacent attitude of cheery confidence that it would all come out right in time—that it must come out right.

Soon after Helen's departure for London, a letter from Burke Denby in far-away South America told of the Denby's rejoicing at the happy outcome of the Arctic trip, and expressed the hope that the doctor was well, and that they might meet him as soon as possible after their return from South America in December.

The letter was friendly and cordial, but not long. It told little of their work, and nothing of themselves. And, in spite of its verbal cordiality, the doctor felt, at its conclusion, that he had, as it were, been attending a formal reception when he had hoped for a cozy chat by the fire.

IN December, at Burke's bidding, he ran up to Dalton for a brief visit, but it proved to be as stiff and unsatisfying as the letter had been. Burke never mentioned his wife; but he wore so unmistakable an "Of-course-I-understand-you-are-angry-with-me" air, that the doctor (much to his subsequent vexation when he realized it) went out of his way to be heartily cordial, as if in refutation of the disapproval idea which was not the impression the doctor really wished to convey at all. He was, in fact, very angry with Burke. He wanted nothing so much as to give him a piece of his mind. Yet, so potent was Burke's dignified aloofness that he found himself chattering of Inca antiquities and Babylonian tablets instead of delivering his planned dissertation on the futility of quarrels in general and of Burke's and Helen's in particular.

With John Denby he had little better success, so far as results were concerned; though he did succeed in asking a few questions.

"You have never heard from—Mrs. Denby?" he began abruptly, the minute he found himself alone with Burke's father.

"Never."

"But you—you would like to!"

The old man's face became mask-like—a phenomenon with which John Denby's business associates were very familiar but which Dr. Frank Gleason had never happened to witness before.

"If you will pardon me, doctor," began John Denby in a colorless voice, "I would rather not discuss the lady. There isn't anything new that I can say, and I am beginning to feel as does my son—that I would rather not hear her name mentioned."

THIS ended it, of course. There was nothing for it, therefore, but to drop the subject. And he dropped it. He went home the next day. Resolutely then he busied himself with his own affairs. Determinedly he set himself to forget the affairs of the Denbys.

In London Helen Denby was living in a new world. Quick to realize the advantages that were now hers, she determined to make the most of them—especially for Betty. Always everything now centered around Betty.

In Mrs. Reynolds Helen had found a warm friend and sympathetic ally, one who, she knew, would keep quite to herself the story Helen had told her. Even Mr. Reynolds was not let into the inner secret of Helen's presence with them. To him she was a companion governess, a friend of the Thayers', to whom his wife had taken a great fancy—a most charming little woman, indeed, whom he himself liked very much.

Freed from the fear of meeting Burke Denby or any of his friends, Helen, for the first time since her flight from Dalton, felt that she was really safe, and that she could, with an undivided mind, devote her entire attention to her self-imposed task. From London to Berlin, from Berlin to Genoa, she went happily.

To Helen it made little difference where she was, so long as she could force every picture, statue, mountain, concert, book, or individual to pay toll to her insatiable hunger "to know"—that she might tell Betty.

MRS. REYNOLDS, almost as eager and interested as Helen herself, conducted their daily lives with an eye always alert as to what would be best for Helen and Betty. Teachers for Gladys and Betty—were teachers for Helen, too; and carefully Mrs. Reynolds made it a point that her own social friends should also be Helen's—which Helen accepted with unruffled cheerfulness. Helen, indeed, had now almost reached the goal long ago set for her by Mrs. Thayer: it was very nearly a matter of supreme indifference to her whether she met people or not, so far as the idea of meeting them was concerned. There came a day, however, when, for a moment, Helen almost yielded to her old run-and-hide temptation.

They were back in London, and it was near the close of Helen's third year abroad.

"I met Mr. Donald Estey this morning," said Mrs. Reynolds at the luncheon table that noon. "I asked him to dine with us to-morrow night."

"So? Good! I shall be glad to see Estey," commented her husband.

Once Helen would have given a cry, dropped her fork with a clatter, or otherwise made her startled perturbation conspicuous to all. That only an almost imperceptible movement and a slight change of color resulted now showed something of what Helen Denby had learned during the last few years.

"You say Mr. Donald Estey will be —here, to-morrow?" she asked quietly.

"Yes. You remember him," nodded Mrs. Reynolds. "He was at the Thayers' at the same time I was there six years ago—tall, good-looking fellow with glasses."

"Yes, I remember," smiled Helen.

WHAT Helen Denby wanted to do was to run away—far away, where Mr. Donald Estey could never find her. Next best would be to tell Mrs. Reynolds that she could not see him; but to do that, she would have to tell why—and she did not want to tell even Mrs. Reynolds the story of that awful hour at the Thayers' North Shore cottage. True, she might feign illness and plead a headache; but Mrs. Reynolds had said that Mr. Estey was to be in London all winter—and she could not very well have a headache all winter! There was plainly no way but to meet this thing fairly and squarely. Besides, had not Mrs. Thayer said that emergencies were the greatest test of manners? Was she to fail now at this, her first real test?

Mr. Donald Estey was already in the drawing-room when Helen Denby came down to dinner the following evening. She had put on a simple white dress—after a horrified rejection of a blue one, her first choice. She was pale, but she looked charmingly pretty as she entered the room.

"You remember Mr. Estey," Mrs. Reynolds murmured. The next moment Helen found her hand in a warm clasp, and a pair of laughing gray eyes looking straight into hers.

"Oh, yes, I remember him very well," she contrived to say cheerfully.

"And I remember Mrs. Darling very well," came to her ears in Mr. Donald Estey's smoothly non-committal voice. Then she forced herself to walk calmly across the room and to sit down leisurely.

What anybody said next she did not hear. Somewhere within her a voice was exulting: "I've done it, I've done it, and I didn't make a break!"

IT was a small table, and conversation at dinner was general. At first Helen said little, before the dinner was over she was apparently quite her usual self.

As to Mr. Donald Estey—Mr. Donald Estey was piqued and surprised, but mightily interested. Half his anticipated pleasure in this dinner had been the fact that he was to see Mrs. Darling again. She would blush and stammer, and be adorably embarrassed, of course. He had not forgotten how distractingly pretty she was when she blushed. He would like to see her blush again.

But here she was—and she had not blushed at all. What had happened? A cool little woman in a cool little gown had put a cool little hand in his, with a cool "Oh, yes, I remember him very well." And that was all. Yet she was the same Mrs. Darling that he had met six years before, and that had— But was she the same, really the same? That Mrs. Darling could never have carried off a meeting like this with such sweet serenity. He wondered——

Mr. Donald Estey was still trying to pigeonhole the women he met.

Mr. Donald Estey found frequent opportunity for studying his new-old friend during the days that followed, for they were much together. In Mrs. Reynolds's eyes he made a very convenient fourth for a day's sight-seeing trip or a concert.

IN one way and another, therefore, he was thrown often with this somewhat baffling young woman, who refused to be catalogued. He was trying to forget that scene six years before. He did not believe that everything was quite straight about that extraordinary occasion. There must have been, in some way, a mistake. He did not believe, anyway, that it signified.

Mr. Donald Estey was not the only one that was trying to forget that occasion. Helen herself was putting it behind her whenever the thought of it entered her head. He understood that she loved some one else. They might be as friendly as they pleased. There could never—thank Heaven!—be any misunderstanding.

Confidently serene, therefore, Helen Denby enjoyed to the full the stimulus of Mr. Donald Estey's companionship. Then, abruptly, her house of cards tumbled about her ears.

"Mrs. Darling, will you marry me?" the man asked one day. He spoke lightly, so lightly that she could not believe him serious. Yet she gave him a startled glance before she answered.

"Mr. Estey, please don't jest!"

"I'm not jesting. I'm in earnest. Will you marry me?"

"Mr. Estey!" She could only gasp her dismay.

"You seem surprised." He was still smiling.

"But you can't—you can't be in earnest, Mr. Estey."

"Why not, pray?"

"Why, you know—you must remember—what I—I told you six years ago." The red suffused her face.

"You mean—that you cared for some one else?" He spoke gravely now. The smile was quite gone from his eyes. "But, Mrs. Darling, it's just there that I can't believe you're in earnest. Besides, that was six years ago."

"But I am in earnest, and it's the same—now," she urged feverishly. "Oh, Mr. Estey, please, please, don't let's spoil our friendship—this way. I thought you understood—I supposed, of course, you understood that I—I loved some one else very much."

"But, Mrs. Darling, you said that six years ago, and—and you're still free now. Naturally no man would be such a fool as to let— So I thought, of course, that you had—had—" He came to a helpless pause.

The color swept her face again.

"But I told you then that I was—was learning—was trying to learn—Oh, why do you make me say it?"

He glanced at her face, then jerked himself to his feet angrily.

"Oh, come, come, Mrs. Darling, you don't expect me to believe that you now, now are still trying to learn to please (as you call it) some mythically impossible man!"

"He's not mythically impossible. He's real."

"Then he's blind, deaf, and dumb, I suppose!" Mr. Donald Estey's voice was still wrathful.

In spite of herself Helen Denby laughed.

"No, no, oh, no! He's—" Suddenly her face grew grave, and very earnest. "Mr. Estey, I can't tell you. You wouldn't understand. If you—you care anything for me, you will not question me any more. I can't tell you. Please, please don't say any more."

But Mr. Donald Estey did say more—a little more. He did not say much, for the piteous pleading in the blue eyes stayed half the words on his lips before they were uttered.

"If you'll permit, I want things to be as they were before," he told her. "I'm still your friend, and I hope you are mine."

"Why, of course, of course," she stammered. "Only, I—you——"

If Mr. Donald Estey was hoping to take by strategy the citadel that had refused to surrender, he gave no sign. As the days came and went, he was clearly and consistently the good friend he had said he would be.

To be continued

Miss Miller and Mrs. Asher—They Love Girls

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

MISS MILLER is a small slender little woman with a great mass of dark hair. Seen off the platform, one is more impressed by her daintiness than anything else. Her frocks are always crisp and fashionable, her shoes shiny and new; but when she mounts the platform, one forgets that Miss Miller is small and dainty and ultra-feminine. One remembers only that she has a message, and is going to deliver it. Her voice, with a throb of human interest in it, can fill the largest room; her smile is big enough and bright enough to lighten the darkness of a great, still church.

Miss Miller has had, I think, charge of one of the most exhausting departments in the Sunday campaign. She carried on the work with the business girls—girls who, they will tell you themselves, have very little time to give to religion.

There is only one time during the day when the average business girl can be reached—luncheon time. Miss Miller was wise enough to realize that. And so while she was in New York she arranged two central meeting places—the Presbyterian Brick Church on Fifth Avenue, and the John Street Church in the downtown district. There, aided by the ladies of the congregations, she arranged to have a noon-day lunch served in the basement, for ten cents (a price well within the purse of any business girl). After the lunch—which consisted of sandwiches, cocoa, cake and a pickle—the girls went up, quietly, to the main part of the church—and were shown to pews.

I attended one of the John Street meetings. That section of New York is one of the busiest where girls, perhaps, have more responsibility and less time than most other girls. After the luncheon, I then went into the church to hear Miss Miller give her talk, which she was scheduled to repeat on three different occasions to audiences of some fourteen hundred young women.

It's hard enough to preach to a stationary congregation. But it's far harder to talk to girls who must be back at some office at a given time. There was always somebody in that large audience either entering or leaving. Yet Miss Miller was able to cast the spell of her message over her hearers, in spite of these interruptions.

MRS. ASHER does the same sort of work that Miss Miller does, perhaps in a rather broader sense. She meets women of all classes—factory girls, shop girls, and girls who work at anything from stenography to cooking. She goes, at noon time, to different office buildings and, always with the permission of the authorities, holds meetings. Oftentimes she is accompanied by a man with a small organ and the girls who, maybe, have little enough chance to sing, join with her heartily in the hymns.

Mrs. Asher conducted a meeting, one noon-time, at the offices of the Christian Herald. Many of the girls were a bit doubtful at first about giving up a luncheon hour to a meeting, but when I met Mrs. Asher, just before she spoke to us, I knew that we wouldn't mind giving up many luncheon hours for the pleasure of listening to her.

Mrs. Asher is a stately woman with fine eyes, wonderful white hair, and a quick sense of humor. When one shakes hands with her, one feels a certain sense of good fellowship, and faith, and helpfulness. Hearing her speak, one enjoys not only her words and the thought back of them, but also the play of expression on her face, and the tact and her sympathy. She is a natural orator and leader. She it is who has often conducted the great tabernacle meetings when they were for women only. She finds time to slip into a dim corner to talk with the one who has wandered a long way from the trail. She can walk through a great mansion, winning souls for Christ and friendship for herself and her associate workers, all the way from some marcelled great lady to the self-effacing second maid who washes the dinner dishes. Young girls and older women come to Miss Miller; Mrs. Asher goes to the ones who may not come.

EVERY Thursday night, during the Sunday campaign there was held at one of the churches or at the Y. W. C. A. Building a council girls' meeting. The attendance was made up of girls and women who, as personal workers, had helped canvass the great office buildings and factories. The meeting was divided into two parts, Miss Miller presiding over one division and Mrs. Asher over the other. I was present at one of the meetings which opened the new Y. W. C. A. Building at 53d Street. There were many types of girls there. I saw brisk business women whom I had met under very different circumstances. Leaning forward breathlessly, I saw girls from wealthy homes rubbing elbows with shabby little girl clerks. I saw elderly women with massive diamond brooches and I saw small cash girls. And they were all equally interested.

As I left, I heard a thin woman with a white face whisper a shrill sentence to a lady clad in rustling silk.

"Ain't th' women in th' Sunday bunch jus'—great!" she whispered.

And the lady of the silk gown whispered back, quite as shrilly:

"The women of the Sunday party are charming!"

A collection was taken up, in various churches, so that the work Miss Miller has started need not be ended with the departure of the Sunday party. The girls, themselves, wanted to continue the meetings—wanted to meet God in the friendly, almost informal way that Miss Miller had taught them. The Council Girls who had worked under the guidance of Mrs. Asher pledged themselves to keep up the good work that they were doing. And so the efforts of these two women will, we hope, grow to be an active and permanent part of the great city.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 740

committee of the Council of National Defense and a member of the Federal Trade Commission which should make a thorough investigation to establish costs and fix a fair price, and which should also help to solve the transportation problem, which is now preventing capacity production at the mines. Soft coal companies, on June 28, fixed a price of $3.00 a ton at the mines for run of mine coal with an additional charge of 25c a ton, plus transportation costs, by wholesalers and commission men. The retail price will be those sums plus the retailer's cost and profit and will probably not be less anywhere than $4.00 a ton. It is estimated that this forced price reduction will save consumers $180,000,000 this year.

TO CONTROL EXPORTS. The plan outlined in the Christian Herald last week for the control of exports was put into effect by executive proclamation on June 24 by an order of the President, creating the Exports Council. It was announced that the regulation would not amount to an embargo, that it was not intended to disturb business, that the flow of goods to neutrals would be checked only as our welfare required, and that the establishment of the Council was a war measure taken to stabilize prices and to reduce the cost of living. The Council at once took control of the export of foods and fuels. Holland is reported as somewhat worried over the possible restriction of American exports.

FREIGHT INCREASE DENIED. The Interstate Commerce Commission on June 29 denied the application of the railroads of the country for a rate increase of 15 per cent, declaring that there was no adequate evidence of necessity for such an increase. The decision, however, authorizes increases of from 8 to 10 per cent. in class rates in Eastern territory, first class advancing from 79 to 90 cents per hundred pounds.

PEACE WITH VICTORY. Premier Lloyd George in an address at Glasgow on June 29 declared that if peace came an hour before the objects for which the Allies entered the war had been achieved it would be a calamity for mankind. He asserted that while German statesman had talked of peace no one of them had promised the restoration of Belgium except as a vassal of Germany. He declared also that no German statesman had accepted either the doctrine of peace on the status quo before the war, nor had the doctrine of "no annexations or indemnities" received official sanction. He said that "peace must be framed on so equitable a basis that the nations would not wish to disturb it." He declared that the Allies would be more ready to talk peace with a free Government of Germany than with one "dominated by the aggressive and arrogant spirit of Prussian militarism," that the Russian revolution had postponed complete victory, but that Russia would return to the conflict, more formidable than ever, that the U-boats could not starve England "if we all do our part" and that the question of Germany's colonies and the future of Turkey must be left to the peace conference.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. A compilation by the National City Bank shows that while in the fifty years before 1914, America's exports to Russia aggregated about $575,000,000, the exports since August 1, 1914, have reached approximately $1,000,000,000. The majority of these exports have, by the very nature of the case, been munitions of war machinery and railway equipment. . . . Secretary of War Baker on June 26 asked for an appropriation of $9,500,000 for the purchase of machinery to make rifles for the army. . . . T. P. O'Connor, M. P., and Richard Hazleton, also a representative of Ireland in Parliament, reached the United States on June 24. The purpose of their visit is said to be to confer with representative Irishmen in the United States regarding the proposed convention which is to draft a constitution for free Ireland. . . . In order to guard against charges of favoritism, the draft will be conducted at Washington. Each man liable to service will be represented by a number, and nobody in Washington will know the identity of the person to whom the number refers. . . . It was announced on June 25 that Li Ching Hsi had accepted the post of premier in the reorganized government of China, that General Kwang Shih Chen had been appointed Secretary of War and Admiral Sah Chen Ping, of the Navy.

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE British submarine report for the week ending Sunday, June 24, shows that 21 vessels over 1,600 tons and seven under that tonnage were sunk during the week. This is six less of the larger vessels and two more of the smaller. The aggregate tonnage sunk is probably around 105,000 tons.

On the Russian front, in the Galician sectors, there was a little artillery practice and a little raiding, of no particular account, during the week.

The British daily war expenditure has now reached about $38,000,000, which is over 80 cents a day per head of her inhabitants.

The Zaimos cabinet went out of office early in the week in Greece, and Venizelos, who immediately came to Athens (which had been occupied by the French troops), took the premiership and organized a new ministry

The Greek Government on June 29th declared that a state of war existed between Greece and the Teutonic powers because they were carrying on war in Greek territory and the Greek Ministers at Berlin, Vienna, Sofiia and Constantinople were directed to break relations and demand their passports.

On the western front, the forces of Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig are gradually hemming in the town of Lens, the center of the great coal deposits in the Department of Pas de Calais, and from which prior to the war more than 5,000,000 tons of coal were annually exported. Successful raids carried out Sunday night, June 24, by the British, gave them 400 yards of trenches in the woods at the western outskirts of the city, while Monday's operations brought them further progress along both banks of the Souchez River, on a front of about a mile and a half southwest of the town. On Thursday, June 28, the tactically important village of Louvette, about half a mile south of Lens, was taken by the British. As a result of this capture, the British positions to the north, west and south of Lens became such that it appears probable that they will undertake a final assault to land themselves in the town itself in the next two or three days.

The French portion of this front was very quiet all the week. The reason for this lull is probably the temperature. Men cannot fight to best advantage in the height of summer.

The Asiatic fronts, the Caucasus, Mesopotamia and southern Palestine, have all been lifeless the past week. On the Austro-Italian front, the Carso, or Eastern front, except for routine fighting, was very quiet the whole week. On the Trent front, however, where the Italians made some gains near Asiago, and to the north a few weeks ago, the Austrians launched a counter attack which was successful in driving the Italians out of most of the ground won, and in taking some 1800 prisoners.

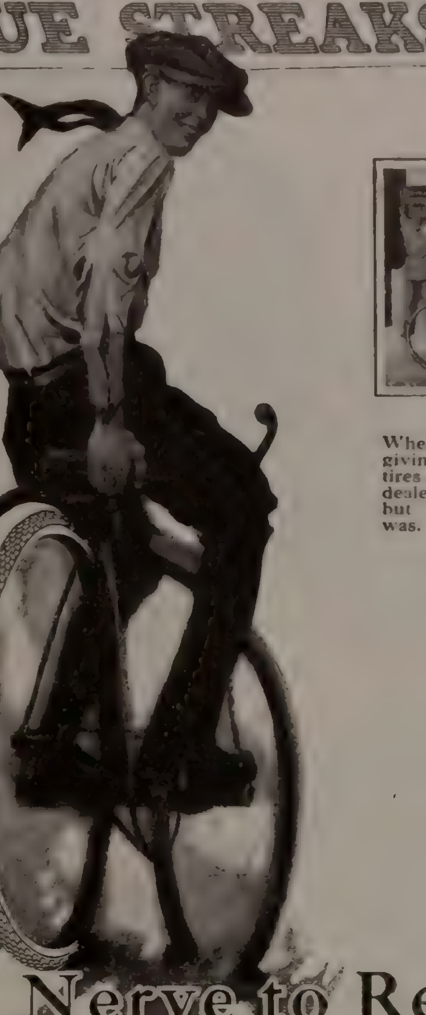
That most famous of English schools, Eton, has so far contributed 5,300 of its alumni to the British forces in the war. Of these 800 plus are known to have been killed or died of wounds, 1000 plus have been wounded so badly as to be of no further service, and of the remaining 3,500, the majority have suffered minor casualties.

Whole carcasses of beef were sold in Great Britain at auction at 37 cents per pound on June 8th. Housewives will appreciate what this price means.

Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

BLUE STREAKS

When the Government puts a stop to food speculation, the public is pleased but the speculators are not.



When Goodyear began giving better bicycle tires cheaper not all dealers were pleased, but the bicycle rider was.

It Took Nerve to Reduce the Dealer's Profit

It does not cost as much to make a good bicycle tire as some dealers' prices would lead you to believe. It is the needless profits consumed between the factory and the rider which have been to blame for the high prices of bicycle tires in the past.

The Goodyear plan of making and selling Blue Streak Bicycle Tires has finally changed this condition for the rider. You may now buy really good quality tires for as little as $3.25 each.

You have a right to know how most bicycle tires are sold. The dealer does not buy directly from the factory. Several profits are made before the dealer receives his tires. Then, too, most manufacturers make a great many brands of bicycle tires. That means their cost is much higher than necessary. And in the past the dealer has fixed his own prices and determined his own profits. The rider has paid what the dealer asked.

Goodyear decided to save the rider these wastes and needless profits on bicycle tires. The Goodyear dealer makes a fair profit on Blue Streaks. He buys direct from Goodyear. Goodyear makes only one tire — a standard quality. Goodyear advertises the price of that tire to you.

Some dealers do not handle Goodyear Blue Streaks. They prefer to sell a tire on which they make more profit. So it took nerve to reduce the dealer's profit.

But the dealer who believes in giving the rider a square deal prefers to sell Goodyear Blue Streaks. He sells more tires in the long run at a smaller profit. And each tire makes a friend.

That is because Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires have built in them such wonderful values.

They are rugged and durable. So they help you save money. They are light and active. That helps you pedal.

The non-skid tread absolutely prevents side-slipping.

Moreover, Goodyear Blue Streaks are handsome in appearance. Look for the bright blue streak around the side. Your friends will admire these tires wherever you ride.

Boys everywhere are wearing Goodyear Bicycle Caps. Ask your dealer.
They're especially popular with Bicycle Clubs—name of club printed on the cap.

See your Goodyear Dealer or write The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, O., for his address

GOODYEAR
AKRON

Speedway's Crushing Tests Prove Hudson Endurance

Four Hudson Specials raced at Cincinnati. All four finished in the prize money: First, in the Free-for-all; Second, Seventh and Ninth in the 250-mile classic.

At Chicago on June 16, Ralph Mulford in a Hudson Super-Six Special broke the American speedway records for 150 and 200 miles. For 200 miles he averaged 104 miles an hour—faster than any car ever traveled such a distance before.

The Hudsons made these records through endurance. For they are not fast cars as racing cars go. Most race specials have more speed. Yet racing engineers, experimenting for years, have never been able to build a car to go as far as Mulford's Super-Six Special did, at such speed. They could build speed in abundance into their cars—but not sufficient endurance.

Hudson controls the motor patent that reduces vibration to a minimum. That explains its matchless endurance.

How We Built the Hudson Racers

Most people conceive a car capable of such enormous speed feats as a monstrous motor creation, unlike any car in ordinary use. Most of them are—entirely foreign to any design feasible for stock production. Engineers built them over tedious months at huge costs of material, labor and experimentation.

But the Hudson Super-Six Specials, which made these Speedway records, were built from our stock cars. Any of the 37,000 Super-Sixes now in the hands of owners could be so converted at nominal cost. That is why Hudson race performance is so significant.

Yet the Hudson was not designed for racing. The speedway was an afterthought, suggested by its great endurance, and the success independent speedway drivers had with Hudsons. Nor do we urge you to buy a Hudson as a race car. You don't want to drive 200 miles at the rate of 104 miles an hour.

But you do want a car with the qualities of endurance and power, which make such a feat possible. Hudson racing performance really is another endurance test—a different way of telling the same story as it told last year in twice breaking the transcontinental record in one continuous trip from San Francisco to New York and return; in breaking the 24 hour run by 52 per cent; in traveling the fastest mile for a stock chassis, at the rate of 102½ miles per hour.

You want a car to endure, to give you long service, to go when you want it, and as fast and far as you want it. But we have not time to demonstrate the Super-Six endurance in that sort of usage. It would require years of constant use. We must subject it to frightful stresses in short, explosive efforts to show you the endurance that will serve you for years in ordinary use.

The car that holds all these records guarantees long service, dependability, low upkeep and adaptability to any motor requirement.

Don't you think the Hudson Super-Six, which has established these records, is the car you want to own?

HUDSON SUPER SIX

Phaeton, 7-passenger,	$1650	Town Car Landaulet...	$3025
Speedster, 4-passenger,	1750	Limousine	2925
Cabriolet, 3-passenger,	1950	Limousine Landaulet...	3025
Touring Sedan.......	2175	Town Car.............	2925

(All prices f. o. b. Detroit)

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICH.

Sennacherib's Invasion of Judah

International Sunday School Lesson for July 25

II Kings 18: 13; 19 : 37

The Story of a Great Deliverance

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

LAST week in our Sunday School Lesson we saw a great national revival of religion. Today we study the story of a great military invasion that failed, because God frustrated the plans of the invaders. We need to look into the historical setting to understand the marvelous intervention of Providence. Living as we do in an era of terrific war, when the guilty aggressor is not yet subdued, this lesson brings us its message of steadfast confidence in the outcome. God ruleth still.

A Page of Ancient History

The overshadowing military despotism of Hezekiah's day was Assyria. The whole civilized world trembled at the mere thought of her cruel and ferocious warriors. Israel, the Northern Kingdom, was one of her many victims, and the flower of Samaria had been transplanted to the Valley of the Euphrates, according to the Assyrian custom.

Now, King Sennacherib was coming down upon Judah on his way to Egypt, to try conclusions with the only great nation left unsubdued. Judah was a little Belgium between the two huge powers. Poor Hezekiah stripped the Temple and the Palace of their treasures, intending to use them as tribute money. Yet after all, Sennacherib sent his soldiers to destroy Jerusalem, probably on the theory that it was too strong to leave on his line of communications.

Sennacherib's Record Preserved

Among the treasures of archaeology are Sennacherib's records, found in the ruins of Nineveh. In these records, at least two accounts of our lesson are given. One reads as follows:

"Hezekiah of Judah, who had not submitted to my yoke, the terror of the splendor of my sovereignty overwhelmed. Himself as a bird in a cage, in the midst of Jerusalem, his royal city, I shut up. The Arabians and his dependents, whom he had introduced for the defence of Jerusalem, his royal city, together with thirty talents of gold, eight hundred of silver, bullion, precious stones, ivory couches and thrones, an abundant treasure, with his daughters, his harem and his attendants, I caused to be brought after me to Nineveh."

The Assyrian Host

The siege of Lachish is pictured on the monuments. From thence Sennacherib swept down Palestine, devastating city after city. "Your country is desolate; your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence," Isaiah 1 : 7 (Read that chapter).

"He cometh to Aiath, he is passed through Migron; at Michmash he layeth up his baggage; they are gone over the pass; they have taken up their lodging at Geba; Ramah trembleth; Gibeah of Saul is fled. . . . This very day shall he halt at Nob: he shaketh his hand at the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem." Thus vividly does the prophet describe the progress of the invader (Isa. 10 : 28–32).

In the 22nd chapter of Isaiah, we have a description of the army as it poured down the mountains round about Jerusalem, with its bowmen and spearmen, its horses and chariots, and its splendor.

A Contemptuous Emissary

A high officer, called the Rabshakeh, came forth to parley with the besieged Jews and a delegation of Hezekiah's counselors met him outside the walls. In a remarkable address, well worth reading (II Kings 18 : 19), this skillful orator advised the unconditional surrender of the city, declaring that the hope of aid from Egypt was gone. Furthermore he offered to make a wager that if he gave them 2000 of the dreaded horses, Hezekiah could not find that many able riders for them. To cap the climax, he dared to say that Jehovah was angry with Hezekiah's religious reforms, and blasphemously asserted that Jehovah himself had commissioned him to destroy Jerusalem!

The Silent Crowd on the Walls

Then the Rabshakeh shouted aloud his impious proposals in the Hebrew language, that the anxious Jews thronging the walls might hear. He taunted Hezekiah's confidence in God. Had any of the gods of the other cities delivered them? The people would have to be deported, but that was better than death, and he promised to take them to a land like their own, fruitful and beautiful.

The hungry and poorly armed defenders were cut to the heart but they answered never a word. They stood steadfast, silent, devoted to their beloved ruler, but unable to see a ray of hope and expecting to die.

While some of the inhabitants resorted to revelry as the siege progressed, saying "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we shall die," as recorded in the 22nd of Isaiah, the more part followed the example of Hezekiah who "rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of Jehovah." Though sorely tested, the faith of the king was not extinguished, though the outlook was black. But faith is the substance of things hoped for, and in one of his letters to Isaiah the courageous king writes: "It may be that Jehovah will hear the words of the Rabshakeh and rebuke them."

When, weeks later, Hezekiah received the final demand from Sennacherib, couched in insolent terms, mocking his faith in his God, the distressed king took the letter into the temple and, with childlike trust, "spread it before Jehovah." His great prayer, at this time, recorded in Isaiah 37 : 17, is noteworthy because it is so spiritual and exalted, and plainly proves that the lessons of Isaiah had brought their fruit in the king's soul. He appeals to the one holy and just God, creator and ruler of all, to vindicate his faith.

The Prophet's Message of Defiance

Back of the king we discern the dim commanding figure of the prophet, now aged and recluse, but indomitable,—holding up the nation by the power of prayer. Daring, with the confidence of absolute consecration, to speak on behalf of God, he sends again a reassurance. He bids Jerusalem take courage and fling defiance at the arrogant foe. She is safe, because the dignity and authority of the Almighty are involved in the issues of the siege. There will be suffering, indeed, and another year of interrupted agriculture and food shortage, but thereafter peace and plenty.

Grown yet more bold, the prophet declares concerning the King of Assyria, "He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor cast a bank against it. By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord. For I will defend this city, to save it."

The Mysterious Deliverance

We do not know the details of the terrific disaster that came upon the hosts of Sennacherib. In fact, it is altogether likely that no accurate account reached Isaiah himself. The detachment camping before Jerusalem beat a hasty and panicky retreat, when news reached them of the calamity that had destroyed the main army on its way to Egypt. The record does not tell where the hundred and eighty-five thousand died. Perhaps pestilence broke out, as they made their way through the frightful Serbonian swamps. Perhaps a desert sandstorm swept away an army in a night. Perhaps the Egyptians won a gigantic victory. Enough that the faith of king and prophet was rewarded. Apart from all human probability, Jerusalem was delivered. The refusal of surrender was justified.

One cannot refrain from citing the parallels of Napoleon's Russian campaigns when two hundred thousand men (more than the number noted here) perished miserably in the snows of that dreadful winter; and of the break-up of the Spanish Armada in 1588, when the mighty fleet of over 100 vessels was dispersed and ruined. Thoughtful historians have agreed that the triumph of Spain or of Napoleon was vetoed by the will of God.

A Song of Thanksgiving

Our Golden Text is taken from the 46th Psalm which has always been regarded as a Thanksgiving Hymn after Sennacherib's discomfiture: "God is our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble." The reading of this Psalm should be a part of our Bible School program this Sunday. Those who have read the references in Isaiah which have to do with this great emergency in Hebrew history will find the Psalm full of the Prophet's phrases.

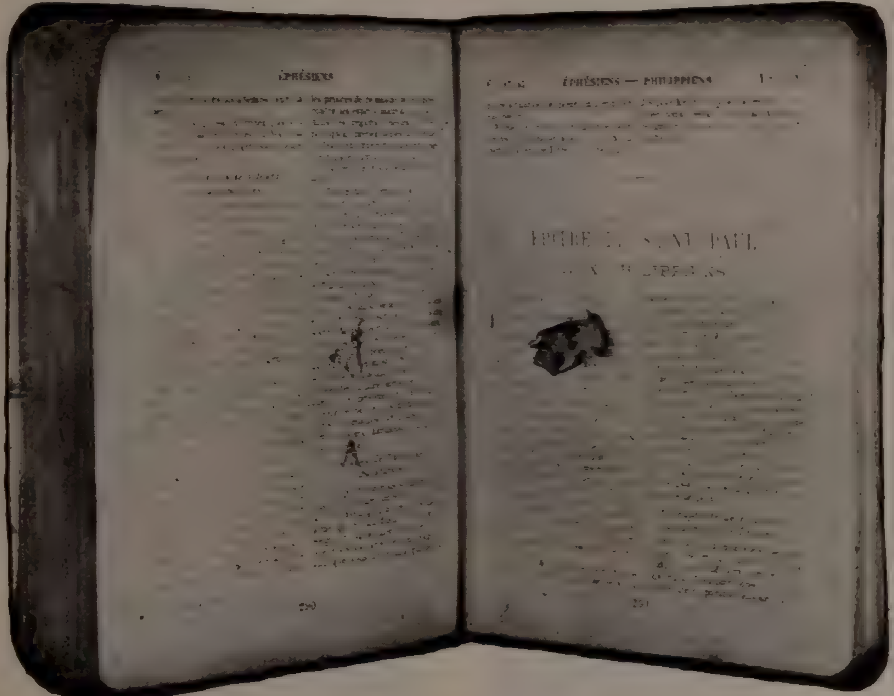
We need the message today, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength," Isa. 30 : 15. When the nations rage, and the kingdoms are moved as never before, we need the assurance of Immanuel, God with us. Also it is good to have the faith of the Psalmist when the greed and folly of men cover the earth with war, that it is God who "maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." Though men begin war, God guides the outcome to purposes unhoped, undreamed. Therefore when we are baffled by it all, when we scarce know how to find relief for overburdened minds, let us like faithful Hezekiah,

"Be still and know that I am God."

In the greatest book produced by the present world war, Mr. Britling finds confidence and peace of soul and indomitable hope by discovering God "within the shadow, keeping watch above his own." Just as the ancient Hebrews believed that "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera" when his warlike power had made the highways of Israel a desolation, so we modern Christians should have the absolute conviction that the latest great conspiracy against the peace and freedom of humanity will come to nought. God is on the side of liberty and respect for the rights of others.

A Testament that Saved a Life

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary, World's Sunday School Association



WHEN that American Sunday school scholar gave his nickel for a Testament for a soldier in Europe he did not know that that Testament would stop a bullet within an inch of a French soldier's heart and save his life. But Eugene Defail, that gallant French soldier whose life was saved by that Testament, knows it, and he will always be grateful to some unknown American Sunday school boy, or it may be girl, who that Sunday back in America did his bit toward the 1,300,000 Testaments and Gospels which have gone to Europe through the cooperation of the World's Sunday School Association and the American and other Bible agencies.

The photographs of the remarkable French Testament tell their own story. The second photograph bears the inscription in French, "Presented by an American Sunday school scholar." The wicked-looking sharp-pointed bullet pierced the book, stopping just at the second cover.

This French soldier, Defail, was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Montmartre, Paris. He was seven times wounded and three times in the hospital. He belonged to the 152d regiment of Infantry, 7th company. He is among the few survivors of the two French battalions sent to Belgrade and Serbia in 1915.

This New Testament was given him at Dieulefit, the first camp in Dauphine, by the French Bible Society. On January 10, 1917, he was carrying it on his chest in the Schönholtz wood, before Altkirch (in Alsace), when a bullet from a machine gun glanced from a tree or rock, struck him on the breast and entered the Testament. His pastor says this rebound would certainly have been a mortal wound. Later, three other bullets slightly wounded this young soldier, obliging him to take a three weeks' rest.

Quite recently Ernest Bertrand, of the French Bible Society, wrote the following letter to the American Bible Society, by whom the Sunday School Association has been administered:

"We have just received your draft of $1,000 from the Million Nickel Fund for the printing of 20,000 copies of Scripture at five cents each copy, and this edition will have a great success in our armies. This little book with a nice picture on the cover (a French soldier reading the New Testament in his 'trenchroom'), will be all printed next month. I thank you again very much for this gift from the American Sunday school children."

The World's Sunday School Association, Metropolitan Tower, New York, is seeking to complete a second million of these life-saving messages to the soldiers in the trenches, hospitals and prison camps of Europe.

FELS-NAPTHA

"A cool breeze on a shady porch goes much better on a summer's day than a steamy wash boiler in a hot laundry," says the Fels-Naptha Home Maker.

HOW you do appreciate anything that lightens washing in hot weather! And how absolutely unnecessary is boiling water when you use Fels-Naptha soap.

If ever you hate the sight of a steaming wash boiler and a hot tub, it's on a sweltering summer day. See what Fels-Naptha soap can do in cool or lukewarm water. The easy directions are on each red and green wrapper.

And remember, each clean-smelling "maple sugar" colored bar of Fels-Naptha gives the whitest of white suds, that keep white garments white.

If you already wash the Fels-Naptha way, tell some friend about it. It will be a kindness to her.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

Weather Changes Will Not Weaken

TIRE-DOH Repairs

© A. A. S. Co., 1917

Tire-Doh is made by a secret process rendering it impervious to heat and cold. Once kneaded into a puncture or blowout, it becomes an actual and permanent part of the rubber and will outlive the rubber itself. Neither climate changes nor continued wear will weaken a Tire-Doh repair.

For Inner Tubes and Outer Casings

Cuts Repair Bills and Adds to Mileage

Tire-Doh will repair the longest inner tube tear or the tiniest puncture. Does not deteriorate like highly vulcanized rubber—retains elasticity long after the tube has become useless from age.

Tire-Doh is not a tire filler. It s a secret process compound that can be used on your casings, too. By filling up the cuts and bruises regularly with Tire-Doh you can add thousands of miles to life of casings.

Needs No Heat Nor Tools—Does Not Stick to Fingers

Just your hands and Tire-Doh. That's all you need to Tire-Doh-ize your tires—no tools to ruin them—no heat to burn or overcure the rubber. And Tire-Doh leaves your fingers clean—no mussiness.

Tire-Doh-ize Anything Made of Rubber

Tire-Doh will repair rubber coats, gloves, boots, hot water bags, etc. And it's great for electrical insulation.

50c and $1.00—10,000 Dealers

Canadian prices 65c and $1.25. Everybody needs Tire-Doh. 750,000 "kneaded" it last year. Seven years on the market and a proved success. Buy two cans today—one for the home and one for the car. If your dealer can't supply you, order from us direct and send us his name.

Manufactured and Guaranteed by - - ATLAS AUTO SUPPLY CO. 694 W. Austin Avenue CHICAGO

Corns Bring Frowns

ALSO mental anguish. To say nothing of physical pain. Yet how needless it is to have corns! A wonderful invention, Blue-jay Plasters, means instant relief. Already over 70,000,000 corns have been removed in this easy, painless way.

Only the Blue-jay brings instant relief from the pain, with the assurance that the corn will come out.

Beware of the dangerous razor. It merely brings temporary relief. Beware of harsh liquids. Play safe with Blue-jay.

Free yourself now and forget your feet forever. Wear new shoes without discomfort. Don't let mean, little, touchy corns give you frown wrinkles.

BAUER & BLACK
Chicago and New York
Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.

Blue=jay
Stops Pain—Ends Corns
Instantly Quickly

Sold by All Druggists
Also Blue-jay Bunion Plasters

ALADDIN READI-CUT Houses
Eliminate Waste
Save Money
Get Catalog 214 The Aladdin Co. Bay City, Mich.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

A Ruptured Child Deserves the Right to Play

The Brooks Rupture Appliance of firm elastic allows free, unhampered movement of a child's active little body. At the same time it surely and comfortably retains the hernia. The automatic air cushion clings closely without chafing or slipping. May be worn in bed comfortably.

Steel Trusses, imperfectly fitted, are a far greater source of danger to a child than rupture itself. The hard steel bands and heavy, unyielding pads burrow into the sensitive nerves of the back, the kidneys, and the tender flesh of the hips.

Recommended by Physicians

In the words of one Chicago physician*: "Ill-fitting steel trusses and hard rubber attachments, in my opinion, have been the direct cause of thousands of cases of nervous diseases in both men and women. Common sense will teach anyone that your air cushion and heavy rubber band, by its merit alone, must supersede all other forms of appliances."

SENT FREE FOR TRIAL

We are willing to trust every rupture sufferer in the world with 10 days free trial of the Brooks Appliance. No questions asked if appliance is returned. Durable cheap. Protected by U. S. patents. U. S. War Dept. is Brooks Appliance Co.'s biggest customer. Catalogue and measure blanks sent on request.

TRADE MARK C. E. BROOKS

BROOKS APPLIANCE CO.
398 B State St. Marshall, Mich.

*Name on request.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

Crooked Spines Made Straight

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

An old lady, 72 years of age, who suffered for many years and was absolutely helpless, found relief. A man who was helpless, unable to rise from his chair, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house after wearing a Philo Burt Appliance 3 weeks. We have successfully treated more than 25,000 cases the past 15 years.

30 Days' Trial

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjusted the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. Price within reach of all.

Send For Our Free Book

If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definite information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
S-207 Seventh Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

Bible Picture Study Judges

Personnel of the Committee Which Will Select the Best Verses for the Pictures

THE Christian Herald now announces below the names of the five Judges who will select the officially best verses for the sixty pictures of the Bible Picture Study. We are sure that participants will share our pleasure in having secured the services of such eminent men, so well qualified for their task.

J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.
Moderator of the General Presbyterian Assembly

David J. Burrell, D.D.
Pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York

Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.
President of United Society of Christian Endeavor

Frank L. Brown
General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association

Daniel Hoffman Martin, D.D.
Pastor of Fort Washington Presbyterian Church, New York

Checking Staff Already Compiling List for Judges

AS rapidly as possible our staff will go through the sets of verses submitted and compile a list of the different verses submitted for each picture. This collection of verses will be submitted to the Judges, and they will designate which verses are in their opinions entitled to be termed the best of all verses for the pictures.

This list of best verses will be published in the Christian Herald, and participants upon seeing it will refer to the duplicate records they kept home of the verses they submitted, and mark off on the checking sheets how many were correct (best) and how many incorrect. These results will be sent in to us, and we will compare them, verify the figures, and be enabled to announce the prize winners within a much shorter time than would be possible did we not have the co-operation of participants in the checking task.

THE Judges request that no one write to them offering opinions. They will choose the best verses according to their supreme judgment in each case, and will not accept or defer to the opinions of others.

Young People's Topics for July 22

Applying the Golden Rule to Life

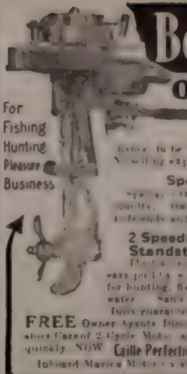
Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Matt. 7 : 7–12

NO rule is worth much unless it is applied, but when you lay the rule against your work and mark off its several divisions, the rule begins to become a vital element in your day. Life is perhaps the only thing which we dare to conduct without reference to strict rules, and this, the most important of our possessions, we are prone to conduct in a most haphazard fashion. We go bungling through the world with much begging of pardons and with many injuries uncondoned, for a prompt "I beg your pardon" does not always take away the hurt. Jesus gave us the golden rule as part of a statement of the bounteous spiritual gifts which are ours for the asking. But, having told us to ask of the Father the good things which he is ready to give, he continues with the word, "therefore." Reasoning, then, from effect back to cause, we find ourselves led to regard the keeping of the golden rule as the key to the promised blessings. After all, keeping the golden rule is merely a matter of thoughtfulness and unwearying kindness, for most of our unkindness is the result of thoughtlessness. The golden rule is positive, it does not admonish us not to do things which we prefer people not to do to us, but it tells us to do to them and for them those things which would please us at their hand. We like to hear that someone has spoken well of us in our absence; we like sympathy; we dislike temper, and we loathe satire and the wit that stings. We like to find little things done for us when we come home at night; we like a cheery word of greeting. If our task is hard we like an understanding, and unobtrusive lift. We like to think of things that are worth while, and we dislike speech that is unclean or unworthy. It is probable that others like much the same things that we like, and, keeping in mind the possible likes of others, with thoughtfulness and tact we will be able to live the golden rule, and living it, find each new day more glorious and happy than those that went before.

Letters from Former League Members

Epworth League Topic. Col. 4 : 10–16; Rom. 16 : 21–23

WHAT would the church of today do without the letters of Paul? They are the source of much of its theology, even as they are the fountain of some of its misunderstandings. Theology and disputation are twins. But Paul's letters carry more than theology, they carry the love and Christian comradeship of the great apostle to all those who believed on the Christ through his preaching, and to all others who read them. It is not probable that there are many Pauls among our Epworth League members, but it is highly probable that there are many away from home whose letters to the League will give it a new viewpoint, a new grip upon its work and a new realization of its great work which is, after all, the fitting of young people to face the world away from home without the loss of spiritual ideals. Then, too, the former Leaguer who sits down to write a letter home to the spiritual companions of his earlier years may find confession his first duty, and the writing of the letter may quicken into new life the loyalty to the Saviour which has been somewhat covered by the interests and distractions of a new environment. This meeting should be worked up far in advance; the leader should, even by the time this is being read, have been in touch by mail with as many as possible of the former members of the League. No time should be lost in getting letters on their way, if it has not been done. It is not necessary to read all of any letter received; the best paragraphs of each should be chosen, and they should be read by someone with an understanding heart, who will not make the reading perfunctory, or attempt to inject into it his own shallow wit.



Be a CAILLE 5 Speed Motor OWNER AGENT

For Fishing Hunting Pleasure Business

[illegible] No office or shop needed.

Special Owner Agent Offer

[illegible]

2 Speeds Ahead — 2 Speeds Back or Standstill Without Stopping Motor

[illegible] for hunting, fishing, pleasure, business in fresh or salt water [illegible] Best materials, fully guaranteed

FREE Owner Agents Discount, Catalog, Booklet "Installation, Operation, Care of 2 Cycle Motor and Equipment," all [illegible] free. Act quickly NOW. Caille Perfection Motor Co., 287 Caille Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Inboard Marine Motors [illegible] of boat.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1953 Ry. Exch., Chicago

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

DAISY FLY KILLER

DAISY FLY KILLER PLACED ANYWHERE, ATTRACTS and KILLS ALL FLIES. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, cheap. LASTS ALL SEASON. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

One Reason Why Food Prices Are Soaring

THE following table shows the principal articles of foodstuffs exported from the United States in the nine months ending with March, 1917, compared with corresponding periods of earlier years:

Articles		1917	1916	1915	1914
Breadstuffs:
Barley	bu	12,312,476	22,527,688	24,198,543	5,019,794
Barley	$	12,783,701	16,407,313	16,298,001	3,284,795
Corn	bu	49,700,158	23,172,065	32,101,942	7,207,859
Corn	$	50,763,297	18,237,328	25,536,614	5,341,757
Corn meal	bbls	296,660	295,341	337,172	226,076
Corn meal	$	1,385,330	1,140,763	1,333,497	783,059
Oatmeal	lbs.	56,921,411	37,889,569	54,061,346	8,884,827
Oatmeal	$	2,189,959	1,294,169	1,887,343	335,581
Oats	bu	65,270,482	66,139,916	56,897,692	912,834
Oats	$	37,331,727	32,979,502	32,969,917	412,652
Rice	lbs	86,634,042	86,346,585	58,252,986	12,676,226
Rye	bu	10,430,324	10,687,392	10,672,464	981,847
Rye	$	15,321,153	11,331,026	12,349,145	665,869
Wheat	bu	108,435,092	136,292,362	213,261,523	75,122,543
Wheat	$	191,593,397	167,659,106	261,308,690	71,149,401
Wheat flour	bbls	8,674,272	11,463,725	12,499,237	9,170,153
Wheat flour	$	61,781,700	64,505,361	69,387,298	42,022,604
Meats:
Canned beef	lbs	37,825,187	28,195,365	51,024,983	2,694,852
Canned beef	$	9,131,652	4,641,931	8,233,011	360,363
Fresh beef	lbs	119,752,078	162,155,335	76,608,743	4,659,952
Fresh beef	$	15,130,538	20,164,560	9,319,322	574,209
Bacon	lbs	498,562,667	429,999,814	227,951,343	158,437,181
Bacon	$	80,928,645	57,431,810	31,221,218	21,078,189
Hams and shoulders	$	34,832,343	29,241,755	17,934,653	18,426,284
Lard	$	55,041,427	30,933,491	42,691,969	32,207,049
Total meat products	$	240,849,483	189,584,601	137,866,833	111,975,196
Dairy Products:
Butter	lbs	25,253,679	12,067,398	5,262,112	2,661,529
Butter	$	8,136,558	3,210,976	1,289,295	639,395
Cheese	lbs	42,756,391	25,126,593	21,368,616	1,934,104
Cheese	$	9,275,348	4,204,515	3,336,629	324,268
Condensed milk	$	14,675,326	6,908,630	2,339,195	1,011,597
Sugar	lbs	930,843,767	1,174,037,615	433,956,662	40,030,005
Sugar	$	57,394,826	52,586,592	20,029,104	1,445,554

The Children and the Church

A SUBSCRIBER, who signs herself "A Lover of the Christian Herald," requested some weeks ago that we tell the Christian Herald Family the best method for holding boys and girls for church attendance after Sunday school. There probably is no best method. Each boy and each girl is a separate problem; each Sunday school and each church is also a separate problem. One good method, if it can be called a method, is the bringing of boys and girls into a definite acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and through that into church membership. But this is not always effective unless they are given something to do in connection with the service. Chorus choirs are excellent and perform the double purpose of holding the young people for church, as well as furnishing an acceptable addition to the church service. Appointment as an usher is also frequently effective in holding the young man. Some churches succeed in increasing the attendance of Sunday school children at church by issuing church attendance cards which are punched each week and which lead to some form of recognition once or twice a year. Home training and influence are, however, the most certain force which can be brought to bear upon the problem. In most cases, if the parents are regular in their church attendance and lead their children instead of attempting to drive them, the children also will be found in church. Pastors can often attract children to the service by preaching sermons especially for them, and a habit of church attendance is often started in this way, for it must be recognized that regular church attendance is largely a matter of habit. But it is a good habit and based upon the best reason in the world: the need of our humanity for regular portions of spiritual food. The best impulses for the forming of this habit in children arise from definite religious experience, and through the performance of definite tasks which require attendance.

Unless you are

DEAF

this advertisement is not for you.

But if you are

DEAF

you owe it to yourself and family to know all there is about the "Acousticon," the little instrument that has made over 300,000 deaf people hear.

The 1917 "Acousticon" is the keenest, most powerful and by all odds most efficient instrument it is possible to produce. Conversations, music and public speaking are transmitted in clear, natural tones. It is the instrument that is selling now at the rate of over 2,000 per month.

Telling you won't convince you—Showing you—will.

That is why we are glad to send you the 1917 "Acousticon"

ON 10 DAYS' FREE, HOME TRIAL

All we ask you to do is to sign and mail the trial request blank. Don't send a cent. Don't obligate yourself in any way. We send the "Acousticon." You try it in any way you care to.

At the end of 10 days, if you don't like it, return it at our expense.

10 Days' Free Trial Request Blank

General Acoustic Co.,
220 West 42d St., N. Y. C.

Send me an "Acousticon" by parcel post prepaid. I agree to try it for 10 days. If, at the end of 10 days, I decide not to keep it, I will return it to you, and I am not to be charged one cent for the trial.

Signature . . . .

Street Address . . . .

Town. . . . . .State . . . .

Rural Free Delivery Route. . . . .

Kindly Answer These Questions

Age. . . . .

How long have you been deaf? . . . . . .

. . . .

Can you hear over the telephone? . . . . . .

As we are sending the "Acousticon" without asking for cash deposit, kindly give one reference.

Name of reference . . . .

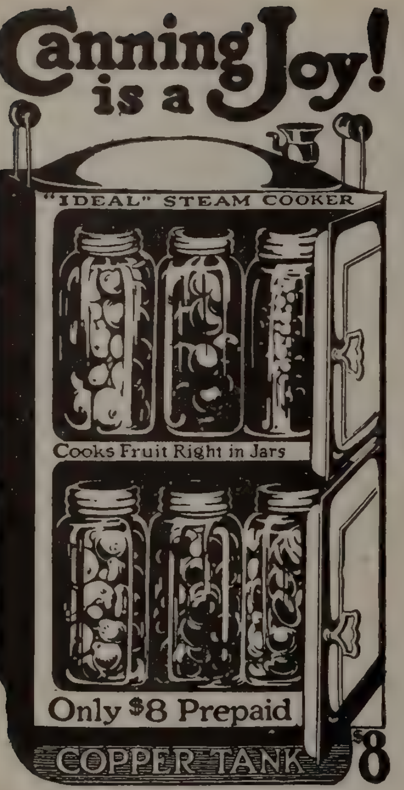
Street Address. . . . .

Town . . . . City . . . .

REMEMBER YOU HAVE EVERYTHING TO GAIN AND NOTHING TO LOSE by mailing the above blank today.

Note. — Do you own any other hearing device? . . . .

We have a special proposition for allowing credit on any instrument which you may own.



Canning Joy! is a Joy!

"IDEAL" STEAM COOKER

Cooks Fruit Right in Jars

Only $8 Prepaid

COPPER TANK $8

Cooks By Steam Pressure
Grandest invention for canning. Fruits and vegetables keep whole. Retain natural delicious flavors. No attention. Simplicity itself. Saves fuel. Saves time and labor. Also cooks meals. Pays for itself in one season. Lasts for years. No. 20—popular size—holds 14 one-quart jars. Copper bottom, $8; solid copper $18.00. Prepaid east of Miss. 80 page cook book free if you order today. Money back if not satisfied. Descriptive circular, showing other sizes, FREE. Write today.
THE TOLEDO COOKER CO. Dept. 44 Toledo, Ohio.

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE Paul F Skinner ON EVERY PACKAGE

SKINNER'S MACARONI SKINNER MFG CO OMAHA U S A

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"
writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. "Worth more than a farm," says another. So testify over 100,000 Men and Women who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings comfort, health, strength and pep.

MAKES YOU FEEL GOOD AND LOOK GOOD

Replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens shoulders; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, etc., in both sexes. Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank and our very liberal free trial proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Bldg., Salina, Kan.

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

STORIES Many rejected stories need only expert revision to succeed. This I can give. Recently editor leading magazine, and author Book of the Short Story (Appleton's). References: Jack London, etc.
ALEXANDER JESSUP 500 Fifth Av., New York City

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co Dept B51 Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D.C.

WANTED:—Old False Teeth. Doesn't matter if broken. $1 to $12 a set. Send by parcel post. Receive check by return mail. C. Block, 717 Shukert Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The Ministry to Suffering

THE American Red Cross appealed for $100,000,000 to be raised in one week for the relief of suffering soldiers. The response of America to this appeal was the same response that can be expected of America to any great appeal, and the total reached on June 27 was not the $100,000,000, but $114,000,000. This money will enable the Red Cross to take the battered remnants of what once were men, and bring to them such comfort, care and restoration as is possible. No grander work than that of the Red Cross exists. It is the silver lining of the cloud of war.

But the suffering of soldiers is only, after all, a small part of the great burden which war brings to humanity. The soldiery is organized, the Red Cross is organized, and the soldier receives prompt and efficient care as soon as the welter of blood and actual battle makes possible the search for the wounded. But the populations in the country that has been fought over, the populations that have been exiled into strange lands, are not organized, and their suffering is perhaps even greater on this account. The great relief committees are well organized, and are doing their best to bring some sort of order out of the chaos of distress. Their work must also go on while armies fight. They must have money; their funds must be continually replenished. Only organized and planned for giving can meet the situation. The Christian Herald Family has done its share, is doing its share, and we know it will continue to do its share.

Please address all gifts to War Widows and Orphans Relief Work, Room 93, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

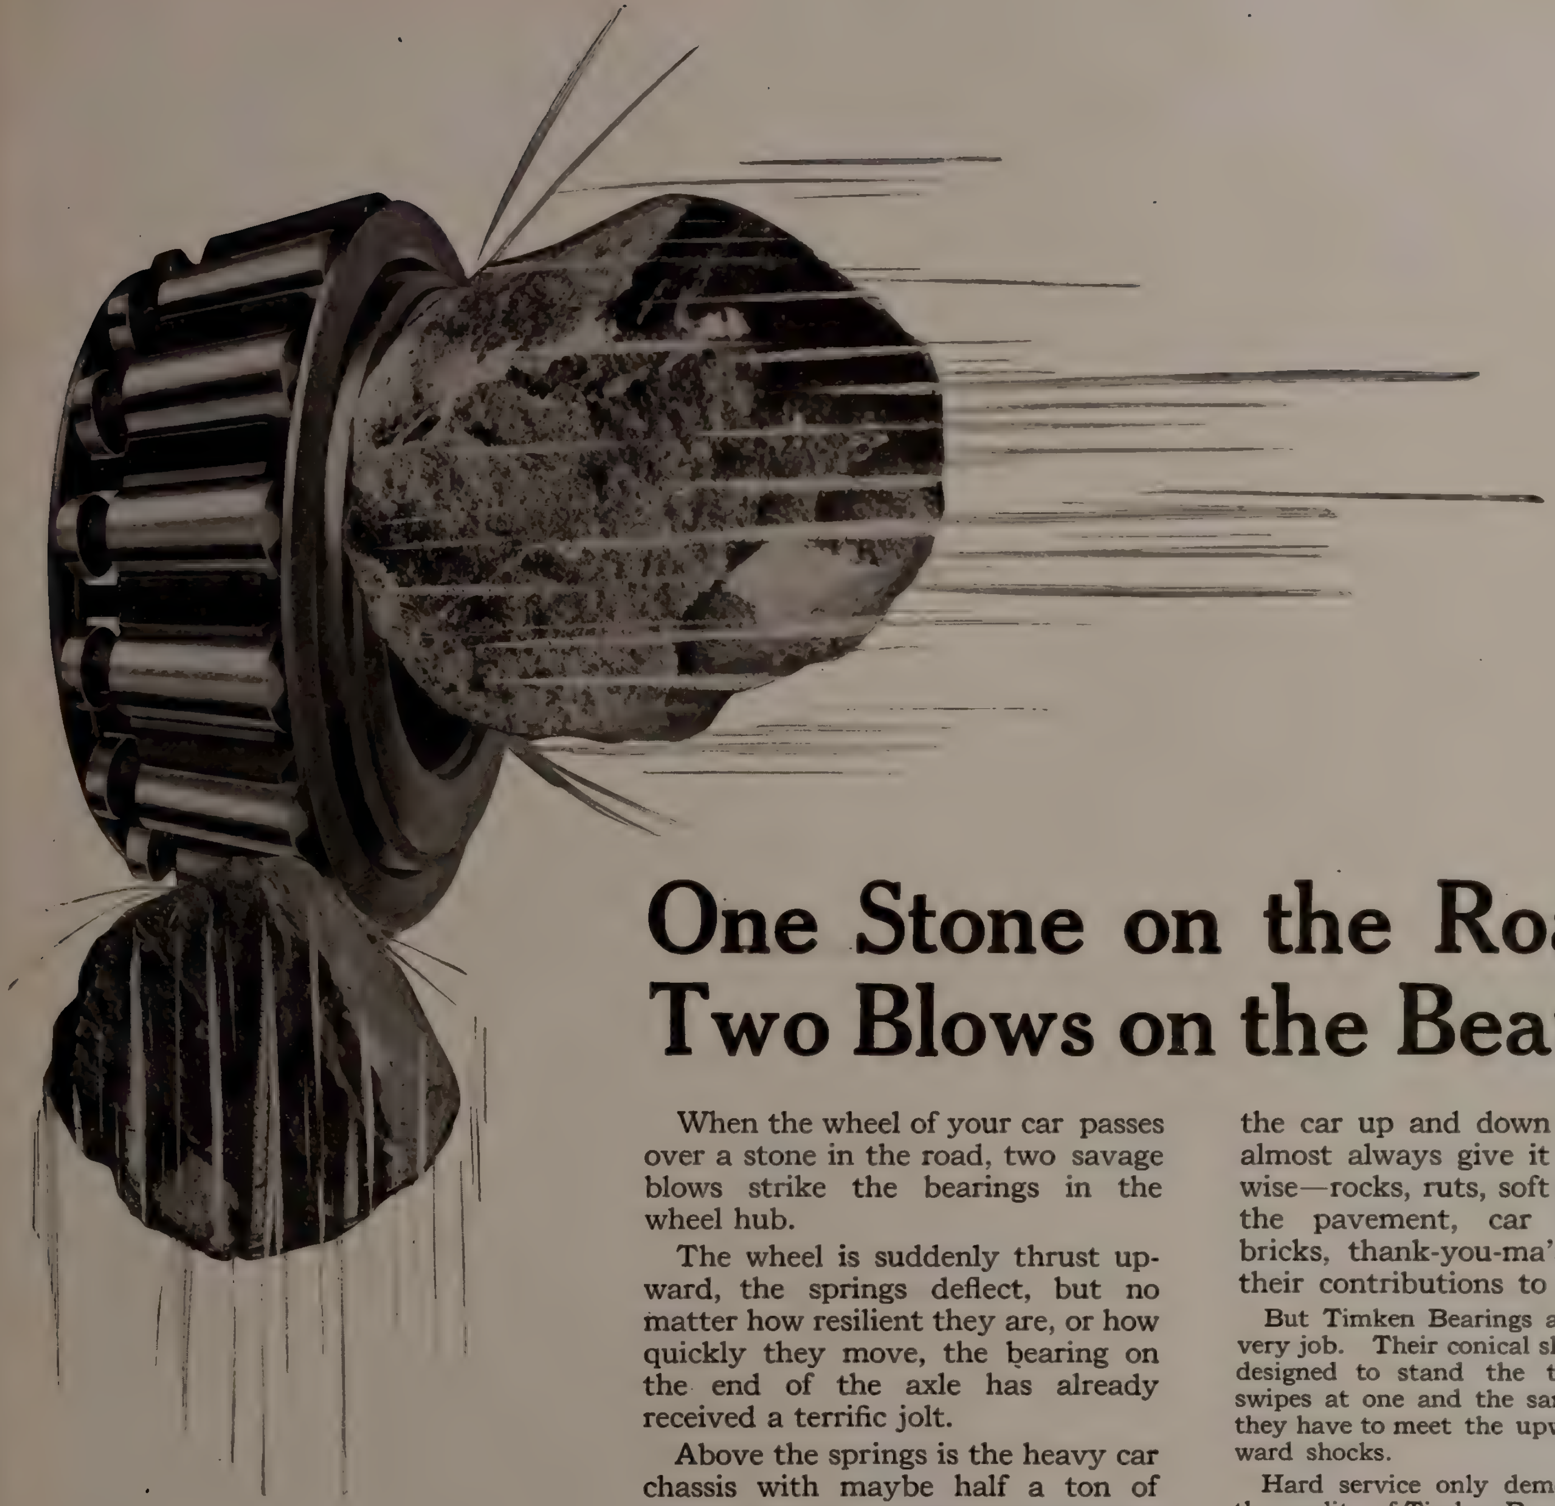
Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Dr A Magill	$5.00
Mrs Mary L Prior	5.00
Miss Marjorie E Thomas	5.00
Wm Daws	5.00
Mary P Whitney	5.00
H S Kenyon	5.00
Miss Edith M Minchen	5.00
Mrs John Williams	5.00
Old Newport S S, Santa Anna, Calif	5.00
Mrs C Borsing	5.00
Wm T Heitschmidt	5.00
Clara Albright	5.00
Mrs H B Demmler	5.00
Elvira Adams	5.00
Levi Beck	5.00
David R Donaldson	5.00
C Z Russell	5.00
Mrs J W Kizer	5.00
Mrs Maggie Thompson	5.00
J W Peyton, Sr.	5.00
E M Fligle	5.00
Mrs C C Waters	5.00
Frank E Simond	5.00
John Sjogren	5.00
Mrs John Irons	5.00
Mrs A Kimball	5.00
H C Rossmussen	5.00
Mrs A B Carter	5.00
Fred Kullman	5.00
August Anderson	5.00
Mrs S C King	5.00
Mrs Robert G Galt	5.00
Mrs M A Taylor	5.00
Friend, N Monmouth, Me	5.00
J A Texler	5.00
J H Dill	5.00
Mrs Mary Campbell	5.00
Mr Chas Emmert	5.00
Mrs Wm Hotten	5.00
E P Skelton	5.00
In Memory of Sigrid Rose Henderson	5.00
Sidney Zook	5.00
D A White	5.00
Geo Henderson	5.00
F W Forster	5.00
Ara Green	5.00
Mrs S F Schmucker	5.00
Wm Aurlie	5.00
Mr & Mrs J H Meeks	5.00
Mrs Jacob Bowers	5.00
Mrs Emil Sitz	5.00
John Linkbeiner	5.00
Andrew Popovich	5.00
Mrs J G Lovett	5.00
James S Pogue	5.00
Mrs L W Prosser	5.00
C H Shepherd	5.00
Mrs John Gray	5.00
T R De Shields	5.00
Mrs Anna Hamlin	5.00
T E D Turner	5.00
Mrs J P Elliott	5.00
E A Smyth	5.00
Mrs J H Durant	5.00
C H Olsen	5.00
Peter Marker	5.00
Geo Sharp	5.00
Mrs Sarah Langdon	5.00
Mary E Ames	5.00
In His Name, Keysville, Va	5.00
Luther Etheredge	5.00
Mrs T I Fulmer	5.00
Mrs Catharine Whitesell	5.00
S T Johnson	5.00
—— Long Beach, Calif	5.00
Friend, Highland, N Y	5.00
Samuel B Taylor	5.00
John Griffith	$5.00
Mrs N J Dible	5.00
Anna Barton	5.00
Anna Boesser	5.00
Herbert E Quigley	5.00
O A Wickstrom	3.00
E L Miles	3.00
Mrs Carrie Pilegard	3.00
Mrs D W McConnell	3.00
Mrs Martha J Brands	3.00
Leroy Smith	3.00
Mrs Clark Hastings	3.00
J C Gemmell	3.00
Mrs S W Soule	3.00
Mrs Anna M Mill	3.00
Mrs S Disney	3.00
Max Harper	3.00
D O Kinzinger	3.00
Thos Kewley	3.00
Henry D Lewis	3.00
Lydia Jolitz	3.00
B Taylor	3.00
Mrs D M Gurney	3.00
Aunt Jane	3.00
J H Fand	3.00
F M Van Derveer	3.00
Mary M Graw	3.00
Mr & Mrs G W Walker	3.00
Elizabeth Mercer	3.00
John Wiley	3.00
Elizabeth C Hickman	3.00
S S Frazier	3.00
M E Walstrum	3.00
I H Sydenstricher	3.00
William Kerr	3.00
Edward Walker	3.00
Samuel Peterson	3.00
Rev Jos H Bradley	3.00
B F Evans	3.00
Eliza J McLaughlin	3.00
"Oakland"	3.00
M C Morehouse	3.00
Mrs K E Destroy	3.00
Conrad Pfeil	3.00
Mrs M E Taylor	3.00
Frances E Randall	3.00
Mrs Cutter	3.00
Anton Eid	3.00
Mrs Bert Norby	3.00
Sarah A McMillan	3.00
Wm Skiles	3.00
W E Emory	3.00
—— Reed City, Mich	3.00
Anna J H Printz	3.00
J H Hulett	3.00
Mrs J B Shannon	2.50
Ruth A Nye	2.50
T B Kelsay	2.50
Mrs J H New	2.50
Mrs A Hicks	2.50
Mrs Joshua Summeren	2.50
J A Reeder	2.50
J W Spears	2.50
Mrs M P Beede	2.50
Mr & Mrs W E Watts	2.50
A E Girod	2.50
Mr Chas Mackey	2.50
Mrs M R Dilley	2.50
Mary Robertson	2.50
Thos H Dorr	2.50
Mrs E S Hines	2.50
Edward Loomis	2.50
R L Forrest	2.50
Alma McLeod	2.50
Silas Insko	2.50
L D Platt	2.50
Mrs Mattie Kinsey	2.50
Dorothy Albert	2.50
J Fairleigh Albert	2.50
Mrs F A Butt	2.50
Joseph Wilcox	2.00
Mrs E J J	2.00
Jessie E Malliet	2.00
Mrs J W Allen	$2.00
Mr & Mrs Philip Pifer	2.00
Esther Mains	2.00
Mrs Anna Preston	2.00
Miss Margaret G Klose	2.00
James Finlay	2.00
Mr & Mrs J E Morse	2.00
In memory of wife, Allentown, Pa	2.00
James W Watkins	2.00
C K	2.00
David Kennedy	2.00
L E Sherwood	2.00
Mrs Wm Bradshaw	2.00
Mrs J F Paulsen	2.00
Mrs D A Abernathy	2.00
John E Scofield	2.00
Gertrude Brown	2.00
R P Kreps	2.00
Mrs C G Andrews	2.00
Mr John Howry	2.00
Friend, Farmington, Me	2.00
Mrs Eugene P Pomar	2.00
Reader, Felton, Dela	2.00
A O Champe	2.00
Mr & Mrs P C McQuain	2.00
Dr W G Ruckenbrod	2.00
J R Sturges	2.00
Mrs J C Blackburn	2.00
Clara M Ridgway	2.00
Ophelia A Peebles	2.00
Alex Harbison	2.00
Mrs S Brobst	2.00
Mr Jacob Johnson	2.00
Mrs J L Spotts	2.00
Mrs W J Porter	2.00
J J Cass	2.00
Mr Wm Hammill	2.00
Mrs A D Chamblers	2.00
Alex Kinmont	2.00
Miss S Barnett	2.00
J H Spoolman	2.00
Mrs C R George	2.00
Cumberland Presby Ch, S Pittsburg, Tenn	2.00
Rev E B Pike	2.00
Katie Beach	2.00
Mrs Annie Miller	2.00
Alf Smith	2.00
A J Hanks	2.00
Mrs M A Stevens	2.00
"E B"	2.00
Mrs R E Sparks	2.00
Mrs Elmira S Shipper	2.00
Miss Ina Eby	2.00
Mrs E H Rowland	2.00
Mrs George W Cox	2.00
Mrs Caroline Strang	2.00
Mrs J M Marshall	2.00
Adella C Dennis	2.00
C H Readers, Lemmon, S D	2.00
Clara L Meader	2.00
Mrs J M Faulkner	2.00
Mrs A E Waltenspiel	2.00
Mrs M P Hays	2.00
Olive McWay	2.00
Mrs Carl H Nelson	2.00
W A Semmler	2.00
Miss Mattie Skinner	2.00
Mrs Eugene Childs	2.00
Mrs Agnes C Bollman	2.00
John T Doubiken	2.00
Ira Wakefield	2.00
S L Carson	2.00
Alfred Lemon	2.00
Friend, Syracuse, N Y	2.00
E D, Granville, Ohio	2.00
School children, La Conner, Wash	1.50
Wm B Rainsford	$2.00
Hoke's Grove, Mission Band, Hanover, Pa	1.50
R S Williams	1.50
Claus Ehrlich	1.50
Lydia Esping	1.50
Mary J Bewley	1.50
Miss Isabella Ogilivie	1.50
Mrs D H Safford	1.50
C Berry	1.50
Victor Titus	1.50
Mrs James Duncan	1.50
"M E T"	1.50
Mrs Ione E Coe	1.50
Mrs Geo Arnold	1.50
Mrs E S Brumley	1.50
"In memory of Mother"	1.50
Mrs Geo Williams	1.50
Mrs James Garrison	1.50
I H Burdick	1.50
Joshua Spearman	.50
Wm H Burdick	1.50
Class No 14, First Bapt Ch, Wausau, Wis	.50
S S Class, Ft McCoy, Fla	.50
Mrs J I Miller	.50
Mrs E Rau	.50
Mr H F Hansen	.50
Friend, Norfolk, Va	.50
Irvin Mentzer	.50
—— Montpelier, Vt	.50
Mrs E E Vaughan	.50
Mrs I P Mann	.50
Mrs Wm Parker	.50
Mrs Frances Koch	.50
Mrs H Behrens	.50
Friend, Vilza, S D	.50
Mrs H A Blaycock	.50
Miss Richie Sherman	.50
Mrs C Lehman	.50
Jennie Willis	.50
—— Monson, Mass	.50
Miss Lena Mann	.50
James K Derch	.50
Mrs Peter Richard	.50
L Oleare	.50
Mrs Edward Kneale	.50
S E Gay	.50
J G Harrison	.50
Miss Annie Johnson	.50
Mrs L M Michelson	.50
J M Clark	.50
Friend, St John, N E, N B, Can	.50
Mrs Louisa Mason	.50
Friend, Albion, Idaho	.50
E T Abbott	.50
Friend, Honey Grove, Pa	.50
H R Calkins	.50
Rebecca R Dankel	.50
Maria C Smith	.50
Mrs Geo Scott	.25
Rev C B Christiansen	.25
Miss E B Lawlin	.25
Mrs Mary E Brown	.25
Mrs C E Burnett	.25
Elihu A Robinson	.25
Mrs D M Beatty	.25
S R Stanton	1.00
M E Morgan	1.00
Mrs Ellen D Williams	1.00
Mrs Z V Whealton	1.00
Miriam C Comerford	1.00
—— Gladstone, Oregon	1.00
Mrs W B Lamon	1.00
C M G	1.00
Subscriber, New Bedford, Mass	1.00
John H Orne	1.00
Serena Turner	1.00
R M C	1.00
Jennie Willis	1.00
Chas A Griset	1.00
"Hope"	1.00
Florence Carlyle	$1.00
Miss Lottie W Dolsen	1.00
Mrs Enos Laning	1.00
Mrs M R Jackson	1.00
Friend, Jersey City, N J	1.00
O C Holmes	1.00
S M Von Wagenen	1.00
Mrs E Holcombe	1.00
—— Nogal, N Mex	1.00
Clifford Edwards	1.00
C E H	1.00
W C T U, Dassel, Minn	1.00
Earle M Stone	1.00
Primary Class, Presby S S, Saline, Mich	1.00
Mrs Sarah Thomas	1.00
Miss Jessie F White	1.00
J W W	1.00
M E R	1.00
E H	1.00
Forbes Davidson	1.00
Marion Bruce	1.00
Mrs Caroline Hensi	1.00
Mrs M Christen	1.00
M Florence Griffiths	1.00
Wm L Ryder	1.00
Mrs E J Moses	1.00
Mrs J B Koontz	1.00
A J Kramer	1.00
Mrs R Wiesjahn	1.00
Mac Claughry	1.00
W C Hartman	1.00
A E Brown	1.00
Mrs Rose Ottinger	1.00
Miss Henriette Greenleaf	1.00
Mary Huntington	1.00
Mrs G Cochran	1.00
Miss H W Green	1.00
J M Schappell	1.00
Mrs Lottie J Wolf	1.00
Mrs T E Collins	1.00
W O Tretheway	1.00
Mary A Brainard	1.00
Henry Wisenbarn	1.00
Mrs J N Goodrich	1.00
Mrs M J Haymond	1.00
Rev Joseph D Matthews	1.00
Mrs C A Worthen	1.00
Jennie E Catlin	1.00
Mrs J J Wilson	1.00
Mrs Annie Mingard	1.00
Miss Eva Stevenson	1.00
C E Winterstein	1.00
Isaac G Ryals	1.00
Miss A Thatcher	1.00
Miss Frances & Wm Tate	1.00
W H Smith	1.00
Elizabeth DeBlois	1.00
Miss Alice Gatchell	1.00
Mr John Burgess	1.00
Monroe Small	1.00
G C Morgan	1.00
Friend, N Adams, Mass	1.00
O C Borth	1.00
In His Name, Portland, Me	1.00
J H Mercer	1.00
Mrs M A Brice	1.00
Alice Swearingen	1.00
A P Putnam	1.00
Louis C Hessert	1.00
Mrs Geo F Major	1.00
J H Brown	1.00
Miss S E Haskel	1.00
N B Thompson	1.00
Julius Reinhart	1.00
Wm Greenwood	1.00
—— San Antonio, Texas	1.00
James H Patterson	1.00
Mrs G Boujour	1.00
Mrs Christiana Mood	1.00
I B Castleman	1.00
Mrs Maria Doak	$1.00
Friend, Gayhead, N Y	1.00
F G Mortimer	1.00
C H Berger	1.00
David Robertson	1.00
Friend, Vineland, N J	1.00
James Baynes	1.00
Benj. Onigett	1.00
Miss Mary Montgomery	1.00
Y C Rogan	1.00
Mrs G C Beecher	1.00
Friend, East Earl, Pa	1.00
Friend, Ludlow, Mass	1.00
Lydia L Depew	1.00
Mrs S Rockafellor	1.00
Mrs George W Craig	1.00
Mrs R J Kerans	1.00
Mrs W D Montgomery	1.00
T B Cornell	1.00
Mrs N E Lee	1.00
John Drysdale	1.00
Mrs W J Williams	1.00
Horace Robinson	1.00
John Appling	1.00
Fred Muench	1.00
Miss Caroline M Tritschler	1.00
Mrs L A Francis	1.00
Alice Jarrold	1.00
Sarah A Akins	1.00
D C Grimm	1.00
Miss Sarah J Gould	1.00
Miss Margaret E Campbell	1.00
I N Nile	1.00
Mrs L H Watts	1.00
Henry Taylor	1.00
Friend, Alexandria, S Dak	1.00
A D Andrews	1.00
Mrs T J Steedsman	1.00
Mrs John Van Sickle	1.00
R Appeldoorn	1.00
Mrs L M O'Hare	1.00
Rev Owen O Jones	1.00
Mrs R Smith	1.00
Julia A Peck	1.00
Miss Sarah E Watts	1.00
Mrs Herman Hayes	1.00
Mrs Helen M Brown	1.00
Mrs K Cleaver	1.00
Mrs Albert Rathburn	1.00
Mrs S R Emmons	1.00
Caroline Maize	1.00
Mrs C C Lewis	1.00
S W Clifford	1.00
James Mc Henry	1.00
Mrs Mollie Broaddus	1.00
Mrs Jennie D Kaough	1.00
Mrs Anna Winger	1.00
Mrs Robert Johnson	1.00
Mrs C C Fickes	1.00
Wm Tenkington	1.00
Rev G F Boyd	1.00
L M R	1.00
Mrs Mary B Goslee	1.00
M E S S, Berean Cl, Wellsville, Ohio	1.00
Jno F Pearson	1.00
Mrs Jno F Pearson	1.00
Frances E Pearson	1.00
Mrs J W Smith	1.00
Mr C A Sluys	75.00
Subscriber, Gibsonburg, O	4.00
C J Jackson & Family	12.00
Willing Workers Jr E L Ransomville, N Car	1.60
S S, Patagonia, Ariz	6.00
——, Grayville, Ill	12.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

Eat More Butter! Save 2/5 Cost!
Easily made without machine. For explicit directions, send $1.00 to H. G. Torrence, Hilts, Calif.



One Stone on the Road—Two Blows on the Bearings

When the wheel of your car passes over a stone in the road, two savage blows strike the bearings in the wheel hub.

The wheel is suddenly thrust upward, the springs deflect, but no matter how resilient they are, or how quickly they move, the bearing on the end of the axle has already received a terrific jolt.

Above the springs is the heavy car chassis with maybe half a ton of human freight. So when the springs recover, again the force comes down with another thump.

Engineers tell us that these thumps are equal to 1000-lb. blows on the wheel-bearings.

But that isn't all. Little obstructions in the road do not merely jolt the car up and down again. They almost always give it a shove sidewise—rocks, ruts, soft sand, holes in the pavement, car tracks, loose bricks, thank-you-ma'ams all make their contributions to side pressure.

But Timken Bearings are built for this very job. Their conical shape is expressly designed to stand the treacherous side swipes at one and the same instant that they have to meet the upward and downward shocks.

Hard service only demonstrates afresh the quality of Timken Bearings.

To create Timken Quality requires a completely equipped steel plant, tube-mill, heat-treating and carbonizing plants, and machine-shops as well as engineering and metallurgical ability of the highest order.

Doesn't all this increase the value of Timken Bearings? Yes, of course; but high-priced quality is always more economical.

THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING COMPANY
Canton, Ohio

TIMKEN BEARINGS

Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES
W.K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO
WAXTITE

Copyright, 1917, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co

Kellogg's Will Always Maintain Quality

You can be sure of Kellogg's—the original Toasted Corn Flakes—the Flakes that are delicate and thin. Whatever the times or the tendency, the quality of Kellogg's has our pledge and warranty—the finest Corn Flakes possible to produce!

Look for the signature.

W. K. Kellogg

KRUMBLES is Kellogg's all-wheat food.
Every single tiny shred is thoroughly toasted.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JULY 18, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 29. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photograph by Clarence A. Purchase

The yearling calves stand wistfully beneath the fragrant trees,
And one can almost hear them say—"We want our supper, please!"

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

"For Alice's Sake"	$2.00
Amos Elliott	2.00
"In His Name," Walworth, N Y	2.00
P H Dean	2.00
——, Stoneham, Mass	2.00
Mr & Mrs N P Christensen	2.00
L D Post	2.00
Mrs Catharine A Rentz	2.00
Jessie Chapham	2.00
Mrs L M Genger	2.00
Kelly School, Newton, Iowa	2.00
Mrs J P Daur	2.00
Mrs E Eggleston	2.00
Friend, Waupaca, Wisc	2.00
Llano Charge, Texas	2.00
"Dorcas"	2.00
Mrs M E Kratzer	2.00
Reader, Ridge, Mont	2.00
E H & E M Ruggles	2.00
Y P S C E, Cong Ch, Plummer, Ida	2.00
Alice W Hunt	2.00
E S Salmon	2.00
Mrs Marshall	2.00
Nellie Lasher	2.00
Mrs George Young	2.00
Mr R B Stafford	2.00
Mrs E M Hubbert	2.00
C S Manning	2.00
Mrs Rebecca Redington	2.00
Enoch S Spencher	2.00
Primary Class & Teacher, Hope Chapel S S, Salisbury Mills N Y	2.00
Friend, Pikeville, Ky	2.00
Friend, North River, Va	2.00
Grace Boice	2.00
Mary Crawford	2.00
Mrs W G Perry & Family	2.00
Friend, Fitchburg, Mass	2.00
Careful Gleaners M E S S, Scottsburg, N Y	2.00
S A Maloney	2.00
Mrs Mabel Sperry	2.00
Mrs K Reiser	2.00
C H Subscriber, Dunkirk, Wash	2.00
S S Cl, Chicopee Falls, Mass	2.00
Mrs D C Whitehill	2.00
Mrs Amelia Odell	2.00
Mrs M A Hirst	2.00
Elizabeth Markham	2.00
Mrs E B Alexander	2.00
Mrs R A Keene	2.00
Friend, Windsor, Vt	2.00
Old Subscriber, Pomona, Calif	2.00
Mrs James Smith	2.00
Miss A L Masters	2.00
R H MacDade	2.00
W S Pitts	2.00
Mrs Viola J H Thorne	2.00
Dr & Mrs S J Harris	2.00
Mrs H A Perry	2.00
J H & Kathaleen Graham	2.00
——, W Union, Pa	2.00
Mrs J G Carleton	2.00
M E Montgomery	2.00
Friend, Rhinelander, Wisc	2.00
Mother & Daughter, Manitou, Okla	2.00
Mr & Mrs A T Ostrom	2.00
Mrs G W Berry	2.00
Subscriber, Wyoming, N Y	2.00
Mrs E J Fritts	2.00
R E Burns	2.00
Wilbur L Avery	2.00
Friend, Oma, Wisc	2.00
R Barnum	2.00
Miss Clara M Hamer	2.00
Mrs James Dodsworth	2.00
Elsie A Jones	2.00
Mrs J D McLean	2.00
Mary McRoberts	2.00
Miss Lois Blanchard	2.00
Mr & Mrs A L Martin	2.00
Friend, Mineral City, O	2.00
W S Morgan	2.00
S C	2.00
Victor Nordquis	2.00
Mrs Edward Belrose	2.00
Albert Robison	$2.00
Mrs Mary J Hammond	2.00
Mrs H C Thompson	2.00
Subscriber, Canton, O	2.00
Eva H Stiver	2.00
Leota Haldeman	2.00
Ladies Aid, Goshen, Wash	2.00
Mrs Lena Gardner	2.00
A Parsells	2.00
Miss L C Chese	2.00
Mrs D A Rosensteel	2.00
——, Sunbury, Pa	2.00
Ellen Shauck	2.00
A Y Van Eps	2.00
Eva Shephard	1.50
Alice S Warriner	$1.00
"Sister in the Lord"	1.00
Sammy, David & Bobbie	1.00
Friend, Muncy, Pa	1.00
Mrs S A Bacon	1.00
"Friend Mary"	1.00
Lucy L Cassidy	1.00
Fanny E Clarke	1.00
Wm Widmeyer	1.00
Elisabeth Esenwine	1.00
Mrs John Everhart	1.00
Z M Haselton	1.00
Mary G Tucker	1.00
Friend, Ann Arbor, Mich	1.00
Mr & Mrs Benj Knowles	1.00
Mrs L F Oak	$1.00
Mrs Nora Loop	1.00
Rev Giles B Cooke	1.00
Mrs M Gulliver	1.00
Mrs F B Cannon	1.00
S Mock	1.00
Miss Effie Walker	1.00
Friend, Scenery Hill, Pa	1.00
Mrs James Frank	1.00
Friend, Oskaloosa, Iowa	1.00
Mrs Jas Anderson	1.00
Mrs M E Bear	1.00
Mrs E Dunlap	1.00
——, Enfield, N H	1.00
Mrs W C Key	1.00
J M Peck	$1.00
E Matthews	1.00
Allen Peck	1.00
Mrs Guy Wellman	1.00
W B Carter	1.00
Florence Connell	1.00
Bapt Orphanage, Thomasville, N C	1.00
F Liter	1.00
Mrs C C Hildreth	1.00
N C Chandler	1.00
Miss M McConnell	1.00
Mrs Tobias Stickey	1.00
Mrs Geo Franklin	1.00
Mrs Bartholomew	1.00
A D Carpenter	$1.00
R A Hainsher	1.00
Friend, Glens Falls, N Y	1.00
Mrs Myra Harmon	1.00
Adrianna Pennings	1.00
Wilmyra Pennings	1.00
Mrs Silas S Tarr	1.00
I L Dickerson	1.00
Mrs A J Eaton	1.00
M A H	1.00
J T Molloy	1.00
M Lister	1.00
Mrs Alice Houck	1.00
Mrs Jennie Trautvetter	1.00
M C Cottingham	1.00
Margaret Rowlands	1.00
Ref Ch, West Leyden, N Y	$14.50
School children & teachers, Dassel, Minn	11.15
Pearl Hill	3.35
Geo C Newholt	6.00
Frank T Young	4.20
Henry Kinsman	2.40
Henry Ransom	5.25
Sara C McCalvan	.75
Rose Liesh	3.20
W F Goldspohn	4.00
Sympathizers, Roxboro, N C	6.00
W L Kreider	8.00
Spanish Presby Ch, Socorro, N M	2.75
R Hinckley	4.00
E Culpepper	2.75
Pauline Downer	.45

In the Name of the Prince of Peace

THESE are the greatest days the world has ever known in the splendid generosity that has responded to the appeal for the unfortunate sufferers in the European conflict. Never before have the American people shown such a Christ-like sympathy as since the beginning of this war. Their gifts have poured in in a ceaseless stream through many channels, and have been the means of good beyond all reckoning.

The readers of the Christian Herald are "doing their bit" loyally and thoroughly in relieving suffering in all the great centers where the war has brought about the saddest conditions. We believe there was no exaggeration in the statement of Secretary Vickrey of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee, to which we referred lately, that hundreds of thousands of refugees in western Asia alone had been kept alive through the gifts of our Family Circle. And the same can be said truthfully of all the lands through which the tide of sorrow and suffering has flowed during these three years past. It is a great privilege to have a share in the relief of this world-disaster, and to know that the gifts are producing the desired results.

Many of our readers have been giving again and again of their substance, and their splendid example deserves to be recorded. One friend in Peoria, Ill., who had given repeatedly, sent a few days ago a gift of $100 to be applied "for the relief of suffering where it is needed most. In the name of the Prince of Peace." His gift was divided equally among the Belgian sufferers, the Armenians, the Syrians and the Jews of Jerusalem.

Another reader in Maryland, who has been contributing toward the relief work ever since the second month of the war, sent his latest gift of $500 "to be used for the benefit of the starving millions of Syria and Armenia." Today that money is working for the giver in the saving of life and the alleviation of suffering in the territory indicated.

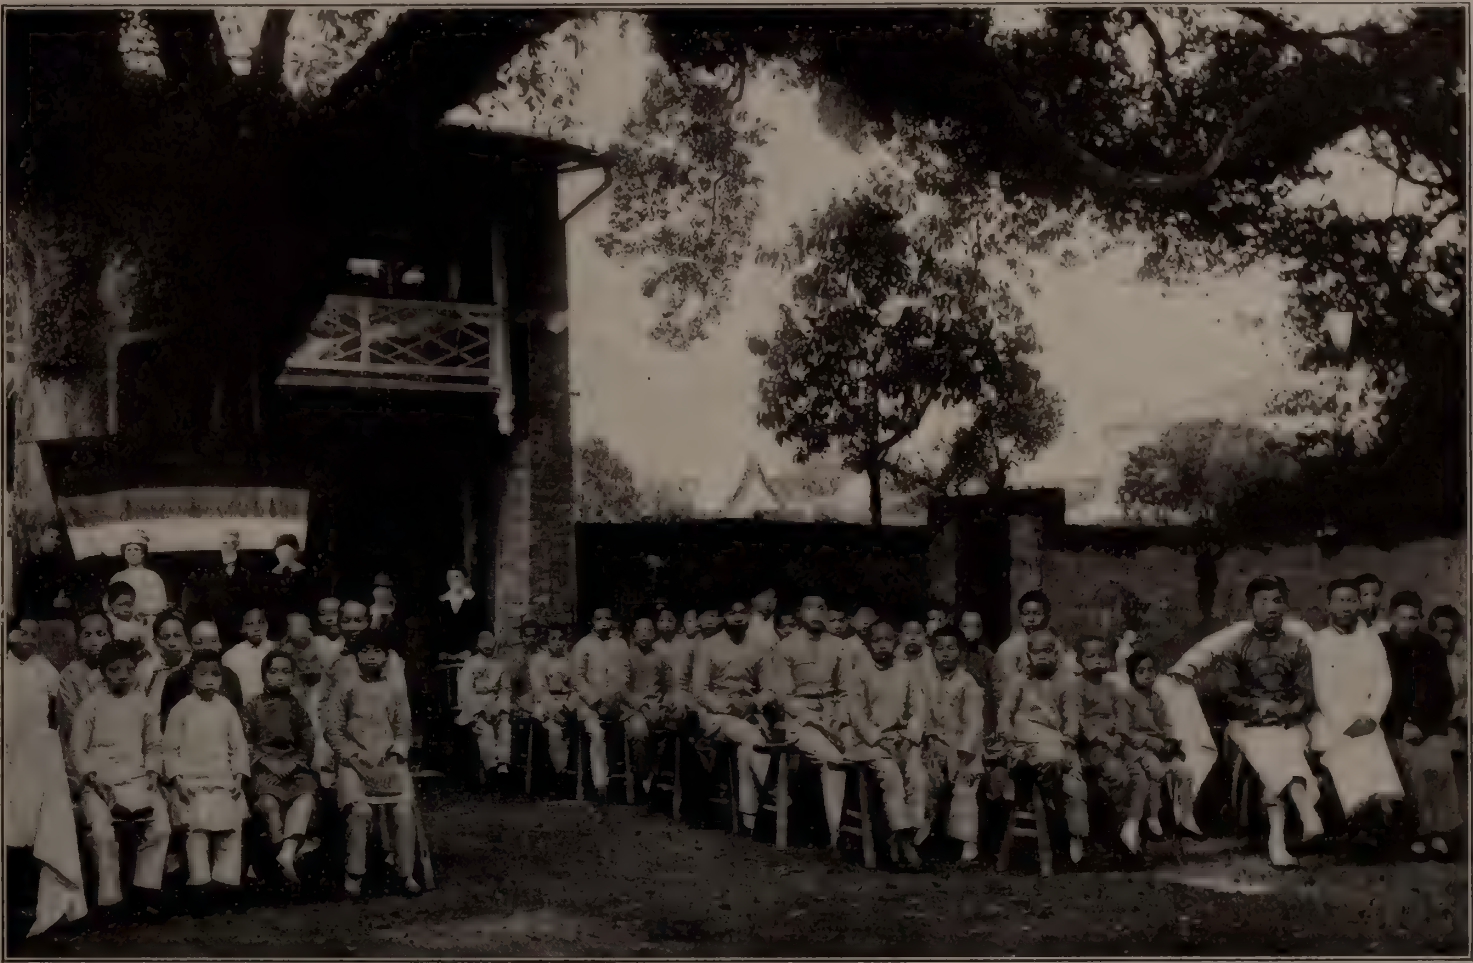
But we appreciate all gifts, large or small, and we confidently look for a great blessing to come from this unexampled generosity.

Address all gifts for relief in any field to The Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of War Widows and Orphans, Room 93, Bible House, New York City.

Fairview S S, N Car	1.50
Jens Petersen	1.50
Mrs H C Norton	1.50
Bessie Nelson	1.50
Helen Hooper	1.50
Rosa Huebner	1.50
Mrs C M Griffin	1.50
C B Moore	1.50
Mrs Blanche McC Landes	1.50
Sarah C Folley	1.50
Virgil, Gurverick	1.50
Mrs E C Kimball	1.50
Mrs H H Shephard	1.00
Mrs R P Smith	1.00
Rev & Mrs George Harrison	1.00
Friend, Campbell, N Y	1.00
Mrs Chas R George	1.00
Miss M H Bradley	1.00
Mrs Bertha Brocken	1.00
Cora J Emig	1.00
Mrs Chas Strong	1.00
Friend, Jersey City, N J	1.00
——, Providence, R I	1.00
Mrs I E Brown Brown	1.00
L E Blaisdell	1.00
Nellie G Hartt	1.00
Mrs R Y Williams	1.00
Mrs W A Clapp	1.00
Mrs S C Lummes	1.00
Mr & Mrs E O Taylor	1.00
Mrs Abram Stull	1.00
Geo H Fuller	1.00
Mr & Mrs A P Zirkle	1.00
H J McIntire	1.00
M M L	1.00
Mrs H R Hoyt	1.00
Mrs J Neymeyer	1.00
Mrs Joseph Wilkinson	1.00
Rev C D Day	1.00
Mrs C F Richardson	1.00
Tudor, Jr, & Donald Charles	1.00
S Purchase	1.00
F A McMains	1.00
Joel Fowler	1.00
Lila Sims	1.00
Mrs Burcham	1.00
——, Greeley, Colo	1.00
Four Friends, Seattle, Wash	1.00
Heis Eversole	1.00
——, Ft. Madison, Ia	1.00
Mrs Sarah E Hastings	1.00
Mr & Mrs E W Wight	1.00
A S Foster	1.00
Friend, Whitewater, Wisc	1.00
Dr B J Stevenson	1.00
W H Mitchell	1.00
Alice C Nogle	1.00
Mary E Eggleston	1.00
Miss A C Ruddick	1.00
Mrs S A P Bryan	1.00
Friend, Morrisville, Vt	1.00
Friend, Lykens, Pa	1.00
E T Dalton	1.00
Sara D Evans	1.00
In His Name, Burt, N Y	1.00
Mrs C M Bosworth	1.00
Caleb Law	1.00
Mrs George M Klonbec	1.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Northup	1.00
B A Pike	1.00
Alvin Elton	1.00
Mrs M E Swain	1.00
C D Wolfe	1.00
Mrs Edw Geist	1.00
J W Hand	1.00
Elfrieda Beahm	1.00
Guy W Gordon	1.00
Wm T Marshall	1.00
Fannie McBratney	1.00
Miss L E Rowe	1.00
Emma Hanna & Mother	1.00
R C Pittis	1.00
——, Harlingen, Texas	1.00
——, Pittsfield, Mass	1.00
——, Lancaster, N H	1.00
Friend, New York City	1.00
Mrs M E Gibson	1.00
——, Beatrice, Nebr	1.00
J H Reid	1.00
Mrs E F N	1.00
Mr & Mrs Wallace M Rhines	1.00
Elinor I Thompson	1.00
Mrs J H Fritsch	1.00
Friend, Lyndonville, N Y	1.00
George Doe	1.00
M B R S	1.00
H E Clifford	1.00
Madeline Hunt	1.00
Sarah Wallace	1.00
Mrs Levi Crawmer	1.00
Mrs O J Dayton	1.00
Mrs Geo B Miller	1.00
Paul I Jordon	1.00
P E Settle	1.00
Chas Tilton	1.00
Mrs A Cross	1.00
Mrs A T Keeler	1.00
Mary Merrill	1.00
W W Arthas	1.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Hughes	1.00
Miss Stafford	1.00
Mrs Anna B Newton	1.00
Wm F Berge	1.00
Lowery B Walker	1.00
Elizabeth Barnes	1.00
Mrs Mattie Anderson	1.00
"Mother," Cheraw, S Car	1.00
Mrs H S Baker	1.00
Mrs G W Buck	1.00
L O Weom	1.00
Mrs Bower	1.00
Mrs Julia A Sweany	1.00
Presby Bible School, Pleasant Valley, Mont	1.00
Carrie A Rouzer	1.00
Mrs Elizabeth Hinkle	1.00
Mrs H E Stuart	1.00
Mrs Stella McMerrelle	1.00
Mrs J Githens	1.00
James Edwards	1.00
S R L	.50
Clyde Fowler	.50
Charles Huestes	.50
Ruby McArtney	.50
Friend, Westminster, S C	.50
Mrs J W Davies	.50
Miss Mary J Hensley	.50
L M	.50
Josephine White's S S Cl., Wolverino, Mich	.50
Miss Loo Bryan	.25
Mrs Hannah E Merriam	.50
Mrs Anna Hanson	.25
Friend, Alexander, Iowa	.25
Edna Pennings	.25
Mr & Mrs A L Holmes	8.00
Mt View Bapt Ch, Bristol, Tenn	8.00
F G Patton	7.50
Mrs J M Shumaker	6.00
Friends, Dwight, Ill	6.00
Womens' Missy Union, Eugene, Ore	7.00
Union S S, Murtaugh, Idaho	45.70
B T MacAlpine	1.20
—— Petersburg, Texas	43.50
Mr J G Clotzbah	8.00
Mrs A S Cruson	1.10
Mrs Frances Campbell	1.25
Mrs D F Whitmore	.75
Mrs Emma C Hendra	.60
Mrs Margaret B Parkyn	1.80
Mr James Rumney	4.00
Mr John Prindle	7.00
Mrs J D Vandeman	1.25
Mrs M F Walker	4.00
Prof Geo A Williams	4.00
E A H	3.50
C H Ohr	2.25
James E Perry	9.40
Friend, Canton, Ohio	8.00
Robert Steele	7.25
Presby Adult Bible Cl, Berwick, Pa	13.50
Thomas C Elder	3.20
Church of God, Alverton, Pa	20.50
Mrs M L Bolles	.75
John P Moris	11.00
Mrs M Y Kendrick	8.00
Cumberland Ch, Jasper, Tenn	2.05
Friend, Paterson, N J	.35
Mrs Wm Maltas	$2.65
Mrs H M Crow	1.25
Mrs Sarah M Boothly	2.10
Thos Hill	1.75
"Friends, O B R"	10.50
Mrs Fannie E Mock	.67
A S Ellenberger	7.00
P M Holst	6.50
John Reiber	2.75
John Peterson	4.50
J A Robe	1.25
C J Pfautsch	.65
W C Tate	1.66
Geo E Farley	2.35
The Mason's, Laurel, Dela	7.50
Bethany Union S S, Upland, Calif	3.25
Mrs Sadie Kendall	.40
W T Dudgeon	5.25
Mrs James Marsh	2.25
Mrs Tom Kinard	.75
Geo Machlet	.70
J O Messerly	2.30
Geo Ravn	11.70
Oscar B Berg	6.75
John Kumrie	8.00
W H Symons	2.65
Wm T Weaver	8.57
Miss Edith S Hunter	1.65
Wood & Sampler	.65
—— Darlington, Pa	.70
Mrs H S Sechrist	.65
F A Kellman	16.00
La Clede, Ill	.10
Myrtle, Beulah, Louisa, Caroline & Henry Davis	4.00
Geo Mackie	4.00
W J Tripp	6.00
Mrs P L B	21.00
J A M Blackburn	7.65
Lola Griffith	2.65
Mrs John Ashton	1.92
Mary Stuart Butler	.75
M E S S, Langley, Wash	12.00
PrinceGeorgeCircuit, Va	7.25
Ella Dickerson	3.35
Robert Cook	7.00
S S Class, Roxboro, N C	7.00
Thru Mennonite Board of Missions & Charities	69.00
Murdo Litch	4.00
I D R	4.00
Mrs F M Atkinson	1.25
Friend, Passaic, N J	50.00
Mrs C Martin	25.00
J H Smith	20.00
M Moon	20.00
Mrs Josh Forster	15.00
Reader, Herman, Minn	15.00
J E Bergdall	15.00
Mrs C Cox & Family	15.00
Mrs Addie B Lyon	15.00
Wm H Gray	10.00
"Aksala"	10.00
Mrs. Milton Carpenter	10.00
Peter Hamilton	10.00
Subscriber, G	10.00
Frank E Hoffman	10.00
Mr & Mrs Owner & Mrs J R Boersma	10.00
Mrs Alma Clark	10.00
D A Glenn	10.00
A S Ritzman	10.00
Wm Mitchamore	10.00
—— Spartanburg, S Car	10.00
Dr C V Beaver	10.00
Mrs Nancy M Moses	10.00
G W Carpenter	10.00
Mr John S Frank	10.00
H S Hodil	10.00
Ira E Rohrer	10.00
H Schmidt	10.00
J O Hunter	10.00
Mrs M M Pillsbury	10.00
Franklin C Patton	10.00
Mrs John Groher	10.00
Irena S Corfman	10.00
Miss I T Winans	10.00
—— San Pedro, Calif	10.00
Mrs Chas Knautz	10.00
Mrs Geo Whited	10.00
Alvey H Yessler	10.00
Friend, Trowbridge, Calif	10.00
Katharine Neardsley	10.00
Wm Chaplin	10.00
Subscriber, Bridgewater, Va	5.00
Lydia V Joseph	5.00
Richard Bliss	5.00
J F D	5.00
J W Madden	5.00
R R Rohr	5.00
Eva Smith	5.00
Mrs Mary E Fitzpatrick	5.00
Mrs J A Kimler	5.00
L R Vibbard	5.00
Mrs J H Swan	5.00
Mrs Wm Lyons	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME



This camphor tree is nineteen feet in girth and is 400 years old. It was purchased for $420, Mexican, from a Chinese who had purchased it from the Government. It was to have been cut down and used for shipbuilding. The tree is historic, being mentioned in the history of Fukien. After its purchase it was named the Hartwell Camphor Tree. The fine-looking boys at the right in the picture are boys from the Christian Herald Homes who are attending the Manual Training School

Soul and Body Salvage in China

A Record of Splendid Results Among the Orphans at Our Industrial Homes

LESS than ten years ago a little consecrated and very bright and zealous American missionary, Miss Emily S. Hartwell, resolved to dedicate her life to the uplift of the orphan children of China. She had already had experience among the famine orphans and knew of the widespread work which the Christian Herald had begun during the suffering that followed the great visitations of flood and famine in that country. With the help of a few associates she began work on a modest scale near Foochow, Fukien Province. Little by little, under loving hands, the work grew. The divine blessing rested upon it from the very beginning, and today it is a wonderful illustration of what self-sacrificing effort, in His name, can be made the means of accomplishing.

Something over a year ago it was decided to incorporate the Fukien Homes in the United States, in order to put them on a permanent footing, and also that the American interest might be represented in the Board of Managers. This has now been accomplished, and the Homes are today incorporated under the laws of the State of Connecticut, the official name being The Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes, Incorporated. In the constitution adopted the objects are declared to be "to extend a helping hand to orphan, homeless and unfortunate Chinese children, by giving them at Foochow, Fukien Province, China, a literary and industrial education, under Christian influence." The institution is interdenominational; it is managed by a Board of Trustees chosen annually, and any contributor of $5 and upward is eligible for membership on the society of incorporators. The first meeting under the new incorporation was held in New York City, June 26, when three trustees were elected, viz.: Rev. George S. Miner, Miss Emily S. Hartwell and the Editor of the Christian Herald.

OUR correspondent, Maynard Owen Williams, who lately visited the Christian Herald Industrial Homes in Foochow, gives a glowing report of their progress. "The immediate need in China," he writes, "is economic development, but too few mission schools consider this in planning courses. Seven years ago this orphanage had thrown upon it the task of caring for 200 children. The training given to these children varies according to their talents. I went to Foochow College, to the Anglo-Chinese College, to St. Mark's College and to several girls' schools, and found orphans who have been supported by American friends through the Christian Herald, standing well in their academic classes and doing creditable work. But these were the picked students from a much larger number, and to keep their places in the mission schools they have to maintain a high average and show real aptitude for intellectual work. One boy and girl in three is given academic training during full time; others during half the day, with practical work the rest of the time.

"The Chinese appreciate what the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes are doing. The Civil Governor's office contributes $3,600 Mexican a year toward their support; the Salt Commissioner's office, $200 a month; the Treasurer's office and the Police nearly $1,000 more annually, and prominent Chinese are giving generously of their money and their personal attention. A Christian institution, originally opened and supported by Christian Herald readers, has done so well that the Chinese themselves have assured permanent support to 200 orphans. The question now is how to keep this institution thoroughly Christian and to maintain it at such a standard as it has had in the past."

Of the founder of this remarkable work Mr. Williams writes: "Miss Emily Hartwell is the livest wire I have met in my travels. She is a born organizer, and when she was confronted with the problem of hundreds of starving Manchu women whose support had been cut off, and who faced a life of shame as the only way out, she taught them weaving and made scores of them self-supporting and independent. She is directing the work of the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes. She has raised large sums of money among the Chinese, and she hopes not only to retain all the American patrons who have made this enterprise possible by their contributions, but to increase the number. Besides, she wants America to send her a man, trained in industrial work, who can not only teach self-support to the orphans in these homes, but who can make a contribution to the wealth and exports of China and maintain the institution on a Christian basis. For seven years Christian Herald readers have been training these orphans in industrial work, and there are now a number of young men who, feeling a debt of gratitude to the Homes, will stand ready to assist any worker who is sent out from America. He will find a trained corps of assistants awaiting him on his arrival.

"MISS HARTWELL, who has worked with Mr. Hubbard of the American Board Mission in all her plans, hopes to establish a fine industrial plant at Pagoda Anchorage, which is at the head of the portion of the river which is navigable in ocean ships. Across the river, where its cinders and smoke cannot hurt the lacquer work, the new railway is to pass. Ocean-going steamers can take on cargo within a stone's throw of the proposed plant. There are several good buildings on the land, and all that is needed is a director for the work. The Chinese will support the orphans, but it seems best from the Christian standpoint to have the director a Christian and a foreigner, who will not be afraid to give his best ideas to the boys. This director is the American gift which Miss Hartwell asks from America, through the Christian Herald.

"The Chinese government is initiating industrial courses and is securing industrial teachers from the Philippines. Not only will the government plans not interfere with such a project as Miss Hartwell

Continued on next page

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

IV. The "Times of the Gentiles" and the Impending Judgments

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

OUR fourth Mountain Peak of Prophecy leads us away temporarily from the history of the Jew to that of the Gentile.

The word "Gentile" is commonly used in the Bible as synonymous with the word "nations." It distinguishes all the other nations of the world from the one nation of Israel, which God had chosen for a particular purpose in connection with the redemption of the human race. What this purpose was and is, we defined in our second article in this series, entitled "God's Covenant with Abraham."

It ought to be said here that now, and hereafter in this series, We use the name "Israel" interchangeably with "Judah," as indicating the descendants of Abraham after the flesh. The division of the original kingdom of Israel into two kingdoms, mentioned in our last article, is no longer necessary to be kept in view, because in the restoration the two are again to be brought together in one (Isa. 11 : 12, 13; Hos. 1 : 11); and even now they are so blended as to be indistinguishable to the human eye.

It was God's purpose that Israel should be an independent nation and, because of his peculiar relation to her, necessarily dominant in the affairs of earth. But this position of privilege she forfeited by her disobedience and iniquity, as indicated in our last article on "God's Covenant with David." In chastisement upon her, God withdrew his directing and protecting care from her in a national capacity at a certain period in time past, and transferred the authority and power incident thereto into the hands of the Gentiles. This period was about 600 B. C., when Nebuchadnezzar was on the throne of Babylon, the record of the transfer being found in Jeremiah 27 and Daniel 2.

II

THIS is the story of Jeremiah 27: Judah is as yet located in her own land, but the hour of her captivity is near at hand, though she refuses to believe God's prophet when he tells her so.

In the meantime, Babylon has risen to great power in the East, and is aspiring to world-dominion, with covetous eyes upon the control of the Mediterranean Sea. Like all her successors, she realizes this to be the key to the problem.

But to control the Mediterranean, Babylon must subjugate the smaller nations lying in the path of it, which are Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre and Sidon, all of which are contiguous to Judah. Last, but not least, she must subjugate Judah also.

The nations thus named are not ignorant of her purpose, and at the opening of our chapter we find them, by their representatives, in international council assembled in the city of Jerusalem. Zedekiah, king of Judah, doubtless is presiding over them.

We can imagine them discussing ways and means. "Preparedness" is their theme. An alliance or a coalition is proposed by them to withstand the oncoming of the conqueror.

But, speaking after the manner of men, God seizes upon the occasion of their meeting to send his prophet to them with a message both in word and symbol. Jeremiah is to make himself "bonds and yokes," or "bands and bars," and put them upon his neck. It appears that he is to make duplicates of them also, and send them to the kings of the countries represented in the conclave. They are to be sent to them by the hands of their representatives at the conclave.

And with these "bonds and yokes" is to go a message to the effect that God has made the earth and the man and beast upon it, and that he has given it to whom it seemed right in his sight. "And now," he adds, "have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, my servant. . . . And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the time of his own land come. . . . And it shall come to pass that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar . . . that nation will I punish . . . until I have consumed them by his hand."

These same words Jeremiah communicates to Zedekiah, king of Judah, saying, "Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live."

The sequel we know. Turning a deaf ear to the prophet of the Lord, Judah and her king went their own way. And that way was into Babylonian captivity for seventy years. Nay, more; it was into captivity to the Gentiles from that day until this, as Daniel 2 more clearly predicts and reveals.

III

TURNING to Daniel 2, we find that while the allies are conferring in Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar is dreaming in Babylon. But by morning he has forgotten his dream, and its meaning remains a mystery until Daniel is enlightened from above to reveal it to him.

He had seen a colossal metal image, with head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron and feet part of iron and part of clay. A stone, cut out without hands, smote the image upon its feet and brake them in pieces. Then were the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and the wind carried them away. Then "the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."

The interpretation of the dream was this: The image represented the Gentile dominion in the earth from the time of Nebuchadnezzar, i.e., about 600 B.C., down to the end of this age, when Israel shall be restored to her old place, and when the kingdom of God, otherwise the kingdom of David and the Son of David, Jesus Christ, shall be set up on its ruins.

The four different metals of the image represented four world-empires, among which Gentile dominion would be divided in all this time. The head of gold was Babylon; the breast and arms of silver were the Medo-Persian empire; the belly and thighs of brass were Greece, and the legs and feet of iron were Rome; not papal Rome of course, but political Rome.

The two legs of iron represent the two halves into which the Roman Empire was divided hundreds of years ago; the eastern half with its capital at Constantinople, and the western half with its capital at Rome.

The ten toes represent ten separate kingdoms or nations, into which these two halves of the empire will be divided at the end of this age. The iron represents the monarchical power in those kingdoms or nations, and the clay the democratic power. The two elements "mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave to one another, even as iron is not mixed with clay.

"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed." In other words, when the Roman Empire shall be found in the form indicated, ten kingdoms, partly monarchic and partly democratic, Gentile dominion is doomed, and the day of Israel, or rather the day of the Lord on this earth, begins.

The stone strikes the image, indicating a collision of some kind between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of men. Doubtless this is that judgment on the Gentile nations of the time indicated by the battle of Armageddon in Revelation 16, and foreshadowed in the parable of the sheep and the goats (Matthew 25).

The collision destroys the image, and brings Gentile dominion to an end. This does not mean the destruction of all the individuals on the earth, but the destruction of those nations as nations, thus affording an opportunity for the coming in of that Kingdom of God which "shall stand forever."

Soul and Body Salvage in China

Continued from preceding page

has in mind, but the graduates of the Fukien Industrial Homes will find ready employment in the government schools as industrial supervisors."

The site of the Fukien Homes is a most suitable one, affording ample space for dormitories, schools, industrial training shops and other buildings of various kinds. It is a very hive of activity, and the progress made within the last two years has amazed even the Chinese themselves.

IN a recent letter Miss Hartwell wrote: "I am constantly approached by leading Chinese, begging Americans to come to the help of China industrially, at this time. Our immediate need is some thoroughly equipped American to take charge of the industrial work in the Homes. May God open the way for the Christian Herald to lead in this work. Influential leaders in the Foochow Chamber of Commerce are doing their utmost to interest financial help for our industrial plans, and if the Christian Herald will send us a thoroughly trained, technical man to superintend our work at Pagoda Anchorage, the greatest opportunity of the age may be met, for the development of this industrial power is of vital concern to all interested in Christian growth in China.

"During the past year we have received a little over $4,000 (Mex.) from Chinese sources, of which $1,200 has come from the government and $1,200 from the Salt Bureau. The high officials looked into the industrial exhibit with great care, and expressed unfeigned pleasure at the work of the Homes on all lines. The Homes will certainly become a wonderful institution and a glory to Christian Herald patrons.

"Had not the Christian Herald come to the front to help us in the initial period of this work for the destitute children of Fukien, it would simply have been impossible for the Homes to have been opened. Years of experience have brought the Homes to such a stage of advancement through the interest and gifts enlisted from Chinese sources, that we now come to the Christian Herald Family with the hope that they will be able to help inaugurate an advance in the work, and to place the Fukien Industrial Homes in a position of security, which will make them an example to the entire Chinese nation. Now is the accepted hour for China. The winning and preserving the sympathy of one quarter of the human race is of vital importance."

It need hardly be added that a dominant feature in the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes is the religious training which all pupils alike receive. The results of such training in those mission schools in China, where children have been supported by Christian Herald patrons for a series of years, has surpassed all expectations. A very considerable proportion of the pupils have become noble Christian men and women. A number have qualified for higher studies and are now pastors, evangelists, teachers and Bible women; while those who were not so qualified have in almost every instance been brought up to a point of skill and proficiency in some calling or industry that will assure them of self-support. Some are farming with excellent results, while others are engaged in various trades. A large percentage are Christian converts. The whole experience has been one of rich blessing and proves the investment of American patrons to have been a very wise one indeed.

Pastor Philip S. S. Yu, the Chinese Chairman of the Christian Herald Fukien Industrial Homes, while in America last year, as delegate from the Methodist Church at Foochow to the General Conference, in company with Bishop Lewis visited the Christian Herald offices in New York. The two explained fully the conditions and prospects of the Homes. Pastor Yu is not only the Chinese Chairman of the Homes Board, but is also on the Finance Committee, together with Mr. Nga. The Pastor has rendered distinguished service for the Homes in securing aid from the authorities under Governor Hsu, and from the Salt Bureau and many of the gentry of Foochow. He represents the higher class of Chinese leaders who are associated with the missionaries on the Board of Managers.

We trust that the readers of the Christian Herald will respond generously to the need of this great China orphan work, and that the Fukien Homes may soon have a competent instructor to carry on the enterprise toward self-support. Elsewhere in this issue (pages 768 and 769) we reproduce a number of photographs showing the activities of the Industrial Homes, which pictures were received from China on the same day on which the incorporation was completed in the United States.

The Heart of Home

OH, Home is a wonderful thing!
In all the world so wide
There's never a place
With half the grace
Of the spot where our own abide!
And always we see it clear,
Wherever we may roam,
For Home is the Heart
Of the world's great mart—
And Love is the Heart of Home!

Oh, hard may the struggle be,
Against the wind and tide;
The waves may dash,
And the thunders crash,
As the world's rough sea we ride:
But ever we gain toward shore,
Where a light shines over the foam,
And Love's own strength
Shall win at length,
For Love is the Heart of Home!

MINNIE LEONA UPTON.

Peanuts and "Cannon Balls"

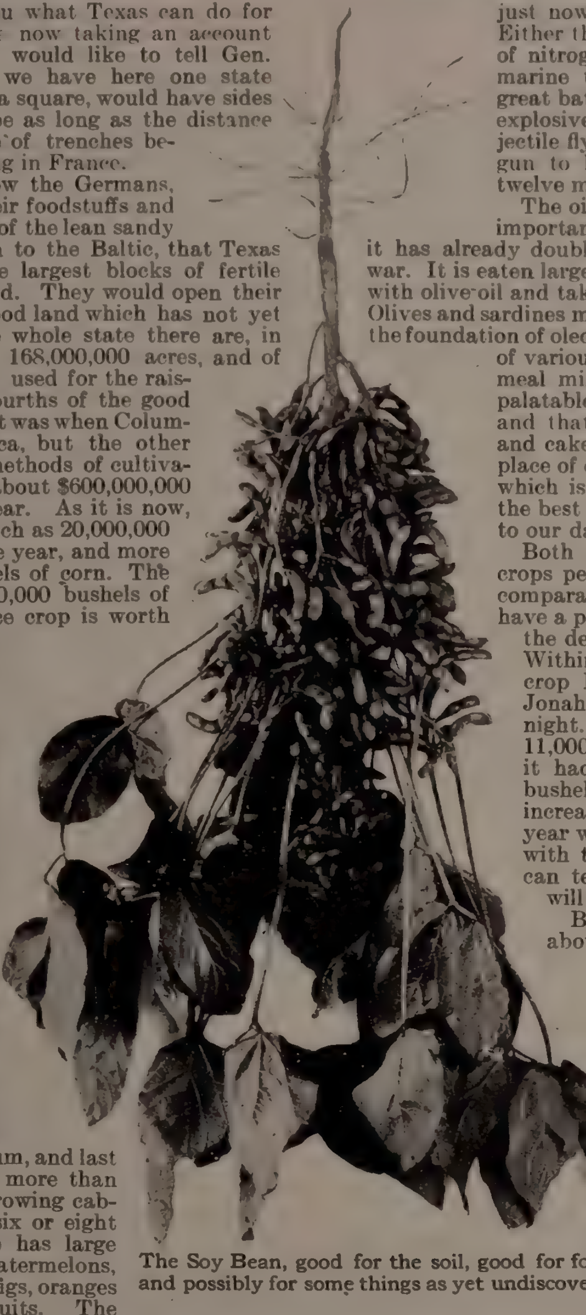
Southern Crops Which Greatly Aid Our Food Supply and Help Make Texas Prosperous

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

I WANT to tell you what Texas can do for the war. We are now taking an account of our assets. I would like to tell Gen. Hindenburg that we have here one state which, if crowded into a square, would have sides each of which would be as long as the distance from Berlin to the line of trenches behind which he is fighting in France.

I should like to show the Germans, who are mobilizing their foodstuffs and scratching a living out of the lean sandy plains that slope down to the Baltic, that Texas alone has some of the largest blocks of fertile land known to the world. They would open their eyes at the extent of good land which has not yet been plowed. In the whole state there are, in round numbers, about 168,000,000 acres, and of this 120,000,000 can be used for the raising of crops. Three-fourths of the good land in Texas is just as it was when Columbus discovered America, but the other fourth, with slipshod methods of cultivation, has been raising about $600,000,000 worth of crops every year. As it is now, Texas has grown as much as 20,000,000 bushels of wheat in one year, and more than 150,000,000 bushels of corn. The state has raised 40,000,000 bushels of oats in a year. Its rice crop is worth $10,000,000 and upward, and it can easily be doubled. The state is now going in for peanuts, which promises to be one of the most profitable products of the south. There is a girl here who grew 11,000 pounds of these nuts on one acre, and in addition she had over two tons of peanut hay, which is as good as alfalfa.



The Soy Bean, good for the soil, good for fcod, and possibly for some things as yet undiscovered

Texas can raise almost any fruit and vegetable, and she will put up enough canned stuff in 1917 to fill a railroad train from Dallas to New Orleans. She has been shipping 70,000 carloads of fruits and vegetables per annum, and last year these were worth more than $40,000,000. She is growing cabbages at the rate of six or eight tons to the acre. She has large tracts in onions and watermelons, and has begun to raise figs, oranges and other tropical fruits. The great winter garden tract is along the gulf coast running from the Mexican boundary to the north. In the valley of the Rio Grande there is said to be an area of 400,000 acres of the best sugar land of the world.

Texas has almost twice as many cattle as any other state in the Union. It has more than 6,000,000, and 5,000,000 of these are raised for their meat.

THE live stock industry is passing from an era of big ranches to one of stock farms. There are still ranches of hundreds of thousands of acres, several which contain a million acres and upward, but a number of these are being cut down into large and small farms. The pastures are being fenced and the stock farmer is taking the place of the cowman. The value of the stock is increasing, and a great number of finely bred animals are being imported. Texas now has large herds of Shorthorns and Herefords, and it is also bringing in the big-humped bulls of India to better the stock. The farmers are putting up silos. They have live stock associations and they are largely increasing the meat supply.

A big dairy industry is growing up. The state has more than a million milch cows. It has over a hundred creameries and it is now producing something like 65,000,000 pounds of butter a year. Of this the greater part is used at home, and the state imports about 35,000,000 pounds of butter as well. With the conservation of foodstuffs and the development of industry now going on these imports should be cut off, for the butter can be raised here at home.

WHO would ever think of a peanut or soy bean in connection with our munitions plants? They seem as far apart as Cape Horn and Alaska. Nevertheless, the war has brought them together and just now they are thicker than thieves. Either the bean or the nut, in the shape of nitroglycerin, may sleep in the submarine torpedo which is to destroy a great battleship, or it may be part of an explosive that will send a half-ton projectile flying forth from the mouth of a gun to land on the enemy's trenches twelve miles away.

The oil from the peanut also forms an important part of our food supply, and it has already doubled in value on account of the war. It is eaten largely in France, where it competes with olive-oil and takes the place of butter and lard. Olives and sardines may be packed in it, and it forms the foundation of oleomargarine and artificial butters of various kinds. We now find that the meal mixed with white flour makes a palatable and highly nutritious bread, and that it may be used for crackers and cakes. Peanut butter can take the place of cow's butter; and peanut meal, which is a by-product of the oil, makes the best of stock food and adds thereby to our dairy and meat supplies.

Both the peanut and soy bean are crops peculiar to the south. They are comparatively new and both promise to have a place close to cotton and corn in the developments of the near future. Within the past few years the peanut crop has been growing faster than Jonah's gourd, which sprang up in a night. At the last census it was 11,000,000 bushels, and five years later it had jumped to about 40,000,000 bushels. There has been an enormous increase since then. The crop last year was worth over $40,000,000, and with the high prices of today no one can tell what the crop of this year will sell for.

Before the war we were importing about 45,000,000 pounds of nuts and 1,300,000,000 gallons of peanut oil from Hamburg, Delft and Marseilles. The nuts brought almost $2,000,000 and the oil was valued at about $900,000. The oil was used mostly for the making of butterine and other lard substitutes. The war shut off these imports, and in 1915 the manufacture of peanut oil was taken up on a large scale. The production in 1916 was 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 gallons. We now have the additional demand for munitions, and it will probably be doubled this year. The peanut is being grown commercially in all of the states of the south with the exception of Kentucky. The most important states are Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Texas.

Down here in Texas the area planted to peanuts is rapidly increasing. Two years ago it was only 30,000 acres. Last year it was over 200,000 acres, and this year the farmers say that the crop will be 100,000 acres more. The same is true of other parts of the south. In 1909 the production of the whole country was about 20,000,000 bushels, and it was almost double that in 1915. This year we shall raise more than 50,000,000 bushels of peanuts, and the prospect is that this is only the beginning of an industry which will run into the hundreds of millions of bushels per annum, and will have a money value that will compare favorably with the greatest crops of the Union. The Texas farmers tell me that peanuts and cotton, acre for acre, as far as the value of the crops is concerned, are now running neck and neck, with the chances in favor of the peanut.

THE Texas industrial congress is offering rewards for the best yields of peanuts raised after its directions. The chief prize last year was won by a girl of fourteen. She raised 230 bushels of nuts and more than two tons of hay on one acre of ground. She received a prize of $300 in cash and in addition several hundred dollars from the sale of her nuts and the hay. I have the record of a man who grew 2,600 bushels on 125 acres and made a profit of over $5,000. He sold his nuts at $1.25 a bushel. He had in addition 50 tons of hay, for which he got $15 a ton, and the hogs which he fattened on the vines and the roots brought him $1,350.

During my stay here I have visited one of the largest peanut oil mills of the south. It has a capacity of something like 2,000,000 bushels per season, and I am told that there are ten other plants in Texas that can do quite as much. The origin of the peanut oil industry in this part of the United States started with this mill. It came about through the experiments of Mr. D. S. Cage, a broker of Houston, who was shipping cotton and rice to the north. Mr. Cage was the owner of a cottonseed oil mill. He visited it one day and found that the farmers who had gathered about were discussing the crop situation. One of them was cursing Texas and saying it was no place for a white man. He said he could get no money for his crops and it did not pay to farm.

Hereupon Mr. Cage broke in: "What is the matter with you? I am paying you good prices for your cotton and rice; am I not?"

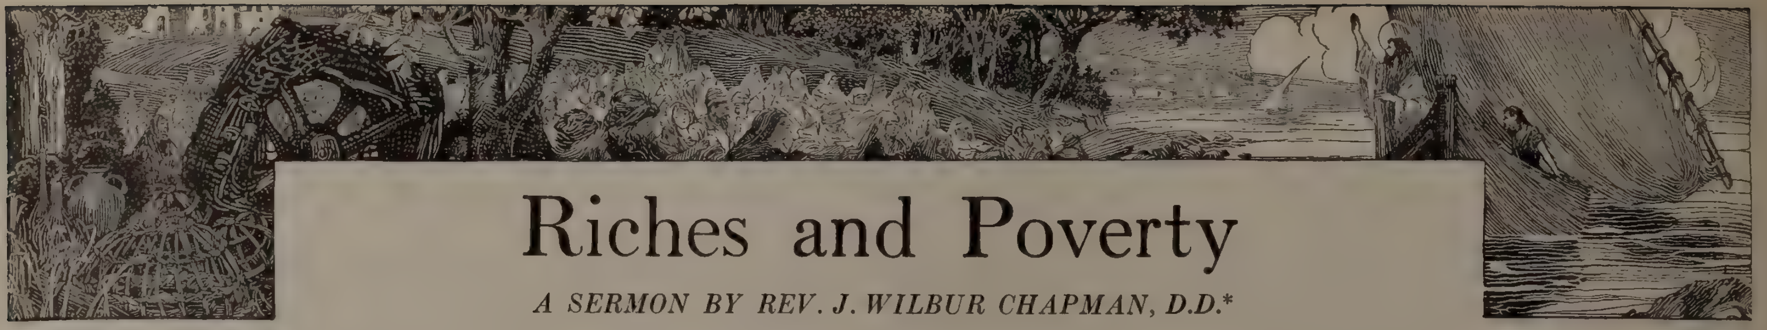
"Yes, but I ain't made no cotton and I ain't raised no rice. I have been planting goobers. The peanuts grow all right, but I can't give them away."

"Well," rejoined Mr. Cage, "if you'll bring your peanuts to the mill here, I'll pay you 50 cents a bushel for all you have and you can tell your neighbors to do the same."

I continue the story as Mr. Cage told it to me. Said he:

Continued on page 778

Humped Cattle from India imported into Texas to replace the longhorn of the fast passing ranges



Riches and Poverty

*A SERMON BY REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.

TEXT—Luke 12:21. "Not rich toward God."

IF YOU can picture an arch without a keystone, a building of striking proportions without a foundation, the sky without a single star to light it up, a life without hope for the present or the future, and a soul without life stretching out into the eternity, you will have in these things a suggestion of what it means for a man to be rich in fields, in abundant harvests, and in great barns, and yet poor toward God.

It is a sad thing to be possessed of so many virtues and still fail. Naaman was rich "but" he was a leper, and he is a picture of many people who live in modern times, possessed of many things, but lacking the one thing which is essential to peace and happiness here, and unutterable joy throughout eternity.

Dives was rich. He was clad in purple and fine linen. He fared sumptuously every day. His servants answered every toss of his head, every motion of his hand, "but" in spite of all these things he was lost, and in hell, being in torment, with the memory of his riches on earth making his poverty in the abode of the lost more striking, he begged for a drop of water to cool his parching tongue. The young ruler was winsome, fair of feature and splendid in his attractiveness. Even Jesus Himself looking upon him admired him, "but" he was lacking in the one thing that would make his life complete and make it also to be worth while.

These are striking illustrations of the man of whom the text speaks. He had great fields, spacious barns and means with which to build larger ones, wonderful harvests, the like of which he had never had before, and yet "he was not rich toward God."

Our Lord was in the midst of one of his most wonderful discourses. The crowd thronging him on every side was great indeed. Men trod one upon the other in their eagerness to see Him and to catch every syllable which fell from His lips. His message was a great one; indeed, all His words were great, for He spake with authority, and He better than any one else knew the need of His hearers, and on this particular occasion His message was specially needed, because He was saying, "beware of hypocrisy." He was announcing to the people that what had been spoken in the darkness would one day be spoken in the light. I one day had a striking illustration of this in my own home. I was using an old-fashioned phonograph which we had in the house, and to interest my children I was putting on the instrument some old-fashioned cylinder phonographic records, when suddenly, to my great surprise, I heard the voice of their grandfather who had been dead for a number of years. This voice was stilled in one sense, in another it was as clear and vibrant as it had ever been, and it is along this line that Jesus is speaking to the people.

IN His great message He is also urging them to the confession of Himself. One of His hearers had so slight an interest in spiritual matters, and so little appreciation of the power of Jesus' message, and had so much at heart the necessity for redressing a wrong which he thought had been done him, that he broke in on the preaching of Jesus, saying, "Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me."

This interruption, caused by one of the hearers of Jesus, was the occasion of the parable spoken by our Master the theme of which has been given as "The rich fool."

In God's Word three kinds of fools are specially mentioned. The one who saith in his heart, "There is no God" (Ps. 14:1); with every star that studded the sky speaking of God; with every flower lifting up its little head to praise Him; with every bird singing unto Him, and with every living soul that had come in touch with him speaking of His power, still the fool has said,—"There is no God."

Another fool mentioned in the Bible is described in Proverbs 12:15. "The way of a fool is right in his own eyes: but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise." This is the picture of one who is self-centered, has no thought of others, has dismissed the thought of God and is wise in his own conceit.

The third fool mentioned is described in Ecclesiastes 2:14. "The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that one event happeneth to them all." This is a picture of one who walks in darkness when he might travel in the light; who goes forward without a guide when he might have one to direct his every step; who rejects hope and leads a life which ends in despair.

THERE is, however, no greater fool than the man who makes provision for the meeting of physical needs; who clothes his own body and cares for those who are round about him, but who makes no provision for his own soul, and therefore, according to the text, "Is not rich toward God."

1. Not because his crops were abundant; there is no charge against him for that. His great harvests should have driven him to his knees to offer a prayer of thanksgiving, or called upon him to lift up his head and shout, "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

2. Not because he was concerned to care for his harvests, for this indicates that he was a thoughtful man, and he would have been anything but true and faithful as a farmer had he cultivated his fields and then neglected his harvests.

3. He was a fool because he made himself the center of all his reckoning, and it is a striking thing to read the parable through and count the number of personal or possessive pronouns. It has been said that they are used according to the proportion of one in ten. When he found that he had no room where to bestow his fruits, suppose he had said, "I will feed the needy, I will carry to the poor, I will sell my overabundant harvests and give to those in distress," he would have been made glad indeed, and his story would have been worth relating to this day as an encouragement to others. Do not forget that the position which is so often taken by the world, that "what I have is mine," inevitably ends in despair. The Christian position is described with the thought of God in mind,—"Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die," (Ezekiel 18:4), and with the thought of one's self in mind, as indicated in First Corinthians 6:19-20, "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

4. His fatal mistake was made when he said, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up." What a fatal mistake he made, for making his harvests everything he had no memories of good deeds through the years, and so we can quite understand how being in hell he would be in torment. He also made a fatal mistake when he said, "Soul, take thine ease," as if one's soul could be at ease and feed upon chaff.

In his calculations he had forgotten one thing, and that one thing was God. You cannot build a home without God. You may have a house splendidly equipped, but it is not a home. You cannot build a character without God. You may have many elements of strength, but when the testing time comes and the crisis is on, you will find that you have made a fatal mistake to keep out of your character the only thing that could make it strong for time and eternity. You cannot make a journey through life without God, for just at the time when you are in need of counsel, you will cry and no one will hear you; just when the burdens are crushing you, you will look for help which cannot be found. Just when you need God most you will find that you have journeyed on without Him.

THE Bible has something to say about riches,—I mean of course the riches that are worth while. I do not speak of the possession of money, for one may be many times a millionaire and be poor indeed. There are some clear, sharp warnings given to us in the Bible in the consideration of such a theme as this: "There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing: there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches." (Proverbs 13:7.) What a warning this is to the man who neglects the church, forgets God, discounts Jesus Christ, and goes on with his family about him toward despair.

"A faithful man shall abound with blessings: but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent." (Proverbs 28:20.) The word "innocent" in connection with this verse should read "unpunished." What a warning this is to the men who in these over-prosperous days feel that the possession of money is everything, and they literally sell their souls for gold.

"There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt." (Ecclesiastes 5:13.) It is all right to be rich. Some of the greatest men I have ever known have been the richest of men. It is all right to possess a fortune; some of the most Christ-like men I have ever met have had almost unlimited wealth. Gold is harmful when it is kept for its own sake, or when it is hoarded up for the personal pleasure of the one who possesses it. It is worth while when it is sought not only for one's self, but for the good of others, and held not to gloat over, but as a sacred trust to make the lives of others worth while.

The climax of the Bible's warnings regarding riches, however, would seem to me to be my text, "Not rich toward God," a picture of a man who had much and had lost God."

THERE are riches greatly to be desired. These also are described in the Bible, and the great thing about them is that they are within the reach of every one. "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it." (Proverbs 10:22.) One may be as poor as poverty, and have the blessing of God upon his life, and he is rich indeed.

"That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." (First Timothy 6:18.) When we come to the day of final accounting, when the deeds of men are laid bare, when things have been properly estimated as to their worth, not in the light of time, but in the light of eternity, it will then be found that the cup of cold water, a kind word or a song of cheer has meant everything, not only to the one upon whom they were bestowed, but to the giver himself.

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" (James 2:5.) It is great to be rich in faith. Faith gives every cloud a silver lining. Faith enables us to hear songs in the night. Faith so cheers us that we rejoice in the midst of tribulation. Faith gives a clear, undimmed vision of Jesus Christ. Faith packs the Bible with the power of God. Faith enables us to walk in fellowship with patriarchs and prophets. Faith grows clearer and brighter until the perfect day, when faith becomes sight indeed.

THIS man of the text is a great illustration of many a man who lives today, and I give this message in order that he may in his despair at the last be a sharp warning.

1. Not rich when the soul is in need. What a mistaken idea of life so many people have. They build, but when they have come to the end of their building and seek to put on the capstone, it is missing. They climb up and up, and when they think all is well, they have lost their way and there is no guide to help them. They cry, but there comes back to them nothing but the echo of their cry. "Oh, to have no hope, no Saviour, how dark this world would be."

Without Christ, you can—
    Exist—but not live,
    Fight—but not win,
    Build—but never put on the topstone.

It is a sad, sad thing to have a soul and starve it.

> "I need a rest from keen and bitter conflict,
>   From constant striving 'gainst the calls of sin,
> Is there a peace, or rest for one so weary,
>   Where my poor soul can freely enter in?"

2. Not rich when the night comes. "This night thy soul shall be required of thee," and the man's journey is ended; his harvests are gathered, his barns are over-flowing, and he was "not rich toward God." God sometimes gives short notice to his tenants. He bids them move out when they are least prepared to do so. God sometimes speaks unexpectedly; in the midst of life we are in death. We hold our lives without a moment's guarantee. This man provided for his days and forgot his nights. Between today and tomorrow runs the River Night, and there is danger that we may fall into this river and be lost, for the current is swift and we cannot reach the other shore. God speaks and says "Time is up," and therefore all chance is gone. The journey is ended, and as you are now, so you shall be through eternity.

3. Not rich, when time is exchanged for eternity. If I spend my life building a fortune, or gaining fame, and I neglect my soul and the souls of those about me, when the time is up I shall leave all behind me and I shall stand naked and open before Him.

If I spend my life in pleasure, foolishly so called, or in sin,—the wages of which is death, or in selfishness, which is the climax of a wicked life, when the books are opened I shall be hopeless indeed.

IF I spend my life gaining a fortune, and I am trusting Christ, or living for others, or seeking to please God, then the end of the way is peace indeed. To be rich, and not to be rich toward God, is the blackness of darkness of despair. To be rich, and also to be rich toward God, is joy unspeakable.

---

* Dr. Chapman is the lately appointed Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Gaze of the Questioner

SUNDAY, July 22. Jer. 50:5. "They shall inquire concerning Zion with their faces thitherwards." The trouble is that so many people inquire about a thing while their faces are set upon something else. They ask about one way but they are looking another. They are interested in theology but not in religion. They will engage in ecclesiastical controversy, but they will not surrender themselves as vital members of the Church of Christ. They will discuss the psychology of conversion, but they will not turn their feet toward home and seek the Lord with all their minds and hearts. They will study the map, but they have no intention of making the journey. They will read the guide-book, but they are not like travelers whose faces are steadfastly set to go to Jerusalem. They inquire concerning Zion, but their faces do witness against them.

Now that kind of inquiring is fruitless. What is the good of asking questions in one direction while the soul is looking another? For one thing, such a soul does not bring the needful equipment for the apprehension of the truth. A merely curious spirit can never really know the secrets of the Lord. It is one of the conditions of spiritual discovery that the entire strength of mind and heart be brought to the exploration, and that we ask, and seek, and batter away at the closed doors until they open, and we pass from room to room in the ever-brightening rooms of the temple of truth, which is the home of our God. The secret of the Lord is not revealed to a mere debating society; it is unveiled in the holy place where we have built an altar and offered our entire being in holy sacrifice. The man who is only curious is turned empty away. The seriousness or flippancy of our questions will be seen in the fixed direction of our gaze. Are our faces thitherward?

Every minister is acquainted with the talking inquirers whose souls are looking another way. They will discuss the atonement by the hour, but if we ask, "Do you desire to have your sins forgiven, and to become a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ?"—we speedily find that their faces are not thitherward. They will question through a long night, even to the cock-crow, about the divinity of our Lord, but if we ask them if they are ready to cast their crowns at his feet, we see at a glance that their faces are not thitherward. And therefore all such questioning is a waste of time. Nay, it is worse than a waste of time, for it wastes the powers of the soul in a semblance of earnestness which is only an unreal and painted fire. If there is ever to be revelation and revolution the asking must be backed by that eager and determined gazing which is the primary secret of triumphant prayer.

J. H. J.

The Captor a Captive

MONDAY, July 23. Rev. 13:10. "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints." There is much that is mysterious in the book of Revelation, but there is much also that is as clear as sunlight. These words of the Spirit are not unique. It were easy to find in the Scriptures numerous other statements of the same great truth, namely, that those who destroy shall be destroyed, those who cause suffering shall suffer, those who steal shall lose their ill-gotten wealth, they that appeal to the sword shall perish by the sword. Only the superficial thinker imagines that such a saying justifies absolute pacifism, since the words "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword" logically involve the possible righteous use of the sword in defense against those who first use it. This truth, however, must not blind us to the certainty that there is an immutable law in the moral world which not only calls for judgment but promises judgment upon the oppressor.

How true is that old saying, "No man ever fixed a chain upon a slave who did not fix the other end of the chain upon himself!" No man ever plotted evil against a neighbor who did not thereby invite a similar evil to fall upon himself. There is an Eastern proverb to this effect: "Aim an arrow at God and it will fall upon your own head." "Ralph the Rover" destroyed a bell-buoy on a dangerous sea that he might wreck a treasure-laden vessel and enrich himself with its spoils. Years afterward, rich beyond all dreams, he sailed homeward across that very sea, and lost his ship and his life on that very hidden rock.

"The tissues of the life to be
We weave in colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
We reap as we have sown."

The law of the spiritual harvest holds good throughout the universe. No good can possibly be lost. No evil can possibly endure. Nothing has "come to stay" which does not fit into the plan of God. Eternity shall vindicate God's word.

C. C. A.

His Life for His Sheep

TUESDAY, July 24. John 10:11. "I am the good Shepherd: the good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." The image of himself which the Lord here suggests to the fancy of his believers has sunk deep into the memory of the church. It is one of the oldest representations of the Saviour: the patriarchs in their wanderings and the exiled Jews in Babylon were taught to speak of him as the Shepherd. The crude inscriptions of the early Christians in the catacombs of Rome refer to Him as the Shepherd. Their earliest hymns address Him by that title. In later ages poets, painters and composers have vied with each other in setting forth the shepherd qualities of Jesus. Before the duel with Goliath young David artlessly related a story to Saul which shows to what extremes a human shepherd will go in defense of his sheep: a lion and a bear had taken a lamb out of David's flock; he went after them, slew both the lion and the bear, and rescued his sheep. Prudence might have counseled him not to take such risks, but love and devotion is greater than prudence. The love for a dumb brute which could incite this shepherd boy to stake his own life in the endeavor to preserve the life of his lamb is but a faint image of that unparalleled love which brought the Son of God on earth to rescue immortal souls out of the maw of the lion that goeth about seeking whom he may devour. He did give His life for the sheep, and still many in the vast flock of the human family stubbornly refuse to acknowledge this matchless deed of love and faithfulness. What a friend we have in Jesus! Every danger to which he sees us exposed only incites Him to new deeds of valor in our defense.

W. H. T. D.

Known to Him

WEDNESDAY, July 25. Isa. 43:1. "I have called thee by thy name." Our Lord makes no mistakes when He sends His messages to His children. He knows our name and dwelling place. From the Lamb's Book of Life, from the palms of His hands and from His loving remembrance. We here give two sample addresses which he sent to Ananias and Cornelius:

Saul of Tarsus,
Care of Judas,
Straight Street,
Damascus.

Simon Peter,
Care of Simon the Tanner,
Sea Shore Cottage,
Joppa.

Thus we see that our Lord's blessed words of pardon, peace and loving kindness never get into wrong hands. He knows all about your circumstances. You may be surrounded by the slums of city life, in the awful hell of a mining camp, among the soldiers in the trenches or on the battlefield. God can't lose you. His omniscience beholds you; His omnipresence is with you; His omnipotence grasps you and His love fills your heart. Wherever you are, you can be true to Him and in quick communication with heaven. Jonathan Edwards once said, "The grace of God can live where neither you nor I could," and His grace is sufficient for thee.

God sometimes gives a new name to those who are called to a special mission, as Abram was changed to Abraham, Jacob to Israel and Saul to Paul. He gives all a new name when we become His followers, a name which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it. This is a love name, known only between lovers, a secret name of sacred affection. How blessed to be thus known and associated with the name of Him that is above every name, with the personality of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

E. W. C.

Our Bruises

THURSDAY, July 26. Isa. 53:10. "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief." Did anybody ever learn anything except by being bruised? We learn to walk by falling. We learn respect for heat by being burned. We learn to leave a space for sharp corners by suffering many a black and blue spot. Such bruises are educational, disciplinary. There are bruises that are redemptive, vicarious. A child asked his mother about a scar on her arm. She made little of it, but one who knew its origin knew that it was the record of a burn she had received while preparing the children's dinner. A recent poet speaks of "the scars of all the wars." Do not our hearts ache and our eyes grow moist as we think of the bruises and scars of motherhood? The best motherhood is always redemptive. The prophet foresaw the redemptive suffering of a submissive Servant. The record of Jesus' ministry is one of "many a sorrow, many a labor, many a tear,"—and all vicarious. He was not bruised for his own iniquities, for he had no iniquities. His stripes brought us healing.

Perhaps it is true of all of us that our deepest bruises are inflicted by those we seek to help. The hurts we receive from the world may ache, but those we receive at home never cease aching. The foes in one's own household are the only ones capable of inflicting irreparable injury. Yet we must bear our bruises, and not nurse them overmuch. We must strive to overcome self-pity. And there is healing for our bruises. That great man who crept away into solitude, lamenting, "There is no one who understands me," was comforted at length by the reflection, "There is God—he understands me." What vast relief there is to the bruised heart in the fellowship of Jesus' sufferings! We may and do lament our unlikeness to Jesus in goodness and in grace, but let us rejoice, when bruised, that we may be like him in suffering.

C. C. A.

The Peace of Jesus

FRIDAY, July 27. John 20:19. "Peace be unto you." This is the greeting of the risen Lord at His first visit among the disciples. Involuntarily the mind goes back to the greeting that was extended to the whole world in the hour of the Lord's birth by angel choirs: Peace on earth! The thirty-odd years that lie between the two events are filled up with many disturbances, conflicts and enmities, both in the life of the Lord and in the world at large. We will, then, have to become accustomed to a view of peace that may coexist with war. The practical faith of a Christian embraces such contradictory elements as these: there is a strength that is made manifest in weakness: the divine power operates with feeble men; there is a glory that appears surrounded by shame and disgrace: the martyr's crown in the howling arena was upon disheveled, bleeding and dust-begrimed heads; there is a wisdom that is stated in terms which the world decries as foolishness: the Gospel of the cross which proud thinkers of Athens spurned made Timothy from a child wise unto salvation. And so there is a divine peace that coexists with human unrest, in a world full of bitterness, animosities, in hearts that are daily assailed by fierce enemies within. It is the peace which the Prince of Peace brought out of his tomb. He himself is our peace: He is the embodiment of God's thoughts of peace to the world that had risen in rebellion against Him. The account of His work on earth, wherever it is proclaimed by His evangelical messengers, is an actual absolution to all who have offended God. It has canceled Peter's denial, Thomas' skepticism, Cleopas' despair, the truancy of all the disciples. It is Jesus' gift to every believer, in accordance with the parting promise which He made to the disciples: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." His resurrection is the seal on the peace treaty between Heaven and earth. Sin has been conquered; the war that started at the fall is over for every one who will credit this Easter news.

W. H. T. D.

Symbol of Christ

SATURDAY, July 28. Luke 22:19. "This is My body which is given for you." The bread and wine of the communion are symbols of the body and blood of Jesus. That which appeals to the eye is more lasting than abstract thoughts coming directly to the mind. A parable is a picture hung on memory's walls forever. The Old Testament tabernacle and every thing in it were portraits of some spiritual truth to be impressed on the soul. Our Lord spake in parables.

As Jesus, in His humanity, pictured the fatherhood of God, so this holy memorial reveals Jesus to men. We do not worship the symbol, but the person symbolized. It would be idolatry to adore the bread and wine as the literal embodiment of our Lord. In these emblems, Christ is idealized. How appropriate these symbols are! The grain is put into the dark earth to die, to spring up and grow amid storms, frost and noxious weeds until the harvest. Then it is ground to dust and over the fire becomes bread. "Except a corn of wheat die, it abideth alone." Thus Jesus bore our burdens, carried our sorrows down to the gates of death, and opened up the way of life to an eternal harvest time. As the grapes are crushed for the wine, so he trod alone the wine press of Divine wrath, coming forth "with dyed garments from Bozrah, traveling in the greatness of His strength, mighty to save."

E. W. C.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Our Navy and the U-Boats. One by one the details of the trip of Pershing's troops to France are given to a waiting world. On July 3, the last units of the expedition having arrived safely in France, Secretary of the Navy Daniels announced that the convoying cruisers and destroyers under Admiral Gleaves had met a fleet of U-boats in mid-Atlantic, which attacked the transports at 10:30 o'clock at night on June 22. The attack, it was added, was broken up by the destroyers, whose accurate fire and submarine grenades accounted for at least one U-boat. Later, as a part of the expedition was passing through the barred zone, another attack by submarines was foiled by the convoy. It was thought that more than one submarine had been accounted for. The attack in mid-ocean, however, raised the question of the source of Germany's information regarding the sailing and route of the expedition. Later cable advices, however, denied the reported engagement, a dispatch from the base of the American flotilla in British waters declaring that there had been no submarine attack, that no torpedoes were seen and that there was no gunfire by destroyers at submarines. Inquiry at Washington developed that the announcement of July 3 had been elaborated from the brief dispatches of Admiral Gleaves by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. The first contingent of Pershing's army was landed in France without the loss of a man, and without serious illness. The French people have dubbed our men "Sammies."

© International Film Service, Inc.

Prince Hsuan Tung, restored to the throne

General Chang Hsun, dictator and premier

President Li Yuan Hung, deposed and imprisoned

The "coup d'état" in Peking

An Empire for a Week. Under the leadership of General Chang Hsun, the Chinese monarchy was reestablished by a sudden coup d'état on July 1, the deposed emperor, Hsuan Tung, was restored to the throne and President Li Yuan Hung was made a prisoner at the palace, although he escaped later and took refuge in the Japanese legation. The young emperor issued an edict declaring that the country should be administered according to the constitutional laws promulgated by the late emperor. General Chang Hsun was appointed Grand Secretary which is equivalent to premier. Tuan Chi Jui, the premier, whom the military governors forced President Li to remove, organized an army of 20,000 men for the re-establishment of the republic, in which enterprise he was assisted by the leaders of the southern provinces and by Feng Kuo Chang, vice president, who was reported to have been ordered by President Li to assume the presidency. Leaders in the northern provinces, on whose support General Chang Hsun had depended, united with the Southern forces, and after an engagement at Lang Feng, several miles south of Peking, in which Chang Hsun was defeated, many of his soldiers deserting, the Republican forces pressed on to the capital, where General Chang and his little Emperor were soon besieged. An aviator dropped bombs in the "Forbidden City." The Emperor abdicated on July 8, and the Republicans had Chang Hsun hemmed in. The capital was established temporarily at Nanking. A force of 250 American, Japanese and French troops reached Peking on the 7th without opposition.

Just Over the Page

What kind of sermons do soldiers hear in camp? The sermon in next week's Christian Herald was preached on the Texas border by Rev. S. Parkes Cadman who was National Guard chaplain.

All aboard for Ocean Grove. Next week we will take the whole Christian Herald Family to this famous seaside center of spiritual power.

What happens when a rookie is lonesome? A great many things might, but some things that do happen are told in "Mothering the Rookies."

China has turned a double somersault this week. Maynard Owen Williams in "The Mission Leaven in the Chinese Loaf" sheds a new light on the character of General Chang Hsun. In next week's paper, of course.

Was the Pharaoh of the Oppression a Semite? Professor W. Max Muller will answer this question.

Ex-Governor Harris of Georgia, whose term expired June 30, bidding "his boys" good-by at the officers' training camp at Fort McPherson, Ga.

We Are Censored. In spite of the fact that Congress refused authority for press censorship, the War Department on July 4 ordered that all press dispatches cabled by correspondents in France to the American newspapers should be delivered to the Secretary of War before delivery to the newspapers. Secretary Baker explained that the action was taken to guard the men in France. He said: "The government has power to control information regarding the movement of troops, but the question of authority has not arisen and it will not arise. The newspapers are cooperating splendidly with the government." George Creel's Committee on Public Information was to conduct the censorship, which was announced to be temporary, and which was ended by Secretary Baker on July 5. The institution of the censorship, however, in apparent disregard for Congress started talk in the Senate of an investigation.

Food and Revenue. The Food Bill, amended to limit prohibition to whisky, was under discussion in the Senate during the week of July 8. Several threats were made to apply the Senate's new closure rule unless the bill was brought to a vote within the week. On July 7 the Senate by 45 to 37 voted to authorize the seizure of all distilled liquors in hand and to prohibit importations. The Senate Finance Committee reported the Revenue Bill on July 3. It was understood that with the passage of the Food Bill, this bill would become the order of business. As reported, the bill reduces the total amount to be raised by taxation, from the House figure of $1,810,000,000, to $1,670,000,000. Taxes on war profits are expected to yield $523,000,000, the tax ranging from 12 per cent. to 50 per cent.; the corporation tax, $532,000,000; liquors and soft drinks, $164,000,000, $7,000,000 less than was provided by the House bill. The Senate also reduced the levy on tobacco. The tax on automobiles ranges from five dollars on cars costing not over $500 to ten dollars on cars costing not over $1,000, with an increase of five dollars for each $500 of price above $1,000. The House tax of five per cent. on athletic and sporting goods was reduced by the Senate Committee to two per cent., as was the House levy on toilet articles and proprietary medicines. For the House zone system of increased postal rates, the Senate Committee provided a flat increase of one-quarter cent a pound on second-class postage, making the rate one and one-quarter cents, with a five per cent. tax on newspaper profits in excess of $4,000.

To Close Back Door. It having been determined that neutral countries adjacent to Germany were buying American iron, sulphur and foodstuffs and re-exporting them or products of

Continued on page 776

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Soldiers of the Sea

The Mascot

UNCLE SAM has always been a rather original individual. It was he who discovered that governments derived their just powers from the consent of the governed, an idea which has been being explained to militant minorities ever since the day in 1776 when it was first attested by the patriots who signed the immortal Declaration. Before the American Navy started in to make Old Glory a terror to enemies, pirates, and every roamer of the seas, the sailorman was soldier too, and when two vessels came to grips, the crews that were as handy in the shrouds as on the gun-deck climbed over bulwarks and taffrails to uphold the sovereignty of the nation under whose flag they fought. But there were certain duties of a more or less military nature necessarily falling to the man of the sea, and thus early in the history of our undefeated navy there came to exist within it a little army known as the Marine Corps, which was first organized in November, 1775, disbanded in 1782, and reorganized in July, 1798.

The United States Marine Corps, from that day to the present, has been a body of picked men trained to the utmost for difficult, daring and hazardous work and ready on the instant for any call which the country might make. The Marine Corps has been within itself a sort of league to enforce peace, a miniature but very efficient international police force. A famous English army officer is quoted as saying that the Marine Corps is "the best-equipped, best-organized and most efficient body of its size in the world." When Uncle Sam was floundering in the slough of unpreparedness the Marine Corps was making itself ready to the last degree; and when war was declared between Germany and the United States there were 10,000 marines trained, ready and equipped, even to gas masks, machine guns and helmets, for work abroad.

WHEN Uncle Sam has an embassy or legation to guard, it is the Marine Corps that furnishes the force that is to keep harm from the official representative of the American nation. When the Boxers threatened the foreign legations at Peking, seventy-five American marines helped defend the besieged compound through those terrible days, and others headed the American detachment for the relief of the beleaguered diplomats. When Dewey surprised the Spaniards on May 1, 1898, it was the marines who went ashore to capture the land batteries and make sure the harbor. When Huerta refused to make amends for the insult to the flag, and when the expedition to Vera Cruz began its work, it was the marines who took the city and held it until the army under Funston reached the scene. In Santo Domingo where constant revolution had gained a momentum that it was powerless to stop, it was the United States Marine Corps which applied the brakes and brought the little island republic back to comparative peacefulness, and they are there yet, restraining the ebullient patriotism of the Dominican politicians, now separated from the island's revenues by a force which they defy at their own risk. And when Haiti kept its half of the island in turmoil, and finally exhausted the patience of the creditor powers, it was the marines again who settled the revolution and held for Haiti the sovereignty she was fast throwing away. For more than a century the marines have protected people against themselves. They have been thrown into many a hard place, they have been outnumbered, but they have a record of never having lost a battle.

THE marine is not wholly an ornament, however, on shipboard. He learns the ship from the keel to the masthead, and mans the anti-aircraft guns and the secondary battery. He does his part keeping the ship fit. He is a sailor of the sailors, and yet, on land, he is a soldier of soldiers. The infantryman is an infantryman and the artilleryman knows his guns; but the marine on shore is both an infantryman and a master of artillery. Whether afloat or afoot or astride—for the marine is sometimes mounted, and the horse marine is not a joke—this highly trained corps of Uncle Sam's is ready for an emergency. Since it was organized a detachment of the Marine Corps has gone with every expeditionary force of the United States army; and the force sent to France is no exception, for a picked body of marines under Colonel Charles Augustus Doyen went with the first instalment of troops, to fight, under Pershing, for liberty and democracy. They left their quarters at one of the navy yards as quietly and with as little fuss and flourish as if they had been ordered to attend an inaugural parade. A brief speech by Major General George Barnett, commandant of the corps, was the only ceremony that attended their leave-taking. No colors were unfurled, no reporters or press photographers were there, no drums or bugles sounded, and the regimental band went to war with their instruments cased, and with rifles on their shoulders.

When war was declared, the Marine Corps numbered about 17,000 men. This number has been increased to nearly 30,000. The navy in the same time has been recruited from less than 60,000 men to 126,000, and the regular army from about 120,000 to 260,000, while the National Guard has been increased about 100,000 men. 50,000 men are in training camps under instruction to fit them to serve as officers. Gradually the forces of the republic are being organized for the battles ahead. We may expect that the reports will frequently carry news of daring exploits and heroic actions on the part of the marines in France.

Marines loading a transport which carried troops to France

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE most interesting episode of the past week has been the resumption of activity by the Russian army in Galicia. This offensive began on July 1 and has since continued, though after Monday, July 2, little or no advance was made by the Russians.

Apparently, from what London tells us, the offensive of Sunday and the following days was made with regiments which had been specially selected for their loyalty to the provisional government, and assembled for the express purpose of this demonstration. The offensive was undertaken on a narrow front, and no supporting movements of consequence developed anywhere.

The Russians claim to have taken approximately 20,000 prisoners, and to have occupied the villages of Kioniuchy, Preswce, Zborow and Korshidew. The attack was made between the Upper Stripa and the Narayuvka River, a tributary of the Gnila Lipa, in the region southeast of Lemberg, the capital of Galicia.

The interior situation of Russia is not improving. The movement in the Ukraine for independence is gathering strength. In Finland, the Finnish Senate at the head of the movement for separation from Russia has gone so far as to order the issue of new postage stamps, from which all Russian emblems have been removed. In the Caucasus, the Georgians have taken the ground that the agreements under which they became part of the Russian empire, have lapsed with the fall of that empire, and that the present government of Russia has no control over them.

British and German delegates, under Dutch guidance, have reached an agreement regarding the repatriation of certain prisoners of war. This is the first meeting of representatives of these two nations which has taken place since the war began.

The weekly report of submarine activities in the war zone around the British isles shows fifteen vessels of over 1,600 tons, five under 1,600 tons, and eleven fishing vessels sunk during the week ending Sunday, July 1. This is the smallest total announced since June 3.

F. B. Pitney, of the New York Tribune, who has just returned from France, where he has been since the beginning of the war, estimates that the French killed now approximate 2,000,000.

Harwich, England, was raided on July 4 by German aircraft. The British say that no material damage was done, the casualties were 47, and two German machines are reported to have been brought down. The same day the British raided Bruges and Lichterwelden, Belgium, with "good results," they state, and lost no machines.

The French armored cruiser Kleber, of about 9,000 tons, was sunk in the early part of the week through striking a mine off the entrance of the French naval port of Brest. The resultant loss of life was comparatively small.

Under the title, "Food in Germany," the London Times of June 11, 1917, page 7, column 2, has the following rather interesting letter:

"SIR—As one who has something to do with German prisoners of war, I would caution the public not to believe that Germany is on the brink of starvation, as some optimists would have us believe. Here is a sample of the contents of parcels sent from Germany on one delivery: Sardines, sausage (in quantity), bread (in considerable quantity), biscuits and cake (in quantity), bacon (a good amount), potatoes (over a stone, 14 pounds), jam, honey, eggs, sugar and lard. This does not look like starvation."

A Greek destroyer, the Doxa, manned by French officers and crew, was blown up in the Mediterranean on June 28 as a result of a double explosion; twenty-nine men, including all the officers, were lost. The British lost an old destroyer in the channel on July 4. Here there was no loss of life. The French passenger liner, the Himalaya, in use as a transport, was destroyed in the Mediterranean with a loss of about sixty-nine lives.

On the western front, the British continue to devote their attention to prying the mining town of Lens out of the hands of their opponents, and have succeeded in making further gains to the southwest and south of the town, along the Souchez River.

On the French portion of the front the activity was fairly general, but

Continued on page 776

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

Remembering and Forgetting

A GOOD memory is an excellent endowment. It has been made the foundation of many a life success. We read of the ancient bards and minnesingers, who carried a whole epic in their heads, long before the days of book print. They were the oral historians and chroniclers of that early time, and they were wonderful. Simonides, the Greek poet, had such a tenacious memory that it was said of him that he carried a library in his brain. We hear of learned Orientals who can repeat from memory thousands of lines of the Koran, the Vedas, the Zend Avesta of the Persians, or the Tripitaka of the Buddhists. Some of these feats were rendered possible by a system which made the last word of each couplet so closely linked with the beginning of the next line that it gave the cue to what followed. Modern instances of prodigious memories are well attested. Many preachers commit their sermons to memory. Occasionally, however, they slip up and make a hurried dive for the manuscript in their breast pocket.

One of the greatest things we learn from the study of the Divine nature in the old Book is that God, notwithstanding his omniscience, can forget. He not only forgives the repentant, but "their sins and iniquities he remembers no more." The very recollection of them is dismissed. What a supreme lesson in forgetting! When we, with our petty quarrels, our rivalries and backbitings, declare that we will never forget or forgive, let us stop for a moment to consider the folly, the childishness, the wickedness of such an attitude. If our Father in heaven forgives only those who forgive, then we do well to learn the habit of forgiving and forgetting. Every grudge we nurse, every hatred we keep alive in our own hearts, every old wrong that we brood over, will come up in accusation against us. Let us forgive, freely and unreservedly, as we ourselves hope to be forgiven.

A Bad Example of Democracy

IT is perhaps no exaggeration to say, as has often been said, that the people of the United States have more law and less order than any other people on earth. Immediately in mind is the East St. Louis massacre of negroes. Had it occurred in Turkey our nation would have been aroused at the horror of it, and properly so. Occurring at home, at the heart of our own land and at the hands of our own ruffians, we accept it as a rather ordinary incident.

And that is the worst of it. Such things come too frequently with us. Our country's record for lynchings stinks to the stars. It is not confined to any section. The crime, the shame, the debasement is national. It could not exist but for the defection of officials and the tolerance of the public.

The very first dispatch of the awful news out of East St. Louis contained the excuse, "importation of labor to the city caused the clash." This is a lie, and a shallow one. That was not the cause. The cause was race hatred, unbridled brutality. It cannot be toned down or condoned. The contempt for law and for life cannot be excused.

Note some of the details: "Negroes were shot down like rabbits as they ran from their burning homes. Others were strung up to telegraph poles. Many were slain and thrown into the Mississippi. The exact number of dead probably never will be known. Six negroes were hanged to telegraph poles on one street. A reliable white man reports having counted nineteen negro corpses on a side street."

And this: "Of the estimated 50,000 persons in the streets it is said two-thirds were armed. Even small boys carried revolvers and shot at the blacks whenever they could find one."

And still this: "Two white girls, neither more than seventeen years old, were cheered when they dragged a negro girl from a street-car, removed her slippers, and beat her senseless with their sharp wooden heels."

The hideous horror of it! At the center of a nation that is mobilizing its armies to extend democracy abroad, troops called out were impotent, in many instances their guns being taken from them by the rioters and fired at fleeing negroes.

While we are enforcing, if we can, better government upon other nations of the world, let us not forget the commonest requirements of good government for ourselves. Our first debt to democracy is our own decency.

We can wipe out the blot of shame and gain security against ceaseless repetition of such crimes only by the vigorous prosecution, the conviction and severe punishment of every brute whose unchecked lust for blood and contempt for law led him in this wild orgy of hate and massacre.

Paradise-on-Earth

MONT LAWN, the Christian Herald Children's Home at Nyack-on-the-Hudson, sustained through the generous bounty of godly people, has begun its new season of blessed service. The opening was on the 27th of June, with over 300 little ones on hand.

Out of the heat and filth and disease and vice of the city's crowded sections, in the blistering days and humid nights, thousands of poor children will be taken for a week's stay at this sweet paradise.

Out of the poverty and suffering of the man-made city there is escape to the God-made country, with its woods and hills, its fields and brooks and its cooled and sifted breezes scented with nature's fragrance and melodious with nature's songs.

Out from the shut-in tenements and the darksome alleys these children will find release where the sky is brilliantly bright by day, and at night merry with its thousands of stars joining hands of light.

Knowing only the rattle and rush and roar of the granite streets, these innocents will delightedly hear the fluting of the winds, rapturously listen to the fitful patter of the fairy-footed rain dancing on the swaying leaves, and reverently hark to the long-meter psalm of the thunder.

In a new world they will see Morning striding down the hills, they will see Day flooding the earth with brightness and joy, they will see Evening slowly draw aside the curtain from heaven's wall of jasper, sardonyx and amethyst.

They will look upon all this and revel in it, and they will know that God is in his world.

The bounty of Christian men and women thus brings paradise-on-earth to these thousands of soul-starved little ones of the city poor.

No Enforced Service in Europe

A VERMONT MOTHER very earnestly writes, now that American soldiers are being landed in France: "How about Roosevelt and the 285,000 middle-aged men who volunteered to go with him? Those men wanted to fight. Why be so determined that they shall stay at home, and send the boys who have had no training? We all know why."

The Christian Herald confesses that it does not know why. We have heard various excuses, but no convincing reason. We know no valid grounds upon which Roosevelt and his army of volunteers were prevented from going to France after Congress had authorized their going. Since we are in the war and men must fight, we think these should have gone; every fit man who volunteered to go should have been permitted to go. That would have given France exactly the kind of aid she said she wanted—moral effect—at exactly the time she said she wanted it, and it would have given every American who wants to fight in foreign lands his chance to fight there.

Indeed, we think none but volunteers should be sent abroad to fight in the European war. No American citizen should be forced to go upon alien soil to fight and die there against his will. The autocratic militarism under which such things are done is not American.

From the very first day of the war, America, remote from it, proclaiming our neutrality in it and declaring its causes and purposes unknown to us, nevertheless gave aid to the Allies in every possible way and degree that the spirit of our people would allow, and it is no new assertion, but an openly admitted and generally understood fact, that our help has sustained the Allies up to this time against what otherwise would long ago have been defeat. We have given countless millions in money, countless millions in munitions, and countless millions in foodstuffs, and we are now sending foodstuffs in fleet-loads, when foodstuffs are almost priceless. It is a large share to feed not only the armies of the Allies but their civilian populations. It is in such activities as these that we have sustained them up to this time, and it is in these alone that we can sustain them.

It is not in numbers of fighting forces that the Allies are weak. They are by no means outnumbered, upon any front. England is still holding reserve millions at home, and there are 500,000 English slackers still finding refuge within the United States. Neither Canada nor Australia has resorted to conscription; these greatest of British colonies have sent only volunteers. So, if room for more men can be found at the front, ample forces of the original combatants and of volunteers are readily available.

There is no authority in law for sending our militia abroad. Section 8, paragraph 15, of the Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia "to execute the law of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." An added power, that to "enforce treaties," was proposed in the Convention which framed the Constitution, and was thoroughly discussed by the Fathers of the republic, but by unanimous agreement it was stricken out, on the ground that it might give Congress power to order the militia into foreign service.

The American lad is not wanting in patriotism. He will fight eagerly enough in any cause that appeals to him. He was quick to respond to the call for conscription in view of a vague menace to the nation, but his lethargy in enlistment shows that no immediate cause for fight that appeals to his heart has yet arisen. But that such cause may yet arise is sadly to be feared. What may at any moment come out of the chaos is not even guessable. America must herself be ready for any emergency. There is no certainty anywhere of permanent allegiances. Kingdoms are tottering and governments are overthrown and their policies reversed in a night. Yesterday the Czar was prime leader in the conflict; today the attitude of a freed Russian people is the great international enigma. The confessed ambitions of the military autocracy, Japan, not only for domination in democratic China but for a world-wide extension of trade, loom as a black danger cloud over our unprotected Pacific.

The patriotism of American youth is magnificently vindicated in an epic of registration that will endure for the inspiration and safety of the Republic so long as the Republic lives. But it is a patriotism for defense of our own country. It is a patriotism not to be sacrificed needlessly in foreign shambles.

The Old Way and the New

THERE is an old church in Boston with a varied history, which has just passed through a wonderful spiritual experience. This church has been reborn of late. It has cast out strange doctrines, intellectual fads, speculative cults and man-made creeds, and it has gone back to Christ and Calvary. On its calendar for this year there is this explanation of its regeneration: "If you ask us what our authority is, we reply, 'Jesus.' If you ask what is our creed, the answer is 'Jesus.' If you ask what is our hope for this world and the next, our confident assurance is 'Jesus.'" These tell the story. And the congregation, which has greatly multiplied, heartily agrees with the assertions in the calendar. There is no non-attendance problem in this quaint old church. Its members are devout, sincere, simple, right-living, practical Christians—they follow Jesus, and they forget not the assembling in God's house. There is heartiness in every sermon. The spirit of the Master is there and has transformed the little, plain, old edifice into a place of joy and spiritual refreshing. There is a good deal of quiet social life in connection with the little church on week-days, but its pleasures are clean and wholesome. All the gifts of its members are straightaway gifts, and do not come through the doubtful and even perilous channel of bazaars, fairs, lotteries, grab-bags, etc. Whatsoever they give to the Lord's work they give with all their heart, and direct from their substance, feeling it not only a duty but a privilege. It is the old-fashioned, apostolic way, yet we wonder if it be not better than the new.

If the reader should ask, "And how do all these plans work out?" we would point to the church itself as the sufficient answer. For it is a very hive of spiritual industry, yet without affectation or pretense. It is just a plain, old Gospel church which has sought out the old paths—a worthy example to others.

Arbitrary Censorship

CENSORSHIP is arbitrarily and without authority being exercised at Washington. Since July 3, certain important press cables from France have been diverted from their usual channels and held up by the Secretary of War. Earlier cables, telling of the landing of American forces in France, were delayed by orders of some one in Washington to some one in France. News of this landing was published in France and England on the day following the event, and the next day was published throughout Germany, but not a word of it was printed in the United States until the third day. This is despite the fact that Congress, after debating the censorship question in both houses for weeks, voted overwhelmingly against the establishment of censorship.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

A Remarkable Indian Chief

QUANA WASHASHA, who is now chief of the Comanche Indians, made quite a sensation in Baltimore the other day in evangelistic addresses made in the interest of the Boy Scouts of America. He was with General Custer at the battle of Little Big Horn, and was with Pershing in the expedition into Mexico as chief of scouts. Though 74 years of age he was a champion rifle shot; from the back of a horse going at full gallop he could shoot an apple from a man's head. He was one of the star shots in Col. Cody's Wild West Show. He has won half a hundred medals for superior marksmanship, including the Iron Cross from the Kaiser and a diamond medal from Czar Alexander III. He went around the world on horseback. In his address he magnified the importance of clean living, honesty and devotion to the Master. His romance, he is the husband of Geronimo's granddaughter, parallels that of John Smith. He was captured by a band of Apaches and was about to meet death at their hands. Instead of the stake, as in Captain Smith's case, he was to be burned shackled to a boulder. The chief's granddaughter saved him. He is a graduate of the Carlisle Indian School and a devout Christian. This Indian's life and message call to mind Paul's declaration of the brotherhood of man and Fatherhood of God: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men." (Acts 17 : 26.)

Greatest Manuscript Bible

THE greatest manuscript Bible in existence has just been completed by the Oxford University Press for the Bible crusade in England. The Bible is written, not printed. The manuscript was prepared by 12,000 persons, and the binding required a dozen large goat-skins. The book measures six feet, two inches, by three feet, ten inches, and covers seven feet, ten inches, across when open. This great book, prepared at such an expense of money and time, is the same as the little one the working man carries in his pocket that costs but a few dimes. It is the blessed Book of God which tells how to get away from sin, how to find a Saviour and how to be happy forever. Everything that is noblest in our institutions, most just in law, sweetest in private character, most generous in love, most elevated in thought, sentiment, and action can be traced to this Book and the Christ whom it reveals. A prominent minister leaving an eastern pulpit for one in Los Angeles, California, the other Sunday spoke of his sainted mother and of her influence over him, told how she died, with her hand laid on an open Bible, at the 14th of John, at the words "In my Father's house are many mansions." Without this book the other life would be only a "pleasing hope, a fond desire, a longing after immortality." Hawthorne, with the warmth of his imagination, kindled a huge fire in the town, on which everything was thrown, stocks, bonds, deeds, clothing, furniture, utensils and articles of all kinds. It was noticed that there was one thing that was not thrown on the burning pile. It was a large Bible. It was ordered to be thrown into the fire. The huge conflagration burned fiercely till all had been consumed. When the fire died down they raked among the ashes, and the only thing they found unhurt by the flames was the Bible; everything else had been destroyed. The leather backs and the marginal notes of the commentators had been burned up, but the Bible was unhurt, not a single word destroyed. In this world of mutation and decay how blessed to have something that endures to rest upon. "His truth shall endure to all generations." (Psa. 100 : 5.)

Wheat Harvest Every Day

EVERY day in the year from January 1 to December 31, there is wheat harvest somewhere on this old earth.

The annual cycle begins in January with the wheat harvest of Argentina, New Zealand, Chile and Australia. In February and March come the wheat harvests of Upper Egypt, Syria, Cyprus, Persia, Asia Minor, Mexico and Cuba. Not only Texas but Algeria, Central Asia, China, Japan and Morocco harvest their wheat in May. In June Turkey, Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Southern France as well as our south central tier of states advertise for harvest hands to gather the golden grain. In July states in the latitude of Nebraska, and also Rumania, Bulgaria, Austria, Hungary, Southern Russia, Germany, Switzerland and Southern England are busy with their harvest. August is perhaps the most important month of all to the grain, for it is then that Northern Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana, the provinces of Western Canada, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Poland and Central Russia gather the king of crops. In September and October are the harvests of Scotland, Sweden, Norway and Northern Russia. November is the harvest month of Peru and South Africa. Burma and New South Wales harvest in December. Every hour in the year, either with the primitive sickle, or the modern reaper that cuts, threshes and sacks the grain at one trip, wheat, the real staff of life, is being harvested. There is no day in the year when somewhere this question may not be properly asked: "Is it not wheat harvest today?" (I Sam. 12 : 17.)

Mother Injured Saving Child

WHILE trying to save her three-year-old son from being run over by a street-car the other day, Mrs. G. Mariando of Bath Beach was so severely injured that she will probably die. She was sitting on her porch watching Anortio, her little boy, playing with his rubber ball on the sidewalk. It bounded into the roadway and he ran to get it just as a Thirty-ninth Street open car, loaded with passengers for Coney Island, came along. The mother managed to throw her boy out of the way in time, but was knocked down by the car and received a fractured skull and internal injuries. She was taken to the King's County Hospital, where it was said she would die. What a beautiful act of heroism, and yet not exceptional. With rare exceptions, any other mother would have done the same thing, even if she had known she would have lost her life in saving that of her child. The depth of the maternal instinct is referred to by the prophet and thus quoted by the evangelist: "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not." (Matt. 2 : 18.)

Trolley Leaps Into Niagara

TWO carlengths of the roadbed of the Great Gorge Route trolley line at Niagara Falls, near the Cantilever Bridge, weakened by the heavy rains, slid from beneath the tracks on the afternoon of July 1. Fifteen minutes later a trolley car, bound from Lewiston to Buffalo, loaded with about sixty-five passengers, many of them student army officers from the Fort Niagara training camp, struck the weak spot in the track while running at a speed of twenty miles an hour. The car left the tracks, turned a somersault in the air, and plunged down a twenty-foot embankment to the whirlpool rapids of the falls, where it turned over in ten feet of water and crushed many of the passengers beneath it. By midnight twenty dead bodies had been recovered, and others, flung down into the rapids, were drowned. A number were rescued through a hole cut in the top of the car. Soldiers, at the risk of their lives, slid down a 200-foot embankment and stood in the treacherous waters up to the chin in their haste to render aid. Besides the soldiers, the policemen, firemen and citizens generally did all in their power to save the drowning. Many were badly injured by the crash of the car against the rocks. Men on the bridge saw the earth slide and ran to try to arrest the car, but they could not do so. And when it dashed past them, they fired guns and shouted out the danger, but the car was filled with such a happy company, with laughter and songs, that no notice was taken of the warning. Almost in a moment, the laughter and songs and joy of the passengers were changed to screams of horror and death. What an uncertain world is this in which we live, full of slipping earth, and weak tracks, and plunging trolleys, and deadly whirlpools and rapids! It will be well if the insecurities of life shall only teach us the necessity of fastening ourselves to the things that are secure, and being prepared for any event that may carry us into the other world. The fearful tragedies of life preach from this text: "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." (Matt. 24 : 44.)

Human Chain Saves Girl

LINKING their arms together in a human life-net, a dozen firemen saved from death a girl who found herself trapped in an apartment house fire in Madison Avenue, New York. Members of the church, with united arms and hearts, make a life-net with which to save souls from death. This rescue work is done through the divine instrumentality of Him "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases, who redeemeth thy life from destruction." (Ps. 103 : 3, 4.)

New-Fashioned Hand-Car

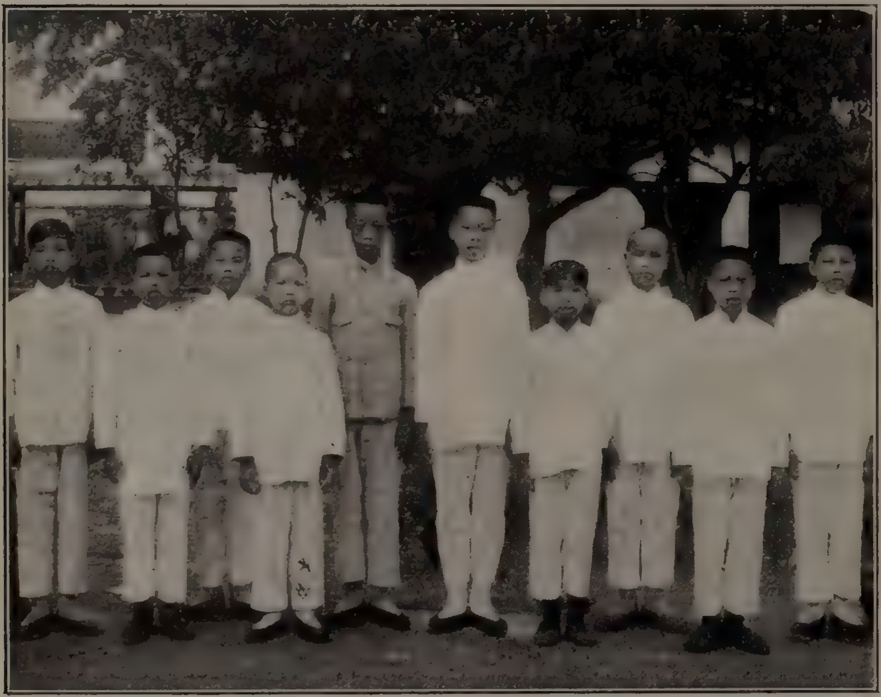
THE old-fashioned hand-car, propelled by the trackmen with pumping-handles, like the primitive fire engines, is likely to be turned into the new-fashioned one by the installation of an internal-combustion motor, capable of attaining a speed of fifteen miles an hour. It will not only carry a crew of eight men, but will also draw an additional car loaded with material and supplies. They had no iron tracks or rail cars or motor engines in olden times. The best they had was the backs of animals as carriers and wagons or chariots as vehicles for the transportation of freight and passengers. There is this reference to the wagons: "Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon." (Num. 7 : 7.)

The Christian Herald Fukien Industrial

(See pages 759-760)

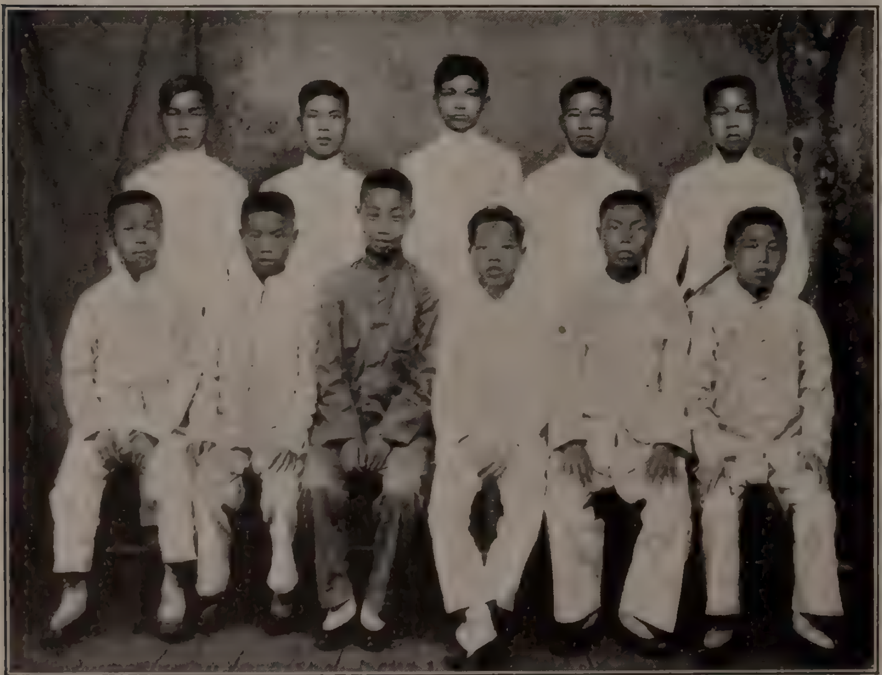
These first orphans received at Fukien were not strangers to hardship

Klopsch Hall, in daily service, a fitting memorial of one who carried these orphans on his heart



Hardships forgotten, these boys are making up for lost time in the advanced mission schools

These girls are celebrating in song the anniversary of the founding of the Homes



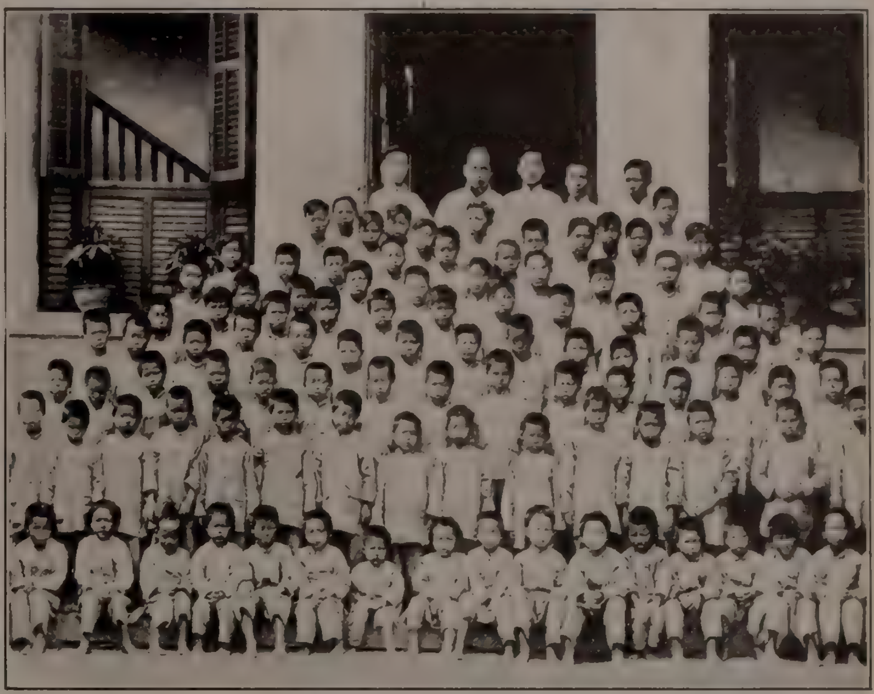
College work claims these fast developing citizens of the New China whose need for Christian leaders was never greater

Fine cabinets can be made with crude tools—plus skill. These boys from the Christian Herald homes are gaining skill

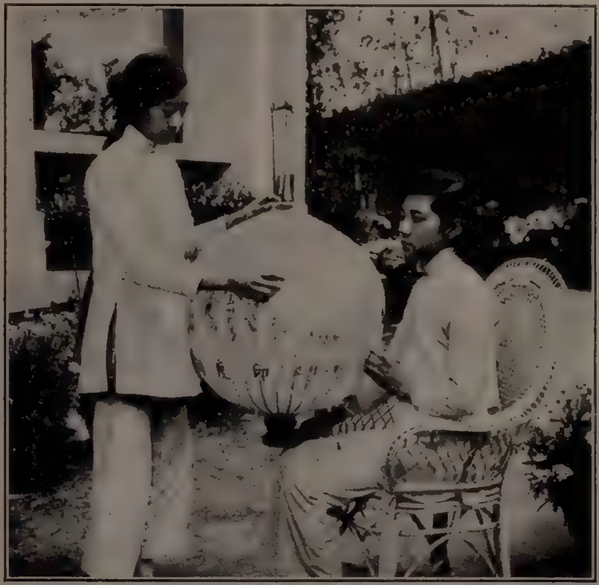
Homes Save and Train China's Orphans

基督報福建孤兒院幼稚園學生撮影

But for the Christian Herald family these happy, hearty, well-fed youngsters would be outcasts, fighting for life, perhaps losing the battle



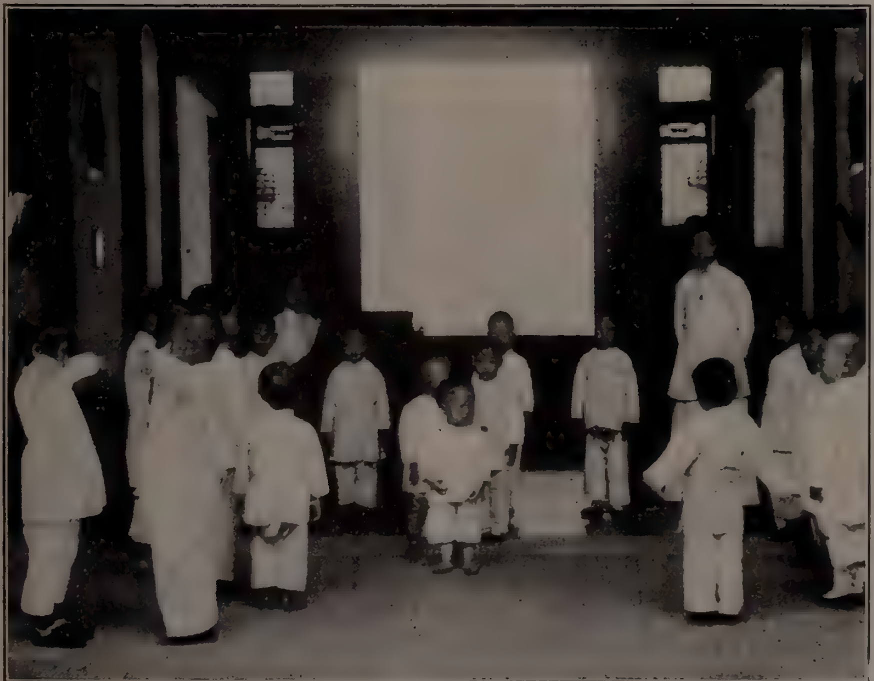
Of the first two hundred children received at Fukien, these were the youngest. Today they are ready to share the responsibilities of an awakened nation



This lantern is also a globe. The two girls have made it from memory

General Li Hain Gi, military governor of Fukien, a stanch friend of the Orphans' Homes

Boys from the orphanage now serve their country as students in the nautical and shipbuilding school at the Fukien arsenal



Children and play belong together in every land. The kindergarten class at Fukien

Gardens are the world's hope today. At Fukien each boy has his garden, and cultivates it, too

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XVI—Continued

EMERGENCIES

AND so the winter passed and spring came; and it was on a beautiful day in early spring that Helen took Betty (now nine years old) to one of London's most famous curio-shops. There was to be an auction shortly of a very valuable collection of books and curios, and the advertising catalogue sent to Mr. Reynolds had fallen into Helen's hands.

It was no new thing for Helen to haunt curio-shops and museum-cabinets given over to Babylonian tablets and Egyptian scarabs. Helen had never forgotten the little brown and yellow "soap-cakes" which were so treasured by Burke and his father, and of which she had been so jealous in the old days at Dalton. At every opportunity now she studied them. She wanted to know something about them; but especially she wanted Betty to know about them. Betty must know something about everything—that was of interest to Burke Denby.

To-day, standing with Betty before a glass case of carefully numbered treasures, she was so assiduously studying the catalogue in her hand that she did not notice the approach of the tall man wearing glasses, until an amused voice reached her ears.

"Going in for archeology, Mrs. Darling?"

So violent was her start that it looked almost like one of guilt.

"Oh, Mr. Estey! I—I didn't see you."

His eyes twinkled.

"I should say not—or hear me, either. I spoke twice before you deigned to turn. I did not know you were so interested in archeology, Mrs. Darling."

She laughed lightly.

"I'm not. I think it's—" Her face changed suddenly. "Oh, yes, I'm interested—very much interested," she corrected hastily. "But I mean I—I don't know anything about it. But I—I'm trying to learn. Perhaps you—Can you tell me anything about these things?"

Something in her face, the fateful "learn," and her embarrassed manner, sent his thoughts back to the scene between them years before. Stifling an almost uncontrollable impulse to query, "Is it to please him, then, that you must learn archeology?" he shrugged his shoulders and shook his head.

"I'm afraid not," he smiled. "Oh, I know a little something of them, it's true; but I've just been chatting with a man out in the front shop who could talk to you by the hour about those things—and grow fat on it. He's looking at a toby jug now. Shall I bring him in?"

"No, no, Mr. Estey, of course not!"

"But, really, you'd find him interesting, I'm sure. I met him in Egypt last year. His name is Denby—a New Englander like— Why, Mrs. Darling, what is the matter? Are you faint? You're as white as chalk!"

She shook her head.

"No, no, I'm all right. Did you mean"—with white lips she asked the question—"Mr. John Denby?" She threw a quick look at Betty, who was now half-way across the room standing in awed wonder before a huge Buddha.

"No, this is Burke Denby, John Denby's son. I met them both last year. But you seem to— Do you know them?"

"Yes." She said the word quietly, yet with an odd restraint that puzzled him. He saw that the color was coming back to her face—what he could not see or know was that underneath that calm exterior the little woman at his side was wildly adjuring herself: "Now, mind, mind, this is an emergency. Mind you meet it right!" He saw that she took one quick step toward Betty, only to stop and look about her a little uncertainly.

"Mr. Estey,"—she was facing him now. Her chin was lifted determinedly, but he noticed that her lips were trembling. "I do not want to see Mr. Burke Denby, and he must not see me. There is no way out of this place, apparently, except through the front shop, where he is. I want you to go out there and—and talk to him. Then Betty and I can slip by unnoticed."

"But—but—" stammered the dumfounded man.

"Mr. Estey, you will do what I ask you to—and please go—quickly! He's sure to come out to see—these." She just touched the case of Babylonian tablets.

To the man, looking into her anguished eyes, came a swift, overwhelming revelation. He remembered, suddenly, stories he had heard of a tragedy in Burke Denby's domestic affairs. He remembered words—illuminating words—that this woman had said to him. It could not be— And yet——

He caught his breath.

"Is he—are you——"

"I am Mrs. Burke Denby," she interrupted quietly. "You will not betray me, I know. Now, will you go, please?"

For one appalled instant he gazed straight into her eyes; then without a word he turned and left her.

He knew, a minute later, that he was saying something (he wondered afterward what it was) to Mr. Burke Denby out in the main shop. He knew, too, without looking up, that a woman and a little girl passed quietly by at the other side of the room and disappeared through the open doorway. Then, dazedly, Mr. Donald Estey looked about him. He was wondering if, after all, he had not been dreaming.

THAT evening he learned that it was not a dream. Freely, and with a frank confidence that touched him deeply, the woman he had known as Mrs. Darling told him the whole story. He heard it with naturally varying emotions. He tried to be just, to be coolly unprejudiced. He tried also to hide his own heartache. He even tried to be glad that she loved her husband, as she so unmistakably did.

"And you'll tell him now, of course—where you are," he said, when she had finished.

"No, no! I can't do that."

"But do you think that is—right?"

"I am sure it is."

"But if your husband wants you——"

"He doesn't want me."

"Are you sure?"

"Very sure."

A curious look came to the man's eyes, a grim smile to his lips.

"Er"—he hesitated a little—"you don't want to forget that—er—you have long ago qualified for—that understudy. You remember that—I wanted you."

The rich color that flamed into her face told that she fully understood what he meant, yet she shook her head vehemently.

"No, no! Ah, please, don't jest about—that. I was very much in earnest—indeed, I was! And I thought then—that I really could—could— But I understand—lots of things now that I never understood before. It is really all for Betty that I am working now. I want to make her—what he would want her to be."

"Nonsense, my dear woman! As if you yourself were not the most——"

She stopped him with a gesture. Her eyes had grown very serious.

"I don't want you to talk that way, please. I would rather think—just of Betty."

"But what about—him?"

"I don't know." Her eyes grew fathomless. She turned them toward the window. "Of course I think and think and think. And of course I wonder—how it's all coming out. I'm sure I'm doing right now, and I think—I was doing right—then."

"Then?"

"When I went away—at the first. I can't see how I could have done anything else, as things were. Some way, all along, I've felt as if I were traveling a—a long road, and that on each side was a tall hedge. I can't look over it, nor through it. I can't even look ahead—very far. The road turns—so often. But there have never been any crossroads—there's never been any other way I could take, as I looked at it. Don't you see, Mr. Estey?"

"Yes, I think I see." The old baffled pain had come back to his eyes, but she did not seem to notice it. Her gaze had drifted back to the window.

"And so I feel that now I'm still on that road and that it's leading—somewhere; and some day I shall know. Until then, there isn't anything I can do—don't you see?—there isn't anything I can do but to keep—straight ahead. There really isn't, Mr. Estey."

"No, I suppose there isn't," said Mr. Donald Estey, rising to his feet with a long sigh.

CHAPTER XVII

PINK TEAS TO FLIGHTY BLONDES

ONE by one the years slipped by, swiftly, with little change. In Boston, the doctor, trying not to count them, still had not forgotten. From Helen, through his sister, came glowing accounts of concerts, lectures, travels, and language-lessons for herself and Betty. From Dalton, both directly and indirectly, began to come reports of a new gayety at the old Denby Mansion. Dinners and house-parties, and even a ball or two, figured in the reports.

Vexed and curious, the doctor—who had, of late, refused most of his invitations to Dalton—took occasion, between certain trips of his own, to go up to the little town, to see for himself the meaning of this, to him, unaccountable phase of the situation.

There was a big reception at Denby Mansion on the evening of the day of his arrival. The hotel parlor and office were abuzz with stories of the guests, decorations, and city caterer. There came to the doctor's ears, too, sundry rumors—some vague, others unpleasantly explicit—concerning a pretty little blonde widow, who was being frequently seen these days in the company of Burke Denby, the son.

"Of course he'd have to get a divorce—but he could do that easy," overheard the doctor in the corridor. "His wife ran away, didn't she, years ago? I heard she did."

UNINVITED and unheralded, the doctor attended the reception. Passing up the old familiar walk, he came to an unfamiliar, garish blaze of lights, a riot of color and perfume, a din of shrieking violins, the swish of silken skirts, and the peculiarly inane babble that comes from a multitude of chattering tongues. He suddenly almost laughed aloud at sight of the half-perplexed, half-terrified, wholly disgusted face of Benton.

Regardless of the trailing silks and billowing tulle between them, Benton leaped to his side.

"Praise be, if it ain't Dr. Gleason!" he exulted, incoherent, but beaming.

"Yes; but what is this, Benton?" laughed the doctor. "What is the meaning of all this?"

The old butler rolled his eyes.

"Blest if I know, sir—indeed, I don't. But I'm thinking it's gone crazy I am. And sometimes I think maybe the master and young Master Burke, too, are going crazy with me. I do, sir!"

"I can well imagine it, Benton," smiled the doctor dryly, as he began to make his way toward the big drawing-room where John Denby and his son were receiving their guests.

The doctor could find no cause to complain of his welcome. It was cordial and manifestly sincere. He was introduced at once as an old and valued friend, and he soon found himself the center of a plainly admiring group. He contrived, however, in spite of his embarrassing popularity, to see something of his hosts. He talked with them, when possible, and he watched them with growingly troubled eyes.

Many times that evening he saw the mask drop over John Denby's face. Twice he saw a slow turning away as of ineffable weariness. Once he saw a spasm of pain twitch his lips; and he noted the quick, involuntary lifting of his hand to his side.

As to Burke—it was when the doctor was watching Burke that the trouble in his eyes grew deepest. True, on Burke's face there was no mask of inscrutability, in his eyes was no weariness, on his lips no quick spasm of pain. He was gay, alert, handsome, and apparently happy.

There was a look—slight, perhaps, but unmistakable—on Burke Denby's face, that the doctor did not like. The doctor also did not like the way Burke devoted himself to the blonde young woman who was so eternally at his elbow.

THIS was the widow, of course. The doctor surmised this at once. Besides, he had met her. Her name was Mrs. Carrolton, and Mrs. Carrolton was the name he had heard so frequently in the hotel. The doctor did not like the looks of Mrs. Carrolton. She was beautiful, undeniably, in a way; but her blue eyes were shifting, and her mouth, when in repose, had hard lines. She was not the type of woman he liked to have Burke with, and he would not have supposed she was the sort of woman that Burke himself would care for. And to see him now, hanging upon her every word——

With a gesture of disgust the doctor turned his back and stalked to the farther side of the room, much to the surprise of a vapid young woman to whom (he remembered when it was too late) he had been supposed to be talking.

The doctor was one of the first of John Denby's guests to make his adieus. He had decided suddenly that he must get away, quite away, from the sight of Burke and the little widow. Otherwise he should say something—a very strong something; and, for obvious reasons, he really could say—nothing.

Disgusted, frightened, annoyed, and aggrieved, he went home the next morning. To his sister he said much. He could talk to his sister. He gave first a full account of what he had seen and heard in Dalton, omitting not one detail. Then, wrathfully, he reproached her:

"So you see what's come of your foolishness. Burke isn't building bridges for the Hottentots now. He's giving pink teas to flighty blondes."

Mrs. Thayer laughed softly.

"But that's only another way of trying to get away from himself, Frank," she argued.

"Yes, but I notice he isn't trying to get away from the widow," he snapped.

A disturbed frown came to the lady's face.

"I know." She bit her lips. "I am a little worried at that, Frank, I'll own. I've wondered, often, if—if there was ever any danger of something like that happening."

"Well, you wouldn't wonder any longer, if you should see Mrs. Nellie Carrolton," observed the doctor, with terse significance.

There was a moment's silence; then, sharply, the doctor spoke again.

"I'm going to write to Helen."

"Oh, Frank!"

"I am. I've got to. I don't think it's right not to."

"But what shall you—tell her?"

"That she'd better come home and look after her property; if she doesn't, she's likely to lose it. That's what I'm going to tell her."

"Oh, Frank!" murmured his distressed sister again; but she made no further demur. And that night the letter went.

IN due course came the answer. It was short, but very much to the point. The doctor read it, and said a sharp something behind his teeth. Without another word he handed the note to his sister. And this is what she read:

Dear Dr. Gleason:

He isn't my property. I can't lose him, for I haven't him to lose. He took himself away from me years ago. If ever I'm to win him back, I must win him—not compel him. If he thinks he's found some one else—all the more reason why I can't come back now, until he knows whether he wants her or not. But if I came now, and he should want her— Really, Dr. Gleason, I don't want the same man to tell me twice to—go. HELEN D.

"Hm-m; just about what I expected she'd say," commented the doctor's sister tranquilly, as she laid the letter down.

"Oh, you women!" flung out the doctor, springing to his feet and turning wrathfully on his heel.

The doctor was relieved, but not wholly eased in his mind some days later when he heard indirectly that Denby Mansion was closed, and that the Denbys were off again to some remote corner of the world.

"Well, anyhow, the widow isn't with him now," he comforted himself aloud.

"Building bridges for the Hottentot again?" smiled his sister.

"Yes. Australia this time."

"Hm-m; that's nice and far," mused the lady.

"Oh, yes, it's far, all right," growled the doctor, somewhat belligerently. "Anyhow, it's too far for the widow, thank Heaven!"

The doctor went himself "far" before the month was out. Already his plans were made for a six months' trip with a research party to his pet hunting-ground—the grotto land of northern Spain. Once more the calmness of silence and absence left Edith Thayer with only Helen Denby's occasional letters to remind her of Burke Denby and his matrimonial problem.

CHAPTER XVIII

A LITTLE BUNCH OF DIARIES

IT was three years before the doctor went up to Dalton again. It was on a sad errand this time. John Denby had died suddenly, and after an hour's hesitation, the doctor went up to the funeral.

There were no garish lights and shrieking violins to greet him as he passed once more up the long, familiar walk. The warm September sun touched lovingly the old brass knocker, and peeped behind the stately colonial pillars of the long veranda. It gleamed for a moment on the bald heads of the somber-coated men filing slowly through the wide doorway, and it tried to turn to silver the sable crape hanging at the right of the door.

Not until that evening, after the funeral, did the doctor have the opportunity for more than formal word of greeting and sympathy with Burke Denby. He had been shocked in the afternoon at the changes in the young man's face; but he was more so when, at eight o'clock, he called at the house.

He found Burke alone in the library—the library whose every book and chair and curio spoke with the voice of the man who was gone—the man who had loved them so well.

Burke himself, to the doctor, looked suddenly old and worn, and infinitely weary of life. He did not at once speak of his father. But when he did speak of him, a little later, he seemed then to want to talk of nothing else. Things that his father had done and said, his little ways, his likes and dislikes, the hours of delight they had passed together, the trips they had taken, even the tiddledywinks and Mother Goose of childhood came in for their share. On and on until far into the night he talked, and the doctor listened, with a word now and then of sympathy or appreciation; but with a growing ache in his heart.

"You have been, indeed, a wonderful father and son," he said at last unsteadily.

"There was never another like us." The son's voice was very low.

There was a moment's silence. The doctor, his beseeching eyes on the younger man's half-averted face, was groping in his mind for the right words to introduce the subject which all the evening had been at the door of his lips—Helen. He felt that now, with Burke's softened heart to lend lenience, and with his lonely life in prospect to plead the need of companionship, was the time, if ever, that an appeal for Helen might be successful. But the right words of introduction had not come to him when Burke himself began to speak again.

"And it's almost as if I'd lost both father and mother," he went on brokenly; "for dad talked so much of mother. To him she was always with us, I think. I can remember, when I was a little boy, how real she was to me. In all we did or said she seemed to have a part. And always, all the way up, he used to talk of her—except for the time when——"

He stopped abruptly. The doctor, watching, wondered at the white compression that came suddenly to his lips. In a moment it was gone, however, and he had resumed speaking.

"Of late years, dad has seemed to talk more than ever of mother, and he spoke always as if she were with us. And now I'm alone—so utterly alone. Gleason—how ever am I going to live—without—dad!"

The doctor's heart leaped with mingled fear and elation: fear at what he was about to do; elation that his chance to do it had come. He cleared his throat and began, courageously, though not quite steadily:

"But—there's your wife, Burke. If only you—" He stopped short in dismay at the look that had come into Burke Denby's face.

"My wife! My wife! Don't speak of my wife now, man, if you want me to keep my reason! The woman who brought more sorrow to my father than any other living being! What do you think I wouldn't give if I could blot out the memory of the anguish my marriage brought to dad? I can see his eyes now, when he was pleading with me—before it. Afterward— Do you know what a brick dad was afterward? Well, I'll tell you. Never by so much as a look—much less a word—has he reproached or censured me. At first he—he just put up a wall between us. But it was a wall of grief and sore hurt. It was never anger. I know that now. Then, one day, somehow, I found that wall down, and I looked straight into dad's eyes. It was never there again—that wall. I knew, of course, that dad had never—forgotten. The hurt and grief were still there,—that I could so disobey him, disregard his wishes,—but he would not let them be a wall between us any longer. Then, when it all turned out as it did— But he never once said, 'I told you so,' nor even looked it. And he was kind and good to Helen always. But when I think how I—I, who love him so—brought to him all that grief and anguish of heart, I— My wife, indeed! Gleason, I never want to see her face again, or hear her name spoken!"

"But your—your child," stammered the dismayed doctor faintly.

A shadow of quick pain crossed the other's face.

"I know. And that's another thing that grieved dad. He was fond of his little granddaughter. He used to speak of her, often, till I begged him not to. She's mine, of course; but she's Helen's, too,—and she is being brought up by Helen—not me. I can imagine what she's being taught—about her father," he finished bitterly.

"Oh, but I'm sure—I know she's—" With a painful color the doctor, suddenly warned from within just in time, came to a frightened pause.

Burke, however, lifting a protesting hand, changed the subject abruptly; and the relieved doctor was glad, for once, not to have him wish to talk longer of his missing wife and daughter.

VERY soon the doctor said good night and left the house. But his heart was heavy.

"Perhaps, after all," he sighed to himself, "it wasn't just the time to get him to listen to reason about Helen—when it was his runaway marriage that had so grieved his father years ago; and his father now—just gone."

From many lips, before he left town the next morning, Dr. Gleason learned much of the life and doings of the Denbys during the past few years. Perhaps the death of John Denby had made the Dalton tongues garrulous. At all events they were nothing loath to talk; and the doctor, eager to obtain anything that would enable him to understand Burke Denby, was nothing loath to listen.

"Yes, sir, he hain't been well for years—John Denby hain't," related one old man into the doctor's attentive, sympathetic ears. "And I ain't sayin' I wonder, with all he's been through. But you said you was a friend of his, didn't ye?"

The doctor inclined his head.

"I am, indeed, an old friend of the family."

"Well, it's likely, then, you know something yourself of what's happened—though 'course you hain't lived here to see it all. First, ye know, there was his son's marriage. And that cut the old man all up—runaway, and not what the family wanted at all. You know that, of course. But they made the best of it, apparently, after a while, and young Denby took hold first-rate at the Works. Right down to the beginnin' he went, too,—overalls and day wages. And he done well—first-rate!—but it must 'a' galled some. Why, once, fur a spell, he worked under my son—he did. The men liked him, too, when they got over their grinnin' and nonsense, and see he was in earnest. You know what a likely chap young Denby can be, when he wants to."

"None better!" smiled the doctor.

"Yes. Well, to resume and go on. Somethin' happened one day—in his domestic affairs, I mean. The pretty young wife and kid lit out for parts unknown. And the son went back to his dad. (He and his dad always was more like pals than anythin' else.) Some says he sent her away—the wife, I mean. Some says she runned away herself. Like enough you know the rights of it.

"Well, whatever was the rights or wrongs of it, she went, and hain't been seen in these 'ere parts since, as I know of. Not that I should know her if I did see her, howsomever! Well, that was a dozen—yes, fourteen years ago, I guess, and the old man hain't been the same since. He hain't been the same since the boy's marriage, for that matter.

"Well, at first, after she went, the Denbys went kitin' off on one o' them trips o' theirn, that they're always takin'; then they come home and opened up the old house, and things went on about as they used to 'fore young Denby was married. But the old man fell sick—first on the trip, then afterwards, once or twice. He wan't well; but that didn't hinder his goin' off again. This time they went with one of their bridges. Always, before, they'd let Henry or Grosset manage the job; but this time they went themselves. After that they went lots—to South America, Africa, Australia, and I don't know where. They seemed restless and uneasy—both of 'em.

"Then they begun ter bring folks home with 'em: chaps who wore purple silk socks and neckties, and looked as if they'd never done a stroke of work in their lives; and women with high heels and false hair. My, but there was gay doin's there! And there was a pretty little widder there lots, and she liked it. Some said as how they thought there'd be a match there, sometime, if he could get free. But I guess there wan't anythin' ter that. Anyhow, all of a sudden, somethin' happened. Everythin' stopped right off short—all the gay doin's and parties—and everybody went home. Then, the next thing we knew, the old house was dark and empty again, and the Denbys gone to Australia with another bridge."

"Yes, I know. I remember—that," interposed the doctor, alert and interested.

"Did you see 'em—when they come back?"

"No."

"Well, they didn't look like the same men. And ever since they've been different, somehow. Stern and silent, with never a smile for anybody, skursley. No balls an' parties now, you bet

Continued on page 778

My Altar

By
JOHN H. STYLES, Jr.

I HAVE worshiped in churches and chapels;
I've prayed in the busy street;
I have sought my God and have found him
Where the waves of his ocean beat;
I have knelt in the silent forest
In the shade of some ancient tree;
But the dearest of all my altars
Was raised at my mother's knee.

I have listened to God in his Temple;
I've caught his voice in the crowd;
I have heard him speak when the breakers
Were booming long and loud;
Where the winds play soft in the tree-tops
My Father has talked to me;
But I never have heard him clearer
Than I did at my mother's knee.

The things in my life that are worthy
Were born in my mother's breast,
And breathed into mine by the magic
Of the love her life expressed.
The years that have brought me to manhood
Have taken her far from me;
But memory keeps me from straying
Too far from my mother's knee.

God make me the man of her vision
And purge me of selfishness!
God keep me true to her standards
And help me to live to bless!
God hallow the holy impress
Of the days that used to be,
And keep me a pilgrim forever
To the shrine at my mother's knee!

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

INQUIRER, Hamilton, N. D. In Matt. 12 : 40 Jesus said that He would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. The passage has long perplexed Biblical students. The most probable explanation is that Christ adopted a mode of expression common among the Jews, and said that he should be in the grave three "evening-mornings," which the translators rendered "three days and nights." The Jews also had a rule, of which there are several examples in other parts of the Bible, that any part of the onah, or period, counted as the whole. Thus, the interval between the crucifixion and the burial on the Friday would be part of Friday, and would count as one "evening-morning"; from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday would count as the second; and from Saturday sunset to the resurrection on Sunday morning would count as the third. The disciples evidently regarded the Sunday as the third day, as is shown by the conversation on the way to Emmaus, when Cleopas said: "This is the third day since these things were done." (Luke 24 : 21.)

J. H. F., Covington, Ky. The brethren of Jesus are named in the New Testament as James, Joses, Simon and Judas. In Matt. 12 : 46; Matt. 13 : 55; John 2 : 12, and Acts 1 : 14 they are generally understood to be proper brothers, all being named together conjointly with the mother of Jesus, and the same is inferred from John 7 : 5. The early fathers of the church held that Mary, the mother of Jesus, had no other children, and the question still remains open whether they were not the sons of Joseph by a former marriage, and therefore half-brothers of Jesus. On the other hand, Matt. 1 : 25 and Luke 2 : 7 favor the view that they were brothers and that Jesus was the "first-born." Sisters of Jesus are also mentioned in Matt. 13 : 56 and Mark 6 : 3, but their names are not given.

J. W. B., Denver, Col. It is an error to conclude that Socialism is confined to what is known as the Marxian philosophy. The extreme Socialists make more noise in the world than the conservatives or constructive Socialists, although the latter are by far the more numerous. One expositor, Henry Allen Overstreet, of the College of the City of New York, in a review in the current issue of the Chronicle, points out that the three distinctive features of enlightened Socialism of today are: (1) A protest against industrial and social inequalities; (2) a condemnation of effortless wealth—riches attained without adequate service or return to the community; and (3) the power to own in common and to have interests in common. This last might be regarded as including either cooperation or public ownership, or both. Further, it should be added that the more conservative form of Socialism appeals for attainment of its objects not to violence or revolution, but to education, agitation and legislation.

Mrs. C. N. P., Roberts, Md. Was Simon of Cyrene a negro?

The Simon described by Mark as the father of Alexander and Rufus (Mark 15 : 21) was probably a Jew who had come to attend the Passover. Many Jews lived in Cyrene (in Africa Libya) and frequently came to Jerusalem (Acts 2 : 10). Some, according to authorities, think he was chosen because he was an African; other because he was a slave, and as one of this class would be considered fit for such service; others because he was a disciple; and still others because meeting the procession, he showed sympathy for Jesus. This last is the likeliest supposition. As his sons were known in the early church, he probably became a Christian.

Mrs. J. K. O. D., Plummer, Idaho. Please explain Rom. 13 : 1-3.

The apostle here is reiterating a principle which Jesus taught when He said: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" (Matt. 22 : 21). All government is to be respected, because were it not of God's permission, how could it exist? Civil government is necessary, but the Scriptural approval of it respects the office, and not necessarily the character of the ruler. As obedience is demanded because of the divine sanction or approval, there follows logically this limitation that obedience is not demanded in matters that are contrary to God's appointment. Here again the principle laid down by Jesus applied: "Render to God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22 : 21).

Charles R. Mellen, proprietor of Broadmeadow Farm, the famous old Johnston Homestead, near Geneva, N. Y., writes: "The Christian Herald is always interesting, but the June 6 number is specially so to me, a farmer of 50 years' experience. The beautiful cover (photo by John Kabel) of the very worst weed we have to combat on our farms here is as true to nature as any camera can produce it. This picture goes to show how completely this vile weed pest can and does run out every other kind of weed or grass or vegetation. The roots run down from eight to twelve inches, and each flower produces thousands and thousands of seeds which the wind scatters far and wide. I have seen field after field exactly like this picture. Our name for the weed is 'wild carrot,' as the root has a strong, pungent, carroty odor. When once started, it is almost impossible to eradicate it. The cover picture, however, is a beautiful one, and few of your readers will know of the fierce fight we are putting up against the worst weed we know of. As there are 72 miles of tile drains on my farm of 303 acres, the article by Frank G. Carpenter in this same number, 'Uncle Sam's New Bread Basket,' is of course of great interest to me, and an eye-opener to a northern farmer."

R. H. Gardiner, Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order, writes: "The Commission appointed by the American Episcopal Church to issue to all communions throughout the world which confess Christ as God and Saviour an invitation to unite in arranging for a World Conference, asks for the prayers of Christians everywhere that God through the Holy Spirit will unite His people in laboring for the establishment of His Kingdom." The Commission requests "all who have been baptized into the name of Christ to begin to prepare now for the observance of the eight days beginning with January 18 through January 25, 1918, as a season for special prayer for the Reunion of Christendom and for the blessing and guidance of all efforts for that end."

© Curtis Photo

A Little Mother's Lullaby

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

TH' streets are filled with trampin' feet,
Sleep, sleep, my baby!
But somewhere there's a country sweet,
An' candies an' ice-cream to eat;
An' somewhere there are skies all blue,
An' buttercups an' daisies, too.
(Hush, don' yer cry till I get through!)
Sleep, sleep, my baby.

This country is th' land o' dreams,
Sleep, sleep, my baby.
It's far away from cries an' screams,
An' everything is good, it seems
Ter fold yer in an' clasp yer tight,
It's always gay an' always bright,
It's always day-time—never night!
Sleep, sleep, my baby.

Th' city streets are hot, so hot;
Sleep, sleep, my baby!
But in this country, like as not,
There'll always be a breezy spot.
It's Dreamland, where there's not a care,
Where vi'lets grow, an' roses fair. . . .
(An', oh, I think you're almost there!)
Sleep, sleep, my baby.

Reader, New York City, writes: "Apropos of a recent letter in the Mail-Bag regarding the need of preaching plain Gospel truth, and not mere rhetoric, in the pulpit, let me call your attention to a little anecdote in Dr. Munhall's paper, the Eastern Methodist, which puts the situation very neatly, I think. It is told of a preacher who preached a most delightful sermon—to the fishes. They were all charmed, but after the discourse:

"The sermon now ended,
Each turned and descended;
The pikes went on stealing,
The eels went on eeling;
Much delighted were they—
But preferred the old way.

"Now, it is all very well to please an audience, but please it to its edification. Make the truth stick. Rhetoric and oratory whose end is entertainment is out of place in the pulpit." Dr. Munhall's view of the case—assuming him to be the writer—has a very wide application. It is unfortunately too true that a good many sermons today are not to be classed among the profitable things.

"Scio," Cambridge, Mass., and a number of other readers, write urgently suggesting that a week of prayer be designated in which we, as a nation, may call on the Lord, and implore divine guidance in the present crisis. Several readers also strongly urge that we, as a nation, ask the divine blessing on the food crops. These requests have been sent to the Prayer League, where they will be made a subject of supplication. We trust that the same course may be followed by local Prayer Leagues throughout the country.

J. A. S., Richland, Calif. 1. There is no common ground for comparing cannibal to Christian races. 2 and 3. These questions are controversial. 4. It is obviously true that a free Gospel and a free press will develop the love of freedom in a nation. In these days of world-wide evangelization, the Gospel is usually the advance agent of civilization and of the benefits that flow from the general uplift.

Reader, Stanley, N. Y. Capital punishment is a disputed question, with strong advocates on both sides for and against. Controversy on the subject in the Mail-Bag would not settle it.

Inquiring Reader. You will find a complete and satisfactory explanation of Jewish sacrifices, their origin and significance, in a booklet issued by the Hebrew Christian Publication Society, Bible House, N. Y. For accurate scholarship and wide range of information, it will meet all your requirements. The secretary will send you a free copy for the asking.

Interested, Wolfton, S. C. Moving picture spectacles are too often spectacles that have no real foundation in fact. How do you suppose a moving picture promoter can tell you anything about heaven or hell? You should look on the bright side of the Gospel and its manifold cheering promises, and leave the threats and thunder of the Law to those still under the Law.

A. N. L., Pittston, Pa. Gambling, according to the Standard Dictionary, is "To play a game, especially a game of chance for stakes; risk money or other possessions on an event, chance or contingency; pretend to buy or sell, depending upon chance variations in price for gain." The most common forms of gambling today are card games, betting on horse-races, lotteries and marginal buying in the stock markets.

Mrs. L. B. E., Los Angeles, Calif. The titles given to Christ by various writers, such as First-Begotten (Heb. 1 : 5) and First-Born (Rom. 8 : 29), are often confusing, if one does not bear in mind the figurative style employed by all Jewish writers. Christ having been born in the flesh, it is but natural that His historians should occasionally use terms appropriate to earthly conditions. The fact which the writers are desirous of bringing home is that in Christ began the purpose of grace, and that God sent the Son to prove to the world that nothing, even the greatest, was too much to offer for the world's redemption by a Saviour of love.

Mrs. W. G., Greensburg, Ind. We do not discuss the doctrines of the various sectarian bodies.

W. F. H., Boston, Mass. With regard to the passages you mention there are widely divergent views entertained. If you are concerned about your sins, however, all you need do is to go to Him who says, "Come unto me." To do so you need no intermediary, whether clerical or otherwise, but simply—Go.

E. C. W., Millport, O. Dr. Gray's articles on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," now appearing in the Christian Herald, will deal with the prophetic literature of the Second Coming.

R. W. McO., McKenzie, Tenn. 1. Whether a person enlisting for the war forfeits thereby the benefits of his life-insurance depends on the wording of the policy. We believe that life-insurance companies are making arrangements to make the policies binding, despite war-risks. 2. The passage in Luke 22 : 36-38 must be taken figuratively as a setting forth of the fact that henceforth persecution and suffering would be the lot of his followers and that many perils would come upon them. How well Christ prophesied is well seen in a review of the strife, war and combat which Christians have had to endure since His death.

Mrs. A. R. Brown, 5838 West Huron St., Chicago, a Christian Herald reader, would be grateful to anyone who could send her the address of her husband, Alfred R. Brown, who mysteriously disappeared June 9 last.

C. O., Wheelock, N. D. Masonic Lodges do not forbid their members to belong or go to church.

The Empty House

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

YESTERDAY I walked down a shady little side street, a little side street that had been a very fashionable section of the city a generation ago. Many of the houses are boarded up now; many others, their white woodwork marred and defaced by too busy and too careless folk, have quite frankly degenerated into rooming-houses. An air of fatigue, of discouragement, almost, hangs over the little side street; and one can see, in fancy, the vague forms of stately men and women peering half-reproachfully in at the scarred doors.

Yesterday I walked down a shady side street, and, standing in front of an old empty house I saw a man—white-haired, dim of eyes, stoop-shouldered. And he seemed to be listening; to be waiting for some one or something.

The little side street is not noisy in the mid-afternoon. It is deserted, quite, and the heat of summer hangs over it in a veil-like way. And so the old man went quite unnoticed. But I, impelled by curiosity, lingered there, watching. And as I watched I saw him reach down and take a worn violin from a battered case, saw him finger the strings lovingly for a moment, and then tuck it under his chin and start to play. Was it imagination, or did his shoulders straighten a bit as he played? Did I dream it, or were his eyes a bit brighter?

EACH time I pass an empty house I wonder at who dwelt there,
Who dwelt there in the days of long ago;
I wonder at the joy and fear and happiness folk felt there,
The tears and laughter that I may not know
I wonder if they loved or if they lived a tragic story;
I wonder if child voices echoed through each paneled hall;
I wonder if they knew the touch of inspiration's glory,
Or if they lived beneath despair's black pall!

Each time I pass an empty house I wonder at who dwelt there,
Who dwelt there in the dusky yesterday.
I wonder at the thrilling words that tenderly were spelt there,
In letters to a lover far away.
I wonder if the measured tread of soldiers crossed the flagging,
And hurried, clanking, up the narrow stair;
I wonder if they came again—quite weary footsteps dragging—
When drumbeats throbbed upon the sultry air.

Each time I pass an empty house I wonder at who dwelt there,
Who dwelt there in the days of long ago;
I wonder at half silent prayers they murmured as they knelt there,
And told the Father of a hope—or woe. . . .
I wonder if they linger in the dimly lighted corners,
And watch us go with veiled, reproachful eye?
And sometimes, pausing by the way, I dream a line of mourners
Who, in the shadows, long for days gone by!

It was Träumerei that he played, Träumerei—soft, hauntingly sweet of melody. The street, the smart little street of yesterday, deserted though it was, seemed to catch its breath as he played. A stray child or two stood at a safe distance and looked at him, while I, spellbound, followed the swing of his arm with my eyes.

Sadly, with its haunting sweetness, the music paused, faded away. And as I watched him, the old man seemed to sigh. And his shoulders seemed to grow bent again, as he fitted the violin into its worn case.

The little children were playing noisily on the edge of the broken pavement as he turned away. They had forgotten the chance musician and his music. But I watched him as he walked wearily down the street—watched him until, with never a backward glance, he turned the corner. And the whole neighborhood, filled with its vague ghosts of yesterday, seemed very lonely indeed.

ONLY an old musician! One sees many of them in the city, standing in gutters, playing soft little melodies and blatant harsh ones. But they usually—the street musicians—pass a hat after they have played, or a tin cup that coins fall into with a jingly sound. And the ordinary street musician seldom plays in front of an empty house.

I thought of all these things as I walked away. And I found myself wondering whether there was a story about the old man and his music. I found myself wondering whether She had not lived there some time when he was a young man with black hair, and flashing eyes, and straight shoulders. I wondered whether he had played to Her on some warmly dark night, while She smiled softly at him from over the tiny iron balcony. I wondered if She had been very young—a slender little thing with curls of blue ribbon on her white muslin frock. I wondered if She had left him in the dimness of yesterday, or if She had married another, or if She had died. And I wondered if the old musician, bent and white-haired, came back, ever so often, to play Her song under the empty window of Her empty room. I wondered . . .

Perhaps he was just an old, very near-sighted man, who did not notice that the house he played in front of was an unoccupied house. Perhaps he had forgotten the tin cup and the hat to be passed. Perhaps . . . And yet there is such a thing as the memory that lives on past youth, past summer-time, past even—death. And so I wondered.

THERE are many deserted houses in the city. There are many dim little alley-ways crowded with small alien children; there are many broken iron balconies and scarred wooden door-sills that may have a story to tell. To some people they are just empty houses, just swarming alleys, just balconies and door-steps in need of repair. But to the folk who see beyond the dust and clamor of today they are bits of romance. And on sultry summer afternoons the wanderer with an imagination may hear, as I heard it, faint music from the past.

IT'S rather fun to look for the stories in this great book-world we live in. It's rather fun to wonder about the people one sees every day in the crowded street car; it's rather amusing to speculate about the folk who live in the house directly behind you. (If it's the city, one sometimes cannot locate the front of the house—because that is another street.) But one can make up romances about the blonde girl who stands so wistfully at the library window; one can smile at the chubby little boy who rides astride a rocking-horse and quite placidly sucks his thumb; one can dream about the old couple that sit hand in hand, at twilight time.

It's not very pleasant to be the sort of a person who sees only a thousand bricks and a bit of crumbled mortar in an old house. And it's rather horrid to be the kind of a person who, seeing an old musician playing "Träumerei" in front of a vacant dwelling-place that was once a home, thinks that he's too near-sighted to see the "For Sale" sign.

Somebody said, once,

"Smile and the world smiles with you;
Weep and you weep alone;
For the sad old earth has need of your mirth;
It has sorrow enough of its own!"

Oh, friends of mine, it isn't only mirth that the sad old earth needs. The prosaic old earth has need of imagination as well as laughter; and it has need of romance as well as imagination. For romance and imagination are the two bits of colored glass that go into the making up of a magical pair of rosy spectacles. And anyone who will look at life through these spectacles will see the charming side of it—through a softly beautiful glow. And when life is filled with dim old houses and broken dreams and bits of haunting melody, the rosy spectacles tend to soften the sharp corners, and blur the scars of time, and throw a rainbow veil over a mist of tears.

Neōlin
TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
Better than Leather

The soles were still good, but the uppers were gone.

Once you buy Neōlin Soles you'll have no others. You'll find it difficult to wear them out. "If these ever wear out I shall have another pair" says one Neōlin wearer in a letter. "I think no shoe will live long enough to be graced with another Neōlin Sole" says a second.

As for the youngsters' wear, here is a letter from a father. It may be similar to your Neōlin experience.

The National Petroleum Corporation
Denver, Colorado

Gentlemen:

I have a boy who was fifteen years old in February. He is a "regular" boy. He is a Boy Scout, indulges in hikes and plays havoc with clothes and shoes.

I bought him a pair of shoes with Neōlin Soles and he wore them almost continuously for eight months. At the end of that time the soles were still good but the uppers were gone. His next pair of shoes had leather soles and lasted just five weeks. I cannot refrain from advising you of this remarkable illustration of the lasting qualities of Neōlin. Yours very truly,

(Signed) H. C. RUBINCAM.

So, as we say, you'll probably take no other for your children or yourself.

And Neōlin Soles—unlike rubbers—are trim for wet weather. Yet they are not rubber, though as watertight and as flexible. They feel like treading on velvet. And Neōlin is not a substitute for leather—it is an advance upon it.

Insist on Neōlin Soles next time—buy them on your next new shoes. Don't be content with fibre or composition imitations. If your dealer hasn't them he easily can get them. To protect yourself, mark that mark; stamp it on your memory: Neōlin —the trade symbol for a never changing quality product of

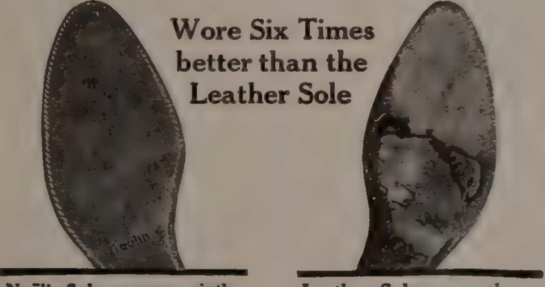
The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, O.



Wore Six Times better than the Leather Sole

Neōlin Sole worn one-sixth through in 33 days—on right foot of experimenter.

Leather Sole, worn clean through in 33 days, on left foot of experimenter.

Where the Doctor and the Boy Agree

Every doctor, we think, if asked about boy-food, will advise Puffed Wheat and Rice.

For these are Prof. Anderson's scientific foods. They are whole grains made wholly digestible. Every food cell is exploded. Every atom feeds.

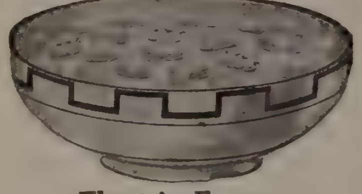
Doctors stand for whole-grain diet. And no other method so fits whole grains for food.

But most boys, also, if asked what they liked best, would say Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

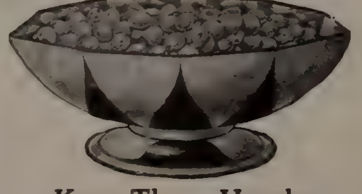
For these are food confections. They are bubbles of grain, toasted and flavory, puffed to eight times normal size. To most boys they are more than mealtime dainties. They carry bagfuls, doused with melted butter, when they go to play.

Don't be stingy with these foods on which doctors and boys agree. Whole-grain foods are all too scarce in the ordinary diet. Let Puffed Grains supply them. Not for breakfast only, but at any time and in any way in which the children like them.

In this hot weather—this dairy-dish time—keep all three kinds on hand.



Float in Every Bowl of Milk



Keep Them Handy for Hungry Boys

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice
and Corn Puffs
Each 15c Except in Far West

Mix in Every Dish of Berries

Use as Garnish on Ice Cream

(1620)

God's Gracious Invitation

International Sunday School Lesson for July 29
Isaiah 55

Life Transfigured by Communion with God

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

INSTEAD of the character studies of Hebrew leaders and the lessons of events like Sennacherib's invasion and retreat, we study today a chapter full of general truths given to us in the most exalted and memorable language. In fact, this beautiful passage is expressed in Hebrew poetry, and some of our diligent students will find it profitable to arrange it all in verse form. Personally, I believe that it would be well if this were done in our printed Bibles, for the appeal to the eye is stronger, and memorizing is easier. As a suggestion I give several quotations in this form today.

Now, while the teachings of Isaiah 55 are universal, they grew out of a very definite situation. The Jews had recovered from the shock of captivity and were settling down to that commercial life which has characterized most of them ever since. They were successful in doing business in Babylon itself, and the prophets had a hard time of it to arouse the desire to return to their own land. Yet they rightly insisted that God planned higher and better things as the free gift of his love.

The Free Mercies of God

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters,
And he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat;
Yea, come, buy wine and milk,
Without money and without price."

This great scripture opens up to us the veritable fact, often overlooked, that the chief joys of life are free and are the direct gift of the Almighty. The accidental things that separate the rich from the poor—clothing, houses, jewels—are not worthy to be compared to the great essentials: water, sunshine, life, health and simple goodness. Moreover, the spiritual treasures, confidence in God's providence and faith in immortality, for example, cannot be earned or purchased by any one. Besides, we pay dearly indeed for things that are harmful, whereas the edifying things are to be freely had by any humble and teachable soul. Our own Lowell says,

"At the devil's booth are all things sold,
Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold;
For a cap and bells our lives we pay,
Bubbles we buy with a whole soul's tasking;
'Tis heaven alone that is given away;
'Tis only God may be had for the asking."

The Emptiness of Worldliness

The chief argument used to turn the thoughts of the exiles to higher things is based on the emptiness of mere worldly success and prosperity. In themselves, riches and pleasures can never make happy a soul that God made for communion with himself. They are springs of which men taste and soon thirst again. St. Augustine finely says, "Thou hast created us for thyself, and our souls are restless until they find rest in thee."

Countless hearts would confess today that they are surfeited with worldliness, and suffer a spiritual thirst that they do not know how to assuage. Many of our millionaires would echo Solomon, the rich man of the Hebrew Proverbs, and say, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." One of the wealthiest men I know said to me the other day, "I have so little to live for. I really get mighty little good out of it all."

This is pitiful! God intends men to be happy. He makes it possible for them to quench the thirst of the soul with living waters. But it is as the anchorite Juliana said centuries ago, "A soul may never have rest in things that are beneath itself." Higher, nearer God, is satisfaction.

Isaiah, chapters 40 to 55, gives a ringing challenge to dare to leave ease, comfort and prosperous enterprises, to go out across the desert and rebuild the desolate places of Zion. We have read in Ezra and Nehemiah of the return. It is wonderful that so many were willing to heed this call of patriotism and religion. Yet hundreds of families felt the contamination of Babylon morally, and returned for their children's sakes.

"Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence;
Touch no unclean thing;
Go ye out of the midst of her;
Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

The Call to Leave Worldly Success Behind

In a way, the return from exile was as much a heroic adventure of faith as the first pioneering journey of Abraham. It could not have been accomplished without the driving power of a sublime faith in a mission to be performed. Such is the spirit of the true pioneer always, as for example, in the cabin of the Mayflower, where a compact full of aspirations and divine faith was drawn up.

In an individual life, it means courage and sacrifice to leave the world's rewards for the sake of a new cause or an old ideal reborn. Yet the Spirit tells us plainly that we shall never be satisfied if we surrender our convictions for mere prosperity. Levi, sitting at the receipt of taxes, had found that neither money nor feasting met the needs of his soul. When Jesus called, he gladly left all and followed him.

Of another man we read: "Demas hath deserted me, having loved this present world." Like many another, he turned his back on the vision. But do you suppose he was ever really as happy at Thessalonica, however rich and "successful" he became, as that indomitable old hero Paul, whom he had left in a dungeon at Rome?

The Missionary Aspect of National Idealism

The prophet appeals to patriots to make sacrifices, that their own land may not be effaced from the life of the world He assures them of success and plenty there, after the sacrifices are made. But the prime value of their land is for the sake of its ideals. Israel is Jehovah's servant, with a message and a ministry to all the earth.

Florence Nightingale was asked what she considered the most vital and influential factor in a nation's life. To the surprise of her questioner she replied, "Its idea of God." This was certainly true of ancient Israel. It is sober fact to say that the Almighty wanted to use the religion of Israel to lead the whole of humanity nearer to himself.

"Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not,
And a nation that knew not thee shall run unto thee,
Because of Jehovah thy God,
And for the Holy One of Israel."

Today we Americans are being challenged to a great enterprise in the unwonted form of international war. We fight not primarily for ourselves, but for all mankind. We trace our history from religious liberty in 1620, and political liberty in 1776, on to personal freedom for all in 1861, then to freedom for a distressed neighbor people in 1898; and we see that it was impossible for us to fail to join in a war for the liberty of all men everywhere.

Perhaps this helped the Bible student to realize the real greatness and insight of Isaiah, as he saw the faith of the prophet becoming the hope of the human race.

Some Characteristics of God in the Book of Isaiah

The book we are studying has had perhaps a greater influence than any other in giving the church its ideas about the nature and character of God. Let us look for a while at the characteristics which stand out in this chapter.

Accessibility and Forgiving Love

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found,
Call ye upon him while he is near:
Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the unrighteous man his thoughts:
And let him return unto the Lord,
 And he will have mercy upon him;
And to our God,
 For he will abundantly pardon."

Here is no cold, distant Being, holding himself aloof from the creatures struggling in the dust. God is caring, listening, waiting to help. He is, as Jesus said, a Father who loves to have his children come to him, a God seeking worshipers. "Come unto me" is, in this chapter, the first utterance of one of the Bible's sweetest phrases. You remember how Christ defines the purposes of the coming—for rest when weary and burdened, but also to learn of him. "Come, seek, call, return," all imply that it is we who must change our ways, but just as surely that God is ready to help us do it.

With men as imperfect as they are, God would not be hospitable and friendly unless he was prepared to be forgiving. He wishes to cooperate with his erring children that they may find the right and rejoice in it. Even in the Old Testament we find forgiveness in the front rank of the qualities of God. Isaiah especially needed to have this confidence, since sin had wrecked the career of the nation. God is the Redeemer and Rebuilder of human life, individual and social.

Holiness. Like Jesus, the prophet was able to hold the two ideals of exaltation and approachability in the Father. No one goes beyond these songs in pointing out the searching purity of God's purposes and his inflexible condemnation of moral evil. With all of the welcome and tenderness is the frank sublime statement that as the heavens are high above the earth, so are God's thoughts above man's. It is a humbling and purging realization that helps to develop a spirit of confidence in his guidance.

Certainty. Back of this holy, approachable, forgiving deity are the infinite forces of the universe. As sure as the rain and the harvest are the purposes he has in view for the spiritual development of mankind. Since he has commissioned his representatives to urge the people to leave Babylon, their going is both certain and safe.

"For ye shall go out with joy,
 And be led forth with peace;
 The mountains and the hills shall break forth into singing,
 And all the trees of the field shall clap their hands."

In the ecstasy of hope for the future, the prophet pictures the reclaimed land of Zion, fruitful again and the home of a happy and peaceful nation. But his faith will not rest there. It flies forth to a vision of the desert blossoming as the rose, and of all the dark heathen world beyond being brought within the scope of God's plans for a redeemed humanity. It foretokens the universality of the Gospel.

So we of today, despite the heavy clouds in our sky, should have a like faith in a God who loves, cares, and leads. The nations shall yet be blessed. Forgiveness and healing wait—

"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree,
 And instead of the brier shall come up
 the myrtle tree;
 And it shall be to the Lord for a name;
 For an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary, World's Sunday School Association

How to Kill Sunday Baseball

WITH the coming of the summer days, every city and country Sunday school faces the problem of holding the boys against the pull of Sunday baseball. We cannot ignore the matter. Is there not some solution of the problem?

One country community met the situation by the appointment of a committee of the Sunday school on baseball or recreations. This committee waited on all the farmers in that vicinity and secured their consent to let the hired hands off for baseball Saturday afternoon. The committee then planned a baseball ground and promoted the games. As a consequence, Sunday baseball was done away with in that community, and the young men were found in that Sunday school on Sunday.

In the city of Atchison, Kansas, the Sunday schools promoted a city Sunday School Baseball League. It is one of the most interesting things the city ever had. The papers call it the "Twilight League." The games are held evenings at 6 P. M.; a schedule is prepared and six Sunday schools have teams represented in the League. The games are popular, and the Twilight League has about killed Sunday baseball in Atchison.

In the larger cities, such as Brooklyn and Chicago, Sunday School Athletic Leagues have for years been pushing Saturday afternoon Inter-Sunday-school baseball, Sunday school attendance being a requisite for membership in the teams.

How to Combine the Church and Sunday School Service

In many places in this country, the attendance upon both church and Sunday school has been increased and sometimes doubled by the combination service plan. The plan is to secure the attendance of all the Sunday school at the church service, and all the church at the Sunday school service. Under this plan, the church service is sometimes conducted first, beginning at ten A. M. At the end of the sermon, following a short prayer, without pronouncing the benediction, the Sunday school superintendent and chorister come to the platform and take charge, a hymn is announced, and after the preliminaries, the whole audience is rearranged in class or departmental groups.

The plan, as followed with success by the Union Methodist Episcopal Church of Pittsburg, was tried in the summer. The service began promptly at 10:30, everybody assembling in the auditorium and not in the lecture room. The scholars did not sit in classes, but occupied seats as in an ordinary public service. The collection for the church expenses was taken at the usual time, and that for the Sunday school in the classes later as usual. The following is the plan of the combined service:

10:25—Organ voluntary.

10:30—Hymn, Apostles' Creed, prayer, anthem, Scripture lesson (read by Sunday school superintendent), notices, hymn, sermon, prayer, hymn.

During the singing of the first verse, the teachers whose classes are below go down to their places. During the singing of the second verse, the scholars of those classes go down. After the singing of the hymn, the remainder of the congregation take their places in classes in the auditorium. At 11:30 the study of the lesson begins, and at 12:05 the exercises close in all departments.

In some churches the Sunday school is held first, the pastor stepping upon the platform after the hymn following the lesson, and, without dismissal, going on with the service on the assumption that all will stay.

Every member of the church in the Sunday school service, and every member of the Sunday school in the church service! The Sunday school as the Bible-teaching service of the church is the slogan of the new day.

RED WING GRAPE JUICE
RED WING GRAPE JUICE
ONE PINT NET

Goes Further
Any Way You Use It

Red Wing Grape Juice is economical any way you use it. It goes further—from 25 to 50 per cent further. This is because it is better and richer.

Used as a beverage, water should be added to Red Wing, because Red Wing retains its richness, flavor, body and color even when appreciably diluted.

RED WING GRAPE CUP

Put a small block of ice in a two-quart glass pitcher. Slice in one orange, a banana, two or three pieces of pineapple, and add such berries as are in season. Pour over this one quart of water and one pint of RED WING Grape Juice. Decorate with mint and allow to stand until seasoned.

RED WING
the GRAPE JUICE
With the Better Flavor

As a base or flavoring for punches, ices and desserts, a little Red Wing goes a long way.

The superior excellence of Red Wing Grape Juice is due to the genuine purity of it. It is just the pure, free juice from the first light crush of the finest select New York State Concord grapes. It comes to you unadulterated and unfermented—just as it leaves the grape.

Try the Red Wing recipes given here. You will readily see their economy, and they are uncommonly delicious. Our booklet, mailed free on request, gives a score or more of other Red Wing recipes.

PURITAN FOOD PRODUCTS CO., Inc.
Fredonia, N. Y.

RED WING SHERBET

½ pint Red Wing Grape Juice
½ pint boiling water
1 package lemon or orange gelatine

Dissolve gelatine in one-half pint boiling water and add the grape juice. Freeze until firm. Garnish with maraschino cherries

RED WING HIGH BALL

Place a small block of ice in an eight-ounce glass, fill half full with RED WING Grape Juice, and add plain or carbonated water. Mix thoroughly

Sales Branches:
Chicago
New York
Boston
San Francisco

RED WING PUNCH

6 pints Red Wing Grape Juice
1 dozen oranges, juice
6 lemons, juice
2 cans grated pineapple
6 quarts water

1 quart fresh-made black tea
6 cups sugar
1 whole orange
1 banana
2 slices pineapple

Boil the water and pineapple twenty minutes; strain through two folds of cheese cloth, pressing out all the liquid; add the sugar and let boil five or six minutes; add the tea and set aside in fruit jars, covered, to chill. When ready to serve add the chilled RED WING Grape Juice with the chilled juice of the oranges and lemons. After turning the punch into the bowl, add the orange, pineapple and banana cut in small pieces. This recipe serves one hundred.

Why Some Foods Create Deadly Poisons

By R. H. Sinclair

"THE combinations of food that most people eat three times a day inflict nothing less than a crime against their health and are the direct cause of ninety per cent of all sickness."

This is the rather startling statement of Eugene Christian, the famous New York Food Scientist whose wonderful system of corrective eating is receiving so much eager attention throughout the Nation at the present time.

According to Eugene Christian we eat without any thought of the relation which one food has to another when eaten at the same time. The result is that often we combine two foods each of great value in itself but which when combined in the stomach literally explode, liberating toxins which are absorbed by the blood and form the root of nearly all sickness, the first indications of which are acidity, fermentation, gas, constipation, and many other sympathetic ills leading to most serious consequences.

All of this, states Eugene Christian, can be avoided if we would only pay a little attention to the selection of our daily menus instead of eating without any regard for the consequences.

This does not mean that it is necessary to eat foods we don't like; instead Christian prescribes meals which are twice as delicious as those to which we are accustomed.

Not long ago I was fortunate enough to be present when Eugene Christian was relating some of his experiences with corrective eating to a group of men interested in dietetics, and I was literally amazed at what he accomplished with food alone and without drugs or medicines of any kind.

One case which sticks in my mind was that of a prominent woman in New York City. She had gone to him with stomach and intestinal fermentation and gas, auto-intoxication, mental depression and anæmia, vertigo, and threatened heart failure. She was very much overweight when she commenced, but reduced her weight thirty-seven pounds during the treatment. He showed me a letter she had written him afterward, in which she said:

"I am sure you will be gratified to hear that I continue to improve—it seems sometimes that I must have been made over, and it is difficult to remember that less than eight months ago I was a feeble old woman depending upon daily doses of strychnia for what little strength I had. When I came under your treatment, I weighed one hundred and ninety-seven pounds, was hardly able to walk, and was subject to most serious heart attacks upon the slightest exertion. And I am now so well, so strong, that my family and friends maintain that it is a miracle which has restored me to strength and vigor of life—certainly in my case the cure is most remarkable because of my sixty-seven years."

Another was a well-known minister who had been out of his pulpit for twenty-two months, unable to preach or conduct the simplest service. He was about twenty-five pounds under-weight, anæmic, nervous, had superacidity, and could not assimilate his food; and his heart action was very irregular. He had gradually declined for two years although treated by one of New York's leading physicians. Three months after he placed himself under Eugene Christian's care he preached the first sermon he had been able to preach in nearly two years. This was over three years ago.

He has gained about twenty-five pounds in weight, and since has not missed a day from his arduous clerical work. He has steadily gained in strength and vitality, and is to-day healthy and athletic.

Another case which interested me greatly was that of a bank cashier, confined to his desk for from seven to eight hours a day.

When he first consulted Eugene Christian he was very much run down in health, suffering from constipation and kidney trouble, and subject to almost constant and very severe headaches.

Only one month from the time he began to follow Eugene Christian's suggestions, his constipation was gone and the headaches had completely disappeared. These severe headaches, which had made continuous brain work almost impossible, were gone because the cause—constipation—was gone.

He pursued the treatment for three months with a gradual increase in weight, and at the end of that time practically every one of his former symptoms having disappeared, he wrote that he was "feeling fine all the time."

In order to reach more people who are in need of Eugene Christian's methods the Corrective Eating Society was founded to publish a series of 24 simple Lessons which he has prepared on Corrective Eating. These lessons are being sent as quickly as possible to all who request them for free examination. The lessons are not for sick people alone, but for all who wish to build up and maintain a reserve of bodily health and mental energy.

They are written in simple language, and every point is explained so there is little chance for misunderstanding. Reasons are given for every recommendation, and every statement is based upon results secured in the author's many years' experience.

But the lessons do not merely tell you why you should eat correctly and what the results will be; they also give actual menus for breakfast, luncheon, and dinner, covering conditions of health and sickness from infancy to old age for all occupations, climates, and seasons. They include Corrective Menus for stomach acidity, fermentation, constipation, and the host of diseases which follow when these "warnings" are neglected.

Every one of these menus has been employed for its purpose of increasing efficiency or restoring health not once but many times—so that every element of experiment has been removed. And an interesting feature in these days of high costs is that following these menus will cost you less than your food costs now.

Eugene Christian feels that every thinking man or woman—young or old—well or sick—should know the laws of Corrective Eating. For there is a great deal of truth in the old adage that "Most people dig their graves with their teeth." Food is the fuel of the human system, and just as certain fuels will produce definite results when consumed in a furnace, so will the right foods produce the desired results when put into the human furnace.

Yet not one person in a hundred has any knowledge of food as fuel. Some of the combinations which we eat every day are as inefficient and dangerous as soggy wood, wet leaves, mud, sawdust, and a little dynamite would be for a furnace. No wonder man is only 50 per cent efficient—no wonder the average life is only 43 years—no wonder diseases of the stomach, liver, and kidneys have increased 103 per cent within the past 30 years!

The "24 Little Lessons in Corrective Eating" show how easy and simple it is to eat your way back to normal health and up to a new type of physical and mental power. The relation of health to material success is so close that the result of eating Nature's way, as explained in these booklets, is a form of personal efficiency which often puts men head and shoulders above their brother-workers. For every one knows that the best ideas, plans, and methods are worked out when you are brimful of vitality—when you feel full of "ginger." The better you feel—the better work you can do.

If you would like to see the "24 Little Lessons in Corrective Eating," simply write the Corrective Eating Society, Inc., Department 347, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and they will mail you a set for examination. It is not necessary to enclose any money with your request. Merely write and ask them to send the lessons for five days' free examination with the understanding that at the end of that time you will either remit $3, the small fee asked, or return the lessons. You take no risk and if the more than 300 pages yield but one single suggestion that will bring greater health, you will get back many times the cost in personal benefit—yet hundreds write the Society that they find vital helpfulness on every page. (Advertisement)

Merely tear out and mail this form instead of writing a letter. It is a copy of the official blank adopted by the Society and will be honored at once.

CORRECTIVE EATING SOCIETY, Inc.,
Dept. 347, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City

You may mail me the 24 Lessons in Corrective Eating for examination. 5 days after I receive them, I will either send you $3 (full payment), or remail them to you.

Name.................................... Address....................................
(Advertisement)

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 764

them to Germany, it was announced on June 28 that the policy of the United States government in cooperation with the governments of the Entente, would be to deny to Holland, Scandinavia and Switzerland food-stuffs in excess of what is absolutely necessary to supplement their home production, and pig iron, sulphur and other commodities in which they have been trading with Germany. Trading privileges of neutral countries with the Allies were to be restricted to such neutral countries as would purchase all the supplies they needed from the Allies. The alternative presented to the neutrals would be either to give up all trade with Germany, or to forego all trade with the United States and her allies. Figures carefully compiled show that imports of food into Germany from neutral countries in 1916 were 1,410,100 tons, equivalent to the full rations of the German army on the Western front. The regulation of this trade will be in charge of the new Exports Council. President Wilson by a proclamation, dated at Washington on July 9, formally announced the establishment of the national control of exports, stating the object to be "that our supplies will not become available, either directly or indirectly, to feed the enemy."

PRESIDENT PROCLAIMS DRAFT RULES. On July 2, regulations governing exemptions from military service under the selective draft act, were made public in Washington. Under the rules, these are exempt: All officers of the United States and of the states, territories and District of Columbia; ministers, divinity students, persons in the military or naval service of the United States, subjects of Germany and other aliens who have not taken out first papers; county or municipal officers, custom-house clerks, workmen in Federal armories, arsenals and navy yards, pilots, sailors in the merchant marine, and those who have dependents such as to render their exclusion desirable, those found morally deficient, and any member of a well-recognized religious sect existing May 18, 1917, whose creed forbids participation in war. Claims for exemption may be made by the individual, by his wife or other dependents, or by a third party who has made personal investigation of the case. In a statement accompanying the regulations, the President urged impartiality in the application of the draft, telling the draft boards that "our armies at the front will be strengthened and sustained if they be composed of men free from any sense of injustice in their mode of selection."

In the German Reichstag on July 7, Dr. Mathias Erzberger, leader of the Centrist (Catholic) party, made an address in committee which expressed serious doubts as to the general military and naval situation. He demanded a clear statement from the government regarding the Russian offensive and the situation on the western front. The New York Times's special cable says "he flatly came out for a peace by common consent of such nations as have not completely lost their senses." His address, according to the dispatches, is regarded as pointing to a crisis, and possibly to another attempt to bring about the downfall of Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. The training of the great army of American aviators was begun in the week of July 4 at the new government training field at Randoul, Ill., and in the following week at the fields at Dayton, Ohio, and Mount Clemens, Mich. . . . An American transport in the harbor at Ponta Delgada, the Azores, only 800 miles from our Atlantic coast, aided the land batteries on July 4 in a battle with a German submarine which was bombarding the port. The submarine was forced to withdraw. . . . A parade organized by Boston Socialists as a peace demonstration was mobbed and broken up on July 1 by uniformed soldiers and sailors, who threw into the streets and burned the literature and furnishings of the Socialists' headquarters. . . . Industrial Workers of the World were reported on July 4 as occupying strategic points in the mountains in the State of Washington, and threatening to destroy crops; 55,000,000 bushels of wheat about ready to harvest were reported in danger. . . . An attempt of suffragists to demonstrate before the White House on July 4 resulted in a near riot and in the arrest of fourteen women and four men. . . . Only 8,000 recruits were obtained in Regular Army Week, leaving 50,000 still to be obtained to bring the army to full war strength. But the arrival of Pershing's expedition in France stimulated recruiting, and the totals were reaching above 1,000 a day as this was written. . . . Work on the big naval base at Hampton Roads was begun on July 1. . . . President Wilson took over the question of coal prices on July 2 after Secretary Baker had rejected the agreement between Secretary Lane, the Federal Trade Commission and the producers for a price of three dollars a ton for soft coal. . . . The Stevens Commission to Russia cabled to Washington on July 4 requesting the undertaking at once of railway construction work for Russia, involving $375,000,000 worth of locomotives and freight cars. . . . The War Department announced on July 4 that the clothing and camp equipment for the first 1,000,000 men of the new army would be ready on September 1. . . . Members of the Russian Commission to the United States were quoted on June 29 as declaring that only a republican form of government would meet the spirit and principles of the Russian revolution. . . . On July 1 both North Dakota and South Dakota became bone dry. . . . The new superdreadnought Idaho was launched from the New York Shipbuilding Company's yard at Camden, N. J., on June 30. The Idaho will have a displacement of 32,000 tons, and her main armament will be twelve 14-inch guns. Her complement will be 56 officers and 1,141 men. . . . The total of the freewill offering of the New York Billy Sunday campaign was $120,490.26. The American Red Cross received $32,381.39; the Y. M. C. A. war work, $32,381.78; the Y. W. C. A. war work, $55,300; and $426.69 was given for the purchase of baseball outfits for American soldiers and sailors. . . . International revenue collections for the fiscal year ending June 30 set a new record with a total of $809,215,997.66, of which the income tax furnished $180,064,663. . . . Four thousand men out of 15,000 employed in the shipyards of Brooklyn and Hoboken went on strike July 2. . . . A movement is on foot whereby the United States government will issue life insurance policies to soldiers and sailors engaged in the war.

Progress of the War

Continued from page 765

unimportant in results. The most stubborn fighting seems to have been in the region of Dead Man's Hill and Avocourt, on the west front of Verdun, but it was indecisive. Further west there was a large skirmish near La Pompelle, in the Prunay region to the east of Rheims. To the west of Rheims the only infantry fighting was in the region of Cerny, and on the Chemin des Dames. Therein the Germans first gained some ground, but ultimately were forced back by the French to their original positions.

Venizelos has returned to Athens and is now in full control of the Greek government which is preparing to enter the war.

Russian troops on July 7 began an offensive in the marshy region of Pinsk, which city was reported in flames, and on the following day battle was joined for possession of Halicz, a key point in the road to Lemberg. In this action the Russians gained some ground northwest of Stanislau, but were repulsed elsewhere. They in turn repulsed German counter attacks near Koniuchy.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

WHEN Solomon had finished his temple and was ready to dedicate it, he stood out before all the people of Israel, before all the princes and the captains of the host, and in prayer asked God to bless Israel, to forgive their sins, in times of trouble to answer their prayer, and in captivity as the result of sin to turn them back to himself and to lead them again to their own land. God's answer is given in the seventh chapter of II Chronicles, in the fourteenth verse: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

This verse is quoted by a member of the Prayer League, who writes urging that a day be set aside throughout the United States for united prayer for abundant crops and for the early ending of the war. She says: "If we have faith, it might bring great blessings." It would be a fine thing if a day might be set for nation-wide prayer for God's blessing upon the fields of grain and struggle, that the one might yield abundant food and the other a lasting peace. But better than a single day is the daily petition of all who love God. In every nation these are even now lifting their hearts Godward, seeking the blessing which has been so long delayed. The prayer of faith will be answered.

"An Afflicted Child" writes from Barbados that she is an orphan, sixteen years old, deaf, and losing her sight. She comes to the Prayer League with James 5:13-18 as her reason for asking the prayers of God's people.

Mrs. R. S. S., Savannah, Ga., encloses a letter from her son, a young missionary in Japan, and his wife. They are praying God to spare the life of their child, who is suffering from convulsions. They are using the best human means in the shape of medical science, and the Prayer League will implore God's blessing on their earthly efforts.

A. H. did not pray directly that her friend's life might be saved, for she thought God knew best; but she asked for help. And this is the answer she received: "When all the surrounding doctors, nurses and friends had gathered to give him up and all efforts to save life had ceased, God answered prayer, and in a way that to human understanding was marvelous. Pulse, respiration and temperature became normal, and my friend is now rapidly improving."

A telegram came to the Prayer League from Mabank, Texas: "Baby is hurt; please pray for him." Now his grandmother writes: "I telegraphed you Sunday morning (he was hurt on Saturday), and he drank milk and water at 4 P. M. He grew better; within two weeks he was well." The same sister requested prayer for a young lady ill with typhoid, and now praises God for the recovery of that dear friend.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

St. Petersburg, Fla.; Wilmot, Wis.; Olmstead Falls, Ohio; Everly, Iowa (that many may be saved during revival); Glen Haven, Wis. (that all Christians may work together for the glory of God and the salvation of souls); Palmdale, Calif. (that a way may be opened to build a church and a revival); Nathalie, Va. (that seventeen souls may be saved); Winnetoon, Neb. (that many may be saved during revival); Prairie View, Texas (for spiritual awakening in a school); Washington, D. C. (that many souls may be saved on Children's Day); Kings Mountain, N. C.; Altamont, Kan. (at the M. E. church); Richmond, Mo. (that many may be saved during revival); Tallman, Mich. (for the success of revival meeting at McClellan Schoolhouse); Center, Tex. (for the success of meetings now in progress at the M. E. Church); Howe Cave, N. Y. (that Schoharie County may be totally dry after November, 1917; also for a revival).

Mrs. C. M. L. and Mrs. A. M. ask prayer that son's minds may be restored; Mrs. C. W. D., that mother's mind may be restored; Mrs. E. J. G., that a brother's mind may be restored; Miss M. C., that a friend's mind may be restored; E. H., that aunt's mind may be restored; W. H. B., that son's mind may be fully restored that he may return home; Mrs. J. A. T., that child's mind may be restored; sixteen friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

Rev. D. W. F. and M. A. ask prayer that cataracts may be removed and sight restored; C. N. D., that wife's sight may be restored; E. H., that husband's sight may be restored; E. R., that daugher's eyes may be healed; Mrs. E. W. asks prayer that niece's eyes may be cured of an affliction; M. A. W., that father's sight may be restored; twenty-four friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives or themselves.

Twenty-one readers ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Forty-eight friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

J. B. S. asks prayer to be cured of the drug habit.

Mrs. A. M. asks prayer that son and husband may be cured of the liquor habit; One in Deeper Trouble, that brother may be cured of the liquor habit; A Constant Reader, that a dear one may be cured of the liquor habit; nine parents, including J. L. M., Mrs. M. E. R. and Mrs. J. C. P., that their sons may be cured of the liquor habit; M. E. N., that a dear friend may be cured of the liquor habit; L. H., that I may gain temperate habits; A Broken-hearted Mother and Mrs. R. E., that husband may be cured of the liquor habit; M. E. K., that a physician may be cured of the liquor habit; A Troubled Mother, that a son-in-law may be cured of the liquor habit; Mrs. F. J. F., that a neighbor may be cured of the liquor habit.

One hundred and thirteen ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. K. C. M., that two babies may be restored to health and strength; another, Mrs. C. W., that sister may be cured of cancer, also that another sister may be healed; Mrs. S. E. H., that a nephew may be cured of cancer; A Devoted Mother, that son may pass safely through an operation; Mrs. E. S., that sister may be healed without an operation; 118 friends ask prayer for healing for themselves, including Mrs. C. H. B., to be cured of cancer; another, Mrs. A. C. C., that health may be restored without an operation.

Ninety-one friends ask prayer for healing for themselves; including A Subscriber, to pass safely through an operation; Miss M. Y., to be healed without an operation; Mrs. H. W. T., that health may be restored without an operation; another, H. A. H., that cancer may be cured: One of the League, to pass safely through an operation; Mrs. C. W. A., to be restored to health without an operation; thirteen friends, for the restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Thirty-four friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters, including Mrs. S. M., that a way may be opened to raise a church debt of $250.

Thirty-eight friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including Mrs. V. E. Q., that peace may be restored to our beloved country, and four friends who pray for world-wide peace.

Thirty-nine parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; including F. W. D., that six sons may be saved; Mrs. N. F. M., that son may be saved and delivered from troubles; twenty-two wives, their husbands, seventy-six other relatives or friends, including Mrs. M. J. B., that daughter may be saved and train her children right.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

A Subscriber, Pinewood, S. C.; Mrs. G. G., Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. A. G., Traverse City, Mich.; M. A., Zanesville, Ohio; E. B.; Waynesboro, Pa.; A. C., Woodhull, N. Y.; A. H., Castleton, Ill.; Mrs. P. L. P., Baldwinsville, N. Y.; B. F., Cheraw, S. C.; M. N. L., Golden, Colo.; Mrs. A. V., Akron, Ohio, Mrs. E. P. S., Pottsville, Pa.; Mrs. I. T., Mountain View, Mo.; C. A. P., Anadarko, Okla.; Mrs. J. M. F., Peabody, Kan.; Mrs. E. M. N., Wichita, Kan.; H. G., Decatur, Ohio; An Anxious Mother, Portland, Me.; L. L. H., Charlotte, Mich.; E. C., Grayslake, Ill.; Mrs. G. C., Richmond, Mo.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; A Member, Plymouth, Wis.; Mrs. J. M. S., Golden City, Mo.; Mrs. W. H. B., Ripley, N. Y.; Mrs. A. J. K., Canton, Ohio; A. L. B., Providence, R. I.; Mrs. T. T. A., North Point, Pa.; Mrs. W. V. S., Huntingdon, Pa.; Miss J. P., Lynchburg, Va.; Life Subscriber, New York, N. Y.; Mrs. A. E. C., Boiling Spring, N. C.; L. B. A. H. S., Kents Hill, Me.; F. B. W.; Wakeeny, Kan.; Mrs. M. D. B., Knoxville, Tenn.; C. M. W., Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. W. E. Porter, Fidelity, Ill.; "Marie," Pikeville, Tenn.; H. P. L., Tallman, Mich.; Mrs. H. B. M., Mancos, Colo.; Mrs. A. M. G., Walnut, Iowa.

Champion
Toledo

Dependable Spark Plugs

Perform The Most Important Function In A Car

Champion Regular
Price $1.00

No matter how fine and costly your car is, it is unable to budge an inch until the spark plugs give it the life that sends it into action.

Unerringly and with mighty vigor, Champion Spark Plugs explode the gas mixture in the cylinders—forcing down the piston—turning the crankshaft—delivering the propelling power back to turn the rear wheels.

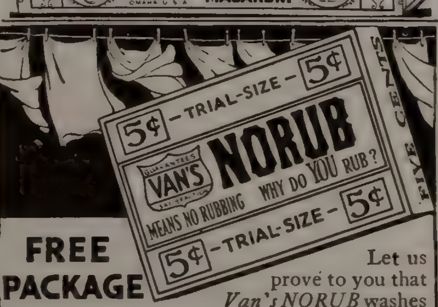
Factory engineers realize the vital importance of spark plugs and, because so much depends upon their durability and sure-fireness, four out of every five cars leave their factories equipped with Champion Spark Plugs.

Avoid substitution by looking for the name "Champion" on the porcelain of every plug you buy. You can get Champion Spark Plugs everywhere—especially designed for your make of car.

Champion Spark Plug Company
Toledo Ohio

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE



FREE PACKAGE

Let us prove to you that Van's NORUB washes clothes clean, without rubbing or injury. Write for above Free package, sending us your dealer's name and address, if he cannot supply you.

VAN ZILE CO., Dept. C, West Hoboken, N. J.

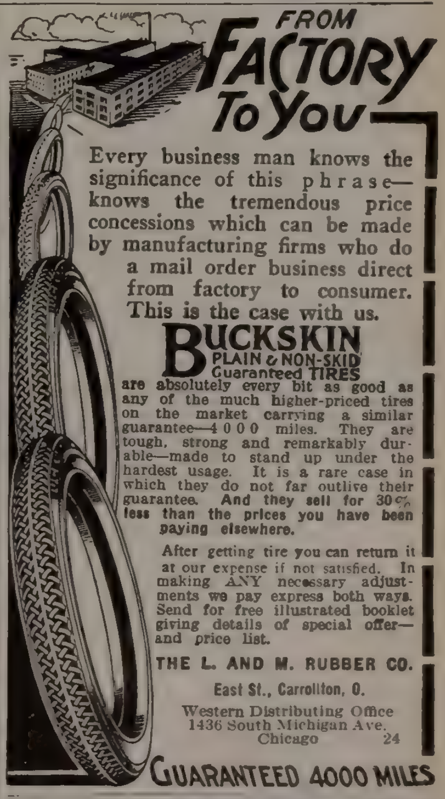
Don't Forget the Sick

but just send them a "Chase" reminder that you remember them. A large variety of cards to select from.

For Sale Everywhere or Direct.

Send for Catalog 228

ERNEST DUDLEY CHASE
251 Causeway Street Boston, Mass.



FROM FACTORY To You

Every business man knows the significance of this phrase—knows the tremendous price concessions which can be made by manufacturing firms who do a mail order business direct from factory to consumer. This is the case with us.

BUCKSKIN PLAIN & NON-SKID Guaranteed TIRES are absolutely every bit as good as any of the much higher-priced tires on the market carrying a similar guarantee—4000 miles. They are tough, strong and remarkably durable—made to stand up under the hardest usage. It is a rare case in which they do not far outlive their guarantee. And they sell for 30% less than the prices you have been paying elsewhere.

After getting tire you can return it at our expense if not satisfied. In making ANY necessary adjustments we pay express both ways. Send for free illustrated booklet giving details of special offer—and price list.

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO.
East St., Carrollton, O.
Western Distributing Office
1436 South Michigan Ave.
Chicago 24

GUARANTEED 4000 MILES

STEWARTS IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

TO SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN AND INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to CAPE TOWN, DURBAN,
BOMBAY, COLOMBO,
MADRAS, RANGOON
AND CALCUTTA.
FOR SAILING DATE, RATE
OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO
NORTON LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City.
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.

Church Organs
LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.
Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass.
Hook & Hastings Co.
BRANCHES
Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dallas

AGENTS AT LAST—A Safe Self-Heating Iron

THE KERO-SAFE

The only KEROSENE (coal oil) Iron in the world

No competition. Every woman wants a safe self-heating iron. Low priced; every home can afford it. Demand perfectly enormous. Big profits. A winner for agents. Write quick for terms while your territory is still open.

Sample FREE to Workers
THOMAS IRON CO., 2124 Gay St. Dayton, O.

LE PAGE'S CHINA CEMENT
STANDS HOT AND COLD WATER 10c

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for July 29

Recreating the Community's Recreations, Not by Denunciation but by Creation

Epworth League Topic. Zech. 8 : 5; I Cor. 10 : 31; 9 : 22-25; Rom. 12 : 21.

PLAY is part of nature's law of growth. As long as we enjoy some form of play we are growing. Recreation is properly spelled re-creation, for that is its purpose. Life is serious business, but you can't live without laughter. Denunciation is easy. It requires neither knowledge, nor skill, nor leadership, nor position. Any fool can swing a hammer, but it takes skill and purpose to forge a blade.

No form of recreation current in respectable circles is bad in itself, but every manner of play may be misused and may lead to sin. One task of the church is to guide young folks in their recreation, to help them avoid the extremes that lead toward trouble, and to show them better ways to gain happiness than are afforded by those pastimes most often abused. Part of the problem may be solved by admitting the pleasures of the young folks to the church parlors or parish house, where mature but sympathetic members of the church can supervise them, unobtrusively, and keep them within bounds. This is, however, a palliative, not a cure.

One sure way remains. Young lives are impelled by their enthusiasms. Young Christians, properly taught, will be enthusiastic for service. If they are brought to see that, even in their recreation, they are serving Christ, they will desire to do all things to his glory and they will shun any amusement in which He could have no part. But shunning evil is a half measure. If commonly accepted recreations are to be discarded, others, equally good as fun, must be created in their place, for youth must play. Only through play can it be fitted for the serious duties of maturity. This is no easy task. There is still much more denunciation than recreation. Recreation requires imagination, consecration and perspiration.

Evangelical, Educational, Medical, and Industrial Work in Foreign Missions

Christian Endeavor Topic. Isa. 61 : 1-3.

BEFORE a train of palace cars can ride smoothly over the Continental Divide, there must be many months of patient work, blasting away rocks, driving tunnels, bridging streams and laying track. Before a nation can know Christ there must be much blasting away of ignorance, much puncturing of superstition, much bridging of misunderstanding, much laying of smooth ways for the truth. All of this preparation is made through the auxiliary services of missions. The mission school educates minds so that they may rightly divide truth and error and receive the message of the evangelist. Education, too, is a mighty enemy of superstition. In its ministry of comfort the medical mission exemplifies the love of Christ which inspires it. Industrial training brings self-reliance, earning power and new ideals. It brings Christian civilization before non-Christian peoples in a most practical and convincing way. Thus all these auxiliaries, education, medicine, industrial work, pave the way for the crowning work of missions, evangelism. Without them the preaching would be largely futile; with them it reaches multitudes, and the seekers after truth crowd the missions and baptisms could be multiplied threefold in some fields if the church at home would only rise to its opportunity, if it would only give the money to pay the expense of the teaching which must follow baptism, if the believer is to become an effective member of the church.

Northern Baptist Convention

B.Y.P.U Topic. Psa. 122 : 1-9.
(Conquest Meeting)

FULL reports and adequate material for the use of the leader of this meeting, which is to be an echo of this year's convention, may be secured from Rev. John M. Moore, 23 E. 26th Street, New York City.

Peanuts and "Cannon Balls"

Continued from page 761

"I had no idea that my bluff would be called and I thought it was safe, anyway. My idea of the peanut crop came from the few nuts I had seen on the Italian fruit stands, and I thought I might, perhaps, get a hundred bushels or so, which I could easily sell again. So I went back to Houston, leaving the offer open. The next day I got a telephone from the manager of my mill as to what he was to do with the peanuts. 'How many have you?' I asked. 'There are fifty wagonloads that came in today,' he replied, 'and there'll be twice that tomorrow.' Well, we got 200 tons of peanuts that week and they kept coming. We got so many that I did not know what to do with them. I sold some in Texas, and, finally, shipped the rest to the north.

"In handling the nuts they were now and then stepped on and the kernels ground into the floor. I noticed that they left large grease spots, and this made me think of grinding the nuts into oil and oil-cake, using our own mill for the purpose. I then looked into the matter and found that peanut oil was used largely in Europe and in other parts of the world. I also found that hulling machines could be made very cheaply, and I had some made for me. I went far enough to see that the oil could be successfully produced. I then interested other cottonseed oil men, and finally induced the Fidelity Oil Company here to put in machinery, agreeing to furnish the peanuts. I sent them 6,000 tons the first year, and they were handled at a good profit. Since then the business has steadily grown. The machinery has been improved, and we have a large peanut oil industry in Texas."

AND now a word or so about the soy bean. This plant, which has been cultivated for ages in China, Japan and Korea, came into notice at the time of the Russo-Japanese war. Europe and America then began to realize its value as a foodstuff and soil improver, and it is now being planted all over the south, especially in the boll weevil districts. Soy beans are of many varieties. They will grow almost anywhere, and they are fast becoming a great money crop. Last year the seed was sold at less than $2 a bushel. It is now worth $5 or $6 a bushel, and there is practically no surplus in the market.

I have spoken of the soy bean as being valuable on account of the glycerin made from the oil. This is needed in our munitions plants and there will be a great demand for it on account of our war with Germany. Two German doctors have recently discovered a process of making rubber out of the oil, and it may be that it will form the basis of the motor traffic of our enemy. The Germans have also been experimenting in the use of soy flour, which they make from the ground bean after the oil is extracted. They are using 25 per cent of soy meal and 75 per cent of wheat flour. With this they make a soy bread, which is said to be nutritious and palatable. They are also mixing soy meal with rye flour, and this mixture is said to be one of the chief breads fed to the prisoners.

In England a soy flour has been placed on the market which is composed of one-fourth bean meal and 75 per cent wheat flour. They make biscuits, cakes and bread of this flour. The Agricultural Department at Washington is now experimenting on mixing soy meal with wheat, cornmeal, rye and graham, to find the best combination for human foodstuffs. The results show that the meal can be used in much the same way for muffins, bread and biscuits as we use cornmeal. They advise that the best bread can be made of one-fourth soy flour and three-fourths flour of wheat. Soy beans are taking the place of the ordinary baked beans of the United States.

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 771

ye! Week in and week out, jest shut up in that big silent house—never goin' out at all except to the Works! Then we heard he was sick—Mr. John. But he got better, and was out again. The end come sudden. Nobody expected that. But he was a good man—a grand good man—John Denby was!"

"He was, indeed," agreed the doctor, with a long sigh, as he turned away.

THIS story, with here and there a new twist and turn, the doctor heard on all sides. And always he listened attentively, hopefully, eager, if possible, to find some detail that would help him in some further plea to Burke Denby in behalf of the far-away wife.

To his sister again he told the story of a Dalton trip, and, as before, he omitted not one detail.

"But I can't write, of course, to Helen, now," he finished gloomily. "That is, I can't urge her coming back—not in the face of Burke's angry assertion that he never wants to see her again."

"Of course not. But don't worry, dear. I haven't given up hope, by any means. Burke worshiped his father. His heart is almost breaking now, at his loss. It is perfectly natural, under the circumstances, that he should have this intense anger toward anything that ever grieved his loved father. But wait. That's all we can do, anyway. I'll write to Helen, of course, and tell her of her father-in-law's death, but——"

"You wouldn't tell her what Burke said, Edith!"

"Oh, no, no, indeed!—unless I have to, Frank—unless she asks me."

But Helen did ask her. By return steamer came her letter expressing her shocked distress at John Denby's death, and asking timidly, but urgently, if, in Mrs. Thayer's opinion, it were the time now when she should come home—if she would be welcomed by her husband. To this, of course, there was but one answer possible; and reluctantly Mrs. Thayer gave it.

"And to think," groaned the doctor, "that when now, for the first time, Helen is willing to come, we have to tell her—she can't!"

"I know, but"—Edith Thayer resolutely blinked off the tears—"I haven't given up yet. Just wait."

To be continued

◆

The Comforter

GIVE me a heart of calm repose
  Amid the world's loud roar;
A life that like a river flows
  Along a peaceful shore.

Come, Holy Spirit, hush my heart
  With gentleness divine;
Indwelling peace thou canst impart;
  Oh, make the blessing mine.

Above these scenes of storm and strife
  There spreads a region fair;
Give me to live that higher life,
  And breathe that heavenly air.

Come, Holy Spirit, breathe that peace
  Which flows from pardoned sin;
Then shall my soul her conflict cease,
  And find a heaven within.

HAYNES
AMERICA'S FIRST CAR

HAYNES

"America's First Car"

The STOCK Haynes YOU Get is "America's Greatest Light Six"

THESE feats by stock cars have won the Haynes its spurs as "America's Greatest Light Six":

- —One to 60 miles per hour on high gear
- —Pick-up from 0 to 30 miles per hour in 7½ seconds
- —Ability to climb long steep grades on high gear
- —More Pulling Power at moderate speeds and through deep mud, sand or snow, than is possessed by other 3½ in. x 5 in. 6-cylinder engines
- —3½c per mile, the average cost for tires, gasoline, oil and repairs.

The proof of a car is its performance in the hands of owners.

The foregoing Haynes "records" were made by—and are daily repeated by—the nearly 20,000 strictly stock Haynes cars which for periods up to three years and longer have been driven under ordinary conditions by motorists like you.

"America's Greatest Light Six" is therefore a stock Haynes. And the Haynes you get will run true to its advertised form. Catalog upon request.

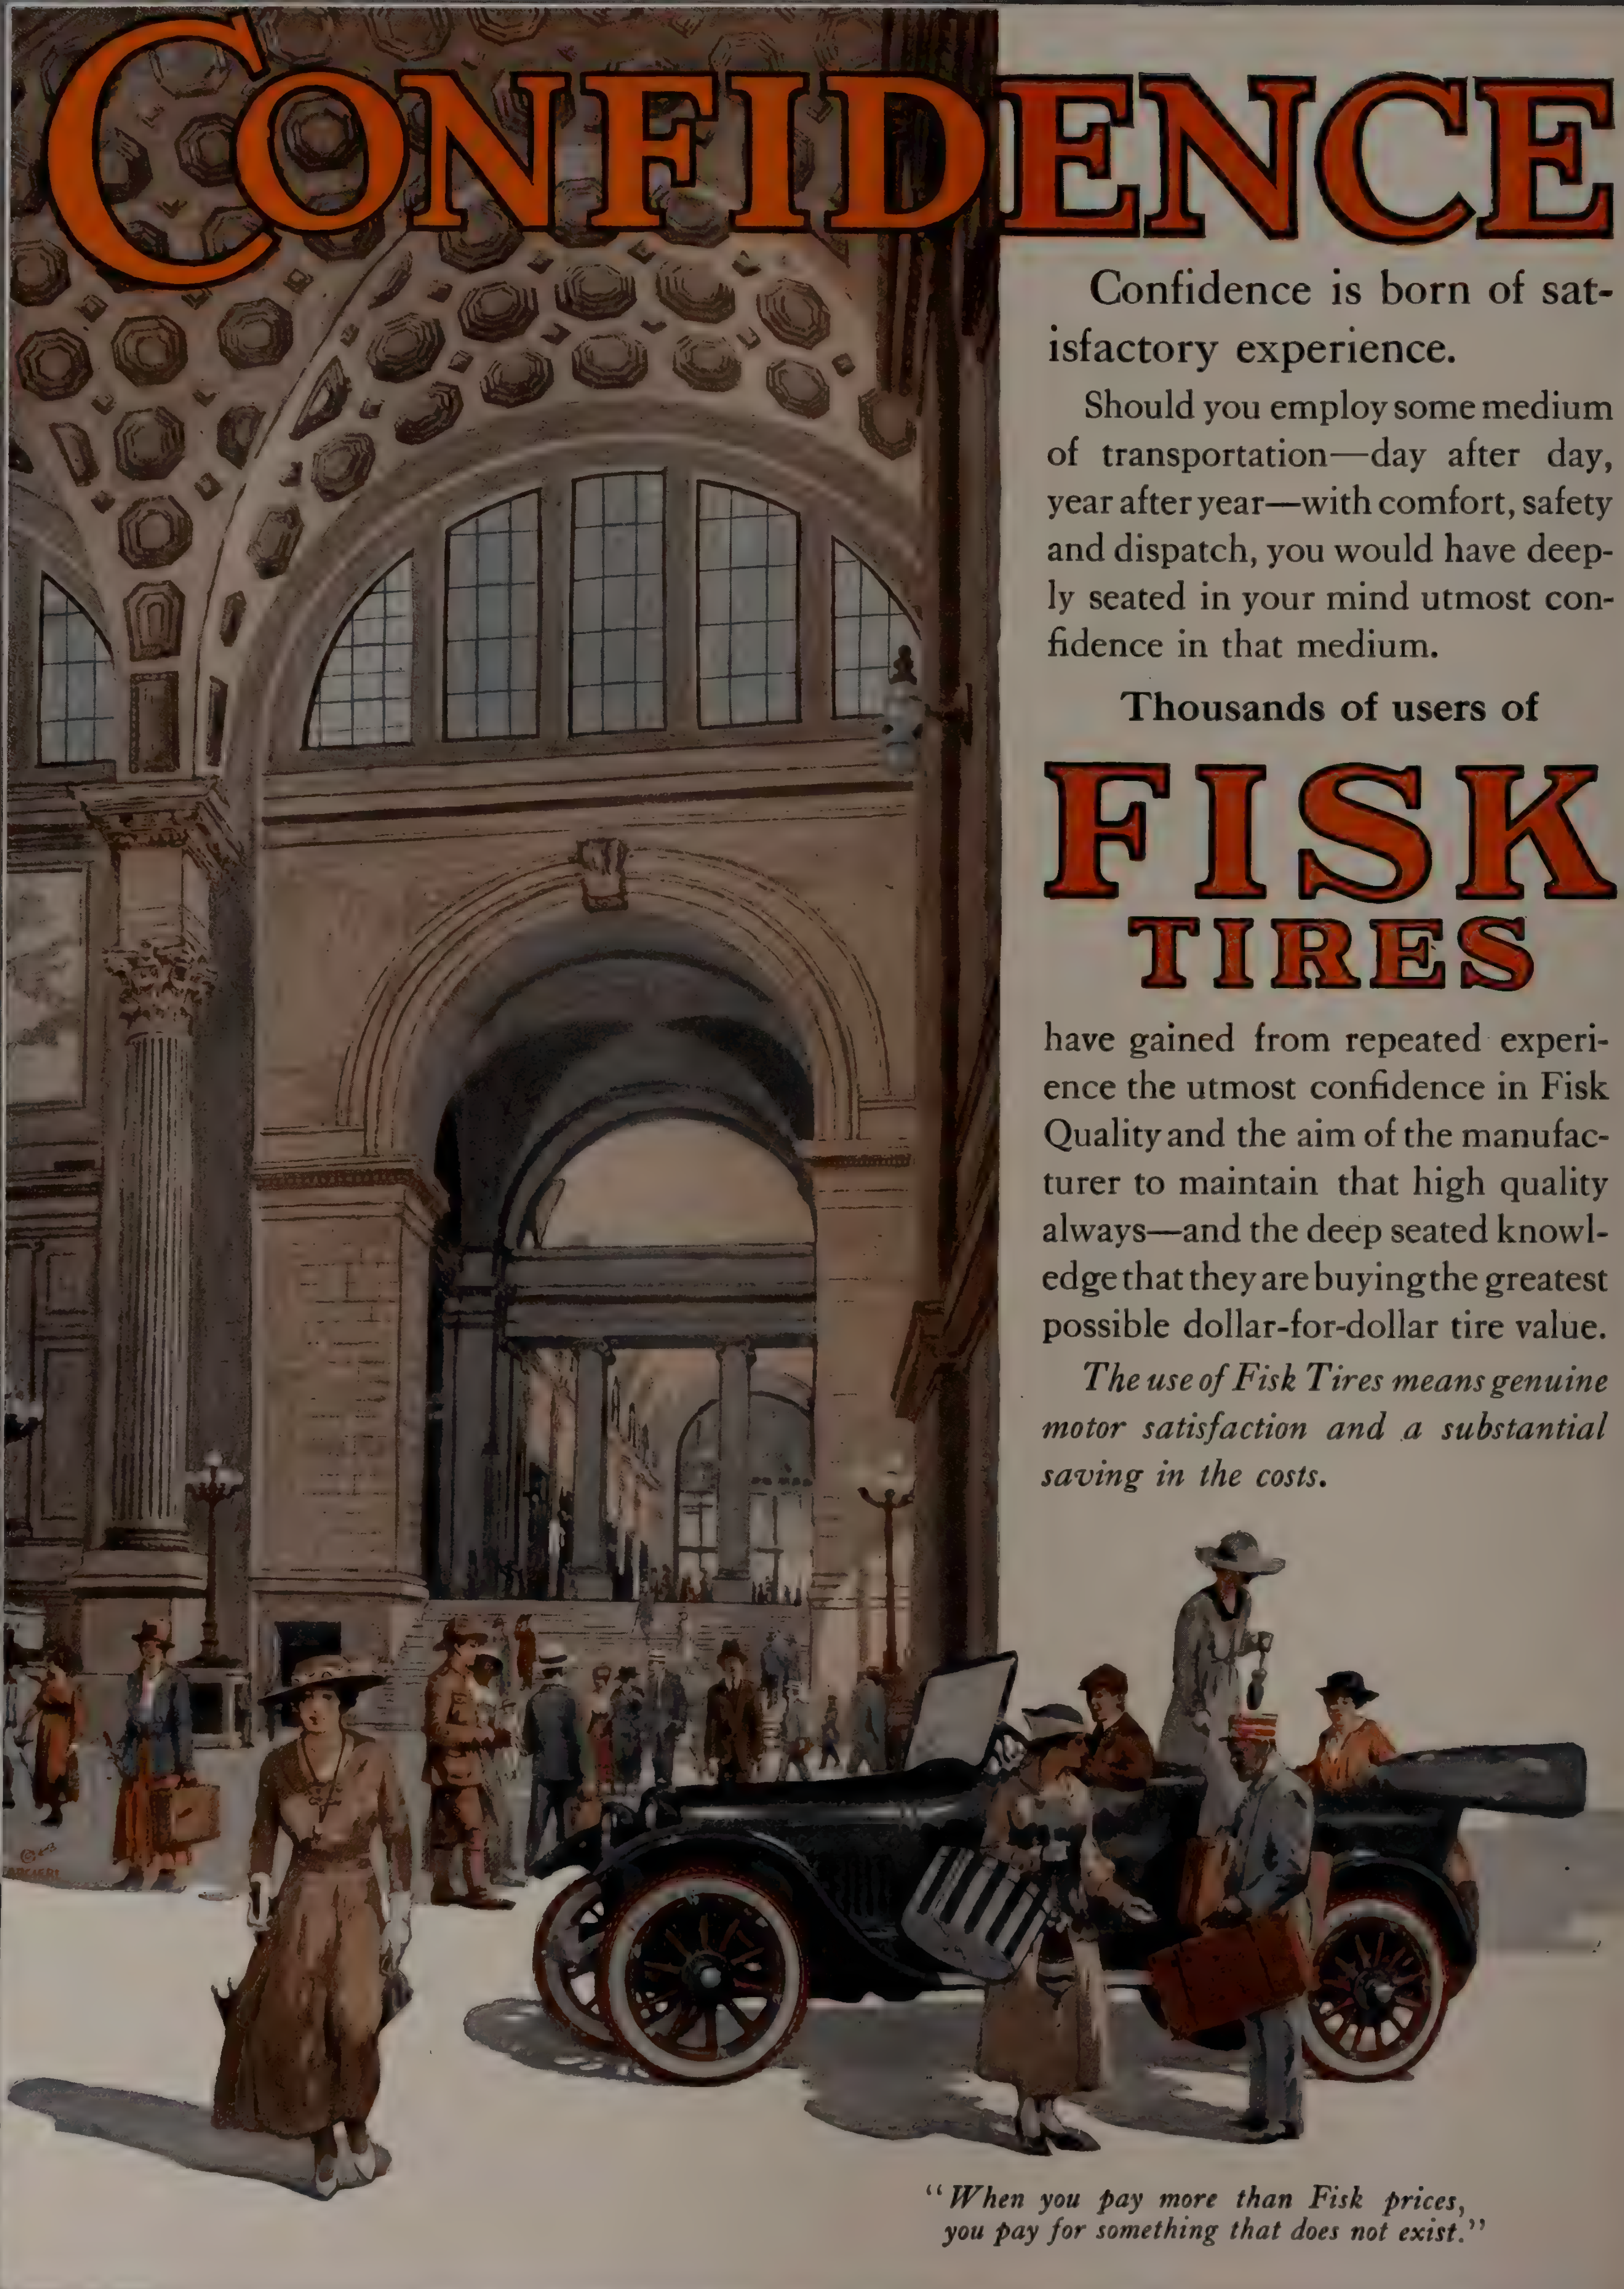
THE HAYNES AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
44 South Main Street, Kokomo, Ind.

HAYNES
"America's Greatest Light Six"
$1595—$1725
Wire Wheels Additional

HAYNES
"America's Greatest Light Twelve"
$2095—$2225
Including Wire Wheels

All prices f. o. b. Kokomo

25th Successful Year
(1893-1917)



CONFIDENCE

Confidence is born of satisfactory experience.

Should you employ some medium of transportation—day after day, year after year—with comfort, safety and dispatch, you would have deeply seated in your mind utmost confidence in that medium.

Thousands of users of

FISK
TIRES

have gained from repeated experience the utmost confidence in Fisk Quality and the aim of the manufacturer to maintain that high quality always—and the deep seated knowledge that they are buying the greatest possible dollar-for-dollar tire value.

The use of Fisk Tires means genuine motor satisfaction and a substantial saving in the costs.

"When you pay more than Fisk prices, you pay for something that does not exist."

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR
NEW YORK, JULY 25, 1917
VOL. 40—NO. 30. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

(See description inside)

Photograph by Edith S. Watson

DRYING CODFISH ON SPRUCE BOUGHS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

L. B. H., Ft. McCoy, Fla., writes: "Your answer to Mrs. S. H. M., Conway, N. H., in regard to that portion of the Lord's Prayer, 'Lead us not into temptation,' recalled to my mind a lecture I once heard many years ago by a Christian Jew who had once been a rabbi in his native city, Jerusalem. He was well educated, especially in ancient Hebrew. He said that the mistake was made by the first translators of the Bible, and the prayer should read 'Our Father, who art in Heaven, we Hallow Thy name. We know that thy Kingdom will come, and Thy will be done, on earth as it is by the angels in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us out of temptation and deliver us from evil, for Thine is the Kingdom and the power and the glory. Amen.' This version of it explained away all my questions, which were similar to Mrs. S. H. M.'s. I am sure many readers would be glad to learn it."

Mrs. J. R., MacGregor, Manitoba. Please give the population of China, and its situation, political and social?

China's population is more than 300,000,000. China was an aggregation of democratically governed communities under a centralized national administration. Her merchants were among the most honest in the world, her officials among the most corrupt. Now that the monarchy has been abolished, she is threatened with disunion. The north leans toward a centralized government; the south has decentralizing tendencies, represented by such men as Dr. Sun Yat Sen. The Yangtse River is the Mason-and-Dixon line of China. The nation is losing her hold on her old religions, but Christianity is exerting a leavening influence.

Fate's Helper

By

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

THE Fates, they say, sit spinning
The threads of love and life;
The Fates, they say, weave gently
With strands of peace and strife. . . .
How can you sit so calmly,
And draw your thread so fine,
When you are aiding Fate, dear,
With this poor life of mine?

The Fates, they say, sing softly;
Their shuttles catch the gleam
Of dancing golden sunbeams,
They sing—And yet you seem
So silent! Are you caring?
For oh, my fears are rife. . . .
Just slip a thread of love, dear,
Into my strand of life!

J. A. H., Emmett, Idaho. 1. U-boat means Unterseeboot—Underseaboat. 2. Foot washing is still practiced in parts of Palestine, in Russia and probably in other countries.

W. R. N. We do not know of any good reason for assuming that we are responsible for what we do or think in sleep.

Mrs. M. A. M., Detroit, Texas. The matter is controversial and now, in a sense, a dead issue.

W. H. L., Chicago, Ill., writes: "There is much said about economy these days, but very little about the sinful waste in tobacco. It is stated on good authority that this country spends $800,000,000 yearly for tobacco. I read the report of one of our leading cigar companies a short time ago, which showed an increase last year over the previous year of $5,000,000. Their sales for 1916 were around $36,000,000. One of our Chicago cigar men suggested to others in the same business that they make up bags of cigars and tobacco to give to the boys leaving for the front. I have ceased to wonder why we have wars, but I do wonder why the mothers don't start a war on this vile thing."

J. E. W., Newport, Wash. Judges 13 : 5 answers your question. Samson was to be a Nazarite. It is a reasonable conclusion that he was such not only at the time of killing the lion, but during the other exploits recorded, and until the incident of his betrayal related in Judges 16 : 17–19.

T. R. T., Carbondale, Pa. Can a man be so wholly right that he can afford to tell another that he is wholly wrong?

No human intellect can be wholly right—least of all the one that thinks itself so. Cocksureness is made up mostly of ignorance. There is no absolute certainty, except in matters of clear revelation, and even in these the truth must pass through finite intellect, as "light through a glass darkly." No mind is so full of error as that which believes it possesses absolute wisdom. Nor can anyone be wholly wrong. The dullest are bound to know some things pretty accurately. Street gamins are apt to know many elemental truths better than college professors can. There is a quatrain to be kept in mind:

"There's so much good in the worst of us
And so much bad in the best of us,
That 'twould be well for the first of us
To have tol'rance for the rest of us."

H. C. M., Wilmington, N. C., writes: "I have been thinking for some time that a more definite fight against the desecration of the Sabbath should be begun. I know that up in your territory the day is used more for that for which it should not be used for than it is down here, but the sad thing about it is that Sunday is being used everywhere too much for pleasure, gain, profit, etc., rather than for the glory of our Creator."

Mrs. Sarah L. C., Lemons, Mo. The question of relationship is one concerning which there are different opinions.

E. D., Norwich, Conn. 1. Rev. F. B. Meyer is occupying a pastorâte in London. 2. The "lost tribes"—or at least a part of them—remain a mystery to this day. A portion of the Hebrew people—the tribes of Judah and Benjamin—returned from exile, and became the ancestors of the Jewish people. The story of their return is recorded in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah. Others, probably some of them belonging to the missing tribes of the Northern Kingdom, are believed to have returned from still remoter lands and mixed with the Jews in Palestine again (see Luke 2 : 36), while a few at least probably mingled with the mixed population with which the king of Assyria colonized Samaria, and who became the ancestors of the Samaritans. Many, however, remained in the Assyrian empire and lived in colonies throughout the East. Various writers have claimed that traces of them had been found among the Afghans, and also among the Tartars, the Nestorians, and in India and Africa; but these are rather speculative ideas than substantial evidence. Josephus, the Jewish historian, wrote that the habitable globe was so full of Jews that there was scarcely a corner of the great Roman world-empire where they might not be found. There are in the United States today Jews from almost every quarter of the globe. Any well-informed rabbi can tell you as to their tribal descent.

D. M. W., Wells, Minn. See Professor Gray's series on the great prophecies, now in course of publication in the Christian Herald.

Mr. Gifford Pinchot, in a letter to the Christian Herald, calls attention to the vital importance of the food supply in wartime and after. He writes: "If the war lasts beyond this summer, it will be the American farmer who will win or lose the war. It is true that we can greatly increase the available food supply out of grain now used in making liquors, and by reducing household waste. But when these two things are done, and done thoroughly, they will not be enough. The final decision will still rest in the hands of the men who raise our food in the first place. The clear duty of the nation is to guarantee the farmers a fair price for their crops when grown, and a reasonable supply of labor at harvest. The clear duty of the farmer is to raise food enough to win this war. No such responsibility has ever rested on any class of men since the world began as rests today on the farmers of America." We believe that every reader who has acreage in food crops understands its importance. The farmers as a class may be depended upon to do their duty.

Anxious, El Dorado, Kan. (1) If one has misled or defrauded another and is convicted of sin and seeks divine forgiveness, it is the duty of that one not only to confess the fault but to make restitution. A breach of faith in a business transaction, although there was neither a verbal nor written pledge, is both dishonorable and sinful. It is well that the one who has done this should realize the true character of such a course and seek forgiveness. (2) As we have often explained, one who has sorrow over his sin and a sincere desire for God's forgiveness need have no fear that the sin is unpardonable. Contrition and remorse are the indications that the Holy Spirit is still striving to win the offender back, whereas one who has been guilty of the unpardonable sin would feel no such fears or regrets, but would be totally indifferent to the consequences.

J. B., Ogden, Utah, writes: "Few have any idea how much money a billion dollars really is," which is quite true. The term is becoming so familiar that we are in danger of losing our appreciation of what a billion means. In a statement recently made before the class in International Trade and Commercial Geography in the National City Bank of New York, it was asked, "Working eight hours a day, an expert counter of coins will count 32,000 silver dollars in a day, but how long will it take him, at that rate, to count a million dollars? Thirty-one days. If this same man were to go on counting silver dollars at the same rate of speed for ten years he would find that he had only counted one hundred million, and that to count a billion dollars would require 102 years of steady work, at the rate of eight hours per day, during every working day of the 102 years. One billion silver dollars laid down in a line, each coin touching its neighbors preceding and following it, would form a line sufficient to stretch practically around the world, the exact number of silver dollars required to form a continuous line equal to the earth's circumference at the equator being 1,052,000,000."

A reader in Philippi, W. Va., writes that Ida L. Reed, the well-known hymn writer, many of whose poems have been set to music and are widely sung, has just passed through a long and serious illness. She lives in Philippi in a little one-story cottage, and would be cheered by a note from any Christian Herald friends.

Any reader knowing the address of James C. Jenson will confer a kindness by sending it to Mrs. Gettie Weed, Mexico, N. Y., R. D. 2.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank inserted, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THIS BLANK.

The subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books. The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35. The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David, $2.50; Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings, $2.50; Luther in Light of Recent Research, $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $3.50; with Genuine Morocco Binding, $4.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

The Mission Leaven in the Chinese Loaf

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

> DURING this letter's transit in the mails, the Chinese dictatorship, under guise of a monarchy, was proclaimed in Peking by General Chang Hsun. The Republican forces in resistance set up a provisional government at Nanking which remained the temporary capital after the collapse of the suddenly restored Empire.— EDITOR.

MENTION the word "revolution" in Nanking, and the prompt query is, "Which one?" Even the children can recollect several. As 'one goes up from the station to the largest of the cities within the Nanking city wall, he encounters long processions of creaking wheelbarrows, laden with huge bricks from the old Tartar wall, which is of no use since the Tartars have been conquered. They are not to be wasted. Some of them, more than a foot long and as heavy as five ordinary bricks, are being built into mission buildings, and thousands of them have been used in the fine new science building, which is the first of a big layout of buildings for the future University of Nanking.

The ancient wall of Nanking, useless now that the Tartars no longer threaten Anachronisms are commonplaces in Nanking, but in the midst of all her trials the one-time capital of China is, to the foreigner, perennially youthful and gay, due not so much to the characteristics of her natives as to the presence there of youthful and merry language students, located in Nanking for a year or two before going to labor among the heathen of Changsha, Nanchang, Hwaiyuan, Chengtu, Saratsi, or other interior cities.

There are four sights in Nanking: the Ming Tombs, which are interesting because every one sees them; the Examination Halls, tiny cubicles where the scholars once stood up to the task of proving themselves intellectual carryalls; the City Wall, which is twenty-one miles long and encloses enough vacant land and grain-fields to hide whole sections of the city; and the Government Orphanage.

As the Examination Halls, representing harder mental work than the modern student is capable of, are soon to be razed, they star among the catalogued sights.

FIVE years ago one of the many nameless armies which have hovered around Nanking at one time or another carried along with them as part of their loot several hundred small children. The governor of Nanking must have read Lincoln's Gettysburg Address or the Declaration of Independence about that time, for this shocked him to a point where he cut off a few official heads and started an orphanage with the children he had released. The one chosen to head the new affair was Mrs. Chou, a bright woman with character and enough love for an orphan to make him work rather than let him idle away his time in laziness and pauperism. After five years her institution is what Robert Speer described as the most moving sight he saw in all of the Orient.

Daughters of the Orphanage, now students at the Presbyterian College

Mrs. Chou has since become a Christian, and her chief assistant is a Christian too. One hundred and fifty out of the six hundred orphans are catechumens; fifty of the girls have been baptized and forty-two of the boys are awaiting baptism. Since many of the present inmates have been brought there as vagrants and worse by the police, this is not a bad showing for an institution with which no foreigner has ever been connected, which is strictly a government affair.

Mrs. Chou brings her Christianity to help in her task of making her six hundred charges forge their own way to respectability and independence. Every child works hard for half a day at the loom, the embroidery frame, the carpenter shop or the rattan shop. Every child gets half a day of schooling that is on a par with that of the government schools, and every child gets treated according to the principles of Christ. A prominent missionary who knows the work very well says that the orphanage is as Christian an institution as he knows of. Converts are being made among the children, and justice prevails.

There is no overworking of the idea that all men are created free and equal. When a teacher enters the room, a small monitor says, "One." Fifty pupils rise as one. The little lad says, "Two," and all bow. "Three," pipes up the little man, and all sit and pay attention. They don't call their teacher by his first name.

To me that orphanage is the greatest sight in Nanking; and I found only three foreigners who knew of it and had visited it. From that one can judge how much impression the average Christian mission institution must make on the Chinese. The secretary of the China Continuation Committee told me about the place, but in Nanking few know about it.

ANOTHER orphanage director of ideas is Mr. G. H. Malone. He has no mistaken idea that a course in English or a memorizing of the Beatitudes is the proper first aid to the orphan. He gives a boy a chance to prove his worth. The best laundry work I had done in China was by Christian Herald orphans, who work, rather than study, their way to independent manliness. Several boys have gone out as expert laundrymen, with enough book-learning to keep accounts and recite the Shepherd's Psalm in English.

The boy who cleaned my shoes, cleaned them. He is in training as a house-boy, and a Christian Herald orphan trained by Mr. Malone as a house-boy can be trusted with one's purse, porcelain, or pastry.

MR. MALONE teaches some orphans to be bakers. Their products often enter the best families of Nanking. Gardening is not taught, because an orphan, according to Mr. Malone, should not be forced to compete with an unskilled coolie. Several boys are working in Shanghai, and a large proportion of the "graduates" are Christians, reliable and successful in their tasks.

The girls, under the direction of Miss Hazard, make lace and embroidery, and four of them made 350 pounds of high-grade candies in seven months, which was sold at a good profit, the chocolates selling for more than seventy-five cents, gold, a pound. The embroidery and knitting are sold in Kuling and in America, and bring good prices. But best of all, the girls have a sense of having done their bit in earning their own way, and they do the same class-work that is done by those whose parents pay their tuition and board. Almost every girl and boy is a Christian, with the same willingness to help others that they have to help themselves.

Samuel Blythe has just made famous in America the "proper war lord of China," Chang Hsun, of Hsuchowfu. His tale of how this ignorant man issues railway passes and threatens the Chinese government fails, however, to tell of the man who made Chang Hsun do as he wanted him to—one of the missionaries who greatly reduced the bloodshed in the last two Nanking revolutions. Dr. W. E. Macklin, Dr. N. W. Brown and others were doing Red Cross work during the fighting and were acting as go-betweens to arrange terms among the generals who were attacking or defending the city.

Dr. Macklin, who has the confidence of the Chinese to a remarkable degree and who knows their life and literature very well, sought the assurance of Chang Hsun that looting and violence would not be allowed. The promise was given. But it was not kept. Very indignant, Dr. Macklin rode out to confer with the ignorant but forceful war lord. Chang Hsun swore that it was not his men that were looting, and testified that his men were honest. While the two were parleying, the horse which Dr. Macklin had ridden, and which had been furnished him by the man who later stole the rolling stock of the Tientsin-Pukow Railway, was stolen, right in the camp of Chang Hsun. His headquarters were carefully guarded and the excuse that some robbers must have taken the horse did not go down.

"Not a man can leave this place without the password," said the intrepid doctor to the arrogant war lord; "yet my horse, or, rather, your horse, has been taken while we have been standing here. That horse must be brought back before I leave." The horse soon returned, a small boy being blamed for the deed in order to "save face" for Chang Hsun. But so evidently was he caught that Dr. Macklin pushed the matter of looting with him, and from that time on the looting ceased.

Not content with domineering it over the most domineering figure in China to-day, Dr. Macklin is now attacking Standard Oil and the Rockefeller Medical Foundation, using a translation of Ida Tarbell's History, and opposing what he considers an attempt to de-Christianize medical work in China, or to make the missionary worship a small round god, as he quotes from its face the inscription, "In God we Trust."

NANKING is also the headquarters of Vice-President Feng Kuo Chang, who has recently lost face over the burning of his yamen. According to the Chinese, this misfortune, in which two hundred thousand dollars' worth of opium is said to have been destroyed, is due to his secret intrigues with the opium combine. General Feng is so disgraced in the eyes of the Chinese for his stand on the opium question and the fact that he has had to be reprimanded by Peking for his attitude in the matter that whatever aspirations he has to be chosen as president five years hence will probably be in vain.

Poetic justice is one thing the Chinese believe in, and China, as a whole, is opposed to opium, even though England, knowing that it is still being grown in a few districts in China, seeks to force Indian opium on the people once more, urging as the only alternative the absolute cessation of poppy-growing.

Nanking has two educational institutions under government supervision which are worthy of mention. The best housed school in Nanking at present is the Military College, which was built for China by the Germans. The Government Normal College has taken on a new lease of life after being closed for several years. Formerly the courses in this school followed the Japanese plan, but at present, according to the professor who showed me around, the whole curriculum is Chinese, as they follow no foreign system, but only take the best out of all and improve on that.

No tuition or charge for meals or room is collected, but all students are pledged to teach after graduation, with the privilege of keeping what they can make. As an ex-teacher and the son of a professor, I can see the logic and humor of the latter provision; but why a first-class school, with a fifty-acre campus and good teachers, should have to feed and house their pupils, I cannot understand. Meanwhile the University of Nanking is rapidly growing, and its charges for tuition are considerable.

The school not only has fine athletic fields and good buildings, but a nice, sweet rock-garden and historic tree, whither the students can repair at frequent intervals and write Rubaiyats or Analects, or Shakespearean sonnets, not copying any foreign system, but improving on all.

These stalls were the examination halls in the days when education was a feat of memory. They are now being razed

ONE of the moving spirits in this school is Dr. P. W. Kuo, a graduate of Wooster and Columbia, who is as competent a Chinese as one can hope for. Why a man who has taken honors in competition with hundreds of American students should seek the advice of foreigners before doing anything is hard to see—even for Dr. Kuo. He has recently returned from the Philippines, where he had the pick of the American teachers, and whence he may secure two or three, although he had applications from every American teacher he met in the islands. A long line of lathes and forges awaits the coming of an industrial instructor who can use them in training the dexterous Chinese in manual handicrafts, to use an expression which my guide used with enthusiasm and redundance.

The most picturesque school in Nanking is Ginling College, a newly opened institution, operated by five boards, presided over by a faculty of eight, and including eighteen girls. As this is only the second year of operation, eighteen is a goodly number. Last year there were hardly enough girls to go around. The college is housed for the present in a charming old "gung gwan" or official residence belonging to the estate of Li Hung Chang, and once occupied by one of his relatives. For Chinese women to come into such an inheritance, even by renting it, is enough to make any one enthusiastic. Only two years of college work are done at present, but a year's work is being added every autumn, so that it will soon tax the eight teachers to keep the class-work up to the high standard that has been decided upon.

Already the girls have seized upon the opportunity to put into practice the principles of sociology and social service, and the Y. W. C. A. of Ginling conducts a day school for the children of the neighborhood. In spite of the small number of girls' schools which teach sufficient English to prepare students for Ginling, there are fifteen schools preparing students for this, the only real college for women in China, outside of Peking. There are an average of five rooms for every student at present, and the rent amounts to $33 for each girl. Tuition is $30, and the charge for food and room is a like amount at the present rate of exchange.

ONE of the great enterprises of Nanking is the International Export Company, which buys up pigs, eggs, ducks and chickens, and ships them in special refrigerator ships to the Allies. This has raised the cost of living in centers affected, but the cost of these things to the company is not exorbitant. This firm has another plant in Hankow, situated in the German concession—a tremendous layout of reinforced concrete buildings.

Two years ago a letter was as safe in the Chinese mails as it was anywhere in the world, and only the older resident who knows China can appreciate what it means to have had nearly seven hundred million pieces of mail matter carried by the Chinese post that year against one-sixth that amount eight years before. This year postal employees are stealing letters for the stamps and throwing the contents into the waste-basket. I have heard complaints from a dozen people that the mail service is not only slower than it was in 1915, but is no longer safe.

Hangchow was under martial law during my last visit, as the result of a governmental squabble with which the average man had no more to say than if he had been a wild man of Borneo; and on the day after I was stopped in the streets by soldiers guarding the officials, and after gun-fire had been going on for intermittent intervals during the night, I attended a graduation exercise at which a senior enunciated in perfect English, from the graduation platform of a first-class mission college, this characteristically Chinese sentiment regarding efficient Japan: "Japan is as a child. She will be our friend if we will give her some sugar to eat."

IN China one cannot generalize. There is enough to prove to all but the best-informed that China is doomed to failure in her attempt to forge a worthy republic out of the great mass of raw material that she possesses. But there is also indisputable evidence that a mighty movement of progress and betterment is under way in this great land.

When I asked a provincial governor whether the return of the Boxer Indemnity Fund was China's main reason for friendship with America, that official said that unless thousands of missionaries were proving the kindly interest of America in hundreds of cities and villages, the return of the indemnity fund, of which millions of Chinese know nothing, would have little effect in forming public opinion on the matter. Friendship, he said, grows from friendship, and not from political transactions.

Many prominent men have credited missionaries with the awakening of China, with the introduction of Western education, with the spread of medical knowledge, and with what we know by the confusing term "progress." But that is not the question. So far, it is merely a matter of provincial self-satisfaction with our own methods.

The American housewife carries around a big bag of clothespins every Monday. The Chinaman twists two clotheslines together and thrusts the corners of the washing between the two strands, where they are held as firmly as clothespin ever held them. The introduction of clothespins will not help the Chinese, and even such revolutionizing products as the sewing machine, the electric light and the phonograph, which give to Americans leisure, evenings of good reading and grand opera at home, may mean longer hours of toil for the Chinese, or unwholesome pleasures when the work is finished. Labor-saving devices are for those who can use spare time to advantage, but are a curse to those whose spare time is spent in idleness or worse.

AMERICA has carried "progress" to China. Much more than that, she has carried "civilization" to China. But neither of these can permanently benefit the Chinese unless they are accompanied by the vital forces that redeem progress and civilization. The days of homespun and pioneer hardship were no worse than those of slum and sweat-shop, and Western progress, unless accompanied by a spiritualizing factor, will prove a curse and not a blessing. The glittering lights that adorn the dive do not argue for the introduction of electric lights.

The British-American Tobacco Company lays claim to missionary honors because of the fact that they have brought to China the very best seed, have provided China with overseers for looking after the tobacco plants, and are paying huge profits to the Chinese farmers who raise tobacco. They have attempted to get the Canton Christian College and the Yale Mission to experiment with their improved tobacco plants. But their claims to missionary fame do not take account of the tiny children of four and five, both boys and girls, who can be seen by every observer smoking the products of the "missionary enterprise." When progress or economic benefits become the only arguments for missions, the fruits they return to the world will give their claims the lie.

Missionary work touches a higher plane. It seeks no advantage. Its aim is not the standardization of the world according to an Occidental pattern. Its purpose is the spiritualization of mankind under a Universal Father, who knows not races, but an international brotherhood. It works not for the rights of the small nation, but for the emancipation of the small soul. In an age when war itself is teaching the interdependence of nations on one another, it points man back to the more fundamental truth of the dependence of man on God.

When missionary work is considered as American or British or Canadian, carried on for the benefit of the Chinese, the Japanese or the Mohammedan, it is a provincial product of benevolent nationalism. It is only when world missions are seen as spiritualizing forces whose products will affect all races that one can recognize them not as pitiful charities but as a necessity to the great human brotherhood which benefits from every force that reveals God to man, and, doing so, lifts man to God. There are no "home" or "foreign" needs in such a scheme, which overleaps national boundaries to bless all alike.

"Mothering Up" the Homesick Rookie

By FELIX J. KOCH

FOOLISH? Well, to read of it in cold print, or even to pass the tent door and see the man in khaki turned back squarely toward you, head bowed in hands, body convulsed with sobs, and hear some brutally frank drill-sergeant explain, "The laddie is homesick, that's all," makes it appear a bit foolish, indeed!

Homesick amid five thousand young men nearly every one of whom is in like condition just now; homesick among regiments of one's fellows, filled with the enthusiasm of youth?

Foolish? Yes, of course, it does seem foolish; but you remember what has been said of loneliness in a crowd. And there is nothing that will aggravate homesickness so much as to watch five hundred strangers go their way, heedless and careless, while your heart is breaking for the touch of some distant hand or a peep at a far-away home. Talk of the terrors of war—of the marching off to the cannon's mouth! It's as nothing to the first two or three days in camp of the boy who has never been away from the old place before.

What he needs, the experts in the work of "breaking in" the new recruit tell us, is "mothering"—a touch of home—through these first trying days in the army. To bring him over these; to respect his feelings; to lend him a helping hand here, is to make a man of him, of whom his comrades may feel proud.

"All the comforts of home" in the army? It sounds paradoxical, and it may have to be so at the front; but down Cincinnati way the big Y. M. C. A. leaders have secured the services of a young expert named Hoehler, who is doing the work of tiding recruits through the homesick time at Fort Thomas, just across the river in Kentucky. Hoehler's work is interesting, and the more so as it points the way for imitation by countless others wherever recruits may be brought together.

"To begin with," Hoehler states, as he tells of the task of bringing the home to the soldier, "in every recruiting-camp, every training-camp, you get a great number of homesick boys. I have my volunteer workers, whom I deploy in squads, and they make a definite business of cheering up these lads and helping them over the trying first two or three days.

"You who are city-born and bred and used to strangers can't fancy what it means to the country boy, the lad from the Kentucky mountains or the Indiana hills, to be launched of a sudden in a strange post with strange men. Squarely on such coming he is ordered to strip, and for perhaps four or five hours he goes from doctor to doctor—'from pillar to post,' as it seems to him—to be examined for this and that. He is vaccinated against smallpox and given serum against typhoid, and just these two inoculations are enough to make not a few men sick for a day. While sick he has time to let his mind go back to the home folks, and then the homesickness gets in its work. Here he lies on a cot; were he home, mother would have the big patchwork quilt tucked in around the soft mattress for him. Here a doctor leaves orders, which are filled mechanically; back home—well, you can fancy what he pictures there.

"He is lonesome, gets disheartened, eyes the new mess kit, to whose items he is so wholly unaccustomed, and breaks down completely. Then the word reaches us by grapevine telegraph (for the work bears the approval of the new commandant, Colonel Hutchison); and by and by—all accidentally, you'd suppose—one of our volunteers goes over, drops in, starts conversation on some topic, gets the man interested in the new life; leads him off to our free moving pictures, and before you would expect it, you've a wholly different soldier there!

The camp where boys miss mother

Rookies, all pretty happy just now in their first uniforms

"Here's another phase of supplying the newcomer with just the little comforts of home which we find is doing much good here," Hoehler suggested, as he led us to a corner of the huge tent erected at the post by the Y. M. C. A. at his command. "Seasoned soldiers, of course, know how to provide themselves with ink, letter-paper and so on; but the neophyte seldom thinks of this, and such things are not always easy to get in camp. He does want to write home and tell the folks back in the hills all about it, to assure mother that he's well and thank Lucy for the fried chicken she sent to the train. You can't imagine the comfort that comes to the young soldier in this letter-writing, this linking himself with home once more, this pouring out of his soul to those he loves and who will understand him. So, since Uncle Samuel somehow doesn't see fit to furnish them, we supply the soldier-boys with writing-paper and ink and pens. Do they use them? Well, we kept tab at one time and found that here in the tent alone these soldiers produce, at minimum, two thousand letters a day! We keep the tent lit till ten at night; and after the day's work is over the men drop in and write and write and write!"

He turned a moment to issue an order, and then went on: "On the other hand, it isn't good to rely too exclusively on the writing for their pastime. While it's a mighty good outlet for the pent-up soul, if it goes past a certain point it may lead to brooding on home, and wanting to resign,—desert even,—and skip off for home. We counteract that by providing, for other seasons of the time when Uncle Sam is not employing his soldier, a regular motion-picture entertainment, the equal of any ten-cent movie in the land. Pictures are shown three nights a week, and a film exchange is instructed to send us the things which cheer men up. Seldom a night but 800 soldiers are in attendance at our movies; often we get 1,000 or more. Bulletin-boards about the tent announce the forthcoming program, and if you have a tent-mate who is feeling a bit 'down' and glum, you slip off and bring him, willy-nilly, to the show."

Hoehler, in fact, is the "little mother, masculine," of the homesick rookies of Fort Thomas, the big training-camp now of the Middle West.

"Here's another panacea for homesickness, another step toward reproducing home pleasures and pastimes in an army camp," he said. He halted us where men were playing checkers, where others enjoyed the scientific domino as well as the simpler game of this sort, and then led on to where a lively game of indoor baseball, played with soft ball and bat, was on.

"You know," he said, "all men aren't alike, and there are those who don't care for motion-pictures and who don't care for games. We have to look after them also. They're the quiet chaps, who would bring a book to the shady corner of the veranda Sunday afternoons in summer. For these we have a varied library handy, six hundred volumes at last count. A man can keep a book out three days. This seems a short time, but it's abundant if he's really reading."

We passed out of the tent and across the big parade ground and down the lanes of tents filled with soldiers. Here, there, and everywhere we could see eyes brighten and faces take on friendly gleams of recognition, as the men sighted Hoehler.

"We do much of our work right down here, too," he said, "cheering and comforting soldiers. Then up in the hospital we do much of the rest. When a soldier is sick he will want to write home, and often he's too feeble for that. So we let him dictate—we write just what he says—as his mother might at his bedside at home. You wouldn't believe it, but right here, within carride of the Queen City of the West, there's no end of illiterate soldiers, who cannot read or write. For these our service seems to be blessed, indeed; it's the only link for them with home. We not only write letters for these, but we read the men their replies; that sort of thing goes on here every day."

We scaled a grassy hillside to where more tents were standing; then we came to the camp hospital.

"Not only do we visit the sick soldiers for work of this and other cheering sort, but we bring them flowers and magazines and the like. A Mrs. Anderson, in the Queen City, supplies us with these, and they serve splendid ends. A victrola and a piano are kept going the day through, and the music from these cheers here.

"So much for the boys themselves, and we've often a thousand at a time to look after," Hoehler added, as he led along. "Parents come to visit, when the lads are from within short distance, and often we extend our labors to these. Mothers and aged fathers from the country are helpless in a city, and stand appalled, half in mute terror, when they reach an army camp. So we help them to find 'son,' who is 'one of them new soldiers,' or we send messengers to get him, and do service of that sort. In fact, we start our 'home work' with the young recruit the moment he gets his mess kit, and we try to keep it up until he's gone. We are trying to bring the home, as far as possible, into camp for the soldier. We've gone a long way toward our goal, of course," and he blushed smiling, "but, say! there is still a lot to do here!"

. . .

It seems fitting, just here, to recall this beautiful poem on mothers of men by Joaquin Miller.

The Bravest Battle

THE bravest battle that was ever fought,
  Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not:
  'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon, or battle-shot,
  With sword, or nobler pen;
Nay, not with eloquent word or thought,
  From mouths of wonderful men.

But deep in a walled-up woman's heart—
  Of woman that would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
  Lo! there is that battlefield!

No marshaling troop, no bivouac song;
  No banners to gleam and wave!
But oh! these battles they last so long—
  From babyhood to the grave!

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,
  She fights in her walled-up town—
Fights on, and on, in the endless wars,
  Then silent, unseen, goes down!

Oh! ye with banners and battle-shot,
  And soldier to shout and praise,
I tell you the kingliest victories fought
  Are fought in these silent ways!

The Man Who Conquered Villa

Alvaro Obregon, Soldier, Musician, and Popular Idol. A Puzzle to Mexicans

By EDWARD S. O'REILLY

GENERAL ALVARO OBREGON, the Irish-Indian Secretary of War of Mexico, and backbone of the Carranza movement, granted an interview one day last December to three men of international reputation as diplomats and financiers. He received them in his offices in the national palace of Mexico City.

Dressed in his neat uniform of olive drab, he might have been an American army officer at his desk. For some minutes he sat and listened to the proposition presented by the three visitors.

"This is a great opportunity that comes to few men," pleaded the spokesman of the party. "You have complete control of the army. What you command is the law. Carranza is an obstinate old fool who will not listen to reason. He is unpopular with the people, while you are the hero of the hour. You have the army in your hand; we have the money. We can put many millions behind you, the influence of foreign banks, the loyal support of the business element of Mexico. We ask you to repudiate Carranza. We will declare you president, and you will rule Mexico. It is you alone who have held Carranza in power. Withdraw that support, and you will be another Diaz. The prize is too great; you cannot refuse."

For a moment Obregon sat, twisting his mustache, gazing at the representatives of the great money powers. Then, lifting his hand, he touched a push-button on the desk.

"Before I answer your question," he replied smiling, "I want to introduce you to a gentleman who is going to be closely associated with you for some time."

"This meeting was to be confidential," protested one of the committee. "Who is this man?"

"He is your jailer," replied Obregon, waving his hand toward the officer of the guard who entered the room.

In true story-book fashion the three arch-plotters were hustled out of the office, clutching their high silk hats and muttering maledictions.

THE incident illustrated why Carranza, a civilian who never took part in a battle, and who is cordially disliked by the revolutionary element in Mexico, has managed to seat himself in the presidential chair. He has had Obregon, and Obregon has remained loyal.

Since the decline of Pancho Villa, General Obregon is the strongest man in public life in Mexico. He is the man who captured Mexico City from Huerta the dictator, the first leader to defeat Villa in battle, the soldier who defeated Zapata and drove him back to his Morelos mountains, and the one man who has held the Carranza faction together.

Obregon stands out in pleasant relief from the crowd of swashbuckling, spectacular rebel leaders of Mexico. He is a quiet, well-educated man, a successful military leader, and a natural politician. Not that he lacks the fighting spirit. In the second battle of Celaya, where he defeated Villa and broke his power, Obregon was shot in the arm. Improvising a tourniquet to stop the flow of blood, he sat in a carriage and drove back and forth behind the battle-line, giving his orders, until victory was assured. As a result of his delay he lost his arm.

Personally Obregon does not like Carranza, and has so expressed himself in public. On one occasion, when angered at some blunder of the provisional president, he said; "If we had woman suffrage in Mexico, Carranza would be the logical candidate for the woman's party."

"Then why do you support him?" was asked.

"Because we selected him as the First Chief of the Constitutional movement," he replied. "When we started this revolution we launched an organized movement, elected Carranza and signed the Plan of Guadalupe as our program. We must carry that plan through to success, and no personal likes or dislikes must interfere."

THIS Mexican Warwick has had a remarkable history for a man only thirty-five years old. As he proudly boasts, he is an Indian from the state of Sonora. He is equally proud of his Irish grandfather, whose name was O'Brien, one of those Celtic political exiles who settled on the west coast of Mexico.

Obregon grew up among these Indians, speaks their language, and takes part in their tribal ceremonies. From these west-coast tribes he drew most of his recruits when he started his career as a rebel chief. After graduating from the schools of the national capital, he studied for two years in Paris. His early ambition was to shine upon the operatic stage, and he is an accomplished musician.

It was my fortune to be with Obregon in his first fight at Ojitos, during the Orozco rebellion in 1912. He had distinguished himself in that fight, leading a cavalry charge and capturing four cannon. The Ojitos ranch was owned by a brother of Lord Charles Beresford, the British admiral, and was one of the noted show places in Chihuahua. That night a group of officers gathered on the veranda, celebrating their victory and boasting of the parts they had played in the fight.

Obregon slipped away from the crowd to the parlor, where he had discovered a piano. Sitting in the darkness, he played and sang airs from Italian and French operas. The talk of the officers on the veranda halted. Squads of big-hatted Indians gathered around the building, silently listening. It was a strange audience for "Celeste Aida" and "Donna Mobile." I little thought that night that the singer would, three years later, be the chief military leader of Mexico, with power to make or break presidents.

© International Film Service, Inc.

General Obregon and General Funston saying good-by after one of the border conferences in which Generals Funston and Scott convinced the Mexican leaders that intervention was a real possibility and thereby made it unnecessary

At the end of that campaign Obregon was a colonel of volunteers. He marched his Indians back to Sonora and prepared to muster them out of service. On the day President Madero was murdered and General Huerta enthroned himself in the national palace, Obregon's resignation was in the mail. He announced his intention of retiring to his farm. That night he marched his troops out of Agua Prieta and proclaimed a new revolution against the usurper. Friends of Obregon claim that he was the first officer to take the field against Huerta.

His army grew like a herd of cattle in a roundup. During the following year he swept through Sonora like a whirlwind, never losing a battle. Carranza was the only legally elected governor in Mexico who repudiated Huerta. The revolutionary leaders selected him as their first chief, and Obregon signed the pledge to support him. He is one of the few who signed that pledge who never violated it.

His campaign down the west coast was one of the most spectacular in Mexican history. Hermosillo, Guaymas, Mazatlan, Manzanillo, and finally Gaudalajara, the second city of the republic, were all scenes of hard-fought victories. When Huerta fled from the country, Obregon was at the gates of Mexico City, and received the surrender of the remnant of the federal army.

MEANWHILE the split between Pancho Villa, leader of the victorious army of the north, and Carranza, the nominal Chief of the revolution, had occurred. Obregon stepped in as a peacemaker and addressed a round robin to the leaders of the jealous factions. "The people won this revolution," he declared. "No one man or set of men can claim all the credit. No man must stand in the way of peace. Every general is entitled to a voice in the construction of the new government. We must arbitrate our personal differences."

In pursuance of this plan, he attempted to adjust the differences between Carranza and the headstrong Villa. As a result, he nearly lost his life before a firing squad. It was again my good fortune to be with him at this critical period of his career.

In an effort to patch up a working agreement he had come to Villa's headquarters in Chihuahua, accompanied only by three members of his staff. The meeting took place in a private house in the city. Villa was surrounded by his heavily armed staff, a revolver hanging at his thigh. Obregon was unarmed.

"You are working with Old Whiskers to betray the people," shouted Villa, giving way to one of his insane passions. "You will never go back to plot against me. I will have you shot like a dog."

Obregon stood twirling his watch-chain in his fingers, smiling in tantalizing calmness at the infuriated peon chieftain.

"If I were afraid to die, I would not be a soldier," he replied. "I came here to plead for the peace of Mexico, not for myself. If you think my death will benefit Mexico, kill me. There are many more men as good as I am who are ready to take my place. When you are ready to listen to my message, I will return."

Turning his back on Villa he walked from the room. The guard at the door stepped back and let him pass. They were awed by the quiet determination of this man who fought without a gun.

Villa refused to grant another interview, and that night Obregon left Chihuahua on the return trip to Mexico City. On his invitation I accompanied him as his guest in his private car. It was the general belief that he would never leave the Villa territory alive.

THE next morning our train was stopped at Jimenez and ordered back to Chihuahua. Again Villa commanded the execution of Obregon. His generals pleaded with him to countermand the order, and at last he grudgingly consented.

Once more we started on the southward trip, the train guarded by a company of Villa's soldiers. At Gomez Palacio, four miles from Torreon, Obregon was handed a telegram, which warned him that he would be shot in that city. As our train rolled across the bridge into Torreon, we could see a company of cavalry lined up before the depot. Obregon called me into the drawing-room of the Pullman.

"I believe that it is Villa's intention to kill me here," he said calmly. "If I am not killed I certainly will be imprisoned. Now, you are an American and a neutral. You will not be harmed, while the men of my staff will suffer my fate. I want you to get out and send word to my friends, who may aid me. Take this money and go to the border. Buy an automobile or anything you need."

Opening an iron box under the seat he handed me a roll of American banknotes as round as my thigh. I have never known how much money was in that roll. There must have been many thousands of dollars.

Our train rolled into the station and the car was immediately surrounded by the soldiers. Guards were posted at both entrances and Obregon was informed that he was a prisoner. Twice I tried to escape but was driven back.

Generals Isabel Robles and Tomas Urbina boarded the train and informed Obregon that Villa had again ordered his execution. They were opposed to the killing and were in telegraphic conference with the big chief of the north.

For over an hour, our train lay beside the depot with a guard at every door and window. A dozen telegrams were exchanged. At last General Robles handed a dispatch to Obregon, saying,

"This is good news."

The message read:

"Let him go quickly. We shall live to see the day when we are sorry."

"It is my advice that you leave immediately," said General Robles. "He might change his mind again."

THE guard was withdrawn and we proceeded on our way. As we left the city Obregon walked down the car aisle and grasped my hand.

"It was worse than a battle, wasn't it, Tejano?" he said laughing. "Three times in two days have I been sentenced to death. It grows tiresome. By the way, you may return that money. Your trip will not be necessary."

Not daunted by this experience, Obregon returned a few days later into Villa territory and held a conference with the Villa generals. At this conference it was agreed to hold a peace convention on neutral ground at Aguascalientes.

AT this convention, which lasted two months, Obregon made a proposition which would have prevented the last two years' war in Mexico if it had been accepted. Mounting the stage of the hall where the meeting was held, he announced:

"They say that three men are blocking a peaceful settlement of our disputes. These three men are Villa, Carranza and myself. I suggest that we all three resign and let the delegates here form a provisional government. On my part, my resignation is in your hands, and I pledge myself to retire to my home and abide by the majority vote of this convention, if Villa and Carranza also resign."

Strange to say, General Villa promptly agreed to the plan and sent in his resignation. Carranza refused, and precipitated war by declaring that he would no longer heed the actions of the delegates, unless they met in Mexico City, which he controlled. Villa promptly declared war and moved on the capital. Many followers of Carranza deserted his banners and joined forces with his enemies. Villa and Zapata entered Mexico City in triumph. It seemed that the Carranzista cause was lost, but again Obregon turned the tide. He declared that although he disagreed with Carranza's policy, he would remain loyal to the Constitutionalist pledge.

Gathering his demoralized forces he fell back before the superior armies of Villa. An amusing incident occurred at that time. A general, who had commanded a brigade of two thousand Yaqui Indians, rushed to Villa's headquarters one morning, crying:

"That scoundrel Obregon has stolen my army," he wailed.

While the general was absent from his troops, the suave Obregon had appeared before the Indians and made a speech in their own language. As a result the entire brigade followed him to his camp in the hills, while their general officers were roistering at a ball.

For several months Obregon was inactive. He was organizing his forces for a new blow. Suddenly he swept up from the east and fell upon the Zapata army at Puebla. In a house-to-house battle lasting two days, he drove the Zapatistas back to their hills.

Villa retreated north and made his stand at Celaya. In two desperate fights, in which several thousand men were killed, Obregon won the advantage and hurled the army of the north back to the border. It was the beginning of Villa's downfall. Day by day since that time his power has waned.

OBREGON was now the popular idol of the Carranza faction. He was the winner in the Mexican cockpit. His empty sleeve was an eloquent appeal to the imagination. At that time he could have been president, but still he remained loyal to Carranza.

Through his turbulent career is woven the thread of romance. At the beginning of the war he was engaged to marry Miss Maria Tapi of Nogales, Arizona, a graduate of Leland Stanford University. Twice the wedding day was set, and twice postponed, because duty called him to the firing line.

When he was wounded at Celaya, and his arm amputated, Miss Tapi refused to consent to further delay. They were married on the day Obregon was able to leave the hospital.

When Carranza was elected president of Mexico, Obregon again tendered his resignation, saying that his task was finished. Mexican politicians cannot understand why a man who holds the supreme power in the country should want to quit his job. They look for the ulterior motive. Many declare that Obregon is shrewd enough to let Carranza do the work of reconstruction, knowing that the time will come when a new national leader will be demanded by the people. Then Obregon's hour may strike. Villa has eliminated himself by his bandit tactics. Zapata is only a local force in southern Mexico.

Perhaps the politicians may be wrong. In Obregon the revolution may have developed one man who has no ambition to be a dictator. One thing is certain; the shrewd, courteous Irish-Indian can make or break any government that is set up in Mexico.

The New Russia and the Gospel

By
PASTOR WILLIAM FETLER

AFTER more than ten centuries of political semi-barbarism and spiritual superstition, with smiling faces and joyful hearts perfect liberty has been welcomed in Russia. The empire has become a republic, the ruler a prisoner, and the once persecuted are now rulers. To have been in Siberia or banishment is now a sign of honor. Those who have suffered for their convictions seem to have formed their own specific aristocracy.

What rejoices me above all is that now, without fear or hindrance, everybody in Russia is free to listen to the Gospel message. The war minister, Mr. Kerenski, has issued a decree that literature without restriction can be sent right into the trenches of Russia's mobilized forces. I, too, at last could begin to breathe freely. My heart was overflowing with joy as letters began to reach me from my fellow laborers in Petrograd, telling of the open door, and inviting me to hasten back to my beloved mission fields.

The first message received after the revolution was from Madame Yasnofsky, my faithful helper, and treasurer of the Petrograd Dom Evangelia (Gospel House). She was herself one of the first converts of Lord Radstock, the English nobleman who forty years ago went to preach at St. Petersburg to high and low, and she has seen the growing up of the Lord's cause in these last decades. When I and my associates were banished two years ago, the mantle of responsibility fell upon her, a weak woman. But the Lord was strengthening her, as she had to take care of the financial responsibilities, as well as attending to the running to and fro and pleading with the police for the opening of mission halls which had been closed. Now, she writes on an ordinary post-card—but oh, how valuable this card became in my eyes as I read it!—the following words: "Glory be to God, you are free to return. Russia is now a free country. God has broken the rusty chains of bondage. The door for God's Word is wide open." Does not this sound like another verse of the Acts of the Apostles? And then she adds: "Three Sundays are given us for meetings, free of charge, in the City Hall (right on the Nevsky Prospect). There is much work, but we need much prayer. It would be good to have you back. May God help and guide you!"

A post-card like this, indeed, I must cherish, so that my grandchildren shall be able to see how religious liberty dawned in Russia.

SINCE then remarkable developments have taken place. Politically, at the time of writing this, not everything seems to be smooth. But in religious matters there seems to be no interference. The preachers who had been exiled to Siberia have come back, among them my younger brother Robert, who had returned to Russia fresh from Spurgeon's College. But his banishment was due to two big crimes, unpardonable in Russia under the old régime; one, that he dared to be a Baptist; and another, that he happened to bear the name Fetler! That was enough to bring him into disgrace, and to place him on the blacklist of persons dangerous to the state.

One of my dear friends—the dean of the Pastors' College in London, founded by the late Mr. Spurgeon—Dr. McCaig, sends the following interesting lines, bearing upon the Russian situation:

> I was truly glad to get your brief letter and to know that all is well with you. We are constantly thanking God for the wonderful movement in Russia, though we are greatly concerned as to the action of the extremists. I do hope they will not succeed in wrecking the good ship of state. What a glorious Gospel invasion it will be if you and your band of preachers return with you! I had two letters from Robert, one written as he was leaving Siberia, and the other after he had been in Petrograd for three weeks. The news he sends is wonderful. I suppose you have heard about their Mayday manifestation, when choir and preachers, etc., marched singing along the Nevsky Prospect to the Town Hall, granted by the authorities for their use, held three open-air meetings at street corners, and at the meeting in the hall had the joy of seeing more than fifty giving themselves to the Lord.

These are, I believe, only the first fruits of the greatest Gospel harvest in the history of Christianity.

BUT God uses means. To send out evangelists, print Bibles and tracts, establish schools of the prophets, build mission premises—for all that work leaders and means are necessary. And the Lord in his providence stirs up the hearts of people to set themselves to these tasks. As missionary societies were formed a century ago, who took up the task of evangelizing China and India, Burma and Africa, thus in the cities of New York and Philadelphia of the United States of America, on the 27th and 28th of June, the year of our Lord 1917, and the first year of Free Russia, the Russian Missionary and Educational Society has been inaugurated. On the 27th of June a group of Christian ministers and friends gathered at one o'clock in the afternoon at the Fulton Street Noon Prayer Meeting. No place could be more fitted to give a start to a new missionary enterprise than this historic hall, where for decades God's faithful children have been gathering day by day to offer prayer and praise. This was a red-letter day, we trust, both for Russia and for America, this society forming a spiritual connecting link between these two great democracies. What possibilities are before us! What a stream of incessant blessing can flow from the United States to Russia, in the shape of material help, as well as of men ready for service, and from Russia to America in shape of reports of numerous souls being saved, lifted up from degradation, drunkenness and sin!

This society is the direct outgrowth of the Gospel Committee for Work among War Prisoners, founded for the evangelization chiefly of the two millions of the Russian war prisoners in Europe, in which organization the Christian Herald was blessed by God as the prime mover from the American side.

A number of organizations and individuals were represented at the formation of the Russian Missionary Society. Dr. Cortland Myers, pastor of the Tremont Temple, Boston, who has accepted the presidency of the new society, sent this message:

> Tell the brethren of my deep interest in this great work and of my conviction of Christ's deep interest in this special part of his kingdom. We are touching something close to his great heart when we take up this mission for the Russian people at this opportune time and in the hour of their great necessity. May we now learn better the meaning of prayer and consecration. The eyes of the whole world are now turning toward Russia, and the eyes of Christ are now turning lovingly and longingly toward Russia. We in America rejoice in the liberty which is now to be your precious blessing; but we rejoice more in the real liberty which Christ can give. "When the Son shall make you free, then ye shall be free indeed."

Then, with special joy, the writer read a letter from one of the warmest friends of the Russian mission cause, the Editor of the Christian Herald, who wrote:

> My dear Pastor Fetler: I am with you, heart and soul, in your efforts for the spread of the Gospel in Russia. Of the many spiritual movements that have sprung out of the great war, none has been more thoroughly welcomed by the Christian Herald than that which you have founded for giving the Gospel to the prisoners in the detention camps. The inauguration of the first Russian Missionary Society is a logical outgrowth of that great work, and I believe the new organization will enlist the earnest support of the Christian people of America, as it deserves.

LETTERS were also received from Mr. Delavan L. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World; Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly; Mr. Charles G. Trumbull, editor of the Sunday School Times, and others. Among the members of the Board of Directors are Dr. J. H. Jowett, Dr. J. W. Chapman, Dr. G. H. Sandison, and others. The Treasurer is Mr. G. Percy Fox, 2425 Girard Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., and the provisional office of the society is at 138 Bible House, New York.

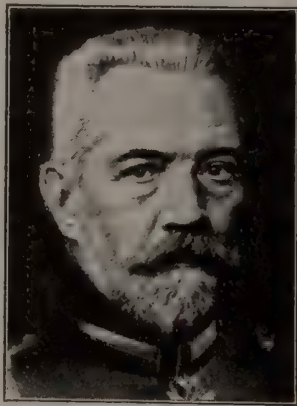
Now, the first most pressing duty that has fallen to the new society is to hasten to the help of a very needy and deserving cause in Russia. Five years ago, the Lord blessed our efforts to the salvation of several hundreds of souls in the city of Riga, on the Baltic Sea. That resulted in purchasing for preaching purposes a former Greek military church, in a good location, holding some 1,000 people. It was arranged that the remaining debt on the church, which was called "Golgotha House," should be paid out in five years' time. We had the brightest hopes that we could accomplish that without much difficulty. But unexpectedly came the war. I was banished from Russia; my associate in Riga was sent to Siberia. Riga was besieged and consequently many fled away; banks were closed and money was very scarce. The small number of believers left could not possibly cope with the heavy financial burden. Left without a leader, they have not been able, beyond keeping the house in order and raising enough for running expenses, to pay even what was necessary for the interest on the capital. Several times they wrote to me. Some letters no doubt were not passed by the censor, but two weeks ago I received the following most pathetic letter from the few brethren in charge of the work:

> Dear Brother Fetler: The undersigned very sincerely ask you to let us know quickly what can be done for the Golgotha House. On the first of August, we must pay the whole of the debt to the proprietor, and if we cannot do it, and if you cannot send the necessary money, then from that date the Golgotha House will no more be ours. Since there is freedom to preach, for the sake of many of our lost brethren the house ought to be kept.

This Golgotha or Calvary House was the first Greek State Church building which the Lord enabled us to capture for the preaching of the pure Gospel. And now to lose it would be a calamity indeed, not only for the sake of the city, but of the whole of that Russian province. In peace times, about $17,500 would be necessary to pay the debt. But now Russian money is cheap and only $9,000 are necessary to secure the church for the Lord's work for many years to come. I am praying much for the Lord to touch the hearts of many to come to our help. I have sent a letter to Russia encouraging them. As the Russian calendar is two weeks behind, at the very latest in the second week of August I must cable the amount to the friends in Riga. After hearing of this critical need, one of our warm Christian friends has sent me a check for $1,000 for the saving of the church, on the condition that the remaining $8,000 be raised by the beginning of August, otherwise the check is to be returned. Will the numerous and generous family of Christian Herald readers enable the new Russian Missionary Society to make good this pledge and to help out those Russian Christians in this their hour of trial? Kindly send all your gifts, marked "Golgotha House," to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Reform in Germany, as Elsewhere, Shows Scant Respect for Individuals



Theobald Von Bethmann-Hollweg

Who resigned as Chancellor because of cabinet crisis

Dr. Carl Helfferich

Secretary of the Interior, reported to be succeeded by a radical leader

Alfred Zimmermann

Imperial Secretary of Foreign Affairs, attacked for Mexican fiasco, resigned

Georg Michaelis

The new Chancellor. Photograph identified by former Ambassador Gerard

KAISER GRANTS FRANCHISE REFORM. For some weeks, dispatches coming out of Germany have carried more or less definite references to the debates in the Reichstag and to editorial comments in the German press, which, taken all together, indicated a growing determination on the part of the radical and socialistic groups within the empire to force certain political reforms looking toward a more representative government, without waiting for the end of the war. First, there were suggestions that Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg was to make a statement regarding peace. Then the cables bore word of a highly important crown council, while there were intimations that some of the members of the government would be displaced. The Socialists and other radical elements in the Reichstag are demanding a government more responsible to the people and are pressing for equal franchise in Prussia and the empire as the beginning of reforms. On Friday, July 13, a cablegram from Berlin, via London, brought the news that the German Emperor had granted the reform, ordering "that the draft of the bill dealing with the alteration of the electoral law for the House of Deputies, which is to be submitted to the Diet of the Monarchy for decision, is to be drawn up on the basis of equal franchise." The storm that had centered around the Imperial German Chancellor came to a head on July 14 with the resignation of Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg and the appointment as his successor of Dr. George Michaelis, who has long held important posts under the government, serving last as Prussian Food Controller. The Crown Prince had been called to Berlin, had held conferences with leaders of the Reichstag groups, and it was said that his influence, supported by that of the Bavarian premier, who was opposed to a parliamentary ministry, finally turned the scale against the Chancellor. This peace resolution had been prepared by the majority bloc of the Reichstag, which stated that "as on August 4, 1914, so on the threshold of the fourth year, 'we are driven by no lust of conquest' . . . the Reichstag labors for peace and a mutual understanding and lasting reconciliation among the nations. . . . The forcible acquisition of territory. . . is incompatible with such a peace." The resolution then declared against an economic war following the declaration of peace, declaring for the creation of an "international juridical organization," but it also declared that, as long as Germany's enemies would not accept such a peace and threatened her with conquest, "the German people will stand together as one man . . . the German Nation united is unconquerable." In some quarters the active intervention of the Crown Prince and the dismissal of the trusted Chancellor is looked upon as a possible preliminary to the abdication of the Kaiser. Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, German Minister at Copenhagen, is reported as slated to succeed Dr. Alfred Zimmermann as Imperial Foreign Secretary.

PRESIDENT PUTS PATRIOTISM ABOVE PROFITS. Impelled by the slow progress of the food bill and other regulatory measures, and by differences between government departments and certain great corporations, notably the steel companies, over prices to be paid by the government, President Wilson on July 11 made a public appeal to the business interests of the country to put the nation and its needs first. He said that the government was about to attempt to determine prices at which various supplies necessary for the prosecution of the war could be furnished. He declared that a just price must be paid, a price sufficient to "sustain the industries in a high state of efficiency, to provide a living for those who conduct them and enable them to pay good wages and make possible the expansions which will become necessary. But," he said, "facts are our masters now," and "patriotism and profits ought never, in the present circumstances, to be mentioned together. . . In these days of our supreme trial, when we are sending hundreds of thousands of our young men across the sea to serve a just cause, no true man . . . no true patriot will permit himself to take toll of their heroism in money or seek to grow rich by the shedding of their blood." He declared that "the public is now as much a part of the government as are the army and navy themselves," and "we must make prices to the public the same as the prices to the government. Prices mean the same everywhere now. They mean the efficiency or inefficiency of the nation . . . they mean victory or defeat." It was announced, on July 12, that the steel interests had agreed to supply the needs of the government at prices to be fixed by the Federal Trade Commission.

Just in Sight

UNCLE SAM may not be the "salt of the earth," but he has a good deal of it. If you want to know how much, read Frank Carpenter's story next week.

Dr. Clayton Sedgwick Cooper has recently returned from South America. Next week he will give some interesting glimpses of life in the great, growing, powerful Argentine Republic.

Next week we climb Prophetic Mountain Peak number five, with Dr. Gray and see Israel restored and renewed.

And next week Dr. Jowett, incomparable in the beauty of his messages, will unfold in the sermon "The Secret of the Lilies."

There will be another two pages of the news in pictures.

SENATE TALKS FOOD. The food bill during the past week has continued to hold the floor of the Senate. On June 10 the Senate agreed to take the final vote on the measure on Saturday, July 21. The Senate discovered that it had gone too far in adopting the Smoot amendment, authorizing the President to seize distilled liquors in bond and pay cost plus ten per cent. therefor. The attempt to fix the price by law was declared unconstitutional by both friends and opponents of the bill. A substitute provision was proposed, under which seizure could be made at a price fixed by the President, which, if unsatisfactory to the owners, could be made a subject for court action. This amendment was incorporated in another section of the bill, and it was expected that the unconstitutional Smoot amendment would be eliminated in conference with the House after the bill had passed the Senate. Much opposition was in evidence to the inclusion of cotton and steel among the commodities to be controlled.

PRESIDENT CALLS THE GUARD. President Wilson on July 9 issued a call drafting the National Guard from all the states into the Federal service. The Guard units are called to report on July 15 and 25, and to be drafted into the Federal service as integral parts thereof on August 5. The total of the forces affected on the day of the call was 295,997 men.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

HOME RULE OR REPUBLIC. The Sinn Fein movement in Ireland makes no secret of its opposition to Home Rule as sponsored by the Irish Nationalists under John Redmond, declaring at every opportunity for full freedom and even for an Irish republic. On July 11 an election was held at East Clare for the seat in the British House of Commons made vacant by the death in France of Major William Redmond. The seat had been regarded as absolutely safe by the Redmondites, who were thrown into confusion by the election of a Sinn Feiner, Professor Edward de Valera of Dublin University, one of the leaders of the "Easter Rebellion," who polled a majority of nearly 3,000 over Patrick Lynch, former crown prosecutor. This election, showing, as it is said to do, a marked disaffection of the rising generation in Ireland from the Nationalist Party, is held to raise a serious question as to any possibility of a successful issue from the coming Irish Convention.

SOCIALIST PAPERS SUPPRESSED. A species of censorship by postal authorities has brought about the actual suspension of nearly all the Socialist papers published in this country. Postmasters have been given blanket authority by the department to refuse the use of the mails to any Socialist publication which contains anything of a nature to reflect upon the Administration policy in the conduct of the war. Among the publications which have been barred from the mails are: The American Socialist, Chicago; The Masses, New York; International Socialist Review, Chicago; Social Revolution, St. Louis; People's Press, Philadelphia; the Socialist News, Cleveland; the Michigan Socialist, Detroit; St. Louis Labor, St. Louis; the Rebel, Halletsville, Texas; Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kansas; the Jeffersonian, Tom Watson's paper, published at Augusta, Georgia.

A resolution demanding a thorough investigation has been introduced in Congress by Representative Meyer London. "The whole thing is unbelievable," said Representative London. "The espionage act was never intended to give the postmasters and United States attorneys the powers of censorship which they have been exercising."

John M. Baer, until recently the cartoonist of a Socialist paper that the postal department suppressed, has been elected to Congress from the First North Dakota district by a plurality of about 2,000. He was the candidate of the Farmer's Non-partisan League, and defeated candidates of both the old parties.

TO DEPORT ALIEN SLACKERS. An anti-slacker bill, designed to reach men of military age born in England, Canada, Italy and other Allied countries who have never taken steps toward naturalization, has been introduced in Congress by Chairman Burnett of the House Immigration Committee. It proposes that such men shall be given reasonable time to take out their first citizenship papers, so as to be subject to military service here, and if they fail to do so they shall be deported. There are more than

Continued on page 800

Ocean Grove's Greatest Year

By MARY BARTON COOKMAN

THE Ocean Grove camp meeting season opened on June 24, with W. H. Morgan, D.D., LL.D., as Sunday morning preacher, and Rev. L. R. Wallman, D.D., for the evening service. Dr. Morgan will have charge of the young people's meeting during August.

At the young people's meeting in the Temple, July 1, the place was filled with earnest worshipers. Looking toward the platform, draped with flags, one saw these words in black letters on the north side: "Christ First and Forever;" and on the south side, "Whatsoever, Whensoever, Wheresoever It May Please Him." The Shubert Quartette led the singing. Rev. C. L. Mead, D.D., who is loved by the young people whom he has served for several seasons, stood at the desk, urging the people with strong emphasis: "Make people believe in God, in their homes, in their churches, in their communities, in the world."

Of the holiness meeting in the Tabernacle, erected in memory of Bishop James, Frank L. Wilson, D.D., is leader this year, assisted by Rev. Dr. Henry Wheeler. Here the atmosphere breathed rest and peace. Mr. Mohr led the singing, and C. F. Wergler, a Western evangelist, gave an excellent Bible reading

The great auditorium is filled with vast congregations. Clarence Reynolds, the organist, has many friends at Ocean Grove, as he is always affable and approachable. His afternoon concerts are still given, with patriotic fantasy. On the platform sits the venerable Rev. A. E. Ballard, D.D., president of Ocean Grove Association, now in his ninety-sixth year. He opened the services with prayer, and those who hear him join in supplication that his long and useful life may still be made a blessing.

A section of the beautiful boardwalk at Ocean Grove

REV. ABRAHAM PALMER, D.D., secretary of Ocean Grove Association, opened the Auditorium meeting on July 1 with a few encouraging words, and then the vice-president, Frank L. Wilson, D.D., took charge of the further service. His remarkable administrative ability makes him a power in leading this great movement for God to continued success. He introduced Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D.D., of New York, a noted Baptist clergyman, as the preacher of the morning. Hon. John E. Andrus, treasurer of Ocean Grove, was not present, but a strong appeal was made for money to meet expenses. Rev. George Clark Peck, D.D., of Baltimore, preached in the evening. In his opening remarks he said he had come expecting to explode a few fireworks, but as Rev. Dr. Woelfkin had blown up the place in the morning, he had changed his subject to the Epistles of St. Paul—"And Samuel opened the doors in the house of the Lord." At the close "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" was sung.

Mr. Rodeheaver, Billy Sunday's chorister, has arrived and will take charge of the music during the summer. The Sunday school is in charge of Mr. H. A. Hudson of Philadelphia, who is a splendid leader of children and is doing a good work. The Primary Department is under the care of Mrs. H. F. Skimo of Philadelphia.

The Bible class in the Auditorium is led by Rev. Frank L. Wilson, D.D., who excels as a Bible teacher. Every morning at nine o'clock Mrs. J. A. Hudson meets the Junior League of children in Thornly Chapel. This is one of the beautiful pictures of Ocean Grove, as Mrs. Hudson, assisted by her daughter as pianist and several boys and girls as violinists, is a born leader of children, and she sings and instructs them in a most pleasing manner. It is a rare privilege to hear her. Mrs. Hudson is also president of Bancroft Rest Home for Deaconesses, which was started through the influence of Mrs. Edward Kent (deceased) and Mrs. Hudson.

Elim, the preachers' house of recuperation, was founded by Rev. Alfred Cookman. It is well managed by an association of ladies, who make themselves responsible for its expenses. For many years, Mrs. Alfred Cookman was president, but her death three years since left the office vacant, and it has recently been filled by Mrs. Alexander De Haven. Mrs. Blanchard is secretary and Mrs. Reeves treasurer. The efficient matron is Mrs. A. L. Rives. Waves of spiritual power have gone forth from this house, where consecrated ministers have lifted their voices in prayer during the morning and evening worship.

On Independence Day, July 4, the Young People's Temple was filled to its capacity. Rev. C. L. Mead, D.D., made a rousing patriotic speech, which met with great applause. Miss Mildred Williams of the Shubert Quartette sang "The Star Spangled Banner" with thrilling effect, the audiences joining in the song. In the Auditorium six thousand people were waiting for Governor Edge of New Jersey to deliver the oration. He arrived escorted by the Asbury Park enlisted corps, Ocean Grove Minute Men, and Bradley Beach Corps, also the veterans of the Civil War. The Declaration of Independence was read by T. Appleby of Asbury Park; and Miss Annabell Hennessy of Trenton, enveloped in the American flag, sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Ex-Governor Edward C. Stokes presided, declaring "that Ocean Grove is a big church, from gates to ocean, and from lake to lake." He said it "was broad enough to invite to its platform men of all creeds, and stands for Christ and salvation. God and our country, worship, patriotism, religion and loyalty are the watchwords of Ocean Grove." He eulogized President Ballard of Ocean Grove, and promised residents of Camp Meeting Town a rare celebration when Dr. Ballard reached the century mark, declaring that they would suspend discipline and have a celebration that would compel the state to send the militia there to quell it. "We have liberty with license in Ocean Grove," he said. "We remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy, and we remember the Fourth of July to keep it patriotic" He then introduced Governor Edge.

DURING the summer many celebrated clergymen will preach, among them being Rev. E. E. Helms, D.D., Philadelphia; Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., New York; July 15, Bishop Theodore S. Henderson; July 22, Rev. R. F. Y. Pierce, D.D.; Children's Day, July 20, Rev. C. E. Wishart, Chicago; August 5, Bishop Luther B. Wilson, D.D., LL.D., New York, and Rev. C. M. Boswell, D.D.; August 12, Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., LL.D., New York; August 19, Rev. Cortland Myers, D.D., of Boston.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold their annual meeting on Thursday, July 26, and the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Society on August 6 to 13. July 22 the Children's Concert will be given under the direction of Homer Rodeheaver and W. H. Collinson. August 7, there will be an Oriental music drama, "Ahasuerus," and on August 9, the Kaltenborn String Quartette. During the season many noted artists will appear, some of them being Sybil Vane, Mischa Elman, violinist; Mme. Olive Fremstad, soprano, Metropolitan Opera; Mme. Alda, Mme. Schumann-Heink, contralto, and David Bispham, baritone. The "Creation" will be sung under the direction of William Dodd Chenerg. August 6, there will be an illustrated lecture by Robert E. Peary, "The North Pole." Many other lectures will be given during the season by Harry C. Oshander, George H. Dalrymple, Rev. S. Parkes Cadman and Dr. Johnson.

The Annual Camp Meeting will be held from August 24 to September 3, under the direction of Dr. Pane Rader and Melvin Trotter, both of Moody Institute, Chicago. In the Temple, daily, Miss Grace Saxe will give a Bible reading at 2, and Miss Alice Miriam Gamlin will hold a children's service at 3. Both of these workers were with Billy Sunday.

Here are gathered evangelists and teachers from all parts of the country, and the people who come show by their presence a longing to do something for Christ. Here they get the inspiration of holy living and an increased desire for Christian service. The message on the walls of the Auditorium in electric light, "Holiness to the Lord and Be Ye Holy," speaks to the people of the purpose of the founders of Ocean Grove, who knelt in consecration to God of themselves and this camp ground.

It is most important for Christian workers to understand "group consciousness," where men and women who compose the group come face to face, and clasp each other's hands, catching the spirit of Christ and his apostles, who went about doing good and proclaiming a full, free salvation. We need to realize that the business of life is to become holy, character and service being the Christian standards of the successful life.

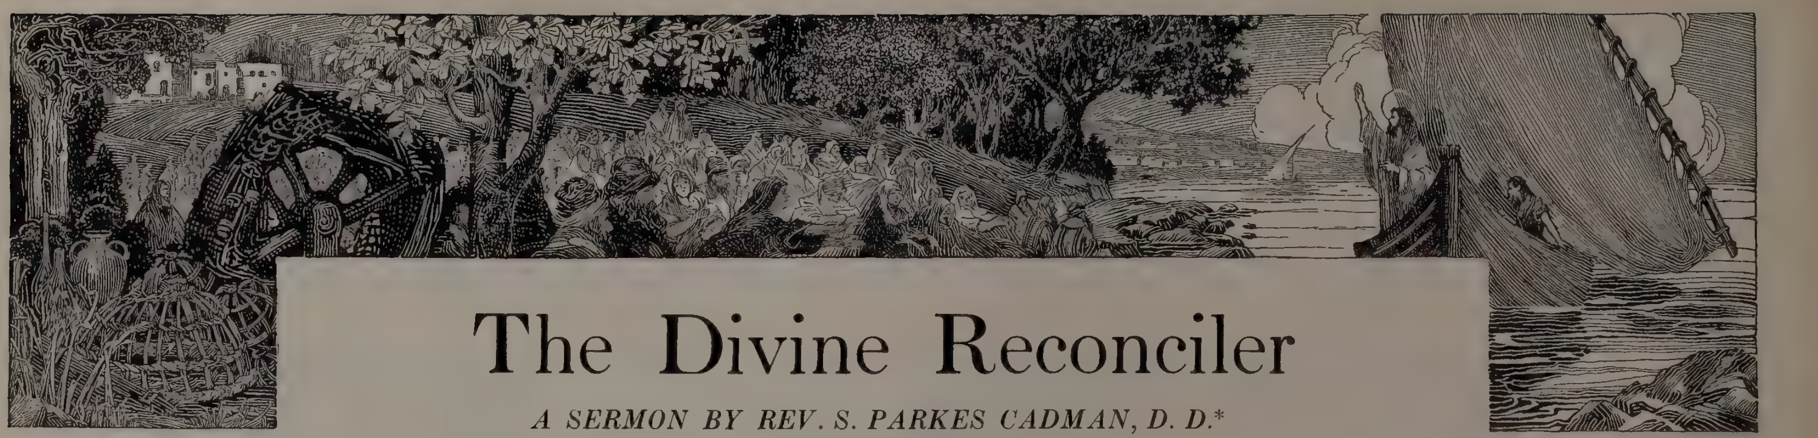
Come with me down to the sea and you will see Ocean Grove at its best. It never looked more beautiful with its lovely verdure and clean streets. The American flag floats everywhere in the breeze. The ocean waves roll in on the sands. No fleet guards it, but men on the Boardwalk, dressed in the soldier's khaki suit, tell us that war has come. It has brought us face to face with woman's unexpected opportunity for service. The tiny cross, pinned on each member of the Red Cross, and the heavy burdens on mind and soul make womanhood ready to meet the demands. In Ocean Grove a woman's devotional service is held every Friday afternoon in Thornly Chapel during July, and perhaps August. All women are invited to join in prayer for our country, our soldiers, our sailors, ourselves.

◆

A Picturesque Revival in Korea

IN Pyeng Yang, Korea, there is great rejoicing over the fact that two thousand believers have been brought into the churches through a series of revival meetings. At two P. M. daily during the revival, a workers' prayer meeting was held, and the workers were then divided into eleven bands and sent to every section of the city for house-to-house preaching. One thousand big red posters, in prominent places all over the city, helped give the Gospel invitation. There are one thousand Christian homes and shops in Pyeng Yang, and nearly every one displayed a paper lantern at night with invitations to "Believe in Jesus" written upon it. Huge parades of Christian men and boys with bands and banners, songs and shouted invitations to "Yei-su mit-oo-si-o" ("Believe in Jesus"), marched through the city on two separate days. Every morning at 6:30 the church bells pealed forth their invitation to prayer. Every praying home sang "Hover O'er Me, Holy Spirit," so that thousands of non-Christians roused themselves for the day's work to the notes of this hymn. At night scores of willing workers brought to church those who during the day had promised to attend, and by the close of the week two thousand people had signified their desire to become Christians.

When trouble calls, give her a hard bed and short rations.



The Divine Reconciler

*A SERMON BY REV. S. PARKES CADMAN, D. D.

DURING the past half-year, Dr. Cadman (who is one of our valued staff of sermonic contributors) has spent three months on the Mexican border, as chaplain of the famous Twenty-third Regiment of Brooklyn. The following sermon is the last of a series which he preached at Pharr, Texas, where the regiment was stationed, and which were heard by thousands of soldiers and civilians.

TEXT—II Cor. 5 : 19. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself."

THIS is the age of philanthropy. There is no one whom we delight to honor more than the good men and women of our time who identify themselves with the poor, the ignorant and the neglected, thinking their thoughts, submerging themselves in their interests, caring for their necessities. Such Christ-like laborers command our reverence. We call them Christ-like because they have their Eternal Example in him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life as a ransom for many. The Incarnation of the Only Begotten Son of God is the creature prototype of all such beneficent activities.

Jesus is set before us in the Gospels as the Revealer of the Father, as the Supreme Guide of man, as the Sinless and Perfect One who showed that the prince of this world had nothing in him. These offices and acts culminated in his death and resurrection, which, in a thousand ways we can never fully realize, abolished the hindrances and barriers between the Creator and the creature. Hence the apostle, in describing the ambassador's trip of the Christian ministry, lays its weight upon one paramount moral and spiritual truth embodied in the historical Redeemer. He solemnly assures us that God was in Christ, reconciling us to himself, giving unto all who believe pardon for their trespasses and sins, admitting them into the fellowship of life eternal. What love, what service, can be as vital or as precious as this love and service? It behooves us to ponder the apostolic declaration, conscious that the destiny of the race is here involved for good or for ill as it is involved in nothing else. A more urgent sense of the need of God in our lives, and the utter failure of every attempt to find him elsewhere, are sure, sooner or later, to turn our attention to his manifestation in Jesus Christ.

CERTAINLY, all men, however degraded, have an inkling of their Maker. Belief in his existence is too deeply rooted in the human soul, too magnificently expressed in the Scriptures, to be in any real danger. But our Lord raises this instinct for God, this faint apprehension of his existence, this ideal of his nature, into a state of grace and holiness and love. He vivifies the conception of the Eternal One until it gains measureless capacity for life and power. And he does this in three great ways: by his teaching, his life, and his atonement.

Let us review these in their order. He began by confirming and correcting previous teachings which are found in the revealed religion of Israel, and by instructing men that the Jehovah of Sinai and of Horeb is the Father, not merely of mankind as a whole, but of the individual man. This Fatherhood is extended even to the rebellious prodigal, the outcast who will not return to the domestic circle until hunger and despair drive him there.

It is not a superficial or an arbitrary relation. On the contrary, it arises out of the divine element in man, which God ever seeks to affiliate with his infinite love; to bring into closest fellowship, into one living unity. Such an exalted view of our natural affinity with the Father of the spirits of all flesh can be held consistently with the fullest recognition of that radical moral disorder and spiritual failure of men which we call sin. Christ speaks of the best of man as being evil. He traces this evil to their hearts, and draws the darkest pictures of its gravity and consequences. He calls saint and sinner alike to repentance, and tells the learned and pious Nicodemus that he and all others must be born from above, regenerated, before they can enter the Kingdom. He detected sin in its first inceptions, and tracked it down to its last and dreadful result in punishment and in spiritual dissolution. What others regarded as anger he denounced as murder; where the ordinary person saw no more than desire, he saw adultery. And he thus judged because his pure and stainless Sonship revolted against the abnormality and abomination of transgression.

In all these things the words of the Master closely correspond with the convictions of mankind. We know that we have sinned and fallen far short of the purpose of God. To attempt to palliate or deny this sinister fact is useless. And because we have sinned, and others have sinned before us, guilt and penalty have been transmitted and personally deserved. Nor is it true that our wrongdoing springs from ignorance. The vast majority of men and women violate the laws of heaven knowingly and wilfully. They are free to do right; they deliberately choose to do wrong, and thus widen the breach between themselves and every moral and religious attainment.

JESUS met this disaster by announcing himself as the Shepherd who seeks the lost sheep, the Physician who heals diseased souls, the Saviour who pays the ransom for forfeited lives. His mission was to bring men out of the false and ruinous relations which are wrought by sin, and into the true and enriching relations due to their restored inheritance in God. He taught them that to know God aright, and to glorify him forever were the only rational ends of their being.

But how could such instruction as this prevail against fleshly appetites and immoral tendencies, if it stood alone, unsupported by example and left entirely to precept? Prophets and sages have given us similar advice, not so illustrious, not so authoritative, but wise and clear enough to be received. They were not so received because those who aspired to be our guides were themselves in a like condemnation with us. Therefore it is important to recall that if Jesus reconciles us to God by his words, he reconciles us still more by his life. He was sinless, without spot or blemish! He stands beyond and far above all saints and heroes who have illuminated life's possibilities. Things seen are greater than things heard. Every vision we have of him is entrancingly holy and just. From his childhood days at Nazareth until he bowed at Gethsemane and meekly accepted the cup of expiation, he made it his meat and drink to do the Father's will. He lived in constant and tenderest intimacy with the Father. In that fellowship he took refuge from the contradiction of malefactors and hypocrites; out of its resources he drew his endurance to the end.

This, mark you, was the noblest of ideals fulfilled by One who was tempted in all points like unto his brethren, yet without sin. The perfect order, symmetry, beauty of such goodness, its freedom and yet its dutifulness, its lowliness and yet its sovereignty, its righteousness and yet its compassion, the indisturbable balance of its qualities, have made men everywhere aware of their own defilement, and reminded them of their better portion and their diviner calling. Nor was the pattern he supplied inaccessible to men. On the contrary, he was the friend of harlots and publicans. He lived among the desolate and the bondsmen as One who served. His miracles of healing and of release were deeds of love. Men looked upon him and cried, "Behold our God!" Had he said little, and been content to live and act as he did live and act, they would forever have connected him with the Father. Thus, with one exception, the life of Jesus and the teaching of Jesus have been the greatest religious forces that have entered our mortal sphere. That exception is his death.

What to Me is Dearer

I LOVE the open ranges,
  The sagebrush prairie wide,
The mountain peaks of grandeur,
  The ocean's whitecapp'd tide.
I love the silent vistas
  Of shadow and of light,
The dawn and sunset glory,
  The songbird's sweet good night.
But what to me is dearer
  Than fields or skies of blue
Are the hearts of those who love me,
  The honest hearts and true!

I love the smiles of childhood,
  The hopes, the joys of youth,
And manhood's strength and courage,
  Which stands for right and truth.
I love the faces honored
  With sunset years aglow,
The lives of benediction
  Which bless us ere they go.
But what to me is dearer
  Than life's swift passing day
Is the thought of God above me,
  Who will not pass away!

Littleton, Colo. JOSEPH HENRY AYERS.

NOT on the teaching nor on the life of the Christ do the New Testament writers lay chief stress as the means of deliverance from sin, but on the death of Christ. I am aware that the Atonement has been practically banished from many pulpits. And where it is named, references to it are frequently so meager and shadowy that they afford neither hope nor consolation for the sad, the weary, the unclean souls that have wandered wide from this central point of Christian truth and Christian joy. The result is that much preaching to-day is a mere vibration of breath: a retailing of meaningless phrases, or a collocation of moral advices and literary arts which have no control over the actual state of the church and the world. Neither the blessing of God nor the attention of men is given to these utterances. As a rule, they fall dead at the feet of the speaker.

The minister of the Gospel, who halts at the Cross and stumbles over its offense, may be an ethical or social instructor, but a herald of God and an ambassador of Christ he cannot be. The reconciliation, which is the essence of the Incarnation and of the Evangel, is not found in his efforts. Perhaps his neglect or hesitation in dealing with the main theme of the New Testament are due to his objection to theories of the Atonement. These are, one and all, confessedly insufficient. No theologian nor preacher can transfer the oceanic content of God's love and righteousness in the Cross to any doctrinal system. But they can voyage on its broad bosom as the stately liner plows the Atlantic. They can and they should meditate on the deep things of God therein contained. They can and they should determine, in an era like ours, to know nothing among men save "Christ and him crucified."

Consider the space and treatment given to the death of Christ in the Scriptures: Now it recurs again and yet again; now it is attached to all heights and depths of love, sacrifice, deliverance, holiness and adoration. Consider its permanent monument in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which is to be to all Christians "a memorial of his precious death until his coming again."

"Here the whole Deity is known,
  Nor dare a creature guess
Which of the glories brightest shone,
  The justice or the grace."

THE Crucifixion was the deed of wickedness which revealed, as a flash of lightning reveals a precipice, the derangement and damnability of sin. It was the self-manifestation of the Eternal Heart which suffered in the flesh on the tree. It was and is the bond which drew man into vital union with God, by providing a basis for man's forgiveness and acceptance. Viewed in any light, or in what it does in us or for us, it is the summit of the teaching and of the example of Christ and the completion of his revelation. After the foul deed was wrought on him who suffered, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, man could never doubt that love is the deepest passion in the heart of the All-Merciful, or that he chooses to work no self-sacrifice for the benefit of his offspring.

Comrades in this military duty that we have been called upon to render for our beloved country, I cannot bid you farewell without beseeching you, in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God. Your soldierly sense and manhood will readily admit that you have sorrows to be consoled and sins to be forgiven. From my knowledge of you, while I recognize in you many admirable traits of character, I also mourn over some fatal discrepancies. Will you not place your trust in the divine Lord and Master, who was and is the living Revealer of the Father's love for you, who died to make you free from lust and carnal appetite, and to raise you to the everlasting honor and dignity of the sons of God?

---

* Pastor, Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Run the Straight Race

SUNDAY, July 29. Heb. 12 : 13. "Make straight paths for your feet." The nearest way Godward is always the straight way. Any other road takes us out of the way, and we become vagrants in fields of trespasses, and it will be an awful work to get back again. And therefore our first concern, whenever we are face to face with any practical problem, must be to see the straight road. Where is the straight road across this bit of country? But everybody cannot see the straight road. They cannot see the truth because there is no truth in them. There is such a thing as a crooked mind, and such a mind cannot perceive the path of rectitude. In my boyhood I had a bullet-mold which was not quite "true," and every bullet shared the crookedness in which it was born. And a crooked mind turns out crooked judgments. And therefore if our judgments are to be true, and reflect the holiness of God, our minds must be renewed; there must be "truth in the inward parts." And if the mind has been adjusted to the mind of the Lord, then we can think with assurance when we set out to find the straight road across the wide and perplexing moor. "Show me thy way, O Lord!"

And now I am interested to notice that the apostle, who counsels us to look for the straight path, counsels us in the very same chapter to "run the race that is set before us." Find the straight road, then run! We must always keep in motion on the road, and the motion must be swift if it is to be safe. For one thing, it is by motion that we retain our vision. On these great highways of the spirit, when we cease to go we cease to see. To become at ease in Zion is to become blind. And for a second thing, it is only by progress that we can retain our strength. To lie down is to become soft, and we lose the very power of continuance. That is the nemesis of ease; it saps the springs of perseverance. But our motion must be swift if it is to preserve our sight and our strength. We must run the race that is set before us. Everything must be swift. Our discernment must be swift: "Swift to hear." Our desire must be swift: "Be swift, my soul!" Our obedience must be swift: "Take my feet and let them be swift and beautiful for thee." The angels, that excel in strength, do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his will.

And in swift movement on God's straight road rest will come of itself. The Lord himself will look after that. "They shall run and not be weary." Rest is imparted to us while we are on the road. "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." For in these great matters rest is just the invigorating and consoling sense of the presence of the Lord. "They drank of that rock which followed them, and that Rock was Christ." J. H. J.

"The Life I Now Live"

MONDAY, July 30. Gal. 2 : 20. "The life I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Life may be transformed. We may have been living one kind of a life in the past, but we may be living another kind of a life in the future. There is no doubt that character tends to permanence, by the power of habit and association. There is a power, however, superior to these—a power that breaks habit and creates a new atmosphere. Perhaps there are those who are so constituted that they can never be firmly established in any type of character. They are fickle. Impressions have no permanence. But most of us are not so. We are like the potter's clay, plastic; but we "keep form," if not forever, at least until some superior force is brought to bear upon us. That the grace of God can change a character fixed by heredity, education and habit is demonstrable. The Bible furnishes us the record of many lives which were so affected by a Power not their own that even their names were changed. What a transformation from Peter the impulsive to Peter the steadfast; from Saul the heresy-hunter to Saul the missionary; from Augustine, skeptical and profane, to Augustine, Christian apologist and apostle; from Bunyan, ignorant, wanton, blackguard, to Bunyan, Immortal dreamer, prisoner of the Lord; from John B. Gough, unfilial, profligate, ribald, to John B. Gough, the trumpet-tongued evangelist of temperance; from Jerry McAuley, inebriate, bully, devil's scullion, to Jerry McAuley, the evangelist of grace! C. C. A.

Seeming and Being

TUESDAY, July 31. James 1 : 22. "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Both the exhortation in this text and the reason that is given for it are important, the latter even more so. The most ordinary mind understands that preaching and hearing sermons is not an end in itself, but only a means to an end. Preaching and hearing must lead to action. Sermons after being spoken and listened to must be lived. Pastor and people must be living embodiments, walking enactments of the truths which the religion of Christ professes. If hearing and doing the Word become divorced in the lives of professing Christians, if Christians listen to one set of moral principles and live according to an altogether different set, there is a deception wrought.

It is not the outside world, however, that is deceived by this incongruity between hearing and doing. Worldly men have very sharp eyes for the inconsistencies of Christian belief and Christian conduct. Mr. Churchill could never have written "The Inside of the Cup" if there were not a difference between the inside and the outside, between the glamour that goes with the external practice of piety and the rank impiety that lies concealed behind it. No, the world is not deceived by the monstrosity that we meet with among nominal Christians—men who are all ears and have no hands, no arms, no feet; men who never miss a service at their church but miss every other service that their religion requires of them. Whom do they deceive? No one but themselves. Everybody sees through the shallow pretense of their profession of religion, only they themselves hug a shadow in the belief that they have embraced the substance. It is an awful delusion; for Jesus declares: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." W. H. T. D.

Jesus and Sinners

WEDNESDAY, August 1. Heb. 11 : 31. "By faith the harlot Rahab . . . received the spies with peace." Matthew gives the names of only four women in the ancestral line of Jesus—Ruth, the Gentile, and three others, Tamar, Rahab and Bathsheba, two of whom were harlots and the last one of questionable moral character. He who came to save the people from their sins came along the line of great sinners. In his human nature dwelt the strongest passions which hereditary descent could transmit. Therefore, how truly it could be said of our Lord, "He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin."

Is there not some striking significance in Christ's coming, not from a line of noblest characters in Bible history, not from those highest in the walks of life, but from several who were sunken in the lowest depths of immorality? Was it not that he might make his appeal to save unto the uttermost all who would come unto God by him? The salvation of redemption is from sin; every degree of sin; it is by faith, such as Rahab exercised. It is a salvation for all the Gentile world whom Ruth represents, as she enters the royal line. Jesus' life and death, as well as his ancestry, awaken hope in the heart of the deepest-dyed criminal on the footstool. Christ was hated by his countrymen for associating with the outcast publican, Roman tax extortioners, as well as with the worst sinners in society. He was accused of having a devil for mingling with the devil's own. E. W. C.

"The Seeking God"

THURSDAY, August 2. Luke 19 : 10. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." In these words Jesus gives us to understand that God, veiled in human flesh, is seeking man. Thus, Jesus is more than a representative, a messenger of God; he is God, revealing in every step of his life, in every miracle of healing, and in every parable of truth, the Father's mind and heart. The advent of Jesus was a part of God's seeking. The pearl-diver gropes in darkness and dangers unimaginable, to bring a pearl up from ocean depths. The genius of Washington converted a host of undisciplined troops into an effective army. A young artist, before whose eyes a heavenly vision shone, constructed a cathedral window of rare beauty out of the discarded fragments of other workmen. Invisible forces of the atmosphere take up the moisture from slimy ponds and sluggish streams and salty seas and send it down again in pure and purifying dew and rain. All these are but imperfect symbols of what God undertakes to do when he offers to save the lost. There have been many gods in earth's theologies and mythologies, but where, outside of Christianity, shall we find such a God as this? No Persian, Hindu, Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, Roman or Norse deity has been thought of as a saviour of lost men. By no effort of reason, by no exercise of poetic license, can any one of them be identified with the Father of the prodigal and with the Shepherd of the lost sheep.

A field of thorny cactus is one of the most forbidding sights on our arid plains. It cumbers the parched ground. One day a man said, "If I could but divest the cactus of its thorns, I could make the desert a garden." He tried to do it, he tried unnumbered times, and failed. At last he tried and did not fail. Today Luther Burbank will show you a variety of cactus without thorns, but not without value as fodder. It is one of the miracles of the modern world of science. What that man has done for the cactus is a symbol of what Jesus Christ is doing for the human race. He came to live in our desert. The sharp stones bruised his feet, and the hot sun smote him; wild beasts of the hills howled around him, and wilder beasts of men hounded him to his death; but he did not give up his life until he had engrafted upon humanity the life of God. So the human desert shall yet blossom as the rose. C. C. A.

Slander and Well-Doing

FRIDAY, August 3. I Pet. 2 : 15. "So is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." The opposition which the early Christians encountered from the pagans went to shocking extremes. Hideous tales were spread about their doings: they were said to hold Thyestian banquets at which human flesh and blood were consumed, love-feasts at which licentiousness was unbridled. They were represented as opponents to all learning and intellectual progress, as secret anarchists who were bent on destroying the authority of governments. It is easy to see what facts of the Christian creed were perverted by the heathen in order to bolster up these fearful charges. The apologists of the first centuries nobly defended the faith of Christians against these insipid charges.

Those were trying times. It seemed as if the arch-liar from the pit would throttle the young faith in its infancy. What are the Christians advised to do in this predicament? Peter denounces the slanders of the heathen in strong terms. He says they flow from "ignorance." and the word which he uses not only means lack of information, but contains a moral censure. It was the culpable ignorance of men who did know better and could know better that prompted these vile accusations. He calls the slanderers "foolish," literally, senseless. They were talking out of their mind in what they said about the Christians.

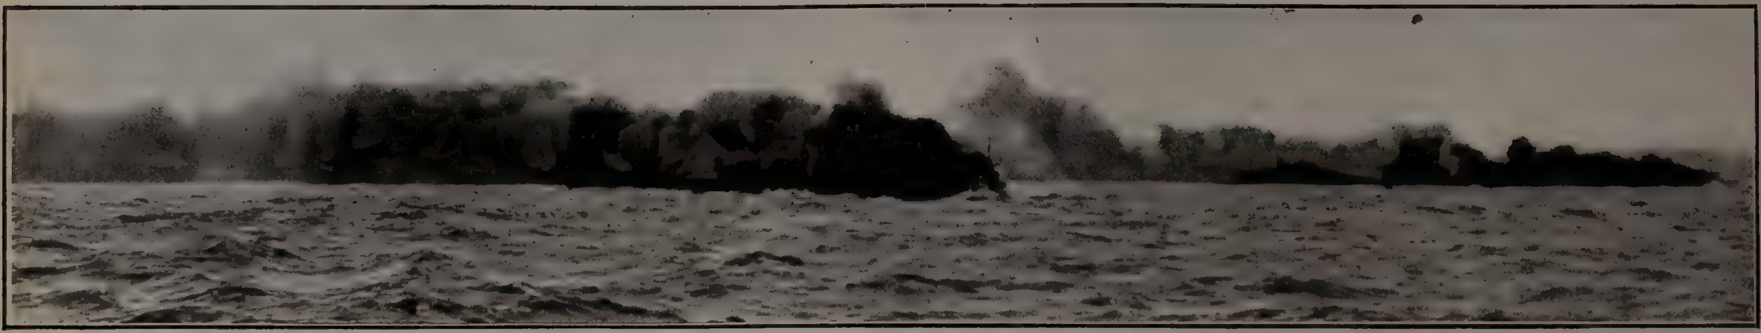
But over and above these severe recriminations Peter suggests a powerful way of vindicating the faith of Christians, to the utter confusion of their enemies; by well-doing they are to stop the mouths of their detractors. Against the wild charges emanating from insane hatred they are to place the testimony of their pure, upright, loyal, charitable lives. Men who lived as Peter wants Christians to live cannot believe as the heathen imagined the Christians to believe. This is an excellent rule that should be applied in every similar instance. W. H. T. D.

Greatness and Humility

SATURDAY, August 4. John 21 : 3. "I go a fishing." From the resurrection Peter decided to resume his former humble occupation. Is it not generally so with a faithful soul? We do the little and the low things after the glorious visions. After the Transfiguration, the healing of the child occurred as they descended into the valley of life. Every newly saved soul goes to the common toil with a joy and peace unspeakable and full of glory. Work does not interfere with a devotional spirit; it is godlike to work. All duties are holy when the heart is right. Drudgery never interferes with communion with the risen Master. The restored Peter is at his former toil. When he sees his Lord again, he wishes to be found at his old honest occupation rather than be listlessly waiting for another vision, or meditating over the glories of the resurrection. If we are faithful over a few common things, he will make us ruler over many.

Great gifts and callings grow out of the ordinary duties of life; somebody must always continue doing lowly duties to sustain those called to the extraordinary. Cincinnatus, after his victory as the general of Rome, returned to his farming life. Emerson loved to work in his garden as a change from his study. Every one should be able and willing to follow lowly toil when not demanded for loftier achievements. The multitudes of laboring men make possible the success of the great leaders in discoveries, in reforms, and in the realm of thought. The twelve disciples represented thousands of followers who were working together for the spread of Christianity; the little things we have done will be large in the light of eternity. E. W. C.

SNAPSHOTS AT THE WORLD IN ACTION



You have read of the "Smoke Screen" that protects ships from attack. Here it is

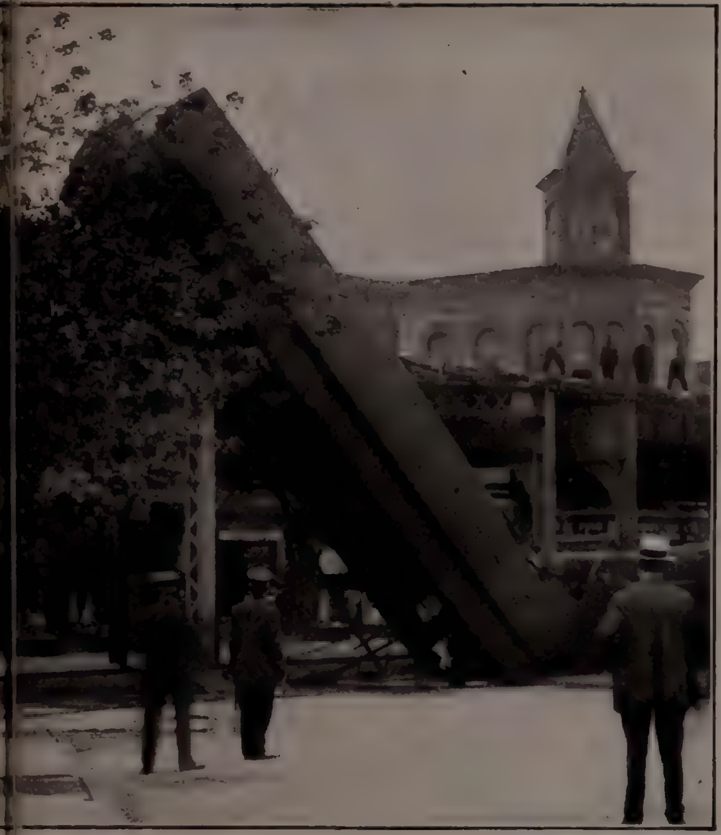
We don't know whether these Chinese soldiers fought for or against Chang Hsun, but they look fit

Copyright International Film Service

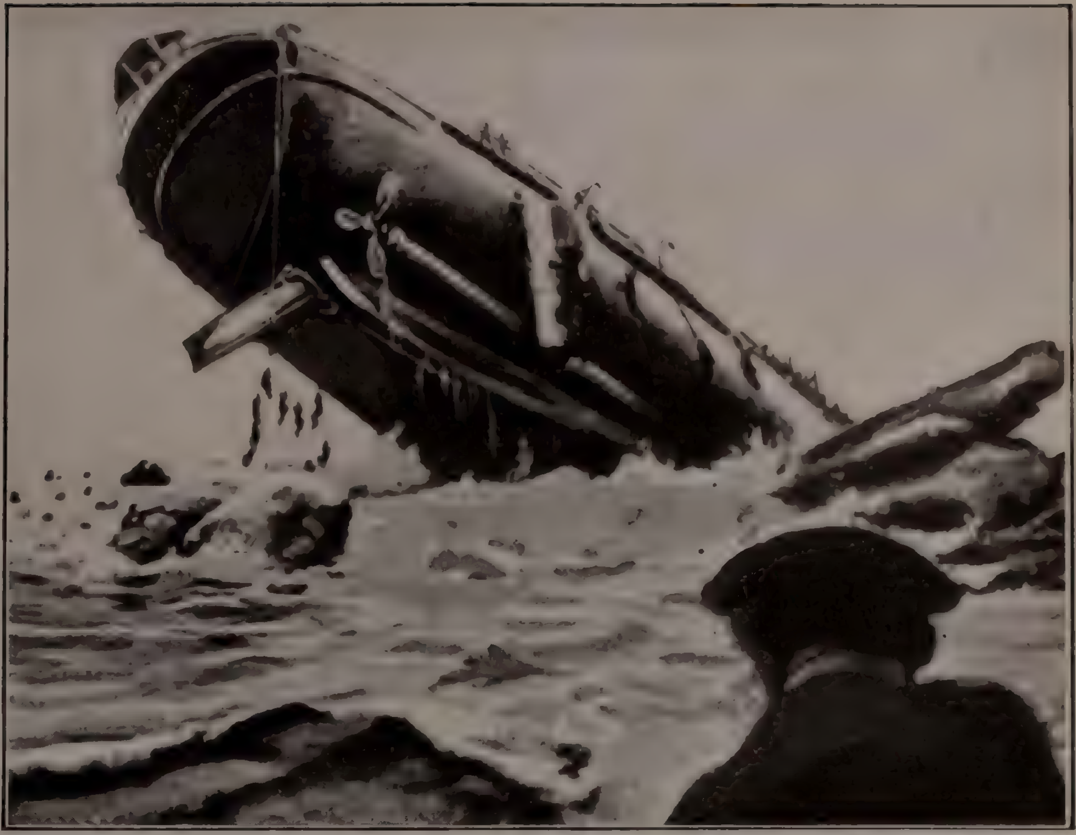
© Underwood & Underwood

With 2,000 men of the C & A shops on strike, violence threatened, and 1,200 militia ready for action, the mayor of Bloomington, Ill., met the men on the steps of the City Hall, and arranged a satisfactory settlement

U. S. Ma



© International Film Service, Inc



International Film Service, Inc

Above. Nearly thirty people were injured when this Brooklyn elevated car went over the edge

Upper right hand corner. This British transport was torpedoed by a German U-boat in the Mediterranean. In trying to beach her she was run on the rocks. The men are to be seen sliding down ropes and swimming ashore

At the left. Feng Kuo Chang, Vice-President of China, who headed the forces that overthrew the dictator and restored the republic

At the right. New York girls who work all day put in evening hours at Red Cross work arding the gates of the Legation quarter at Peking

Sinn Feiners, released by England, received an uproarious welcome in Dublin

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

Seizing the Opportunity

WE rejoice to see that the Christian churches of America are availing themselves of the opportunity for rendering spiritual service in connection with the new military camps. When the Christian Herald a few weeks ago pointed out the need of an organization for this purpose, and recalled the splendid record of the Christian Commission of 1861, we little dreamed of a response so prompt, or a project of such magnificent scope, as that which is now in process of organization. The National Service Commission, representing an influential body of ministers, through Moderator J. Wilbur Chapman tendered its services to the Government for organized spiritual work. Almost simultaneously three great denominations have taken this definite step, and the indications are that other influential bodies will follow their example.

There will be no gaps in the ranks of the spiritual workers. It is a campaign in which there is room enough and need enough for all to be represented. We believe the regular army chaplains, as well as the Y. M. C. A., will welcome this great reinforcement to their spiritual strength, and that much blessing will come of it, both to the troops and to the churches. We have before us as we write, a letter from one who has been cognizant of the Gospel work now being done at an Eastern fort. It is doubtless typical of many other places of military assembly where numbers of new troops will be gathered within the next few months. He writes that between 30,000 and 40,000 young men of the nation have passed through the place in three months, the average stay being about ten days. Recruits come in at the rate of 200 to 1,000 daily. There the young men just away from home get their first taste of army life. Cast among new acquaintances and exposed to many temptations, they stand in need of Gospel comfort and guidance. In such places, and in the improvised camps in many states, there will be ample opportunity for hundreds of trained spiritual workers. In these fields the early sowing of the precious Gospel seed is the best. The young recruit may carry away in his heart to distant camps, or even across the seas, the message that may be the means of winning others to Christ.

Woman's Ideals

"MY ideal man is my husband," writes a woman. What a soul-crushing load of misery would be lifted from the world if every married woman could truthfully say the same!

Unfortunately, very many married women unmistakably indicate that the ideal man is about the exact opposite of the husband. Maybe it is the wives' own fault; who can say in such matters? Perhaps they have permitted their ideals to change since the wedding day. Perhaps they have lacked within themselves the qualities that preserve a husband in ideal condition.

The perfect husband is impossible without the perfect wife.

The only husband who can be absolutely sure to always remain his wife's ideal is the man who judiciously and strategically dies. A woman will tenderly carry a dead lover in her heart for fifty years, garlanding his memory with the sweetest flowers of her imagination—when she is sure to find fault with a live one within six months.

If we would know the worth of our ideals we must learn to value them for themselves alone, regardless of their realization. They are the best part of us. They are the leaven of our lives.

You have seen a child tenderly mothering a sham thing of sawdust and rags, and you have known that back of the poor reality was being nourished the ideal of mother-love, one of the purest, strongest forces in the world.

For all of us the real is far apart from the ideal. The human is far from the perfect. And yet all realities appear to us pleasing or hateful, gilded or discolored, symmetric or distorted, according to the lenses of our ideals.

Ideals fill a larger part of our lives than realities do. They are nearer companions to us, more a vital part of us. Like the stars at night they hold converse with our souls, fill our firmament with brightness, and make us forget the gloom and the dusky shapes of earth.

Reality is bound as slave to environment and a horde of other circumstances. But our ideals are as free as sunlight, and we may have them what we will —whips to make our slavery the more servile, or wings to lift us above conceptions that are mean and sordid.

A princess once upon a time caused it to be known throughout her realm that she would share her heart and throne with the lover who should conform to her man ideal, regardless of his station. Many offered themselves and pleaded their claims. One would join a kingdom unto hers. Another, a mighty soldier, would extend her dominions by successful war. Another had enormous wealth to offer her. Yet another stood proudly before her and bade her gaze upon his matchless beauty. Still others came, some pleading wisdom, some fame, some goodness, some cheerfulness, some fidelity.

But, one by one, she dismissed them all, until the last and most timid in the line kneeled before her, his hand at his heart and his soul in his eyes. "I have naught to offer you but my true love," he said.

"True love?" she whispered. "True love? Why, that is all I wish."

Inquiry into Censorship

IT is manifestly the duty of Congress to inquire rigidly into the manner in which George Creel exercised his art upon official dispatches received by the Secretary of the Navy, and what basis there was for the "appropriate announcement on the eve of the Fourth of July" of a "brilliant" naval battle which has since been proved and confessed to be mostly fabrication.

And while Congress is investigating attempted news dictatorship it would do well also to inquire into the arbitrary exclusion of numerous newspapers from the mails, which amounts to their suppression.

Such attempts at news dictatorship in this country are certainly foredoomed to failure. Such dictatorship is violative alike of the American Constitution and of the American spirit.

The First Amendment to the Constitution reads thus: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

This is clear. Never was there any question as to its exact meaning. To this clause, more perhaps than to any other in our Constitution, we owe our glorious development as a free and enlightened people. This clause is especially dear to religious people, not only because it has protected them in their religion, but because it has also protected them in their sources of general information, insuring justice and progress.

This constitutional guarantee has held sacred until now. Washington impressed its particular importance upon us. Lincoln, in four years of desperate war, asked for no press censorship, though he was bitterly attacked. With him, ever, the true American purpose was to sustain and enforce the Constitution, and never to violate or impair it.

The newspapers of the United States have a proud and unstained record of patriotic and honest service to the public. They do not need to be taught patriotism or held in restraint. They can subsist only on popular approval. They speak to and for the whole people, and in the main they speak truthfully, fearlessly and wisely. To the liberty of the press is inseparably bound the highest liberty of the people.

China's Ordeal

CHINA has shaken off the monarchists who only lately seemed to have gotten a strangle hold on the new and unorganized republic. The restorationist episode was short-lived, not because the Chinese as a whole favored the republic, but because the intelligent and educated classes saw in the bold stroke of Chang Hsun, the leader of the imperialists, an attempt to grasp a dictatorship rather than a sincere desire to restore the young Manchu ruler to the throne. Now, with the republicans again in control and more capable administrators at the helm, the prospects seem likely to prove favorable for bringing order out of the confusion.

It has been asserted by careful observers that the masses in China are incapable of comprehending any other form of government than imperialism, and that the long centuries of ready obedience to the rule of a sovereign could not be quickly forgotten. But the hope of China lies in the fact that the seeds of democracy have been planted in her educated young men, and, once planted, they will take deep and abiding root. The nation, with its vast illiterate population, is just entering on its novitiate in republicanism. Before the 400,000,000 of Chinese can be transformed into a homogeneous democracy, there must necessarily be a long period of enlightenment and development. This is the great task which lies before the educated Chinese. It would be a marvel, indeed, if it were accomplished without occasional perils. But these may be overcome if the leaders of the republican movement prove to be men of real ability, who are able to educate and to win and hold the confidence of the people.

Arrests of Suffragettes

IT is difficult to see just how the world is being "made safe for democracy" in the arrests of the suffragettes at Washington. So far as has been discovered, these ladies have been guilty of no greater offense than that of peaceably presenting their cause.

The plea that "the President should not be annoyed by obstruction of his sidewalk" is not justly applicable against the suffrage ladies alone, so long as Washington is notoriously thronged with politicians and lobbyists, obstructing not only the sidewalks but the public offices, entirely unhindered by the police.

Even those who do not favor woman suffrage and who made merry over the advent of the first suffragette in Congress must, nevertheless, now take off their hats to her as the first member of Congress to secure common justice to the women employees of the Government departments.

But even those who see no good in woman suffrage must still see the right of its peaceful advocacy.

The Joy of Early Rising

"THERE is no new thing under the sun," says the wise preacher in Ecclesiastes, and this ancient utterance is receiving constant confirmation. We have been pluming ourselves on the notion that daylight-saving is a modern evolvement. Now comes the observant Boston Herald and, in a single paragraph from the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin, shows us that that shrewd old economist was the original daylight saver. "In walking through The Strand and Fleet Street one morning, looking at different homes," wrote Franklin, "I observed that there was not one open, though it had been daylight and the sun up above three hours; the inhabitants of London choosing voluntarily to live much by candle-light, and sleep by sunlight, and yet often complain a little absurdly of the duty on candles and the high price of tallow." But daylight saving goes way beyond Franklin. All the patriarchs, and later the patriots, were early risers. When they had special business on hand they arose betimes at dawn. And it is quite beyond question that a very considerable proportion of the world's population has been practicing "early to bed and early to rise" for countless generations. Happy he or she who rises when the earth is just awakening to the new-born day! In those hours that follow the sunrise the air is a tonic for the blood, an inspiration for the brain. Poets have sung of the "beauties of the morning," when nature's concert begins and all the loveliness of field and garden and woodland is displayed at its best. Little wonder that the old maxim-makers so confidently assured us that health, wealth and wisdom fall to the happy lot of the early riser.

Home Economics

IN the old days, everybody knew the motto of Chicago: "I will." It expressed the indomitable courage, the confident assurance of the West. Now the women of America have adopted a motto which threatens to become universal—"I can!"

The great canning furor which is now sweeping over the country has many forms of expression, some idiomatic, others naïvely jocular, but all expressing the thought that the daughters of Columbia will be equal to the task set them by the Government of putting up a sufficiency of household provender for the coming fall and winter months, so that short rations may be unknown in the homes of America. Home canning and preserving clubs are springing up everywhere. Hundreds of demonstrators are going the rounds of the canning clubs, greatly adding to their efficiency. It is estimated that there are from 300,000 to 400,000 boys and girls absorbed in this new home industry, which is to be a national bulwark against hunger six months hence. Every little, cultivable patch of ground is being made to yield its vegetable tribute; old orchards and neglected berry patches have been cleaned up and energized to give a bigger and better product.

Every girl and woman who can can should can, and if she can't can, she can easily learn. Everybody should have a personal interest in preserving, if only for the sake of illustrating what can actually be accomplished. There is work ahead for the family wash-boiler and steam cooker. The Food Commission, in Washington, D. C., will supply all information desired regarding methods for those who may be inexpert.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Business Woman and Marriage

IN a sermon in the Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, the Rev. Dr. Waldo Amos of Hoboken predicted that by 1940 half the women of the country would be self-supporting, and that marriages will be gradually decreasing in number. Dr. Amos said: "It is a startling fact that young women are not marrying today. Hundreds of thousands are going into business. The supreme mission of women in life should be to become mothers and to make homes. The objection that many have to being married is that they become dependents. Statistics show that in 1900 one out of every five women was self-supporting. By 1925, one out of every three, and by 1940, one out of every two, will be self-supporting." If facts justify the opinions of the minister, we are at a critical period in our industrial and domestic life, which requires serious attention and reform. There are many open doors into the various departments of business life for the worthy women who support themselves, a father or mother, children, or brothers and sisters; but those occupations should be avenues with gates at the other end leading into matrimony. There are some who do not care to marry, and some who do not have an opportunity that suits them; but the average woman looks forward to the time when she shall have a husband and a home. A sanctified Christian motherhood is the exalted mission and sublime destiny to which God has called woman for the preservation and culture of the race, and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth. The ideal home life is thus described: "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house; thy children like olive plants round about thy table." (Ps. 128 : 3.)

East St. Louis Race Riot

ONE of the most savage mobs that ever disgraced this country was the one that raged in East St. Louis Sunday night, July 1, and the day following. Mobs of white men, insane with thirst for blood, hunted down and killed defenseless negroes. The mobs set fire to 310 negro homes, and then shot down as many as they could get, as the latter were trying to make their escape from the burning buildings. Thirty-seven negroes and four white men perished in the riot. One of the mob saw a negro crouched in hiding and told him that he would take him to an alley where a soldier would protect him. The negro went with him, thanking him for his kindness. When they got into the alley the white man shot him to death and then came out and told with pride what a sharp trick he had played. Some of the women joined in the carnival of murder. Two young girls dragged an old colored woman from a seat in a car, and one of them took off her shoe and beat the poor old creature till their fine clothes were stained with blood; then they asked the men to kill her, but they did not. A boy of sixteen had a butcher's cleaver under his coat and tried to get an opportunity to cut up some of the fugitives. As disgraceful as the festival of murder was the inefficiency of the municipal and state authority. A reporter for a New York newspaper says he saw a policeman laugh when the mob killed a negro under his very eyes. It was no sudden trouble that burst on the city. It had been brewing for a long time. A few weeks ago there was a riot in which three or four of both races were killed, and the city and state authorities should have been ready for what followed. They were not, and the policemen and national guardsmen were as powerless as babes in the presence of the mad murderers. It must be remembered that this carnival of murder was not south of Mason and Dixon's line, but north of it, and that not only the city of East St. Louis and the state of Illinois, but the whole United States, must suffer the disgrace. The Federal government has instituted an investigation of why the National Guard did not stop the riot, and the grand jury is trying to place the responsibility on those who led the mob. The severest punishment should be visited on every one who had anything to do with the disgraceful trouble, which is said to have started because of the migration of negroes from the South to places of employment. A firm hand at the start on the part of a mayor, governor, or general is the thing necessary to prevent such a national calamity and disgrace. The law, human and divine, says: "Thou shalt not kill." (Ex. 20 : 13.)

Lassoes People in Flood

LEWIS WORTHERN, known in the region where the states of North and South Dakota and Montana join as being one of the most experienced ropers of the range by his ability to throw a lariat, saved a father and daughter from drowning in the Yellowstone River the other day. Andrew Holthouse, a homesteader, with his daughter, had started for the town of Laurel in a farm wagon, and while attempting to cross the Yellowstone River, badly swollen by the melting of the heavy snow of the winter, were engulfed in the flood. The horses escaped to the shore, but the father and daughter were carried down stream in the wagon-box until the box was caught by a wire fence. The father and daughter were compelled to stand to keep their heads above water. Worthern, who was employed near by, heard their cries for help and ran to their rescue. With a dexterity acquired by long practice as a range rider, he hurled his lariat to the girl and dragged her to land. Then he rescued Holthouse in the same manner. Most of the great rivers of the world have their source in the melted snow of the mountains. The streams of time are swollen, and travelers are constantly caught in the peril. The escape of the man and his daughter calls to mind this prayer of the Psalmist: "Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up." (Ps. 69 : 15.)

Alligator Farm

THERE is an alligator farm at Venice in Southern California which attracts many pleasure-seekers in that neighborhood. There is special interest at feeding time, which occurs about three times a week. One big fellow gets away with fifty pounds of meat at one meal, and then does not care for any more for a week. There are trained performers among these reptiles. Children are permitted to ride some of the tamest, but care is taken to tie their mouths tight. Some of the more venturesome ride the unmuzzled ones, but they run the risk of winding up the ride minus a toe or foot. Louisiana Joe and Buffalo Bill had a pitched battle recently, in which Bill got his jaw broken, and Joe lost a foot off the length of his tail. The crocodile, a near relative of the alligator, was a well-known and generally feared reptile in olden times. It was not an uncommon thing for it to feed on children or even grown people. There are pictures from antiquity of crocodiles tamed with men on their backs. Among some nations crocodiles and alligators were counted sacred, and even in later days Hindu women have thrown their little girl babies to them as a sacrifice. It is generally understood that Job refers to this reptile in these words: "Canst thou put a hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn? Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?" (Job 41 : 2, 5.)

Billion Bushels' Increase

THE government agricultural reports give us the good news that the farmers of the country will raise a billion bushels' increase in foodstuffs this war year over the crop of last year. There is the promise in the July report that the total foodstuffs product will mount to over six billion bushels. The corn crop with favorable weather is estimated at 3,124,000,000. The combined winter and spring wheat crop will be 38,000,000 bushels more than last year, with a total of 678,000,000 bushels. The barley output will be an increase over last year and will reach 214,000,000 bushels. Oats promise to exceed last year's yield by 201,000,000 bushels, reaching 1,453,000,000. The white potato is expected to give a record crop, with 452,000,000 bushels. Rye will reach a new mark, with 56,000,000 bushels. The rice fields will yield 31,400,000 bushels, the second largest crop ever raised. It is to be hoped that the prospects will be fully realized when the harvests are all in. Thus the farmers have shown their loyalty, recognizing how much depends on them in the furnishing of food for our homes and troops, and in so swiftly and gloriously supporting the colors with the plow and the reaper. The twenty million farmers of the nation can be relied upon for any emergency. Farmers are not angels, but they are the best specimen of moral manhood we have. The healthful stream of country life in body, mind and soul has been a purifying force in our American civilization. If search is made for the origin of the most successful men in the city, the search will end in the simple, honest, industrious, virtuous, godly farmhouse. Christ thus uses the prospect of a bountiful harvest to teach an immensely important spiritual lesson: "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." (John 4 : 35.)

Bird's Long Distance Flight

A RANCHER living near Red Lodge, Mont., last summer shot a large bird of the hawk family. Picking it up, he found that the bullet had grazed and stunned it, and that it had no serious injury. Instead of killing it as he would have been justified in doing in the protection of the farmer's fowls, he put a paper bearing his name and address in a little bottle which he tied around the bird's neck. Two months after, Luis Felipe Rulda of Bogota, Colombia, South America, shot the bird, and finding the name and address in the bottle sent a letter to Red Lodge stating the facts. The bird had flown 3,000 miles with the bottle and message. The hawk carrying the message suggests this figurative language: "For a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter." (Eccles. 10 : 20.)

Daisies for Blue-Grass

A NEBRASKA farmer near Beatrice prepared fifteen acres to be sown in blue-grass. When the crop came up it was daisies, a farmer's bane, instead of blue-grass. By some mistake the seed house had sent the wrong article. It would be thought that an experienced farmer could tell the difference between the two kinds of seed, but whether that is so or not the fifteen acres of solid daisies visited as a curiosity and for bouquets was the substitute of beautiful blue-grass. The seed house made good the money damage, and the farmer took the mistake in good humor. In sowing the seeds of thoughts and deeds in the fields of life, it should be remembered that the law of reproduction in the natural world that same must come from same is a type of that in the spiritual world. There, as in the hayfields, blue-grass cannot come from daisies, nor daisies from blue-grass. The law is thus expressed: "For whatsoever a man sowthe, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 6 : 7.)

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XVIII—Continued

A Little Bunch of Diaries

AND the doctor waited. It was, indeed, as his sister said, all that he could do. From time to time he went up to Dalton and made his way up the old familiar walk to have a chat with the taciturn, somber-eyed man sitting alone in the great old library. The doctor never spoke of Helen. He dared not take the risk. Burke Denby's only interests plainly were business, books, and the rare curios he and his father had collected. A Mrs. Gowing, a distant cousin, had come to be his housekeeper, but the doctor saw little of her. She seemed to be a quiet, inoffensive little woman, plainly very much in the background.

There came an evening finally, however, when, much to the doctor's beatific surprise, Burke Denby, of his own accord, mentioned his wife.

It was nearly two years after John Denby's death. The doctor had run up to Dalton for an overnight visit, and had noticed at once a peculiar restlessness in his host's manner, an odd impatience of voice and gesture. Then abruptly, in answer to the doctor's own assertion that Burke needed something to get him away from his constant brooding in the old library,—

"Need something?" he exclaimed. "Of course I need something! I need my wife and child. I need to live a normal life like other men. I need— But what's the use?" he finished, with outflung hands.

"I know; but—you, yourself—" By a supreme effort the doctor was keeping himself from shouting aloud with joy.

"Oh, yes, I know it's all my own fault," cut in Burke crisply. "You can't tell me anything new on that score that I haven't told myself. Yes, and I know I haven't even been willing to have her name spoken," he went on recklessly, answering the amazement in the doctor's face. "For that matter, I don't know why I'm talking like this now—unless it's because I've always said to you more than I've said to any one else—except dad—about Helen. And now, after being such a cad, it seems almost—due to her that I should say—something. Besides, doesn't somebody say somewhere that confession is good for the soul?"

There was a quizzical smile on his lips, but there was no smile in his eyes.

The doctor nodded dumbly. Afraid of saying the wrong thing, he dared not open his lips. But, terrified at the long silence that followed, he finally ventured unsteadily:

"But why—this sudden change, Burke?"

"It's not so sudden as you think." Burke's eyes, gloomily fixed on the opposite wall, did not turn as he spoke. "It's been coming gradually for a long time. I can see that now. Still, the real eye-opener finally came from—mother."

"Your—mother!"

"Yes, her diary—or, rather, diaries. I found them a month ago among father's things. I can't tell you what was in them. I wouldn't, of course, if I could. They're too sacred. Perhaps you think even I should not have read them; perhaps I shouldn't. But I did, and I'm glad I did; and I believe she'd have wanted me to.

"Of course, at first, when I picked one of them up, I didn't know what it was. Then I saw my name, and I read page after page. I was a baby—her baby. Gleason, can you imagine what it would be to look deep down into the soul of a good woman and read there all her love, hopes, prayers, and ambitions for her boy—and then suddenly realize that you yourself were that boy?"

There was no answer; and Burke, evidently expecting none, went on with the rush of abandonment that told of words suddenly freed from long restraint.

"I took up then the first one—the diary she kept that first year of her marriage; and if I had felt small and mean and unworthy before— On and on I read; and as I read I began to see, dimly, what marriage means—for a woman. They were very poor then. Father was the grandson of the younger, runaway son, Joel, and had only his trade and his day wages. They lived in a shabby little cottage on Mill Street, long since destroyed. This house belonged to the other branch of the family, and was occupied by a rich old man and his daughter. Mother was gently reared, and was not used to work. Those first years of poverty and privation must have been wickedly hard for her. But the little diaries carried no complaints. They did carry weariness, often, and sometimes a pitiful terror lest she be not strong enough for what was before her, and so bring disappointment and grief to 'dear John.' But always, for 'dear John,' I could see there was to be nothing but encouragement and a steadfast holding forth of high aims and the assurance of ultimate success.

"Then, one by one, came the babies, with all the agony and fears and hopes they brought with them. Three came and slipped away into the great unknown before I came—to stay. About that time father's patents began to bring success, and soon the money was pouring in. They bought this house. It had been one of their dreams that they would buy it. The old man had died, and the daughter had married and moved away, and the house had been for sale for some time. So they bought it, and soon after I was born we came here to live. Then, when I was four years old, mother died.

"That is the story—the bald story. But that doesn't tell you anything of what those diaries were to me. In the light they shed I saw my own marriage—and I was ashamed. I never thought of marriage before from Helen's standpoint. I never thought what she had to suffer and endure, and adapt herself to. I know now. Of course, very soon after our marriage, I realized that she and I weren't suited to each other. But what of it? I had married her. I had effectually prevented her from finding happiness with any other man; yet it didn't seem to occur to me that I had thereby taken on myself the irrevocable duty of trying to make her happy. I have no doubt that my ways and aims and likes and dislikes annoyed her as much as hers did me. But it never occurred to me that my soft greens and browns and Beethoven harmonies got on her nerves just exactly as her pinks and purples and ragtime got on mine. I was never in the habit of looking at anybody's happiness but my own; and I wasn't happy. So I let fling, regardless."

BURKE paused, and drew a long sigh. The doctor, making a pretense of calmness, sedulously kept his face the other way. The doctor, in his fancy, had already peopled the old room with a joyous Helen and Dorothy Elizabeth; and he feared, should he turn, that his face would sing a veritable Hallelujah Chorus—to the consequent amazement of his host.

"Mother had trials of her own—lots of them," resumed Burke, after a moment's silence. "She even had some not unlike mine, I believe, for I think I could read between the lines that dad was more than a bit careless at times in manner and speech compared to the polished ways of the men of her family and social circle. But mother neither whined nor ran away. She just smiled and kept bravely straight ahead; and by and by they were under her feet, where they belonged—all those things that plagued. But I—I both whined and ran away—because I didn't like the way my wife ate her soup and spread her bread. They seem so small now—all those little ways I hated—small beside the big things that really counted. Do you know? I believe if more people would stop making the little things big and the big things little, there'd be a whole heap more happiness lying around in this old world! And Helen—poor Helen! She tried—I know she tried. Lots of times, when I was reading in the diaries what mother said about dad—how she mustn't let him get discouraged or downhearted; how she must tell him she just knew he was going to succeed,—lots of times then I'd think of Helen. Helen used to talk that way to me at the first! I wonder now if Helen kept a diary! And I can't help wondering if, supposing I had been a little less apt to notice the annoyances, and a little more inclined to see the good— Bah! There, there, old man, forgive me," he broke off, with a shrug. "I didn't mean to run on like this. I really didn't—for all the world like the heart-to-heart advice to the lovelorn in a daily news column!"

"I'm glad you did, Burke." The doctor's carefully controlled voice expressed cheery interest; that was all. "And now what do you propose to do?"

"Do? How? What do you mean?"

"Why, about—your wife, of course."

"Nothing. There's nothing I can do. And that's the pity of it. She will go on, of course, to the end of her life, thinking me a cad and a coward."

"But if you could be—er—brought together again," suggested the doctor in a voice so coldly impersonal it was almost indifferent.

"Oh, yes, of course—perhaps. But that's not likely. I don't know where she is, remember; and she's not likely to come back of her own accord, after all this time. Besides, if she did, who's to guarantee that a few old diaries have changed me from an unbearably selfish brute to a livably patient and pleasant person to have about the house? Not but what I'd jump at the chance to try, but— Well, we'll wait till I get it," he finished dryly, with a lightness that was plainly assumed.

"Well, anyway, Burke, you've never found any one else!" The Hallelujah Chorus did almost sing through the doctor's voice this time.

"No, I've been spared that, thank Heaven. There was one—a Mrs. Carrolton."

"Yes, I met her—at that reception, you know," said the doctor, answering the unspoken question.

"Oh, yes, I remember. Well, I did come near—but I pulled myself up in time. I knew, in my heart, she wasn't the kind of woman— Then, too, there was Helen. It was only that I was feeling particularly reckless that fall. Besides, I know now that I've cared for Helen—the real Helen—all the time. And there is a real Helen, I believe, underneath it all. As I look back at them—all those years—I know that during every single one of them I've been trying to get away from myself. If it hadn't been for dad—and that's the one joy I have: that I was able to be with dad. They weren't quite lost—those years, for they brought him joy."

"No, they've not been lost, Burke," said the doctor, with quiet emphasis.

Burke laughed a little grimly.

"Oh, I know what you mean, of course. I've been 'tried as by fire'—eh? Well, I dare say I have—and I've been found woefully wanting. But enough of this!" he broke off abruptly, springing to his feet. "You don't happen to know of a young woman who has the skill of experience, the wisdom of age, the adaptability of youth, and the patience of Job all in one, do you?" he demanded.

The doctor turned with startled eyes.

"Why, Burke, after all this, you don't mean——"

"No, it's not a wife I'm looking for," interposed Burke, with a whimsical shrug. "It's a—a stenographer or private secretary, only she must be much more than the ordinary kind. I want a catalogue of all this truck father and I have accumulated. She must know French and German—a little Greek and Hebrew wouldn't be amiss. And I want one that would be interested in this sort of thing—one who will realize she isn't handling—er—potatoes, say. My eyes are going back on me, too, and I shall want her to read to me; so I must like her voice. I don't want anything, you see," he smiled grimly.

"I should say not," laughed the doctor, rising. "But before you can give me any more necessary qualifications, I guess I'd better be going to bed."

"I don't wonder, after the harangue I've given you. But—you don't know of such a person, do you?"

"I don't."

"No, I suppose not—nor anybody else," finished Burke Denby, a profound gloom that had become habitual settling over his face.

"If I do I'll send her to you," nodded the doctor, half-way through the door. The doctor was in a hurry to get up to his room—he had a letter to write.

"Thanks," said Burke Denby, still dryly, as he waved his hand in good night.

"Stenographer, indeed!" sang the doctor under his breath, bounding up the stairs like a boy. "Wait till he sees what I am going to get him!" he finished, striding down the hall and into his own room.

BEFORE he slept the doctor wrote his letter to Helen. It was a long one, and a joyous one. It told everything that Burke had said, even to his plaintive plea for a private secretary.

There could be no doubt now, no further delay, declared the doctor. Helen would come home at once, of course. It only remained for them to decide on the mere details of just how and when. Meanwhile, when might they expect her in Boston? She would come, of course, to his sister's first; and he trusted it would be soon—very soon.

Addressing the letter to Mrs. Helen Darling, the doctor tucked it into his pocket to be mailed at the station in the morning. Then, for the few hours before rising time, he laid himself down to sleep. But he did not sleep. His brain was altogether too actively picturing the arrival of Helen Denby and her daughter at the old Denby Mansion, and the meeting between them and the master of the house. And to think that at last it was all coming out right!

CHAPTER XIX

The Stage is Set

IMPATIENT as was the doctor for an answer to his letter, it came before he expected, for a cablegram told of Helen's almost immediate departure for America.

"I thought that would fetch her," he crowed to his sister. "And she'll be here just next week Wednesday. That'll get her up to Dalton before Sunday."

"Perhaps," observed Mrs. Thayer cautiously.

"No 'perhaps' to it," declared the doctor, "if the boat gets here. You don't suppose she's going to delay any longer now, do you? Besides, isn't she starting for America about as soon as she can? Does that look as if she were losing much time?"

"No, it doesn't," she admitted laughingly.

The doctor and his sister were not surprised to see a very lovely and charming Helen with the distinction and mellow maturity that the dozen intervening years had brought. Her letters had shown them something of that. But they were not prepared for the changes those same years had wrought in Dorothy Elizabeth.

To Helen, their frank start of amazement and quick interchange of glances upon first sight of the girl were like water to a long-parched throat.

"You do think she's lovely?" she whispered to the frankly staring doctor as Mrs. Thayer welcomed the young girl.

"Lovely! She's the most beautiful thing I ever saw!" avowed the doctor, with a laughing shrug at his own extravagance.

"And she's just as sweet and dear as she is lovely," whispered back the adoring mother, as the girl turned to meet the doctor.

"You've your mother's eyes, my dear," said the doctor, very much as he had said it to the little Betty years before.

"Have I?" The girl smiled happily. "I'm so glad! I love mother's eyes."

IT was not until hours later, when Betty had gone to bed, that there was any opportunity to talk over plans. Then, before the fire in the library, Helen found herself alone with the doctor and his sister.

"You see, I came almost as soon as I could," she began at once. "I did stay one day—for a wedding."

"A wedding?"

"Yes, and some one you know, too—Mr. Donald Estey."

"Really?" cried Mrs. Thayer.

"Estey! After all this time?" The doctor's eyebrows went up.

"Yes. And I'm so glad—especially glad for—for he thought once, years ago, that he cared for some one else. And I like to know he's happy—now."

"Hm-m," murmured the doctor, with a shrewd smile and a sidelong glance at his sister. "So he's happy—now, eh?"

"Oh, very! And she's a beautiful girl."

"As beautiful as—Betty, say?" The doctor's voice was teasing.

A wonderful light came to Helen's face.

"You do think she's beautiful, don't you?" she cried, with a smile that told she needed no answer.

"And to think of all this coming to Burke Denby, without even a turn of his hand," envied the doctor. "Lucky dog! And to get you both! He doesn't deserve it!"

"But he isn't going to get us both!" Helen's eyes were twinkling, but her mouth showed suddenly firm lines.

The doctor wheeled sharply.

"What do you mean? Surely, now you aren't going to—to—" He stopped helplessly.

"He's going to get her—but not me."

"Oh, come, come, Helen, my dear!" protested two dismayed voices.

But Helen shook her head decidedly.

"Listen. I've got it all planned. You said he wanted a—a sort of private secretary or stenographer, didn't you?"

"Why, y-yes."

"Well, I'm going to send Betty."

"Betty!"

"Certainly. She can fill the position—you needn't worry about that. She's eighteen, you know, and she's really very self-reliant and capable. She doesn't understand shorthand, of course; but she can write his letters for him, just the same, and in three or four languages, if he wants her to. She can typewrite. And she loves to fuss over old books and curios. She and Gladys have spent days in those old London shops."

"A real Denby digger—eh?" smiled the doctor.

"But you don't mean you're going to give your daughter up," cried Mrs. Thayer, aghast, "and not go yourself!"

"You couldn't! Besides, as if Burke would stand for that!" cut in the doctor.

"But he isn't going to know she is his daughter," smiled Helen.

"Not know she is his daughter!" echoed two voices, in stupefaction.

"No—not yet. She'll be his private secretary. That is all. I'm relying on you to—er—apply for the situation for her." Helen's eyes were merry.

"Oh, nonsense! This is too absurd for words," spluttered the doctor.

"I don't think so."

"His own daughter writing his letters for him, and living with him day by day, and he not to know it? Bosh! Sounds like a plot from a shilling shocker!"

"Does it? Well, I ought not to mind that, ought I? you know 'twas a book in the first place that set me to making myself 'swell' and 'grand,' sir." In Helen's eyes was still twinkling mischief.

"Oh, but my dear," remonstrated Mrs. Thayer with genuine concern. "I do think this is impossible."

The expression on Helen Denby's face changed instantly. Her eyes grew very grave, but luminously tender. Her lips trembled a little.

On Fifth Avenue

I WALKED down Fifth Avenue the other day
(In the languid summertime everybody strolls down Fifth Avenue);
And I passed women, dainty in their filmy frocks,
And much bespatted men with canes.
And great green busses lumbered past me,
And impressive limousines, and brisk little electrics.

I WALKED down Fifth Avenue the other day,
And the sunshine smiled at me,
And something, deep in my heart, burst into song.
And then, all at once, I saw her—
A woman with painted lips and rouge-touched cheeks—
Standing in front of a jeweler's window.
She was looking at diamonds—,
A tray of great blue-white diamonds—
And I saw a flame leap out of her eyes to meet them
(Greedy eyes they were, and cold, like too-perfect jewels);
And I realized, for the first time,
That diamonds weren't always pretty.

AND then I saw the other one:
A thin little girl looking into a florist's shop
At a fragrant mass of violets, dew-purple and fresh.
She carried a huge box on her arm,
And a man, passing, said loudly,
"I guess somebody's hat'll be late today!"
And the thin little girl flushed and hurried on,
But not before I had seen the tenderness in her eyes—
The tenderness that real women show
When they look at vast rolling hills, or flowers, or very small pink babies.

I walked down Fifth Avenue the other day.
(All the world walks, leisurely, down Fifth Avenue
In the summertime!)

"People, dear people, if you'll listen just a minute, I think I can convince you," she begged. "I have it all planned out. Betty and I will go to Dalton and find a quiet little home somewhere. Oh, I shall keep well out of sight—never fear," she nodded, in reply to the quick doubt in the doctor's eyes. "Betty shall go every morning to her father's house, and—I'm not afraid of Betty. He will love her. He can't help it. And he will see how dear and sweet and good she is. Then, by and by, he shall know that she is his—his very own."

"But—but Betty herself! Can she act her part?" demanded the doctor.

"She won't be acting a part. She'll just be acting herself. She is not to know anything except that she is his secretary."

"Impossible!" ejaculated two voices.

"I don't think so. Anyway, it's worth trying; and if it works it'll mean—everything." The last word was so low it was scarcely above a whisper.

"But—yourself, my dear," pleaded Mrs. Thayer. "What part have you in this—play?"

THE rich red surged from neck to brow. The doctor and his sister could see that, though they could not see Helen Denby's face. There was a moment's silence; then, a little breathlessly, came the answer.

"I—I don't—know. I suppose that will be—the 'curtain,' won't it? And—I've never been sure of the ending—yet. But—" She hesitated; then suddenly she turned, her eyes shining and deeply tender. "Don't you see? It's the only way, after all. I can't very well go up to Dalton and ring his door-bell and say, 'Here, behold your wife and daughter. Won't you please take us in?'—can I? Though at first, when I heard of his father's death and thought of him so lonely there, I did want to do—just that. But I knew that wasn't best, even before your letter came telling me—what he said.

"But now—why, this is just what I've wanted from the first—to show Betty to him, some time, when he didn't dream who she was. I wanted to know that he wasn't—ashamed of her. And this (his wanting a secretary) gave me a better chance than I ever thought I could have. Why, people, dear people, don't you see?—with this I shan't mind now one bit all these long, long years of waiting. Won't you help me—please? I can't, of course, do it without your help."

The doctor threw up both his hands—his old gesture of despair.

"Help you? Of course we'll help you, just as we did before—to get the moon, if you ask for it. I feel like a comic opera and a movie farce all in one; but never mind. I'll do it. Now, what is it I am to do?"

Helen relaxed into such radiant joyousness and relief that she looked almost like the girl Burke Denby had married nineteen years before.

"You dear! I knew you would!" she breathed.

"Yes; but what is it?" he groaned in mock despair. "Speak out. I want to know the worst at once. What am I to do?"

"Please, you're to go up to Dalton and tell Mr. Burke Denby you think you've found a young woman who will make him an excellent secretary. Then, if he consents to try her, you're to find a little furnished apartment on a nice, quiet street, not too far from the Denby Mansion, of course, where we can live. Then I'd like a note of introduction for Betty to take to her father: she's the daughter of an old friend whom you've known for years—see?—and you are confident she will give satisfaction. That's all. Now, I'm sure—isn't all that quite—easy?"

"Oh, very easy,—very easy, indeed!" replied the doctor, with another groan. "You little witch! I declare I believe you'll carry this absurd, preposterous thing through to a triumphant finish, after all."

"Thank you. I knew you wouldn't fail me," smiled Helen, with tear-wet eyes.

"But, my dear, I don't think yet that everything is quite clear," demurred Mrs. Thayer. "How about Betty? Just what does Betty know of her father?"

A look very like fear crossed the bright face opposite. "She knows nothing, of course, of—of my leaving home and the cause of it. I've never told her anything of her father except to hold him up as a symbol of everything good and lovable. When she was a little girl, you know, I could always do anything with her by just telling her that daddy wanted it so."

"But where does she think he is? Now that she is older, she must have asked some questions," murmured Mrs. Thayer.

Helen shook her head. A faint smile came to her lips. "She hasn't; but I've been so afraid she would, and I've been dreading it always. Then one day Mrs. Reynolds told me something Betty said to her. Since then I've felt a little easier."

"Does Mrs. Reynolds know who you really are?" interposed the doctor.

"Yes, oh, yes. I told her long ago—even before she took me to London with her, in fact. I thought she ought to know."

"But what was it Betty said to her?" asked Mrs. Thayer.

"Oh, yes; I didn't tell you, did I? It was this. She asked Mrs. Reynolds one day: 'Did you ever know my father?' And of course Mrs. Reynolds said, 'No.' Then Betty said: 'He is dead, you know. Oh, mother never told me so, in words; but I understand that he is, of course. She just used to say that I mustn't ask for daddy. He couldn't be with us now. That was all. At first, when I was little, I thought he was away on a journey. Then, when I got older, I realized it was just mother's beautiful way of putting it. So now I like to think of him as being just away on a journey. And of course I never say anything to mother. But I do wish I could have known him. He must have been so fine and splendid!'"

"The dear child!" murmured Mrs. Thayer.

The doctor turned on his heel and walked over to the window abruptly.

There was a moment's silence; then softly, Helen said, as she rose to her feet: "So you see now I'm not worrying so much for fear she will question me; and I shall be so happy, by and by, when she finds that daddy has been, after all, only on a journey."

Edith Thayer, alone with her brother, after Helen Denby had gone upstairs, wiped her eyes.

It was the doctor who spoke first.

"If Burke Denby doesn't fall head over heels in love with that little woman and know he's got the dearest treasure on earth, I—I shall do it myself," he declared savagely. He, too, was wiping his eyes.

His sister laughed tremulously.

"Well, I am in love with her—and I'm not ashamed to own it," she declared. "How altogether dear and charming and winsome she is! And when you think—what these years have done for her!"

To be continued

◆

Ships of Concrete

A LARGE business concern in Chicago writes to the Christian Herald suggesting that there are important possibilities in reinforced concrete construction for increasing the nation's tonnage of shipping. Mention is made of a San Francisco firm of engineers which is designing a ship with a capacity of 4,500 tons, to be built of reinforced concrete. A schooner of concrete, built about 1898, was employed for years in the North Atlantic coasting trade; and the London Times recently told of a vessel of reinforced concrete built by a Frenchman in 1849 and still in service. A concrete barge has been in service for several years on the Welland Canal, and several barges of the same material have been in use on the Panama Canal. Norway has built vessels of 3,000 tons' displacement of concrete. The suggestion is made that if sea-going barges of this material were to be constructed for lake traffic, it would release for ocean-going service many ships now used on the lakes.

◆

Luck refuses to hobnob with a man who never perspires.

The world may call us a failure, but what does the Master say?

Manasseh's Sin and Repentance

International Sunday School Lesson for August 5. II Chron. 33 : 1-20

The Individual and Social Consequences of Wrongdoing

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

THE reign of King Manasseh was long and outwardly prosperous, but it became infamous in Jewish history because of the reaction against the pure teachings of the prophets and the idolatry that spread everywhere under the patronage of the ruler. The book of Chronicles inserts the story, not found in Kings or elsewhere, that Manasseh repented toward the close of his life and endeavored to undo the mischief he had wrought. Herein is found our study for today.

The Bad Son of a Good Father

What a shocking contrast there is between Hezekiah and his successor! The former one of the best-loved of all the great men of the Hebrews, likened in the 49th chapter of Ecclesiasticus to David himself, and the latter an apostate and shedder of innocent blood. While it is certain that many good men have had wicked sons, we cannot but search for the reasons which may suggest their warnings.

To begin with, in those days it was not considered the duty of a father to be greatly concerned with the bringing up of his children. Now, doubtless Hezekiah was a busy man, with all the enterprises and difficulties of the throne on his hands. However men regarded it then, nowadays Christian men of affairs cannot claim exemption from responsibility for the training of their sons. Possibly Hezekiah might have done the greatest service of his life by disregarding some pressing business of the court to set a new fashion of spending some time every day with his boys.

However that may be, the fact is we look in vain for any trace of influence from the godly Hezekiah in the life of his son. Perhaps we can see a certain short-sightedness in Hezekiah, an indifference to the future, as when, in response to Isaiah's prediction of disaster to come, the good king said, "It is well so long as there is peace in my days."

Bad Influences Surrounding a Youth

Poor Manasseh became king too soon, at the tender age of twelve. Others ruled for him and doubtless bent him to their ways. It is unfair for any system to thrust either power or labor on twelve-year-olds. There was always a powerful court party that prided itself on its breadth and tolerance of other religions, and aped the fashions of the surrounding heathen nations.

This seemed to be just the temptation that Manasseh could not resist. He had an eye for the elaborate formalities of idolatry and a corresponding lack of appreciation for the simple spiritual worship of an unseen Jehovah. He also had a love for mystery, that was played upon by all sorts of wizards, enchanters and astrologers. He wished to do the spectacular things, and went so far as to offer his own son as a sacrifice to Moloch!

Social and Political Influences

Hezekiah had conducted a Puritan revival and had disregarded the advice of those who would conciliate Assyria by adopting her practices. Manasseh, on the contrary, thought it wise to encourage a combination of Jehovah-worship with the rites conducted around the sacred pillars called Asherah and the images of Moloch and Chemosh. He allowed heathen altars to be set up in the very temple itself, probably on the ground that the latter was a national sanctuary open to all the forms of worship desired by the people.

Thousands followed the fashions in religion, as indeed many do today in our own land. The result was a general plunge into licentiousness.

Unheeded Warnings

But God did not leave Manasseh and his people unwarned. How he warned them we do not know. He has many ways of speaking; by the voice of conscience, by raising up godly reformers who dare to speak out, by making evident the disastrous consequences of an evil course. Many have thought that this time of sin and corrupt worship called forth the magnificent words of Micah, wherein are contrasted the simple and righteous requirements of the Lord and the elaborately ineffective methods of the Baal priests:

"Wherewith shall I come before the Lord,
And bow myself before the high God?
Shall I come before him with burnt offerings,
With calves of a year old?
Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams,
Or with ten thousands of rivers of oil?
Shall I give my first-born for my transgression,
The fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?"

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good;
And what doth the Lord require of thee,
But to do justly, and to love mercy,
And to walk humbly with thy God?"

The Ministry of Misfortune

Since warnings did not move Manasseh from his folly, but one means remained. We human beings are so constituted that misfortunes ofttimes bring us to ourselves and prove to be blessings in disguise. This is well stated in that remarkable Psalm, the 119th, under the Hebrew letter Teth, beginning at verse 65:

"Thou hast dealt well with thy servant,
O Jehovah, according to thy word . . .
Before I was afflicted I went astray;
But now I observe thy word . . .
It is good for me that I have been afflicted;
That I may learn thy statutes."

Even in the parable of the Prodigal Son we see this principle at work. No torment of conscience, no word of warning reached the young spendthrift's will, but when "he began to be in want" he bethought him of his father. God is so gracious that even when we are driven to him only by our needs he receives and restores us. Thus afterward we can ascribe to his providence the misfortunes that aroused us to duty and penitence.

We do not know the details of Manasseh's trouble, but the Chronicler states that he was carried to Babylon in chains. There he saw splendor and idolatry outshining his own, and realized the emptiness of it all. His own pride and self-will fell away, and he humbled himself greatly before the Lord.

Forgiveness to the Worst

The Chronicler evidently believed that God can and does forgive even those who have wrought the greatest mischief and led others astray. Though the Talmud never mentions Manasseh but with scorn and loathing, the Chronicler regards him as a man forgiven and restored. Granted a repentance, however tardy, the latter is the Gospel position. There is no one beyond the pale of the God of mercy and grace. This man had abused his exalted privileges for years, and undid all the good work of his father Hezekiah and the prophet Isaiah. Nevertheless, when he was converted, "turned around," and began to build what he had hitherto destroyed, and to tear down the foul system he had reared, God showed him favor and gave him blessing.

The Social Consequences of Sin

But Manasseh found it was quite another task to redeem his people from the consequences of his misdeeds. It was easier to foster superstition than to stamp it out. The forty years during which he encouraged idolatry were not to be atoned for in a few months. The bad influences of a lifetime could not be counteracted.

A man who has served false gods for so long in the sight of all who know him must not think that he can undo the damage by commanding them to serve Jehovah and him alone. The faulty education of years is not so readily eradicated. In fact, it seems from history that the late repentance and reformation of Manasseh were without much effect. During his lifetime the people made some outward conformity to his will. "Nevertheless the people sacrificed still in the high places, but only unto Jehovah," but they were insincere. Under his son Amon everything relapsed to heathenism. Amon himself sacrificed to the graven images that his father had made! The sins of the father had descended upon the son indeed!

Here then we have the strongest kind of argument for making the life of one piece, godly and clean, straight through. For we have social responsibility in this world of ours. We cannot expect to bear all the consequences of our folly, nor to repent at last and quickly undo the harm of our personal sins. Humanity is corporate—"no man liveth to himself, and no man dieth unto himself." What we are and how we conduct ourselves toward God is profoundly significant to our neighbors.

Sin's Scar Remains

God forgives, but consequences are only modified by long and patient effort. The converted gangster may never use his stiletto again, but his scars remain. There are similar scars upon his soul, though they heal at last, we may be sure. Wonderful are the experiences of some men who have been reclaimed from the dregs of life, but it is more blessed to have lived unspotted by the world.

Let us never despair of any man's conversion. Though he be a very Manasseh, having served idols for decades, the Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save. On the other hand, let us resist with all our strength the devil's doctrine that it is wise for a young man to sow his wild oats. Therefore we must do our duty by our boys and girls by stressing the consequences of sin to others as well as to themselves, that they may be like Christ, who said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself." We ought not to make the conversion of the wicked too light and easy a thing when teaching children, lest they underestimate the damage of going astray.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary, World's Sunday School Association

Items for Missionary Sunday

MISSIONARY facts are the best means to sustain missionary interest and to promote missionary giving. Such facts should be given at least monthly in every school. Every superintendent should possess and use in his school three little books by George H. Snell: "Five Missionary Minutes," "Missionary Programs and Incidents" and "The Missionary Manual" (50 cents each). Send to the Missionary Educational Movement, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, for catalogue of publications and missionary material, which will be invaluable in its list of missionary books, plans for missionary entertainments, missionary pictures, stereopticon lectures and slides, and exhibit of missionary material and costumes for rental or purchase. "New Era Programs" (5 cents) gives a set of ten- to fifteen-minute missionary programs for Sunday school use.

How They Do It in the Philippines

In the Province of Pampanga, north of Manila, Protestantism was introduced for the first time sixteen years ago. One of those converted in the city of Mexico in this province was a wealthy Filipino who owned a theater. After his conversion he gave the theater for a church. I was entertained in his beautiful home on my Sunday school visit, and I gave to a crowd of Filipino Christians an exhibition of a model Sunday school session. On the Sunday of my visit, a great Protestant anniversary celebration occurred. The bands, of which there are legion in the Philippines, started their music in the village at dawn. The members of the churches and Sunday schools lined up behind their banners for a parade through the dust-covered lanes of the town, flanked by bamboo fences and small houses thatched with nipa straw.

At the head of the procession were two notable floats. One of these consisted of a box, seven by four feet, painted in imitation of a Bible, and around it was a padlocked chain to indicate a closed Bible for the 400 years of Spanish occupancy of the islands. The second float held four young men. They were seated at each corner of the float writing in open books. They represented Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. As a background there was portrayed a rising sun, indicating the new day which had come to the Philippines with the open Bible. These floats told their own story as the dust-covered throng marched through the village, the bands playing Christian music and the doors and windows of the nipa shacks crowded with brown-faced humanity.

A Filipino Bible Class

It started with thirty members in the student church at Manila. They were ambitious to build up their class, so they took as their motto, "We brothers of 99." That meant that they were to build their class up to ninety-nine brothers. After four months' effort, 717 were present. This is the largest Bible class in the islands, and its success is due to the zeal and enthusiasm and great love of the teacher, Mr. C. E. Calkins. Best of all, a large number have become acknowledged Christians as the result of the prayer and individual effort of members of the class. Whoever captures these university Filipino students for Christ has the future of the Philippines.

A Novel Plan of Evangelism

In Pampanga Province a unique campaign has been carried out. It is called a "Bible revival." The twenty-six circuits in the province were organized and worked in three allotments. While working one set the pastors of the other two came over to unite with the ones working. Each set is worked eight days and eight nights. The campaign was started with a rousing revival meeting at night. Volunteers were enlisted to canvass the whole town in teams of two and two, the pastors also working. At each home where there was not a copy of the Scriptures a Gospel was donated and an invitation extended to join the Sunday school and attend church. After each visitation the workers came together to tell their experiences and to learn better how to open up conversation, how to carry their Scriptures, either under their coats or in open hands—all in regular old-fashioned book-agent style.

After the first set of circuits was gone over, the results showed 800 Gospels donated and 2,000 sold, 2,800 homes visited, with 250 added to the Sunday schools and 49 added to church membership. They are now finishing the second instalment of circuits, one pastor writing that as a result he has added seventy-five to the Sunday school and thirty-nine to the church.

Benny and His Pals

By

MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

THIS school, as one approaches it, looks quite like any other school. It is broad, wide-windowed, and fashioned of white stucco. But inside School 162 is quite different from any other school that I have ever seen. The decorations are more obviously cheerful than other school decorations; the teachers are more tenderly smiling than other teachers; and the children ——

The school is situated somewhere in Brooklyn. I don't know quite where—for Brooklyn, at best, is a difficult city to find one's way about in—but it is not far from the end of a twisty car line. The little pupils are gathered from an area of four square tenemented miles, and a great stage goes the rounds every day, stopping for them. For the pupils are little crippled, and feeble-minded, and tubercular, and deaf children.

I arrived at the school just as one of the stages was being unloaded. Little deformed children were being lifted out—wan boys and girls with pinched faces and eyes too big, too filled with pain, for any child's eyes. Some of the children had cruelly twisted backs and bent shoulders—others wore grim iron braces on their tiny thin legs. Some small feet dragged, some hands hung limply.

I WENT into a classroom. Miss Anderson, who is in charge of many of the grades, spoke to me. It was the last day of school, and she spoke quickly, with her eyes on the youngsters who were coming through the door.

"We always," said Miss Anderson, "love to have visitors. But on the last day of school you'll scarcely get an idea—" she broke off suddenly to nod a greeting to a boy who was being carried in by the stage-drivers. He was perhaps twelve years old, with a vividly live face and two strongly modeled hands. He wore a gingham shirt that hung down, like a peasant's smock, to where his knees should have been. For he hadn't any knees.

"That's Benny," Miss Anderson told me. "No," she answered my half-spoken question, "he hasn't any legs—to speak of. They withered—" She broke off again as a small child, a boy with a paralyzed foot, crept into the room. She called this little boy over to her.

The stage makes its regular round each day, bringing crippled children from isolation to the comradeship of the school

"This," she told me, her arm around the child, "is Baby Frank. He had the paralysis. He's getting worse all the time. Honey"—she was speaking directly to the child—"squeeze teacher's hand!"

I looked down at Baby Frank's hand—the hand that, instead of being young and chubby and dimpled, was bloodless and clawlike. And I saw that it did not stir—that it hung straight down—a limp, terrible thing, a motionless thing. And then I looked at Baby Frank's face, and I saw that he thought his hand was moving—that he thought he was squeezing the teacher's hand. I turned away.

"Oh!" I said to Miss Anderson, and I wasn't ashamed of the tremble in my voice, "I don't see how you can stand this—it's heartbreaking!"

"But," Miss Anderson answered brightly as she dismissed Baby Frank, "it's interesting. And they're really very happy, these babies—and the older ones, too. Fred," she called to a blond child in a front seat. There was a note of summons in her voice, and Fred—small and smiling—shuffled to the front of the room.

"Yes, ma'am?" he answered her.

Miss Anderson patted his very thin shoulder. "You'll be sorry that school is over, won't you, dear?" she asked him.

"Yes, ma'am!" answered Fred. And he meant it.

"Fred," Miss Anderson told me, "is seven. Baby Frank is five ——"

Across the room Benny was engaged in playing a game with two excited small girls and three equally excited small boys. My glance rested on him for a moment. Miss Anderson followed my gaze.

"It will be hard for Benny when he leaves school," she told me. "It's meant so much to him to see people. When he's home—well, he just has to stay in one place."

WE went, after a while, into the other rooms. We went smilingly—for in that school, somewhere in Brooklyn, folk make a habit and a grand game of smiling. We went into the other rooms with smiles on our faces. But it was one of the hardest tasks I have ever had. For one must smile, without the least trace of compassion or sympathy. The children, quicker even than well children to notice details and shades of expression, resent sympathy and compassion.

There were little deaf children in one room. They were learning to speak from lip-reading, but their eyes roamed helplessly across our faces when we spoke to them. It was only when their teacher spoke that the light came into their eyes. "Say," the teacher asked a very pretty little girl, "say 'I love mamma. I love papa!'" And in the dead, toneless voice of the deaf-mute that little child spoke—spoke proudly.

In the room where the feeble-minded children are taught, one meets the greatest tragedies. From the tall, over-grown boy "who has gone," the teacher tells, "as far as he ever will!" to the small flaxen-haired girl who sits in her chair winding a bit of cambric handkerchief around her fingers—from the girl who stares through you with never a quivering eyelash, to the small boy who trembles so that his teeth chatter when you look at him, one sees only horror. Even when one girl, at the request of the teacher, led the others in a song, it was rather terrible. For some of the children sang nervously, with twitching faces, and others sang stoically—just as they would have sung if the school were on fire or the roof were falling.

This year it is the plan of the Mont-Lawn Board to send some of these little unfortunates to the Christian Herald Children's Home. Not the terribly crippled ones—they cannot be taken far from the clinics—not the feeble-minded ones, for they cannot be associated with normal children; but the little ones, like Fred with a brace on his leg, and the sunny sort, like Baby Frank whose little feet drag. There are many of them who have never been out of the four-square-mile radius covered by the school stage, for a crippled child is seldom taken on the outings or excursions which the well child quite enjoys.

"I wish," I said to Miss Anderson, "that Benny might go ——"

"He could," she told me, "if there was some one to help him. If one of his brothers or a social worker could carry him about. . . . Perhaps we can manage it. And," she added after a pause, "even if he can't go, it will be just something that he won't miss, because he doesn't know what it is!"

Miss Anderson wasn't exactly comforting. Not missing the country because one does not know what the country is like is sadder than knowing it and missing it quite dreadfully.

BEFORE we left we met the superintendent of the school.

"We have," she told us, "all sorts of classes except blind classes. And soon we shall have them, too."

"How many crippled children have you here?" I questioned, looking at the little flock.

"Only a few hundred now," she told me, "but next Fall there will be many more. The little infantile paralysis victims of last year will then be old enough, some of them, to attend classes."

Several hundred children in the school! And for every one of them, somewhere in the great city, a hundred more children growing out of babyhood into a world of twisted backs and helpless hands and dragging feet! For every one in the school, a hundred more crippled ones are waiting at home to be old enough to go to the school, where kind hands and tender hearts will teach them to know and to make the best of a life that is filled with pain and suffering.

Every week during the season, the Christian Herald Children's Home is planning to send a group of these little ones to the country that they have never seen. Of course, they will not, like well children, be able to frolic on the green lawns, or paddle in the brook, or coast down the sliding-boards on the playground. But perhaps a little girl who has never seen growing flowers will be able to pick starry white daisies, and perhaps a little boy who has never known the blueness of country sky will be able to lie on his back and gaze up through the green branches at the sailing white clouds. Perhaps the sunlight and the bird-songs and the laughter of happy youngsters will, for a week or so, drive suffering into the background.

And perhaps a bit of the country, now, may give a little child the strength to fight in a losing battle. Perhaps, years afterward, a memory gained this summer may keep a bit of faith sweet in a tired heart. Perhaps the Mont-Lawn Children's Home will do more than medicine. For it will not only relieve pain—it will make little children forget pain!

And perhaps you, who are friends of all children, will feel happier as you watch normal little ones—strangers, perhaps, or your neighbor's children, or your own—at play, to know that you have put a bit of Heaven into the hearts of other children who have never had a chance.

Among the Evangelists

THE Palmer evangelistic party did a unique and successful work in the Methodist Church in Warren, Pa. More than sixty people have united with the church; there were more than two hundred reconsecrations; fifteen definitely renounced all forms of worldly amusement; 157 joined the Pocket Testament League; 130 identified themselves with the W. C. T. U., and 118 pledged themselves to some special line of Christian work. Other churches were helped by the strong messages given by Miss Sara C. Palmer, known as the Irish evangelist.

Chester Birch has been holding at Knox Church, St. Paul, Minn., a series of Chautauqua evangelistic meetings.

The United Society of Christian Endeavor decided recently not to hold the International Convention in New York this month, but instead will invite to Winona Lake, Indiana, a number of state officers for a special conference.

B. M. Brown, the leader of the Gospel League, recently held a meeting in Witt, Ill.

John W. Weldon and B. G. Grenfell recently held good meetings in Bardstown, Glasgow, and Burksville, Ky.

The Baptist Church of Cheboygan, Mich., is rejoicing over the results of the evangelistic services in which splendid assistance was given by Mr. A. E. Laraway.

The J. H. McCombe party held a successful meeting in Canton, N. Y., and is now in Toledo, Iowa.

Oscar Lowry and party have held three successful tabernacle meetings in Oklahoma this season, the last of these having been held in Sapulpa, where there were over twelve hundred conversions. Rev. Parley E. Zartman.

Do You Get

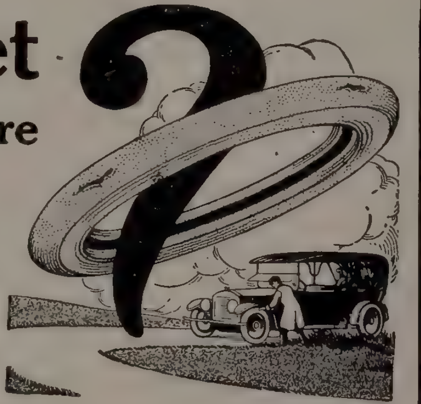
10,000 Miles per Tire

Every well-made tire should give at least 10,000 miles of wear, with proper care. And "proper care" means to keep tires well inflated and to "touch up" casings regularly with Tire-Doh.



© A.A.S Co., 1917

TIRE-DOH IZE Your Casings

By going over your casings every week or two and filling the little cuts, holes and sand blisters with Tire-Doh, you prevent the main cause of big tears and blowouts.

The Best Repair For An Inner Tube Tear

Tire-Doh offers many advantages
It makes difficult inner tube repairs that are impossible with other methods. No heat or tools needed. No danger of burning or over-curing the rubber.

Tire-Doh is not a tire filler
It is a proved success. Seven years on the market. Made by secret process. Becomes a permanent part of the rubber and stretches with it.

For Motorists, Motorcyclists and Housewives, Too!

TIRE-DOH
TIRE-DOH
TIRE-DOH
COMPLETE OUTFIT

Everybody can use it for any repair on rubber. Fixes boots, water bags, electrical insulation, etc.

Complete Outfits - 50c and $1.00

(Canadian prices, 65c and $1.25)

Everybody needs Tire-Doh. 10,000 dealers sell Tire-Doh. 750,000 "kneaded" it last year. If yours doesn't, send your order to us together with his name.

Manufactured and guaranteed by
ATLAS AUTO SUPPLY CO., 694 W. Austin Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Eat More Butter! Save 2/5 Cost! Easily made without machine. For explicit directions, end $1.00 to H. G. Torrence, Hilts, Calif.

An economical wife and an industrious husband make a good team to plow the furrows of life.

God's Call to the Christian — in Regard to the War —

What is the Christian's Duty in the World War? Why are wars dreaded and hated as they are? Is God the author of war? Is war a consequence of sin? Is war a divine punishment for sin? What about the Christian who has conscientious scruples concerning war? What shall we answer to Matt. 26:52 "they that take the sword shall perish with the sword?" These, a few of the many questions that have been stirring the minds of Christian people since the beginning of the war are clearly answered in a recent lecture entitled:—

What the Bible Teaches About War and the Christian's Attitude in the Present Crisis
By Dr. James M. Gray, Dean of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

In response to the many inquiries received by Dr. Gray regarding these questions, this lecture is an attempt to answer these numerous inquiries as to the Christian's relation to war, and the significance of the present war in the light of prophecy. Dr. Gray is known the world over as an authority on prophecy and thousands of people have anxiously waited for this lecture. It is published in full in the July issue of The Christian Workers Magazine, the leading independent religious monthly. Send 50 cents for four months subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine beginning with the July issue containing this great lecture and we will send you FREE booklet containing the remarkable lecture

THE BATTLE OF ARMAGEDDON
By Dr. James M. Gray

This lecture answers the question regarding the great war and its relation to the Battle of Armageddon mentioned in the Book of Revelation; also its relation to the end of the age or the second coming of Christ. Thousands of copies of this lecture have been sold and only a limited supply is left.

This Offer Will Not Appear Again
Write Today Use The Coupon

The above offer is good only for a short time, so act promptly and obtain a copy of the July issue and the booklet "The Battle of Armageddon" free. Both of Dr. Gray's lectures are very instructive. They set forth the facts regarding the relation of the world war to Bible prophecy in a clear and conclusive manner. Send 60c today. We will mail the booklet and enter your four months subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine beginning with July issue.

Dr. Gray is editor of The Christian Workers Magazine. His articles appear in every issue. Also other articles by Christian leaders. The yearly subscription price is $1.50. Subscribe for a year.

The Christian Workers Magazine
Room A. 152 Institute Pl., Chicago, Ill.

The Christian Workers Magazine
152 Institute Place
Room A
Chicago, Illinois

Enclosed find 50c. Enter my four months subscription to your magazine beginning with the July issue containing Dr. Gray's lecture "What the Bible Teaches About War." Also send me FREE booklet "The Battle of Armageddon."

Name..

City..

State..

(Yearly subscription price $1.50)

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 788

500,000 such men in this country from Great Britain alone.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. The American steamship Orleans, the first to be armed to sail for a French port in defiance of U-boats, was reported on July 6 to have been torpedoed and sunk, four of the crew being drowned. The American steamer Kansan was also torpedoed on July 11. . . . The United States Shipping Board on July 8 announced that it would request an additional appropriation of five hundred million dollars to enlarge its program by which it expects in eighteen months to turn out steel and wooden vessels representing about five million tons' dead weight. Of the seven hundred and fifty million dollars already appropriated, two hundred and fifty million has been used for the requisitioning of ships now on the stocks or at sea, and the other five hundred million has been entirely absorbed by contracts made or pending for steel and wooden ships. The Board has stated that the present appropriation of five hundred million dollars could not replace in eighteen months over four-fifths of the German destruction since February 1. . . . On July 11, President Wilson delegated to the United States Shipping Board all the power placed in his hands for the construction, purchase, charter and operation of ships. Simultaneously, General Goethals announced in a letter to Chairman Denman of the Board that he planned to begin immediately the construction of two ship-yards capable of building within two years, 400 ships aggregating 2,500,000 tons. He also stated that contracts had been let for 348 wooden ships with a tonnage capacity of 1,218,000 tons and for 77 steel ships, tonnage 1,860,000 tons. . . .It was announced on July 7 that the plan for drafting the new army had been all worked out and that the actual drawing of the names only awaited the receipt in Washington of the lists from local exemption boards showing the assignment of numbers to the men enrolled. . . . The explosion of a black powder magazine at the Mare Island Navy Yard in San Francisco Bay on July 9 killed six persons and injured thirty-one. . . . Secretary Baker on July 9, in a letter to the Counsel for the American Legal Defense League in New York, declared that American soldiers wearing the uniform of the United States who had taken it upon themselves to disturb public meetings and to interfere with the rights of assembly and free speech had no authority and no excuse for such behavior. The Secretary said: "Whatever the patriotic motives on which they may believe themselves to be acting, the fact is that they are breaking the law, but their wearing the American uniform makes such rowdyism all the more intolerable." . . . The House of Representatives on July 11 passed the Trading with the Enemy Bill, designed to prohibit all commercial intercourse between American citizens and Germany and her allies during the war. The Secretary of Commerce was authorized to license trade with the enemy or an ally of the enemy, "if he shall be of the opinion that such grant shall be compatible with the safety of the United States or with the successful prosecution of the war." . . . Republican troops entered Peking on July 11, their entry marking the complete failure of the monarchical coup d'état. General Chang withdrew into the Imperial City, from which his escape was shut off, later taking refuge in the Dutch legation. . . . Secretary Baker on July 11 ordered General Liggett of San Francisco to confer with General Lister of Washington, who had appealed for Federal troops to deal with the I. W. W. agitators who were threatening to destroy crops and blow up irrigation reservoirs. The whole Rocky Mountain and Western part of the nation is aroused by the threat of I. W. W. agitators to tear things wide open. The sheriff and a posse of 2,000 citizens of Bisbee, Arizona, on July 12, rounded up, disarmed and deported, 2,000 I. W. W's, shipping them in cattle cars to Columbus, N. M., Under orders from the President, the army took charge of the men, fed them and put them under guard until their rights could be established. An official inquiry was ordered. . . . The House of Representatives on July 14 passed without a dissenting vote an appropriation for $640,000,000 for Uncle Sam's new air fleet. . .

◆

Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE principal events of the war this week took place on the eastern battle-front. The Austro-German armies seemed unable to withstand the tremendous onslaught of the Russian forces, which gathered greater and greater impetus as they deepened the wedge thrust into the side of Galicia. The capture of Halicz was quickly followed by the capture of Kalusz, headquarters of the Teuton armies on this front. Both were taken after very bloody battles.

The occupation of Halicz by the Russians has naturally given rise to a very general impression that the Austro-German position in Lemberg is fatally threatened.

When Brusiloff made his successful advance on Lemberg in 1914, the break in the Austrian line took place at an obscure town not many miles from Halicz, and Halicz, falling immediately after as a result of this break, was associated with the event, which gave the town a prominence that did not belong to it.

TODAY the situation is totally different. The armies of the Central Powers are not standing behind the Gnila Lipa line, but behind the Zlota Lipa, which flows a dozen miles eastward to the Gnila Lipa, their extreme flank only resting upon the Gnila Lipa. This line is, so far, still intact. That portion of the Austrian army protecting the front of the first from the Dniester to the Carpathians has been defeated and driven westward, falling back to the Lomnica River. The possession of Halicz will not allow the Russians to cross the Dniester, so long as the Austrians hold the opposite bank. However, if the Austrians are not able to rally at the Lomnica River on which they have fallen back and to hold the Russians, then the latter will be in a position to advance up the valley of the Dniester, and this advance would bring them in the rear of the Austrian army north of the Dniester.

When this happens, the Austrian troops will be in grave danger. We are at one of the interesting crises of this offensive. Any break now south of the Dniester would inevitably mean the evacuation of Lemberg, and the forcing of the Lomnica River line is what will turn the tide. The Russians were reported on July 15 as fighting for the crossings of the river.

On Tuesday, July 10, the Germans initiated a new offensive on the western front, striking a heavy blow against the British lines north of Nieuport, on the Belgian coast. The attack broke through the British position on a front of nearly a mile, driving the defenders back on the Yser River. The extreme depth of the advance was 600 yards.

German reports claim 1,250 men captured in this offensive, which destroyed all the bridges over the Yser and leveled the defenses in the Dunes sector.

The sinking of fourteen British merchantmen of more than 1,600 tons is reported in the weekly summary of shipping losses issued on Wednesday. Three merchantmen of less than 1,600 tons and seven fishing vessels also were sunk. The increasing effectiveness of the measures against submarines which are being carried out by British and American warships is shown by this record. With one exception, the number of merchantmen sunk is the lowest of any week since the British inaugurated in March the system of giving out weekly reports. The report of March 11 showed seventeen merchantmen sunk, the same total as is shown in the last week's summary.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

FIVE times a day the Mohammedan hears and heeds the call to prayer. The first time of prayer commences at the Maghrib, or about sunset; the second at the Eshe, or nightfall; the third at Subh, or daybreak; the fourth at the Duhr, or about noon; the fifth at the Asr, or afternoon. Perhaps it would be well if Christianity were marked by a like regular call to attendance in heart upon the Father of all, to a waiting at the throne of grace, to a knocking at the door of mercy. It is true that upon certain midweek evenings and on stated times on Sundays sweet-toned bells ring out the call to prayer and worship. But we are a heedless people, and we go our several ways and forget that only God is good and that only through him and his truth can the world shake off the somber garments of its sin and misery. Every great evangelistic campaign begins with a call to prayer. Every great spiritual awakening is born in the place of secret communion and in the petitions of the "two or three" gathered together, in His Name.

A new member of the Prayer League writes as follows: "I am enclosing to you a call to prayer at the morning hour. Will you not kindly give it space in your paper and emphasize it as a great united cry from the agonized hearts of believers in Jesus who recognize the terrific power of sin in the hearts of humanity, and who would have God, through Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit, break this power of sin and save our boys and our nation from its power? 'Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud, and He shall hear my voice.' (Ps. 55 : 17.) Oh the wonderful promise! Will not all believers heed the call? Let us pray to be so filled with God's Holy Spirit that our activities in relief in these trying times may be a great result from an inward dominant desire to do the bidding of the Holy Spirit. May this not be the time when the midnight call has come—'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh'? Let us awake from our sleep, and by our united prayer arouse the other sleeping virgins, trim our lamps, and pray that the foolish fill theirs with oil before the Master comes. It seems that a midnight blackness is upon the world. Every heart is burdened by some unsaved loved one. Let them read I Sam. 12 : 23. Prayer is the great key that unlocks God's mysteries and promises."

As a thank-offering for divine help in a financial difficulty, Mrs. C. M. sends $3 to pay for an outing for one little child at Montlawn.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Minong, Wis.; Hondo, Texas; Croff, N. D.; Anadarko, Okla.; St. Augustine, Fla. (for the success of meetings); Sentinel, Okla. (for a revival at Combs Church); Beacon, Iowa (that many may be saved during revival); Waco, Texas (for world-wide prohibition and world-wide peace); Marshville, N. C. (that the whole world may be brought nearer Christ, and his kingdom may come upon the earth); Los Angeles, Calif.; Sedalia, Tenn.; Cottonwood Falls, Kan.; Sanger, Calif.; Cochran, Ga.; Chambersburg, Pa. (that the church at Grindstone Hill may receive an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit); Walnut, N. C. (that many may be saved during revival meetings beginning July 22); White Plains, N. Y. (that many may be saved during revival); Lando, S. C. (that many may be saved during revival meetings).

Mrs. M. E. M. asks prayer that daughter's mind may be restored and she may return to her husband and children; A Mother, that child's mind may be strengthened; Mrs. H. G., that husband's mind may be restored; A. E. B., that son's mind may be restored; G. A. B., that husband's mind may be restored; M. L., that a wife's mind may be restored; thirty-five friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

Mrs. C. W. R. asks prayer that husband's sight may be restored; G. W. L., that wife's sight may be restored; Mrs. E. M., that cataracts may be removed and sight restored; A Reader, that a child's sight may be restored; Mrs. H. W. Y., that mother's sight may be restored; Mrs. O. G., that husband's sight may be restored; twenty-six friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives or themselves.

Nineteen friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing for themselves, friends or relatives.

Seventy-nine friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Five parents ask prayer that sons may be cured of the liquor habit; three wives, that husbands may be cured of the habit; Mrs. A. L. H., that a young girl may be cured; four parents, that their sons may be cured; three friends, that their brothers may be cured; Mrs. L. W. D., that a loved one may be cured; Mrs. J. F. G., that a friend may be cured; N. A., that husband may be cured of the liquor habit; seven, that other friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

M. L. G. asks prayer to be cured of the morphine habit.

Fifty parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; including Mrs. S. L., that son may be saved and become reconciled to his wife; twenty-one wives, their husbands; one hundred and thirteen, other relatives or friends.

Twenty-one readers ask prayer for special blessing for others; including Mrs. E. L. K., that a minister may be blessed in his new field; Mrs. F. N., that husband may be saved from an incurable disease which threatens him; and A Mother, that son and ten other boys who have answered their country's call and joined the navy may be spiritually blessed.

Eighty-two friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs; including J. B. P., for rain all over Texas; Mrs. B. T. J., for rain over Alabama and Mississippi to prevent crop failure; twenty-one friends, for world-wide peace; J. E. P., for a good crop all over the nation.

One hundred and fifty ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives; including Mrs. H. W. Y., that husband may be fully restored to health and strength; Mrs. N. V. B., that husband may be healed without an operation; Old Subscriber, that wife may be healed without an operation; Mrs. T. H. W., that son may be cured of cancer; Mrs. D. E. S., that niece may pass safely through an operation; Mrs. J. S. R., that a friend may be cured of tumor without the use of knife; Mrs. E. L. K., that minister may be restored to health and strength; M. M. and F. C. D., that sister may be cured of cancer; G. C. P., that wife may be healed without an operation; E. W. H., that brother may pass safely through an operation; Mrs. F. N., that husband may be healed of an incurable disease; Mrs. W. R., that a minister's wife may be restored to health and strength; Mrs. H., that son may pass safely through an operation; one hundred and thirty-eight friends, for healing for themselves.

Sixty-two friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. S. F. S., Hopkinsville, Ky.; C. B. F., Fultonham, Ohio; Mrs. E. B., Duncannon, Pa.; Mrs. B. F. C., East Palatka, Fla.; An Anxious Mother, Cooperstown, Pa.; G. E. C., Spartanburg, S. C.; Mrs. E. W., Johnstown, Pa.; Mrs. F. E., Spencer, Wis.; Mrs. J. C. T., Sulphur Springs, Texas; A Reader, Trenton, N. J.; Mrs. L. M. M., Elgin, Minn.; Mrs. W. M., Rutledge, Tenn.; K. C., Chelmsford, Mass.; C. S., Ithaca, N. Y.; M. A. A., Pittsfield, N. H.; M. B. L., Evart, Mich.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; Miss M. H., Duluth, Minn.; A Loving Mother, Fort Worth, Texas; A. S., Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. K. V., Ravenna, N. Y.; J. M., Philadelphia, Pa.; A Subscriber, Jacksonville, Ill.; Miss J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; F. H., Wyoming, Ill.; Miss L. H., Complete, Miss.; Mrs. J. J. M., West Berkshire, Vt.; An Old Subscriber, Heyworth, Ill.; M. M. E., Urbana, Ohio; M. M. R., Brookville, Ohio; Mrs. N. S. H., Red House, Va.; A. S., Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. J. S., Maryville, Mo.; Mrs. E. L. K., Dilworth, Minn.; M. R. W., Coffey, Mo.; Mrs. I. H. H., Farmersville, Texas; Miss J. L. M., Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. O. G., Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. W. A. B., Mount Pleasant, Iowa; A Subscriber, Boonton, N. J.; G. A. R., Selkirk, N. Y.; Mrs. J. S., Norridgewock, Me.; H. P. H., Oris, Va.; Mrs. J. D. C., Waverly, Ohio; S. S., Martel, Ohio; Mrs. C. A. B., DeSoto, Wis.; M. M. and F. C. D., Normal, Ill.; H. L. R., Mill Valley, Calif.; "A Student," McAllister, Mont.; A. R. H., Harding, Mass.; Mrs. C. M., Wellsville, N. Y.; Mrs. C. F. H., Copperhill, Tenn.; P. L. P., Waterbury, Conn.; A. H., Galva, Ill.

◆

Called Higher

Mrs. Sarah M. Getchell, Wolfeboro, N. H. 84 years; Mrs. Elizabeth Egel, Bound Brook, N. J., 76 years; Mrs. Lucy A. Brown, Hastings, Mich., 84 years; Miss Bessie Drew, Highland Falls, N. Y.; Mrs. Abbie M. Fry, Colorado Springs, Colo., 76 years; Mrs. Mary Day, Galion, Ohio, 78 years; Mrs. A. E. Buck, Bay City, Mich.; Miss Lillian L. Dewar, Bronx, N. Y.

Why Some Teeth
Never Discolor—Never Decay
By Wm. M. Ruthrauff, A. B., A. M.
All Statements Approved by High Dental Authorities

Users of Pepsodent
Daily Digest the Film

Do you know that dentists, in the past three years, have taught countless people how to keep teeth really clean?

The method is Pepsodent, which, by dental advice, we now advertise to users. And to show its effects we offer all a One-Week trial free.

The cause of nearly all tooth troubles is a slimy film. You can feel it with your tongue. That film resists all ordinary brushing. It gets into crevices and stays.

That film is what discolors. It hardens and forms tartar. It holds food particles until they ferment and form acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth—the cause of all tooth decay. Germs breed in that film—millions of them. And one frequent result of germs and tartar is the dreaded pyorrhea. No cleaning method which leaves that film can ward off these tooth troubles.

That film is albuminous. Like all albumin, the way to dissolve it is to digest it. And pepsin is the digestant.

But pepsin must be activated. The usual method—by an acid—is harmful to the teeth. So it long seemed that digesting this film was impossible.

But a new discovery, covered by patents, activates the pepsin in a harmless way. So now this digestant can be daily applied to the film. And that is the basis of Pepsodent.

Teeth Rarely Cleaned
By Ordinary Brushing

Teeth brushed in old ways often discolor, as you know. Tartar forms on them—decay often starts. Every few weeks the best-brushed teeth require a dental cleaning.

The reason lies in that film. Brushing fails to remove it. Many a dentifrice even helps it to harden.

Three years of clinical tests have proved that Pepsodent solves this problem. (Those who rightly use it keep their teeth white and safe.)

Authorities who have proved this now urge us to make the facts known. So we state them here. And to show the results we offer you a One-Week trial tube.

Send this coupon for it. Note how clean the teeth feel after one day's use. Note how the teeth whiten as the film disappears.

One week will convince you that you can have clean, white, filmless teeth. And such teeth can't decay. Cease your old ways for a week and try Pepsodent. It will be a revelation. Cut out the coupon now.

Pepsodent REG. U.S. PAT OFF
The New-Day Dentifrice
Sold by Druggists in Large Tubes
THE PEPSODENT CO.
Dept. 58, 1104 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago

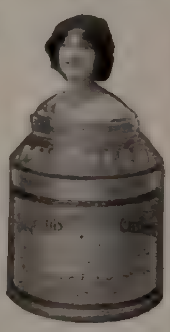
One-Week Tube Free
THE PEPSODENT CO.,
Dept. 58, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.
Mail One-Week Tube of Pepsodent to
Name . . . .
Address . . . .

Keep Youthful!

"A woman can be young but once, but she can be youthful always." It is the face that tells the tale of time. Faithful use of

Ingram's Milkweed Cream

will keep the skin fresh and youthful. Sarah Bernhardt began its use twenty years ago—today she is proclaimed "young at seventy-one"



50c and $1

Milkweed Cream is a time-proven preparation. More than a "face cream" of the ordinary sort. A skin-health cream. There is no substitute.

"Just to show the proper glow" use Ingram's Rouge. A safe preparation. Solid cake—no porcelain. Three shades—50c.

Send us 6c in stamps for our Guest Room Package containing Ingram's Face Powder and Rouge in novel purse packets, and Milkweed Cream, Zodenta Tooth Powder, and Perfume in Guest Room Sizes. (11)

Frederick F. Ingram Company
Windsor, Ont. 30 Tenth St., Detroit, Mich.

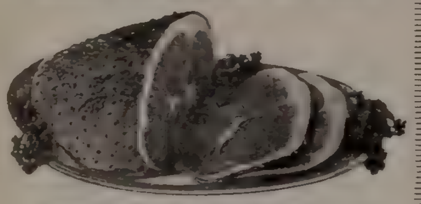
No. 1 of a Series of

Recipes by Famous Domestic Science Experts Who Use

"Wear-Ever"

Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Recipe by Jean Prescott Adams
Domestic Science Author and Advisor



Photographed as prepared personally in the "Wear-Ever" Roaster by Jean Prescott Adams

Tasty Spiced Baked Ham

Cover the ham with cold water and let it simmer long enough to loosen the skin (three or four hours). After removing the skin, place in a "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Roaster; add one teacup of vinegar, one cup of hot water in which one teaspoon of dry mustard has been dissolved. Bake slowly two hours. Cover the ham with coarse brown sugar, and stick cloves into the fat about an inch apart. Allow sugar to form thick crust. Bake one hour longer.

THE "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Roaster makes possible the preparation of an entire meal in oven or on top of stove, all at one time—a delicious roast, baked potatoes, macaroni, and even a dessert such as baked apples, rice pudding, etc. Thus, fuel and bother are saved, and you spend less time in the hot kitchen.

"Wear-Ever" utensils are dense, smooth and lastingly durable, because the metal is subjected to the enormous pressure of rolling mills and stamping machines. No joints or seams. Cannot rust, chip or scale. Pure and safe.

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

The Aluminum Cooking Utensil Co.
New Kensington, Pa., Dept. 34, or (if you live in Canada) Northern Aluminum Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.
Send, prepaid, 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" Stewpan. Inclosed is 30c in stamps—to be refunded if not satisfied. Offer good until August 20, 1917, only.

Name ....
Address ....

Young People's Topics for August 5

What Kind of a College Should I Attend?

Epworth League Topic. Texts: Matt. 22:37; Col. 2:8; I Cor. 15:33; 6:19-20; Col. 4:19

THE leader of this meeting should inform himself as to the nearest Methodist colleges. Nearly every conference has its college. All of them rank high among American educational institutions. There is a feeling in the church that Methodist young people should attend a Methodist school, for there is some doubt as to whether this is a premise which can be supported by evidence in every case. If a student is undecided on his life work and merely wishes to go to college for the increase of culture and mental equipment and for the advanced preparation in the art of living which a college course insures, he cannot do better than go to the most available of the church's schools. In addition to the education there afforded he will be able both to strengthen his own spiritual life and to be of great service in influencing other young persons toward definite Christian faith. If, on the other hand, the prospective student desires to take some scientific course, it would be better for him to go to a school which specializes on this subject, and these are usually state schools or universities not under the direction of any church. The religious life of these colleges is largely in the hands of the students, and the social life as well. It is possible for a student to make shipwreck of his spiritual ideals in his first term in such a college. On the other hand, there is no greater opportunity anywhere for spiritual growth and usefulness than the state schools, for religious activity is left to the consecration of the student. Some of the strongest men in the churches today have graduated from these schools. The prospective student therefore should first decide what he wishes to study, then pick out the college which he considers best suited to his aims. He should then go to college with the firm determination to make his life count among his fellows for service to Christ.

"How Men Cheat Themselves"

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topics. Texts: Prov. 14:12; Ps. 1:1-6 (Consecration Meeting)

IT is bad enough to cheat some one else, but it is worse to cheat yourself. When you cheat some one else you can salve your conscience with the assurance that it was the other fellow's business to look out for himself, but when you cheat yourself you are the other fellow, and you can't shift the blame. Ever since the days of the psalmist men have been trying to walk along the edges of the way of the ungodly and to convince themselves and the world that they were entirely upright. They have pointed to church members a little farther from the edge of the path than themselves and have said, "See how much better I am than they." They have said to themselves, "I know that this is wrong, but it makes money, and a man must look out for his family. When I have made my pile I will be a Christian." They have said, "I can drink and I can let it alone," and they have followed the lure of the glass until they mumbled out this vainglorious assertion between the hiccoughs of a maudlin drunk. They have told themselves that they were too smart to get caught, but a smarter man sooner or later has come along and laid the evidence before a grand jury. They have tried to find in the partial morality of some lodge or in the beautiful phrases of some philosophy satisfaction for the soul's hunger for God. And in all these things they have cheated themselves, for the end of all these ways "are the ways of death."

Our Cover Picture

THE women of Newfoundland long ago learned to care for and cure the catch of their fisher husbands, brothers and sweethearts. It was well they did, for since the war their skill is more than ever needed. The country's call for men has taken many of those husbands, brothers and sweethearts, and has left the fishing trade pretty much in the hands of the women. But the women of Newfoundland are a hardy race, as any race must be which follows the sea and wrests its living from the treasures of the deep; and they have taken over practically every branch of the industry which is their life. While the men are fighting in France or manning trawlers and mine-sweepers and submarine-chasers, the women are handling the nets, cleaning and drying the fish, packing it and keeping a steady stream of food flowing forward for the men at war. Nor do they help only the fighting men, for Newfoundland fish adds to the menu of many an English home; and these women on the barren shores of Newfoundland are doing their bit in the world war.

Our cover picture shows codfish being dried on spruce boughs.

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

E W Edwards	$3.00
C R Sharps	3.00
Friend, Ithaca, N Y	3.00
Friend, Huntington, Mass.	3.00
Thos Bicket	3.00
Altie & Mertie Rugh	3.00
Katherine McPhee	3.00
Friend, Sherwood, Ore.	3.00
Mrs John T Crosby	3.00
James Conrad	3.00
Mrs H M Herring	3.00
Mrs W R Weyant	3.00
Mrs M S G	3.00
Mrs E K D	3.00
Mrs Anna Harris	3.00
Jane S Conway	3.00
Mrs Mary J Morris	3.00
——, Bellefontaine, O.	3.00
Mrs J B Ratcliffe	3.00
C W Tunis	3.00
William Skelton	3.00
Mary E Langenstein	2.50
Mr & Mrs T N Reynolds	2.50
Friend, St. Paul, Minn	2.50
A C Barron	2.50
Mrs James Hansen	2.50
Ernest Peck	$2.50
W J Bassett	2.50
R C Donnell	2.50
Mrs A B Tigrett	2.50
Hubert Angell	2.50
Mrs F A Deveraux	2.50
Mrs E A Sexton	2.50
Mrs Nancy Talbot & daughter	2.50
F J Gillette	2.50
Mrs S A Baird	2.00
Mrs Arolyn Hopkins	2.00
——, Lacolle, Que., Can.	2.00
Mrs Caleb Wright	2.00
Nellie Swezey	2.00
Albert Ertz	2.00
Jane A Warner	2.00
Mrs Sarah J Rea	2.00
F B Fellingham	2.00
Reader, Charlotte, Mich.	2.00
Mrs Elmer R Child	2.00
Ellen Timkin	2.00
J P Bates	2.00
Mr & Mrs J W Rankin	2.00
E H Pinney	2.00
Mrs Kate Harvey	2.00
"Evergreen Intermediates"	2.00
Friend, New Haven, Conn.	2.00
Miss Edith W Wunderly	2.00
S E Blinn	2.00
Mr & Mrs E F Stottlemyer	$2.00
Miss Mae Peterson	2.00
M C & T A Claver	2.00
Mrs L C Rhods	2.00
Mrs Lizzie Nicholas	2.00
Miss Ella W Davis	2.00
Mrs C E Simms	2.00
Mrs Harrison & children	2.00
Mrs Ida P Smith	2.00
M O J, Concord, N H	2.00
Wm G Rushton	2.00
M J McClung	2.00
H J K	2.00
Miss A M E Booth	2.00
Mrs W W Linfoot	2.00
H E Nelin	2.00
Friend, Kingsville, Ohio	2.00
Ida Mae Fletcher	2.00
Mrs Arthur Mitchell	2.00
Besse A Henneberger	2.00
——, St. Paul, Minn.	2.00
Mrs E E Lumley	2.00
Mrs Clara Farquhar	2.00
Mrs G G Saltzman	2.00
Mary Williams	2.00
Mrs Lydia Steininger	$2.00
Mrs G G Frederick	2.00
Subscriber, Princeton, Ind.	2.00
Mary Achenbach	2.00
Oliver G Meyer	2.00
Sarah A Aikin	2.00
Mr William McLaren	2.00
Mary D Boice	2.00
Ellen Robison	2.00
Mrs Th Thomsen	2.00
Ira Clynick	2.00
Emanuel Rugh	2.00
Mrs Emma Hammond	2.00
K H	2.00
S J	2.00
C D Wolfe	2.00
Mrs Robert Youngquist	2.00
Mrs Nellie J Lamb	2.00
J H B	2.00
Harry Tieman	2.00
Mrs Harriet Tucker	2.00
Mrs C A Smith	2.00
Miss Payne	2.00
Mary E Carley	2.00
E L	2.00
Martha & L O Perry	2.00
T W Wisdom	2.00
Mrs H S Fouser	2.00
A E Eggleston	2.00
Margaret Phillips	2.00

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul R Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
MACARONI

TO SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN AND INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to CAPE TOWN, DURBAN, BOMBAY, COLOMBO, MADRAS, RANGOON AND CALCUTTA.
FOR SAILING DATE, RATE OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO NORTON LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City.
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE

Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient, and cheap.

DAISY FLY KILLER

Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Ask for

Daisy Fly Killer

Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express, prepaid, $1.00.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

Over 30,000 CHURCHES use THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

The Cleanly Sanitary Method.
Send for catalog and Special offer. Outfits on Trial.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 150 LIMA, OHIO

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1983 Ry. Exch., Chicago

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 85
THE C. S. BELL CO., Est. 1858, Hillsboro, Ohio

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D.C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 4 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Building, Washington, D. C.

WANTED

In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent The Christian Herald. This is

AN OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT

The Christian Herald BIBLE HOUSE New York

Ida Ziegler	$4.00
U B Church, Roanoke, La.	8.42
S S. Duvall, Wash	1.75
Ladies of W. Lafayette, Ind.	15.35
Mrs. Bertha M. O'Bannon	8.00
Oak Forest S S, Norwood, Mo	.62
Mrs A F Robenett	1.85
M F D	4.50
Mrs E Sitz	30.00
Women's Miss'y Circle, First Bapt Ch, Cohoes, N Y	6.60
Richard Glover	7.50
Lola Hunt	1.10
Hope Miller	6.00
Margaret I Miller	8.00
John Taylor	13.63
Wm Keyes	4.00
Friends, Menlo, Ga	12.51
Two Friends, Utica, N Y	6.00
Mrs Sarah Marshall	4.00
Schools & Citizens, Blue Mountain, Miss	12.15
The Baiko Jo Gakuin, Shimonoseki, Japan	18.00
Friends, Shimonoseki, Japan	12.00
——, LaClede, Ill	.30
John W Heritage	3.50
Friend, Concord, N C	3.67
L, J & P Powell	2.10
Three Churches, Edna, Kans	108.50
Otis Mission S S, Otis, Colo	6.00
Mrs G A Cowherd & Son	7.00
Mrs James T Sweetman	11.50
C. Heyse	7.50
Ladies Circle, Sioux Center, Ia	13.50
Mrs G H Robinson	1.25
High Ridge, U P Congregation, Bellaire, O	13.35
L E Coleman	1.45
Fair Bluff Bapt S S, N Car	5.79
Two Friends, Elsie, Ore	4.00
R R Miller	9.00
Friend of the needy, Westerly, R I	6.00
Women's Miss'y Soc, 2nd Ref Presby Ch, N Y City	65.00
Mrs Dell H. Tillotson	4.00
Paul E Wuthier	11.50
Chauncey Pollock	6.00
Geo Ravn	34.07
——, New Paltz, N Y	5.98
M E Ch So S S, Onancock, Va	46.57
Ad Christian S S, Haverhill, Mass	20.16
Ida Lundberg	.35
Mrs L W & Miss Skeels	4.00
U B & M E S Schools, Irving, Ore	2.30
Friend, Girard, Kans	1.10
Mary E Lyons	30.00
Geo Ravn	30.79
Cong'l Church, Woodbridge, Conn	38.00
Elmdale Miss'y Aid Soc, Bowlus, Minn	7.50
Trinity Luth S S, Hazelton, Pa	43.60
A W Hardy	8.00
Mr & Mrs L A Johnston	7.00
I G T	4.00
W G Dardignac	35.00
Citizens of Estherville, Iowa	71.50
S S Wabasso, Fla	5.32
Mrs F J Kickhoefer	6.00
W C Dickson	.10
Taymouth Presby Ch of Birch Run, Mich, & M E Ch of Burt, Mich	16.50
Kurtz Union S S, Glennie, Mich	2.45
Meth S S Class, No. 8, Leiters Ford, Ind	11.25
S S, St Vrain, N Mex	7.00
Indian Bapt Ch Auberry, Calif	11.80
Christian Ref Ch Sioux Center Iowa	17.40
Jr Dept Messiahs Luth Ch, Williamsport, Pa.	6.50
Friend, Crossett, Ark	4.00
Union S S, Cedar Rapids, Iowa	11.80
E K C	$1.25
B B	18.00
Mrs J M Johnson	4.00
Bible Class, Young Women, Presby Ch, Waukegan, Ill	3.75
Presby S S, Battle Creek, Iowa	14.00
"In Memoriam, China"	711.20
——, Talladega, Ala	.86
M E Ch, Starkweather, N D	17.00
Mrs J T McIntosh	4.75
Chas N Smithson	1.29
E B & L L P	2.25
Mrs M Moon	60.00
Alexander Redford	20.000
——, Petersburg, Texas	100.00
——, Fort Collins, Colo	50.00
Mr & Mrs John H Holliday	50.00
Mary A Forbes	25.00
S J Bunker	25.00
——, Santa Cruz, Calif	25.00
J J Noe	25.00
E Wendt	25.00
Ch Ref Ch, Carnes, Iowa	25.00
Mr Charles E Gross	25.00
"For Alice's Sake"	25.00
W B Holmes	20.00
B J Sweet & Family	20.00
Friend, Greenville, S Car	20.00
"Del Norter"	20.00
Mrs Emma Foster	20.00
Reader, Akron Colo	20.00
E B Bouman	20.00
——, Los Angeles, Calif	20.00
Jane Nehls	15.00
Mrs M H Acheson	15.00
"Beulah"	15.00
Mrs Lucy A Turnbull	15.00
Mrs J M Hiffle	10.00
Mollie J Aldrich	10.00
Reader, Seattle, Wash	10.00
E J Jaber	10.00
Nathan L Rockwell	10.00
Tennie Devertson	10.00
Meth Prot S S, Pharisburg, O	10.00
Frank Best	10.00
Ladies Aid, Bethel Presby Ch Glenwood, Wash	10.00
Friends, Kendrick, Okla	10.00
Mrs M O Scobee	10.00
Mrs. Mary A Mehrert	10.00
Mrs E M Mandell	10.00
W J Stewart	10.00
Mrs John A Herring	10.00
Friend, Joplin, Mont	10.00
Arthur E Sundberg	10.00
S M McHarg	10.00
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	10.00
Jer W Kleppinger	10.00
O J Billings	10.00
Ladies Aid Soc, Salisbury Dist, Mich	10.00
Mr & Mrs E Steeves	10.00
Sam Wiley	10.00
W Conklin	10.00
L M Yaggy	10.00
M E Becker	10.00
Miss Rose Allee	10.00
S S, Swedish Evang Cong Ch, Titusville, Pa	10.00
Ladies Benevolent Soc, Presby Ch, Middle Granville, N Y	10.00
C A Soderberg	10.00
Wm J Heermans	10.00
Sarah Gosnell	10.00
Mr & Mrs R P Davies	10.00
Mr & Mrs C W Stephens	10.00
Friend, Bowesmont, N Dak	10.00
W P A	10.00
G W Nohle	10.00
W C Hurd	10.00
In His Name, Brooklyn, N Y	10.00
Friend, Venango Co, Pa	10.00
Ruth Livermore	5.00
Mrs M A Black	5.00
Mrs J G Fordyce	5.00
"Inasmuch, Lisbon Falls, Me"	5.00
Mt View P Meeting, Alderson, W Va	5.00
J A Watkins	5.00
Walter E Jones	5.00
M E McHaman	$5.00
P J Stevens	5.00
John Sjogren	5.00
Friend, Capron, Ill	5.00
Friend, Hammonton, N J.	5.00
Dr R W Frey	5.00
J S, N H	5.00
Mrs J L Pease	5.00
F A Trask	5.00
Mrs F E Tucker	5.00
Mrs D G Lipton	5.00
W J McClay	5.00
L G Dolgner	5.00
Ellen G Gray	5.00
Harold Abrahamson	5.00
Mrs L H Watts	5.00
Mrs C L Robbins	5.00
John N Eneroth	5.00
Mrs J P Demaris	5.00
Thomas R Theophilus	5.00
Miss Mary Knott	5.00
I Cranston	5.00
Mrs E L Soule	5.00
Mr & Mrs A H Bergh	5.00
A J Hiatt	5.00
S L Rynears n.	5.00
M E Ch, Lindsey, Wis	5.00
H M Lauterman	5.00
Central Presby S S, Maysville, Ky	5.00
Mrs George Williamson	5.00
Mrs J B True	5.00
J D	5.00
Friend, Cold Spring Harbor, N Y	5.00
Mrs Lillie Jay Templeton	5.00
A F, Lock Haven, Pa	5.00
Mrs Albert Harris	5.00
Ruth Ford	5.00
H J K	5.00
Mrs C M Cooper	5.00
C C Wilmore	5.00
Peter King	5.00
Mr & Mrs J E Springer	5.00
——, Echo, Minn	5.00
C A Hagaman	5.00
Mrs Elizabeth S R Page	5.00
I L Reist	5.00
Rev H C Rosenberger	5.00
W F Oliver	5.00
Caroline Mohr	5.00
S S Strawman	5.00
Bapt S S, Cowlesville, N Y	5.00
Mrs R Porter	5.00
D E Metheny	5.00
John M Thomen	5.00
Clara Moore	5.00
Mr & Mrs G E Carlson	5.00
Mrs C Morrison	5.00
S L S	5.00
D W Wenker	5.00
Daniel Shoemaker	5.00
In the name of Robert C Oakes	5.00
Frank I Johnson	5.00
Casper K Conger	5.00
Mrs E B Fitzgerald	5.00
OlivetCl, Market St Bapt Ch, Amesbury, Mass	5.00
Neighborhood S S, Berlin, Md	5.00
F E Lehman	5.00
Mrs Grant D Perry	5.00
Mrs F C Martin	5.00
J G Touzeau	5.00
C B M Craig & Family	5.00
E E Snyder	5.00
Dr W J Chandler	5.00
Thomas Slaten	5.00
J O Burtt	5.00
L A Gray	5.00
J H Taylor	5.00
May & Eleanor Abbe	5.00
A & L B Clunn	5.00
Mrs F M Slagle	5.00
S V E	5.00
Melissa A Fidler	5.00
Ella Zook	5.00
D D Palma	5.00
Ida Downie	5.00
Amer Security & Investment Co, Duluth, Minn	5.00
Mrs Rebecca Haupt	5.00
W H Willow	5.00
M L E	5.00
Mrs Jens Johnson	5.00
Mrs H F Wettlaufer	5.00
Mrs H C Weaver	5.00
Mr H C Weaver	5.00
Mrs F H Camburn	5.00
Presby Ch, Salvisa, Ky	5.00
Clara J Reed	5.00
Mrs J J Brown	5.00
Thank Offering, Corinna, Me.	5.00
L B Greene	5.00
A M H, Harrisburg, Pa	$5.00
Friend, Utica, Ohio	5.00
Miss C M Johnson	5.00
Mrs J M Johnson	5.00
Mr & Mrs L H Patton	5.00
Mrs Shirley McCoy	5.00
Abbie Davidson	5.00
Mr & Mrs Edwin Norton	5.00
Mrs John Vorwald	5.00
Mrs James Motson	5.00
Miss Jennie Lind	5.00
Jos C Airey	5.00
W W Knecht	5.00
Harold Wimmer	5.00
H A Warner	5.00
Mrs. Kate Schweichhardt	5.00
Mr & Mrs T P Denike	5.00
Estella Owens	5.00
Edward B Williams	5.00
Mrs M D Carpenter	5.00
Mrs Mary Hunt	5.00
Mrs Mary Mills	5.00
W H Appel	5.00
"In His Name," Chappaqua, N Y	5.00
Mr & Mrs Y S Jenkins	3.00
Mr & Mrs W W Fairbanks	3.00
E H F	3.00
Mrs J A Stone	3.00
J S Ingram	3.00
O R Pang	3.00
Mrs H W Thompson	3.00
Carroll V Beeler	3.00
Friend, Machias, Me.	3.00
Elijah Myers	3.00
Friends, Danville, Va	3.00
Mrs W G	3.00
M W Apel	3.00
A E W	3.00
Mrs Lewis Kirk	3.00
A W Brownlie	3.00
Katherine McPhee	3.00
Mrs Julia Augustine	3.00
Mrs Geo W Sowers	3.00
Mrs Thos A Brown	3.00
Mrs J G Cork	3.00
Mrs W H Fray	3.00
Ralph Spoolman	3.00
Maude A Smith	3.00
Miss Sara A Gilbert	3.00
Mrs J A Brown	3.00
Mr Walter Kickhoefer	3.00
Mrs C W Wilson	3.00
Friends near Shell Rock, Iowa	3.00
Miss Mittie McElderry	3.00
Pearl M Drain	2.50
Miss Flora L Quivay	2.50
C Jensen	2.50
Miss E C Beach	2.50
J H McFarlane	2.50
Mr A J Elings	2.50
H H S B Class, M E S S, Napoli, N Y	2.50
W O	2.50
Billy Ocair	2.50
Mrs W C Cleveland	2.50
Mrs Ella W Elliott	2.50
Mrs F H Manning	2.50
Jonas N Cassel	2.50
Mrs Cleveland Regan	2.50
Alvin F Walvoord	2.50
Mrs E Thompson	2.00
——, Henrietta, Texas	2.00
Mrs Duncan McMaster	2.00
Will C Ritchey	2.00
Pauline & Edith Plummer	2.00
Mr & Mrs L B Robinett	2.00
E M Lappin	2.00
Mrs Susan H Marden	2.00
Mr & Mrs J B Smith	2.00
Mrs E A Merrill	2.00
Mrs E A Sexton	2.00
Mrs Elwood Hansen	2.00
Edwin C McCutchen	2.00
Miss Margarete Shipton	2.00
H A Barker	2.00
Parker E Heikes	2.00
Annie M Schwartz	2.00
Mrs C H Clark	2.00
F R C	2.00
Mrs C E H	2.00
Hattie M Millard	2.00
Mrs Laura B Gamet	2.00
David Hollinger	2.00
John W Price	2.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Iowa is taking up concrete roads. This stretch of concrete is on the road through Fredonia near Columbus Junction, Iowa. W. F. Beard, District Engineer, Iowa Highway Commission, Ames, Iowa.

Concrete Roads Make City and Country a Complete Unit

Farm produce could be hauled into town by wagon and by motor truck in sufficient volume to supply all of our large cities if there were enough permanent highways constructed. The delivery would be as quick, if not quicker than by rail; there would be less handling and no congestion at terminals.

The country is rapidly outgrowing its facilities for hauling. These should be immeasurably enlarged by the building of concrete highways extensive enough to connect whole communities within themselves and with outlying communities.

How to Get Concrete Roads

A connected system of such highways would prevent the costly congestion which occurs whenever strikes tie railroads up, freight embargoes detain their equipment, or war traffic overwhelms their facilities.

A quick and simple way is by means of a bond issue. In that way you raise enough money to build a connected system at once, instead of a few short stretches from year to year. The current road tax is then used to pay off annual installments of principal and interest.

CONCRETE ROADS: THEIR ADVANTAGES

No Mud—No Dust
No Ruts—No Holes
No Slipping
No Skidding
Easy Hauling
Smooth Riding
Long Life—Safety
Always Ready for Use
Low Maintenance
Moderate Cost

Permanent roads should be built of concrete to stand the wear and tear of heavy motor travel that is certain to be drawn to them from unimproved roads.

Be sure you know what a concrete road is. Concrete is made of portland cement, sand and pebbles or crushed stone. It is hard, rigid, unyielding and durable. Concrete for roads is the same as the material used in building concrete dams, factories, bridges and big engineering works like the Panama Canal requiring great solidity and strength.

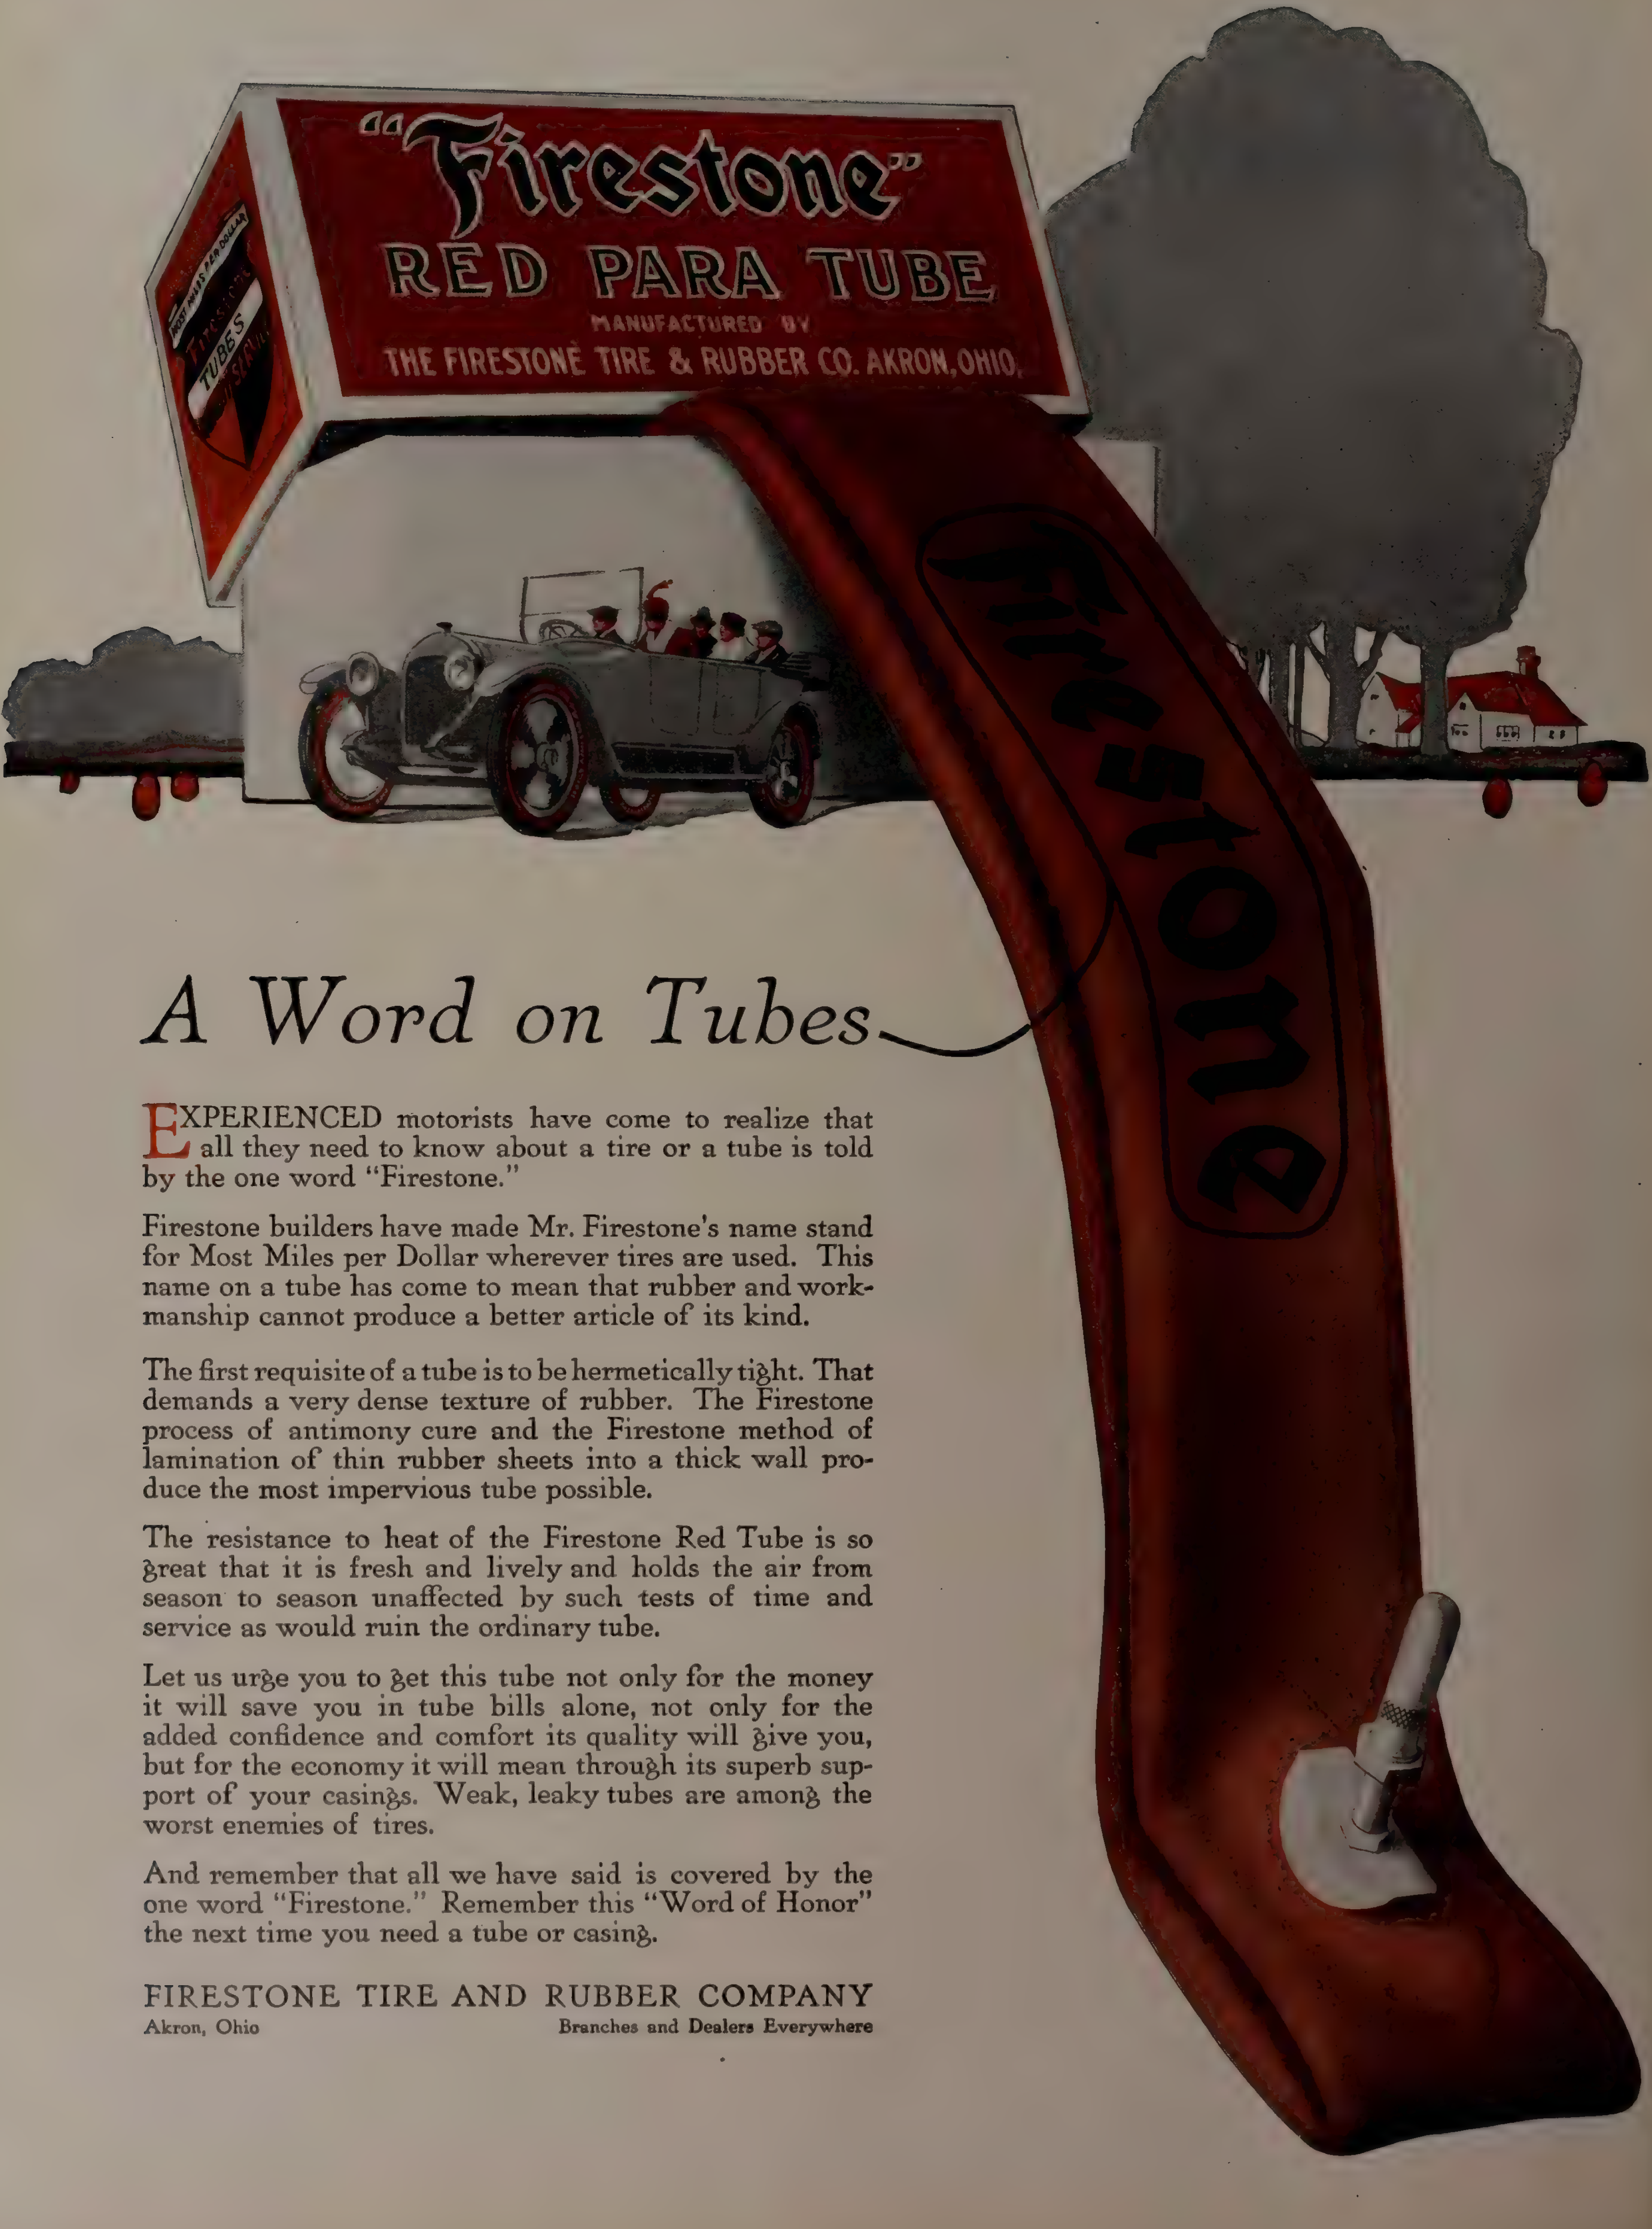
Our Bulletin No. 136 contains some interesting road facts Write for it, read it and pass it on to your neighbor. Let your road authorities know that you want concrete roads.

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION

Offices at

ATLANTA DALLAS KANSAS CITY PITTSBURGH SEATTLE
CHICAGO DENVER MILWAUKEE SALT LAKE CITY WASHINGTON, D. C.
INDIANAPOLIS NEW YORK SAN FRANCISCO

CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE



A Word on Tubes

EXPERIENCED motorists have come to realize that all they need to know about a tire or a tube is told by the one word "Firestone."

Firestone builders have made Mr. Firestone's name stand for Most Miles per Dollar wherever tires are used. This name on a tube has come to mean that rubber and workmanship cannot produce a better article of its kind.

The first requisite of a tube is to be hermetically tight. That demands a very dense texture of rubber. The Firestone process of antimony cure and the Firestone method of lamination of thin rubber sheets into a thick wall produce the most impervious tube possible.

The resistance to heat of the Firestone Red Tube is so great that it is fresh and lively and holds the air from season to season unaffected by such tests of time and service as would ruin the ordinary tube.

Let us urge you to get this tube not only for the money it will save you in tube bills alone, not only for the added confidence and comfort its quality will give you, but for the economy it will mean through its superb support of your casings. Weak, leaky tubes are among the worst enemies of tires.

And remember that all we have said is covered by the one word "Firestone." Remember this "Word of Honor" the next time you need a tube or casing.

FIRESTONE TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY
Akron, Ohio — Branches and Dealers Everywhere

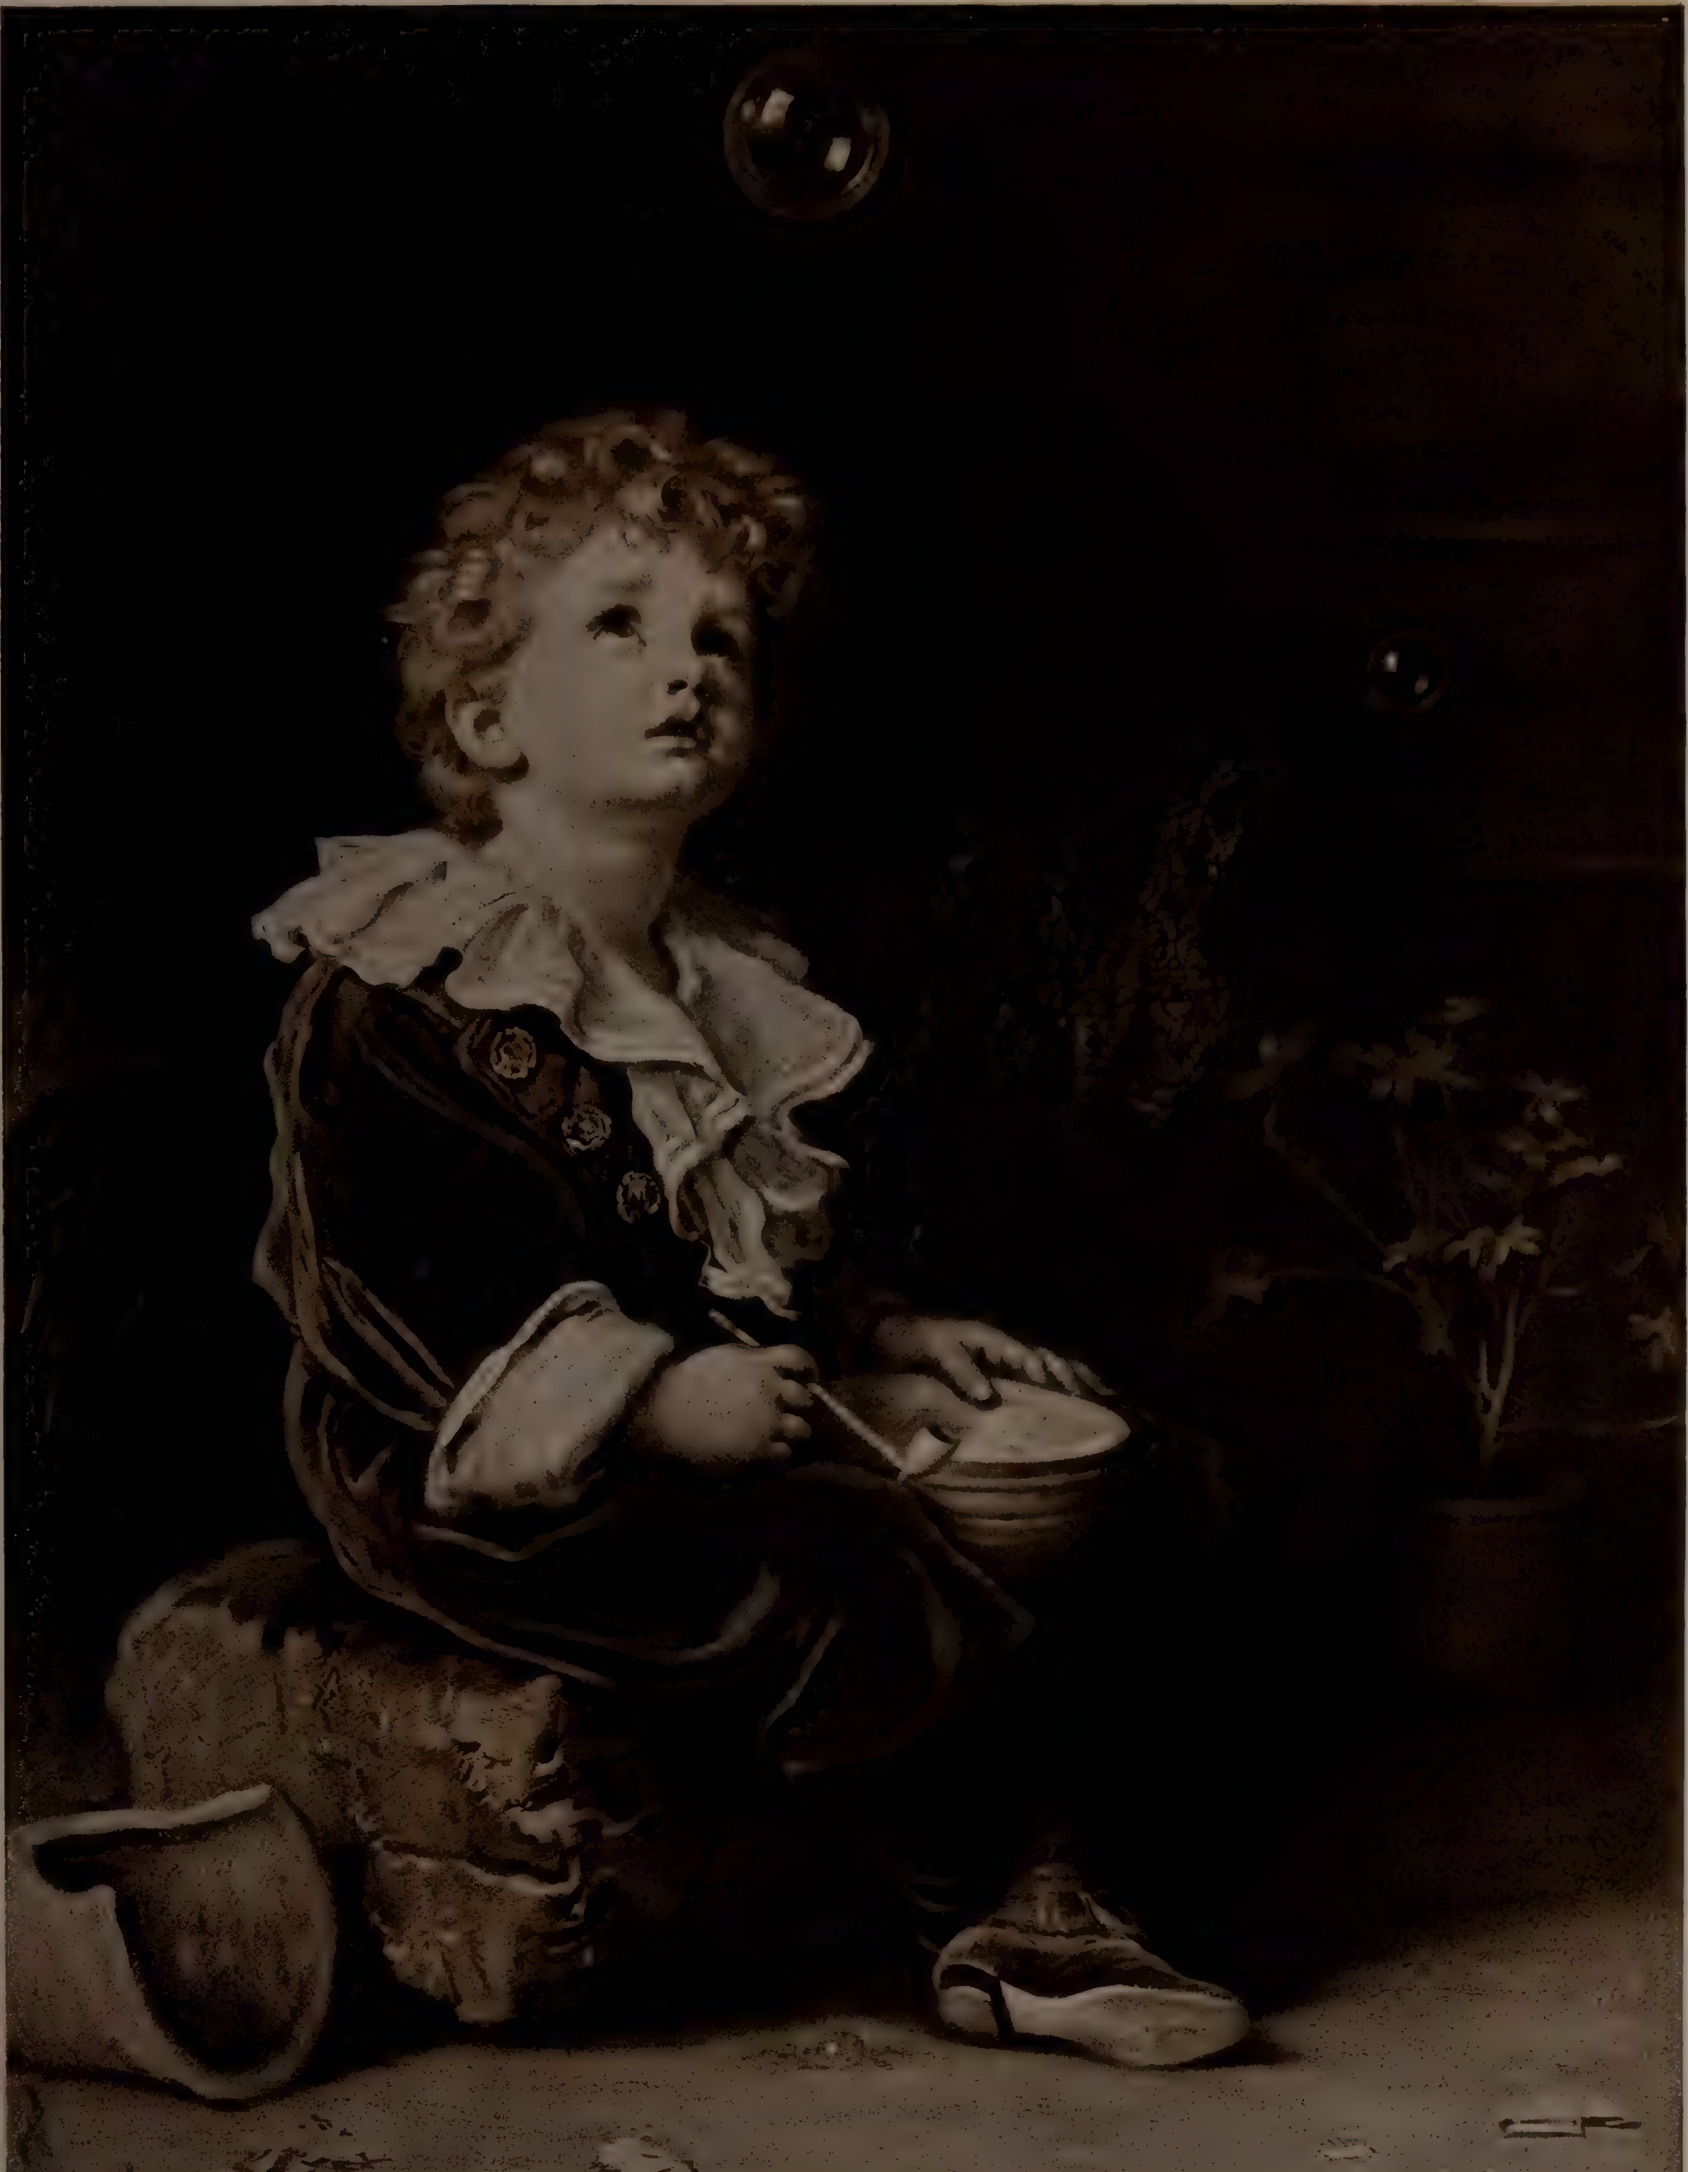
Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

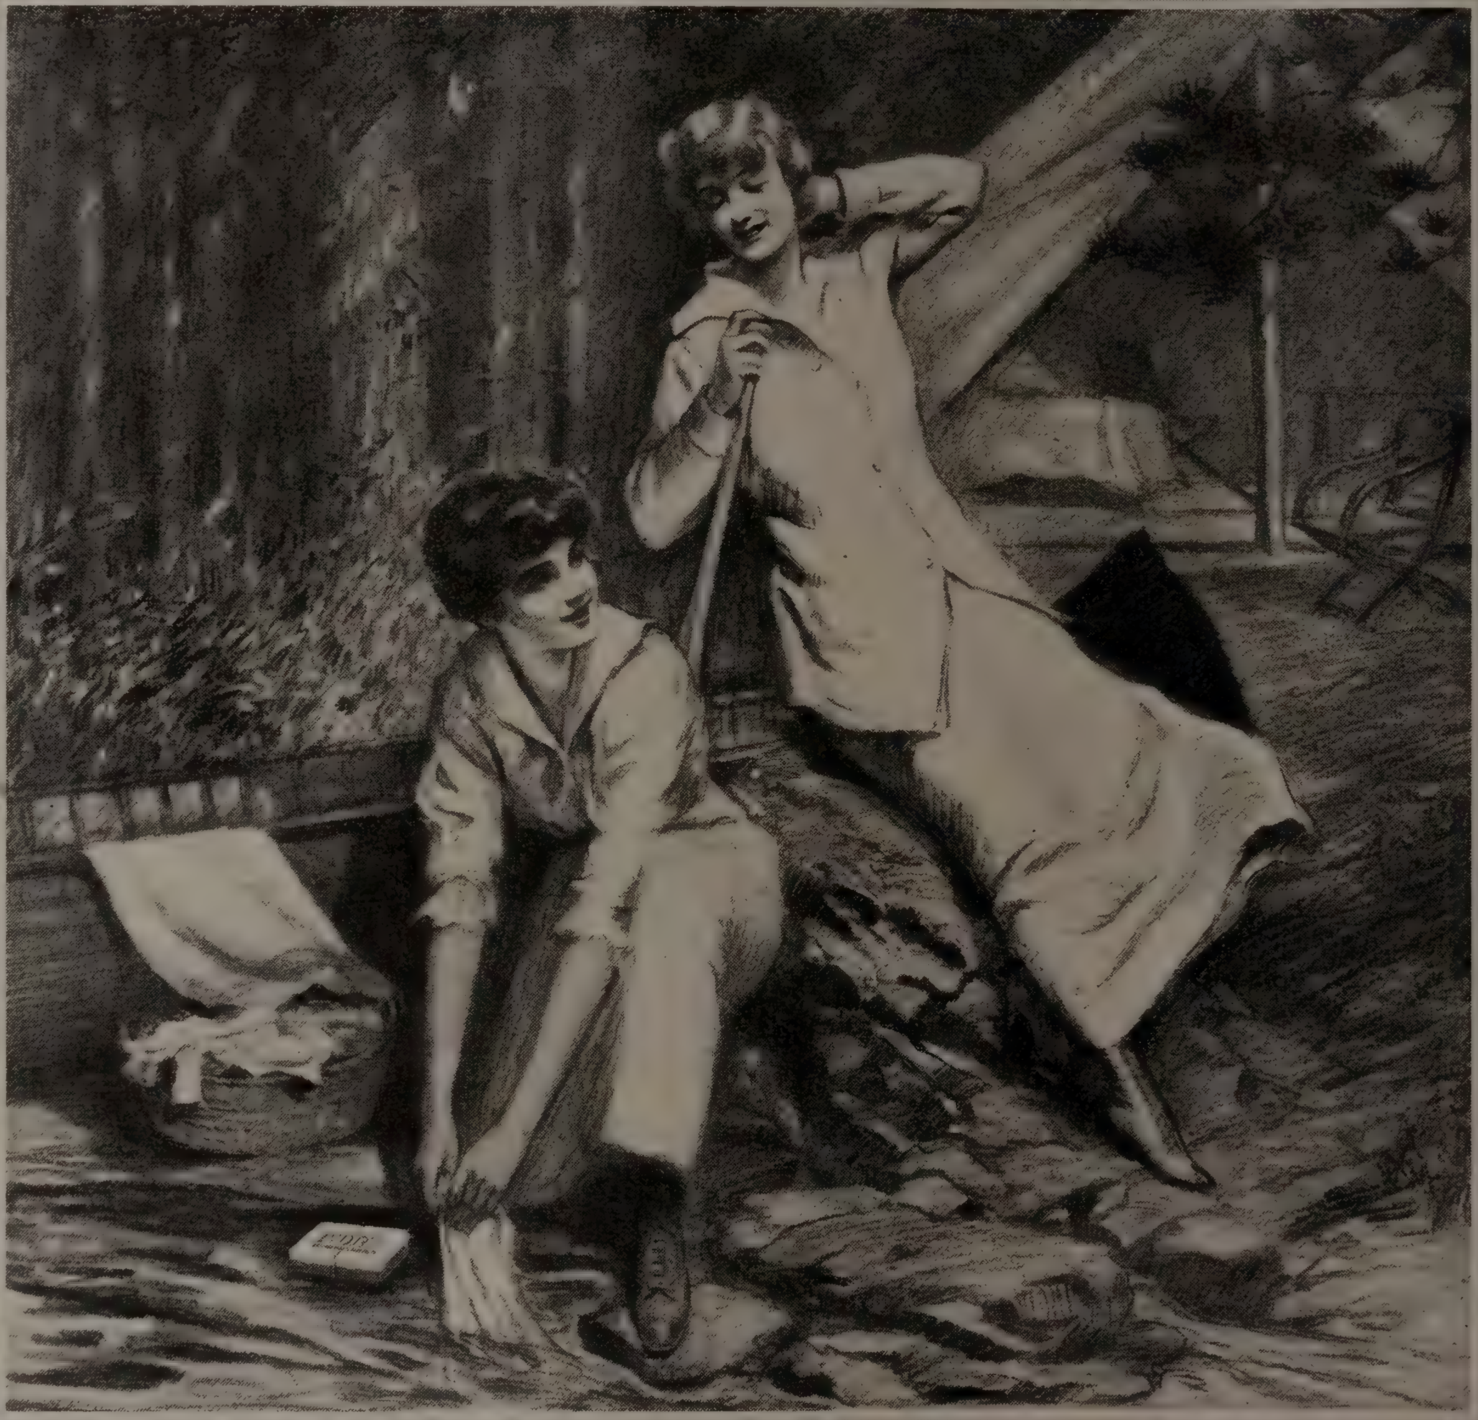
NEW YORK, AUGUST 1, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 31. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painted by Sir John Everett Milais, Bart., R.A.

"BUBBLES"



COPYRIGHT 1917 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

IF you ever have gone camping you doubtless know how many things Ivory Soap can do and how well it does them. Clothes and dishes, pots and pans, the bath and toilet—everything requiring soap needs nothing but Ivory.

No garment or utensil is too dirty for Ivory to clean thoroughly. No skin, fabric, or surface is delicate enough to be injured by it. It is not only safe but sure because the high grade materials and skillful manufacture which make it mild and pure also give it extraordinary detergent, or cleansing, value.

Every year thousands who go camping profit by this lesson in Ivory's all-round efficiency. They discover that in addition to the purposes for which they always have used it, there are a hundred and one other needs which it meets perfectly.

IVORY SOAP . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}\%$ PURE

IT FLOATS

Factories at Ivorydale, Ohio; Port Ivory, New York; Kansas City, Kansas; Hamilton, Canada

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Uncle Sam has no monopoly of Liberty. Here is Liberty Square in Buenos Aires

Glimpses of Life in Argentina

The Progressive, Cultured and Pleasure-Loving Republic of the South

By CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

AFTER months of travel and mingled experiences along the west coast of South America, where one has found the months of June, July and August as cold as November in the United States, the traveler is possessed with a sense of relief as he finds himself sliding down the eastern side of the Andes into the great vineyards and smiling gardens of Argentina. It seems hardly credible that one day's ride on the Transandine Railway is sufficient to bring one out of the region of perpetual snows, where furs and steamer rugs are quite acceptable, into this vast land of seemingly endless plains marked with all the signs of the temperate zone.

In many respects Argentina impresses one as being a different world from that of the more medieval and less progressive agricultural and industrial republics west of the Andes.

Mendoza, the first large Argentine town lying beneath the towering white-ridged mountains we have just crossed, is like a patch of California with its wide orchards, its extensive vineyards and its acres of melons, peaches, apricots and fields of maize. The train whirls one through great plantations of fruit trees, and you are told that Mendoza alone has more than 3,000 acres of such orchards, as well as 140,000 acres of irrigated land, producing grapes. Already the fruit from this section is finding its way into the New York markets, and larger arrangements than ever before have recently been made to ship Argentine grapes to the United States. As this fruit supply, unequaled in quality even in California, will reach North America in the "off" season for grapes, this export business, which is a comparatively new thing for Argentina as regards fruits and vegetables, is rich in promise.

IT is, however, when the traveler has made a night's run from the strictly mountain towns and wakens to look out of the windows of his sleeping-car to behold the vast pampa of level and productive plain unrolling before him on all sides, that the real Argentina begins to be tangible. It is like sailing on an almost perfectly level sea that bends away to the horizon with naught to obstruct the vision save here and there a clump of poplars which signifies the ranch buildings of a big "estancia."

One is struck with the absence of woods, but as one proceeds and studies the landscape he sees great herds of cattle, immense flocks of sheep, and here and there gray patches which on nearer view are discovered to be composed of Argentine ostriches. Then there are the stretches of grain fields which seem to reach everywhere and have no boundaries—thousands of acres of wheat and corn. One has reached the country where farms are measured not by acres but by square leagues. If you ask the size of a farm, the answer will often fairly appall you—for these vast feudal "estancias" comprise all the way from 12,000 to 200,000 acres, and agriculture is on a scale that would seem fabulous even to our farmers in Kansas and Nebraska.

One of the stations we swung through early in the day was called "Open Door." It seemed a fitting title to this resourceful country of incalculable potentiality, where the national domain still consists of upwards of 200,000,000 acres of land suitable for cultivation, when properly irrigated, still undivided.

The element of contrast between this progressive agricultural country and the republics on the west coast is decidedly impressive. The differences are so great that the attempt to generalize regarding the people or the resources of the South American republics usually ends in showing but one side of the picture. How could one, for example, speak of the small patches of cultivated land in the mountains of Southern Peru, upon which the Indians eke out a scanty existence, in the same breath with these vast Argentine farms supplied with virtually every modern convenience of steel and iron? The ancient descendants of the Incas driving their herds of llamas and alpacas on the sides of the Peruvian Cordilleras would find themselves in a new world and strange, here in this immense country with its thirty million head of horned cattle, its seventy million sheep and eight million horses, a country that estimates its livestock capital in terms of wealth amounting to $650,000,000.

The very stature of the people, together with their vigor, vitality and independent initiative, are changed as soon as one crosses the great divide and comes into contact with the railroad officials of this progressive republic. Things remind one of the United States here in Argentina, and modernity confronts one on every side. The laboring man is no longer a dark-skinned chola, or a picturesque Indian bending beneath an intolerable load, his eyes on the ground, trotting along with that peculiar motion characteristic of the human beast of burden; here rather he is an upstanding, self-respecting laborer, alert, and looking for the new and rapidly opening doors of opportunity in his up-to-date republic. He is, indeed, for the most part of European stock, from Italy, France and Spain, and he has come to Argentina, as Europeans have been coming to the United States for the past thirty-five years, to make himself a home. The immigrants to Argentina, furthermore, have been as a rule superior to those who have come, from Italy at least, to the United States. The Argentine Italian is not usually from Naples or Sicily, but from the northern provinces, and he comes here to engage in commerce, even more than to labor upon the land. One notices the difference in the family life, the women and children looking far more prosperous and well fed, while the homes are filled with unusually healthful conditions as compared with those found in the United States in industrial communities where immigrants are herded together.

IT has been truly said that here in Argentina the Latins of Europe are blooming again, and economic opportunity and prosperity have awakened within them a new hope.

This first impression of contrast between the west and the east coast is amplified as one's train pulls into the beautiful city of Buenos Aires, with its 1,700,000 inhabitants, revealing a type of life as cosmopolitan as can be found perhaps in any city of the world. One is first possessed with the realization that he is again in a great modern capital, surrounded with all the marks of the material prosperity that men of the twentieth century have learned to utilize.

One is whirled through the streets of shining macadam in high-powered motor cars, and is told that there are in the city more than four thousand privately owned automobiles, with two thousand motor carriages for hire. Buenos Aires breaks upon one whose eyes have been accustomed to long days of riding on level plains as a kind of dream-city, and its great plazas, immense houses and public buildings resembling so closely, with their elaborately ornamented façades, Paris or Berlin, that one almost rubs his eyes to make sure that he is not upon the other side of the Atlantic. This greatest city of South America has been called "a plaster imitation of Paris," but if one can judge from the bustling commercial activity and the large reconstruction projects which are now under way to make the city more capable of handling its ever-growing trade, this city of the plains is something quite other and different from the Parisian capital. To be sure, when one walks down the broad Avenida de Mayo—which is said to resemble closely the Champs Élysées—and especially when at night the sidewalks are filled before the large cafés and restaurants with small tables, around which sit the Argentinos sipping their small coffee—one can readily think he is on the Boulevard des Italiens. If, on the other hand, one could arrive in Buenos Aires, as did the writer, during the progress of the big cattle show, when the hotels were filled with landowners and farmers from the big estancias, he would receive an impression quite different from that to be realized in Paris. He would feel a virile, agricultural strain running through the activity of this whole city. He would sense a patriotism rising from the land, for this country is an agricultural country first of all.

THE great landowners come to Buenos Aires and spend their money upon the glittering boulevards, and this makes the city an abnormal one, and in a sense a false guide to the characteristics of the people and the country. Argentina, however, is slowly but surely gathering to herself, out of the polyglot nations of Europe which compose her, a spirit and individuality of her own as free and unique as is the air of her boundless prairies. At present she resembles more truly the Old World than does the United States, which has had much longer time to develop a particular civilization all her own; yet you can hardly insult an Argentino more readily than to suggest that Buenos Aires is merely a copy or tinseled imitation of a European capital. He sees in it his own expression, and although he will tell you that to know the country correctly the North American must read the history of the United States fifty years ago, he is nevertheless deeply confident that Argentina has a future quite different from either the United States or a European nation, or any other South American state. The longer one remains in the country, the more surely he will be inclined to agree with the inhabitant of this great land, where are being gathered forces of population in an agricultural area nearly half as big as the United States, possessing resources in many senses more uniform and prolific than are to be found in any other one commonwealth on the face of the earth.

Another contrast which immediately strikes the observer coming to Argentina from the west coast is that of the absence of a large number of churches of the medieval type. One will be told both in Peru and Chile, by the ardent devotees of the prevailing Roman faith of that section, that Argentina is rapidly becoming agnostic, and that she has become dazzled by the blaze of her material prosperity, and in a large degree has moved away from her allegiance to Spain and Catholicism.

In a sense, this impression would seem to be borne out by one's investigation and conversation with the inhabitants. The government is still connected with the church to the extent that it appropriates money each year for the national religion. The families of wealth and distinction are also here, as on the west coast, quite closely allied with the Catholic Church. But a great difference is seen in the character of that alliance. It seems to be more a matter of politics and of fashion, lacking deep roots in the religious or ecclesiastical nature of the people. The women also are less often seen in the churches, and the poorer classes do not seem to be interested in religion to any great extent. As far as the educated men and women are concerned, indifferentism, if not in many cases agnosticism, seems to be the ruling characteristic.

We asked a highly gifted Argentine lady whether she went to church. She smiled and said, "Never."

"Do the other women of your acquaintance attend church?" we continued.

"Very rarely," was the answer.

"But," we persisted, "what is to be the future, religiously, of Argentina, if this tendency persists? Is it not necessary for a people to have some kind of religion?"

At which this educated lady, with a shrug of her Spanish shoulders and a raising of eyebrows, answered, "Why?"

This monosyllable speaks eloquently in portrayal of the present religious attitude among the Argentinos who are today in the forefront of the learned professions and progressive enterprises of this new country.

BUENOS AIRES impresses the newcomer with its heavy-laden, sodden materialism. It is like a child who has received a lapful of bonbons or a shopful of toys to which it has been unaccustomed, and which it has not yet learned to use altogether wisely. Its avenues and main streets are clogged with these evidences of new riches—wonderful shops filled with the most costly manufactured products from every land, windows ablaze with jewels, always somewhat larger and more costly than one would expect to see displayed. Its clubs are like marble palaces, filled with paintings and statuary and ornate decoration far beyond what even necessity or good taste would demand. One finds it hard to distinguish what the Argentine would call an ordinary dwelling from a public building, so great is the penchant for magnificence and display, which is easily carried out in modeled stucco. It is the land of the high cost of living, as well as the high cost of everything. It would seem to be one of the most difficult places in the world for any one to live with simple tastes and still with respectability. Things are rankly external. All seems to be for show. A gentleman who suggested our visit to a state building said, "Be sure to drive up to the building in a motor car. It will make a great difference in the attention which the officials will show you."

Through it all, however, here, as in our great cities in the United States, as one meets more intimately the individuals of this new and rapidly growing republic, the impression deepens that much of this ornateness and love of splendor is but the exterior cover of more permanent ideals which are slowly but surely working themselves out.

Argentina is another "melting-pot." Note the racial types in this kindergarten class in an American mission school

Six of the Sixteen Who Dared to Suffer Imprisonment for "The Cause"

Photos courtesy The Call, New York

Miss Julia Hurlbut | Miss Doris Stevens | Mrs. John Winters Brannan | Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles | Mrs. J. A, H. Hopkins | Mrs. John Rogers, Jr.

May Win Suffrage Through Martyrdom

ON January 10 a small but earnest body of American suffragists, who had failed to convince the President that suffrage was a national issue, and that he should use his great influence to secure the passage of the Susan B. Anthony Amendment to the Constitution by which that great document would be made to declare there should be no discrimination between citizens on account of sex, color or previous condition of servitude, made a new plan. Having been assured that Mr. Wilson believed in woman suffrage and expected it to prevail, but thought it a proper subject for the states to settle for themselves, the women stationed pickets at the entrance to the White House grounds, carrying yellow banners bearing a message to the President. Nearly everybody, including most of the other suffrage organizations, agreed that the picketing was futile and foolish, and so it appeared for many months as it continued day by day. The President passed in and out, and smiled as he had smiled at the delegations who had visited him in the White House, and nothing else happened.

Then the war came along. The people thought surely the picketing would stop, that these women would be patriotic enough not to annoy the government unnecessarily. But the government was not particularly annoyed, and the futility was neither greater nor less. Then came the mob and the police, always and at all times faithful supporters of a new idea, for ideas grow by persecution even as they defy their persecutors. The mob tore down the banners and handled roughly the bearers of them. The police arrested indiscriminately the pickets and their attackers. All of those arrested were permitted to go with a warning against disturbance, but the picketing continued.

Some of the banners even declared that this was not a free country, because half of the citizens were denied the vote. The crowd had been particularly enraged by a banner addressed to representatives of free Russia, where women are to vote, urging them to use their influence for the liberation of the womanhood of America. Meanwhile the women of England had been granted the ballot, and the police at Washington had decided that the disturbance at the gate of the Executive Mansion must cease even if police powers were stretched to the limit.

Three More of the Martyrs for Suffrage

Mrs. Gilson Gardner   Miss Anne Martin   Miss Eleanor Calnan

ON Saturday, July 14, sixteen women with their banners marched quietly to the two gates of the White House grounds. The banners bore the motto "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." They stopped at the gates. The police politely requested them to move on. They refused. The thousand or less spectators applauded or jeered as their sympathies inclined them, but there was no disorder. The police, still polite, notified the women that they were under arrest. Among those arrested were several women of more than usual prominence. One, Mrs. John Winters Brannan of New York, is the daughter of the late Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun. Mrs. Florence Bayard Hillis, of Wilmington, Del., is the daughter of Thomas F. Bayard, former Secretary of State and Ambassador to England. Mrs. J. A. H. Hopkins, of Norristown, N. J., is the wife of the chairman of the Progressive State Committee, who worked for Mr. Wilson's reelection. These sixteen women were tried before Judge Mullowney in the police court at Washington on Monday and Tuesday, July 16 and 17. They were charged with obstructing traffic. The evidence produced in the trial tended rather to disprove the charges than otherwise. The police, however, were reported as determined to make an example of somebody. The machine of officialdom had been started. It was determined to execute a perfect blunder, and nothing could stop it. The charges, based on a very slight infraction of the police rules, were solemnly affirmed by the court, and the sixteen women were sentenced to pay a fine of $25 each or to serve sixty days in the workhouse.

These women, who represent among them some thousands of dollars of wealth, calmly elected to serve the sentence. Officialdom had done its worst. But this was only the beginning. The husbands of the women tried to pay their fines, but the women insisted upon continuing to serve their sentences. Mr. J. A. H. Hopkins saw the President, who was reported to be shocked at the jailing of the suffragettes. He was assured by Mr. Hopkins that the only solution of the present situation was in the immediate passage of the Susan B. Anthony Amendment, and the President was reported to have discussed with Mr. Hopkins the advisability of treating the suffrage amendment as a war emergency measure, asking for data as to the possibility of passing it through the present Congress. Thus the "futile" picketing, by the help of the mob and the police, may prove to have been the final stroke needed to bring the ballot into the hands of the women of America. President Wilson on July 19 unconditionly pardoned all of the women. It was announced that picketing would continue.

The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy

V. Israel Restored and Renewed

By REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D., Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

I

IN considering "the Times of the Gentiles" in our last article, it was assumed throughout that when those "times" came to an end the time of Israel, as a nation, would begin again; that she would be restored to her own land and be in fellowship with God, through faith in Jesus of Nazareth, her Messiah and her Saviour. It remains to prove this.

The proof begins indeed with the initial promise to Abraham. "All the land, . . . to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever" (Gen. 13 : 15). This promise practically was repeated to David, the kingdom of whose Son was to be established forever (II Sam. 7 : 13). Certainly in the perspective there appeared no opportunity for a doubt in this matter, and no indication of even a break in the continuity of the possession of the land or the perpetuity of the kingdom.

A break came, however, as we have seen, first in the division of the kingdom in Rehoboam's reign, and later in the captivity both of Israel and Judah.

NEVERTHELESS, the prophets now take up the strain, and foretell that this break, serious as it is and prolonged as it may be, will make no difference in the outcome. God's word shall be fulfilled, and his purpose of the redemption of the world through the descendants of Abraham shall not fail.

Take the first of these prophets in the order in which they appear in our canon. Isaiah, in his earliest message, speaks of the spiritual harlotry of Judah and Jerusalem and of the judgments that shall fall upon her, but they will be purifying judgments. Her judges shall be restored as at the first and her counselors as at the beginning, and afterward she shall be called "the city of righteousness, the faithful city" (Isa. 1 : 25-27). Manifestly this has not yet taken place in the history of Jerusalem, and unless God's word shall fall to the ground, it is still to be looked for.

Jeremiah is very full and very plain in similar prophesying, and almost at random we select for our illustration chapter 33. Jehovah, by the prophet, is speaking of the Babylonian victory soon to be accomplished over Judah, and her captivity to follow. Of Jersualem especially he says: "I have hid my face from this city." But then he adds, "I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will blend them as at the first. And I will cleanse them from all iniquity. . . . And this city shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth" (Jer. 33 : 5-9).

As further accentuating the futurity of these promises they are associated with the second coming of Christ. "In those days and at that time will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall judgment be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord, our Righteousness" (Jer. 33 : 15, 16).

Four times in the chapter does Jehovah refer to his covenant with David (see the third article in this series), reaffirming it, and declaring that it will not be broken any more than his covenant of the day and of the night shall be broken.

Ezekiel's prophecy of the dry bones is so familiar that it is not necessary to quote (chapter 37); but it may be sufficient to say that the resurrection it typifies is not a physical resurrection of individuals, but a political resurrection of the nation of Israel and Judah, to be then brought together again as one. Their moral resurrection is foretold in the preceding chapter, on which ground it is that the Lord is now able to say: "And David my servant shall be king over them and they shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers dwelt; . . . and my servant David shall be their prince forever. . . . And I will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. . . . Yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the Gentiles shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore" (Ezek. 37: 24-28).

DANIEL'S prophecy of the seventy weeks is even better known than Ezekiel's valley of dry bones. These seventy weeks, or seventy "sevens" of time, are determined upon Judah and Jerusalem "to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity and to bring in everlasting righteousness" (Dan. 9 : 24). There is a general agreement among students of prophecy that a period of 490 years is here referred to, which is broken up into three parts. The first part ended with the rebuilding of Jerusalem after the Babylonian captivity, and the second with the crucifixion of Christ and the subsequent destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. The third part is yet to come, the last of the seventy sevens, during which these events of which Daniel speaks will be brought to pass, and which are similar in character to, and synchronize in time with, the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah and Daniel, already named.

We might pause here with our consideration of these four, which are called the major prophets; but Hosea, the first in order of the minor prophets, is a unique witness. As an object lesson, Jehovah called upon him to marry an unchaste woman, who deserted him even after she had borne him children. Nevertheless, he was commanded still to love and to provide for her, and to covenant while doing so, that she should not be the wife of any other man and that he would keep himself for her.

All this, we are told, is "according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel." "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without king, and without prince, and without sacrifice, and without an image, and without ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days" (Hosea 3 : 1-5).

II

A QUESTION might arise at this point as to whether these prophecies, uttered prior to the Babylonian captivity of Judah, do not find fulfilment in their return therefrom.

One method of reply to this would be to point out, as might easily be done, that the bolt does not fit the nut. In other words, the prophecies were not fulfilled in that return. Jerusalem did not then become the righteous or faithful city. Judah and Israel were not cleansed from all iniquity then, nor did the nation then become a praise and honor before all the other nations of the earth, and much more to the same purport.

But another method of reply is to quote the prophets who prophesied after the Babylonian captivity, and whose utterances are in perfect harmony with those who went before.

Take a single one, Zechariah. In the 12th, 13th and 14th chapters he is speaking of a time yet to come, when Jehovah "will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the peoples round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem." In former times, when the sacred city had been besieged, the Gentile nations had been made "a cup of trembling" for her, but now it will be reversed. In that day "I will seek to destroy all nations that come against Jerusalem."

When the Romans came against Jerusalem, A. D. 70, this was not so, but Jerusalem herself was destroyed. Is it not evident, therefore, that a future period is meant? In that day "they shall look unto me, whom they have pierced." "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness." "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth." Even a cursory reading of these chapters must convince anyone willing to be convinced that the prophet is speaking of a time which is yet to come, when Judah and Israel shall be restored.

AND the same is the testimony of the New Testament as well as the Old. Christ's words in Matt. 24 : 15-31 have not yet been fulfilled in the history of Judah and Jerusalem, and who shall dare to say that they shall not be? And what of Paul's remarkable testimony in Romans 11? "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved."

As a closing word it may be said that, unless Israel shall be restored again to her own land, the larger part of the book of Revelation, certainly chapters 7 to 20, would be almost entirely without meaning. Those chapters are very largely Jewish, and relate to events that will take place in the history of that people, to a considerable extent in Palestine and the beloved city of Jerusalem.

THE SECRET OF THE LILIES

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—Matt. 6 : 28. "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow."

"CONSIDER the lilies!" Go to nature, you wrinkled, careworn, caretorn souls! Go to nature, and consider the workings of the Lord in the flowers of the field. This is the real "nature cure," and it has the advantage of being recommended by the Saviour himself. We are to sit down in the presence of the wild flowers, and seek their secret, and ask what suggestion they have to make for the living of an acceptable life in Christ.

I confess there is nothing which makes me more ashamed of my moral and spiritual poverty than just this contemplation of the wealthy glory of the fields. Here is beauty as the Maker purposed and designed it. Here is his standard. And then I look at himself, and I realize that I am a discord in his creation. The house eclipses the tenant, and I have no worthiness to set side by side with their loveliness. It is surely the purpose of God that in beauty of life I should vie with the flowers and eclipse them. A moment's consideration reveals to me how infinitely distant is this attainment, and how mean and stingy is my life compared with the grace and grandeur of the field.

"CONSIDER the lilies." Well, I do consider them, and the first thing that impresses me is the quietness of it all. There is no fuss, no worry, no noise. I wandered by the side of a river in one of the dales of Yorkshire, and came to an exceedingly rowdy paper-mill. The machinery filled the little glen with tumult. A few yards beyond its noisy motion I came upon a clump of ferns and wild flowers, and I was almost startled by the suggestive contrast.

My life has too much of the whirl and noise of the manufactory about it, and too little of the silence and impressiveness of the fields. Even our prayer meetings sometimes savor of the paper-mill, and not of the quietness of the hills, where our Saviour prayed. Perhaps it is that in the manufactory there is too much of man and too little of God. Out among the lilies God is all in all. "They toil not, neither do they spin."

There is a strainlessness about it all, and yet the Lord's purpose is achieved. And so I think of my own fussiness, my own endeavoring, my own perspiring, my own anxious efforts after truth and holiness, and I think I learn my first secret when I go to the lilies, and it is this: I must give God more to do; I must not seek to be self-made, but to be God-made.

What, then, is the part of the lilies?. There is no noise and no strife. What then? They just abide in certain conditions, and from those conditions they absorb what they require. If we want to know what life should be like, we must learn these secrets from the lilies.

If our true life is to be learned from the lilies, then the true life is perfectly natural. Everybody knows the painful difference between artifice and nature, between the Pharisees and the Christ. There is a great gulf between the forced and the natural. Forced fruit is always defective, wanting some fineness and delicacy of flavor which belongs to fruit which is quietly matured.

Forced oratory has no grip; it is suggestive of the paper manufactory, and not of the spontaneous growth of nature. An audience quickly perceives when a speaker is "pumping it up!" And the audience knows the difference between the pump and the spring.

Forced piety is never winsome; the onlooker always resents it. People who force themselves to use pious speech, who frequently introduce the name of the Lord, who plentifully employ such adjectives as "dear," are not wise or powerful ministers in his kingdom.

Forced emotion is equally repulsive. There are many people who literally force themselves to feel wretched, or to feel joyful, or to feel good. They "work themselves up," and the result is a manufactured product, and not a natural growth.

WHEN I was a boy I saw an advertisement over a little chapel, "Come and hear the weeping preacher!" The horror of it all oppressed even my boyish mind, and I recoiled from the artifice. The finest things can never be forced. Even humor loses its exquisite essence when it is the product of the hothouse. The man who is always "trying to be funny" scarcely ever succeeds. We cannot even force our courtesies without perverting them into affectations.

We cannot force the growth of wisdom. It is possible to force the acquisition of knowledge, to stuff the mind with chaotic facts, but when knowledge is to become wisdom we have to drop all devices and artifices, and trust to natural impulses and powers. And so it is in the whole round of the Christian life. We cannot force ourselves into its finer creations. If we are to be attractive, our Christianity must be perfectly natural. And therefore, perhaps, there is too much "trying" to be Christians; and therefore there are too many wrinkles, too many care lines.

Perhaps if we "tried" less, and rested more, we should spontaneously realize the fruits and the flowers of the Spirit. At any rate, let me again emphasize this part of my teaching; that if the Christian life is to be winsome and attractive, it must be perfectly natural; it must remind people of "the lilies of the field."

IF the Christian life is to be akin to the life of the lilies, then it must be life that is lived in certain prescribed conditions. I said some little while ago that the lilies abide, and they absorb. We do not find them in the evening in one corner of the field, and next morning in the center. They are not vagrants over an estate; they are dwellers in a locality. They live the settled life. That is surely one secret which I must take over into the life of the soul. For I know how apt I am to be a vagrant. I am rooted here for a day, and there for a day, and next day finds me yonder. I try this expedient, and that expedient, and my rootage is constantly changed. I worship in this church and in that church, and I have no home. I go to revival after revival, and every new thing begets a new movement. The consequence is, the Christian life is full of unrest and turmoil, and comes to no large and ripe attainment.

The first thing I must do is to check these vagrant habits, and learn how to abide. "He that abideth in me, the same bringeth forth much fruit." I am to put myself in Christ, and remain there. I must make a choice, a definite and deliberate choice, and adhere to it. I must repeat that choice in every new enterprise; in every new initiative I must see to it that my roots are in the Lord. I must look at everything in him, and from him, and when that rootage has been chosen and adopted then let me cease to worry.

I am, then, in the prescribed conditions, and I shall grow like the lilies of the field. The Lord is my soil; I am "rooted in him." The Lord is my light; "I am the Light." The Lord is my atmosphere; "he breathes on me." The Lord is my moisture; "I will be as the dew." Everything that I need for spontaneous growth I find in Jesus Christ. "My sufficiency is in him."

And, so abiding, I say there is no need to worry. To trust the Lord is to absorb his virtue. To rest in him is to drink his blood. "I live by faith in the Son of God."

AND, lastly, if the lilies of the field are symbolic of the Christian life, then the true life must be incomparably beautiful. It will be as lovely as the lilies; nay, it will put the lilies into the shade. "The beauty of the Lord our God" will be upon us. "We shall be transformed into the same image from glory unto glory."

I should like to have had a glimpse at the woman of Samaria when she had got rooted in right conditions, and was resting there. Once a weed, she became a lily. I should like to have seen the prodigal when he, too, was abiding in the prescribed conditions. I warrant that every day witnessed a visible addition to his nobility. The beauty of holiness is not acquired in a day; we "grow" to it. But from the very earliest stages there are prophecies of fulfilment. When the lily of the field is not yet in flower its rudiments are winsome.

And so shall it be with you and me when we are rooted in the Lord Jesus Christ. There will be signs and tokens in our life that we have begun that growth which will consummate in "the perfection which is in Christ Jesus."

Hymn of Nature

GOD of the earth's extended plains!
The dark, green fields contented lie:
The mountains rise like holy towers,
Where man might commune with the sky.
The tall cliff challenges the storm
That towers upon the vale below,
Where shaded fountains send their streams
With joyous music in their flow.

God of the dark and heavy deep!
The waves lie sleeping on the sands,
Till the fierce trumpet of the storm
Hath summoned up their thundering bands.
Then the white sails are dashed like foam,
Or hurry, trembling, o'er the seas,
Till, calmed by thee, the sinking gale
Serenely breathes, Depart in peace.

God of the forest's solemn shade!
The grandeur of the lonely tree,
That wrestles singly with the gale,
Lifts up admiring eyes to thee.
But more majestic far they stand,
When side by side their ranks they form,
To wave on high their plumes of green,
And fight their battles with the storm.

God of the world! the hour must come,
And nature's self to dust return;
Her crumbling altars must decay;
Her incense-fires shall cease to burn.
But still her grand and lovely scenes
Have made man's warmest praises flow;
For hearts grow holier as they trace
The beauty of the world below.

W. B. O. PEABODY.

---

* Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

Reverends
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
and
C. C. Albertson, D.D.

DAILY MEDITATION

Reverend
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

A Receiver of Wrecks

SUNDAY, August 5. Luke 15 :2. "This man receiveth sinners." The title which I have given to this meditation may sometimes be seen as one of the headlines on the business announcements of certain men on the Northwest coast of Canada. They advertise themselves as "receivers of wrecks." The first time I saw the phrase it struck me with peculiar impressiveness, and my mind traveled very quickly to the work of our Lord. For, in a way that is altogether unique, Jesus of Nazareth was a "receiver of wrecks." He did not come into the world for the sake of "them that are whole." He came for the sake of the boats that have been driven about by tempests, and smashed against the rocks, and can hardly keep afloat. He came to befriend the derelicts, the mere hulls that have lost compass, and engine, and sails, and are just drifting about the envious deep. "This man receiveth wrecks."

Nobody else wants them. Where is there a friendly coast-guardsman in all New York or London except he be a disciple of Jesus Christ? Where is there an open, hospitable harbor except those which Jesus Christ himself has built? I think of one home which flashes out the invitation, "Refuge for the destitute!" And I love the shining line at the Water Street Mission—"Drunkards specially invited!" But these are Christ's harbors, and the men on the lookout belong to his brave crew. But where is there a non-Christian haven for wrecks? Who is there who receives these human derelicts, and receives them to recreate them, and to send them out again, with banners flying, to do saving work on the very waters where they met their ruin?

It seems a long way back to Cotter Morrison and to his forgotten book, "The Service of Man," and I only recall it because of one sentence, in which he confesses the impossibility of converting derelicts into sound seagoing liners: "It is no use disguising the matter, there is no remedy for a bad heart." That is to say, the wreck can never sail again! Jesus Christ never says that of anybody. No boat is ever "too far gone." What Chesterton says of Browning can be said of our Saviour in an altogether incomparable way: "He was the friend of outcasts whom even outcasts cast out." He has no impossibles. "Even though he were dead yet shall he live!" Yes, the old wrecks are refashioned, they are new creations in Christ Jesus. This Man receiveth wrecks: they come into his harbor heavy-laden and almost sinking; and they sail out again under the banner of his love, and behold! all things are become new!

J. H. J.

. Coming Home to God

MONDAY, August 6. Luke 15 :18. "I will arise and go to my father." If the conclusions of special students in religious problems may be accepted as authentic, two religious motives affect a larger number of people than any others, that is to say, two considerations move most of us to the religious life. They are the consciousness of our spiritual hunger—a sense of incompleteness without God—and the remembrance of God's love as revealed to us in Jesus Christ. The first of these thoughts is selfish; we want to be complete, to live the full-orbed life. The other is unselfish: we want God to be complete; we want Christ's desire for the world satisfied. (According to Isaiah, the Messiah can not be satisfied until he shall see the travail of his soul.) So, whatever forces draw us away from God, and however strong they may be, these two forces draw us back to God; or rather, the first drives us out of the far country with its ignoble motives and its poverty of resources, while the other draws us tenderly and tenaciously back to our home in God. The cross of Christ is the magnetic pole of humanity. Our hearts may waver as the magnetic needle does; they may point uncertainly, but they point to a seeking Elder Brother and a yearning Father.

C. C. A.

Majesty and Mercy

TUESDAY, August 7. Rom. 11 :36. "Of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen." Throughout the section of his Epistle which ends at this verse the apostle has maintained the sovereignty of God. God is responsible to no one but himself. This is a terrifying thought to the sinner. Who can argue with God when he approaches men in his majesty? But the apostle has insisted that the majesty of God is to be viewed by the sinner chiefly as a majesty of grace. "He hath concluded all under sin, that he might have mercy upon all." The God with whom sinners are to deal is none other than Jesus Christ. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." God is a consuming fire to the sinner who views him in his bare majesty. His reason is staggered by the acts and ways of God, which are past finding out.

But God becomes an amiable object to contemplate in Jesus. Sinners gladly acknowledge their utter dependence upon him who loved them and gave himself for them. He is to them not only the Creator, the Word by whom all things were brought into being, from whom also their physical life is derived, but he is the Author of their faith. As believers they are a new creature in Jesus Christ. To him they owe their subsistence. He upholds all things with the word of his power. In him they live and move and have their being. The life which they now live they live by the faith of the Son of God. Lastly, Jesus is the goal of their Christian hope. Their earthly life tends toward complete and uninterrupted union with him. In the midst of earth's vexing riddles and the perplexities which trouble the individual Christian, inviting doubt and distrust and leading to despondency and despair, it is still possible to raise a hymn of glory to the unsearchable God, if we view this whole world and the strange evolutions of history in the light of the Gospel of Christ, of whom and through whom and to whom are all things.

W. H. T. D.

The Work of Life

WEDNESDAY, August 8. John 21 :5. "Children, have ye any meat?" If we are faithful, Christ will tell us how to win. He is satisfied with our intention to do and will show us how to draw a multitude into his kingdom. After Peter beheld his risen Lord, his faithfulness to duty led him to say, "I go a fishing." And the disciples, following his example, remarked, "We also go with thee." They did not intend to dream away their lives rejoicing over the resurrection of Christ, but were willing to do the ordinary things of life till called to a greater work. Perhaps they thought they would see him again if they were at work rather than idly waiting, and then, "He may need what our toil will bring. What if, while we are loitering around, waiting to behold him again, he should say to us, 'Children, have ye any meat?'" This, they thought, would never do; so they decided to be found at work at Jesus' reappearance. He was the Carpenter at Nazareth and knows the necessity of commonplace labor. He would have us faithful in that which is least before being called to that which is greatest.

Our Lord is always about his Father's business. We, therefore, should be true to our families and friends by caring for the home and loved ones. Working for others as he did, he will be pleased with us when we meet again. Fishing will be better than standing over an empty tomb. When we are doing the work of life joyously, Jesus ever meets us, calling us to spiritual meals of love, joy and peace, and tells us of a promised Pentecost, saying, "Go ye into all the world and feed my lambs and feed my sheep."

E. W. C.

The God of Jacob

THURSDAY, August 9. Ps. 46 :7. "The God of Jacob is our refuge." Jacob's character is not particularly admirable. He is too much of a trickster; he drives too close a bargain; he is too grasping, too worldly, to be admired. So it comes to us as a great surprise that he had a God. The still more surprising thing is that it is not Jacob's claim for himself, but God's claim for Jacob. If it were Jacob's voice speaking of Jacob's God, we might doubt it. Jacob might have claimed too much for himself. But since God calls himself the God of Jacob, there must be more of good in Jacob than we have seen, more that is admirable and praiseworthy. There is. There is more that is admirable in most men than we see. There is also more that is not admirable. But God sees it all. It is easy enough for us to sit in judgment on Jacob and David and all the other men and women whose weaknesses are recorded in the Bible, but we forget it is hardly fair for us to measure them by modern standards. The world has improved somewhat in twice a thousand years. But, measured even by the standards of their own day, some of these saints were men of faults and follies, men of passions and prejudices, men of flesh and blood. They seem more like sinners than saints, but we must not forget that at last, after sinning and suffering, they became men of God, their stubborn wills bent and their hard hearts subdued by the grace that abounds much more where sin once abounded.

What is a saint? A faultless life? An unstained soul? Nay, but a life that ascends, a soul that sees the stain of sin and hates it, and aspires skyward. A friend of mine saw a wreck on the line of a great railroad, and thought, "So this is the system that is the pride of the railroad world; it is not so great after all." Then he saw the wrecking crews at work, and in a very short time the wreck had been cleared away and the broken tracks relaid. There was no serious disarrangement of the schedule. The "Limited" did not even have to slow down as it passed the place, and my friend said, "Now I see the greatness of the system." The greatness and indeed the sanctity of a life is like that,—in clearing away the wreck, in rising after a fall, in final recovery after successive failures.

"For noble souls, through dust and heat,
Rise from disaster and defeat
The stronger;
And, conscious still of the divine
Within them, lie on earth supine
No longer."

C. C. A.

The Clear Call

FRIDAY, August 10. Luke 16 :31. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." The Scriptures are given us for the purpose of making us wise unto salvation. They are sufficient. Even the Old Testament Bible answered this purpose perfectly. The request of Dives that one might be sent from the dead to call his impenitent brethren on earth to repentance, is refused on the ground that their needs are already amply provided for. The oracles of God were committed to their nation. If they wished information regarding any doctrine, the Bible could furnish it. If they needed correction of their evil ways, the Bible was ringing with the most authoritative warnings against every kind of iniquity. If they wished for a guide unto holy living, instruction in practical righteousness, there was no better code of morals than their Bible. If they needed comfort in affliction, there was no book that addressed the bruised heart in such soothing terms as the Bible.

With this Book God has connected his great power, making it able to produce every salutary effect in the heart of man. The study of this Book has received the divine promise of exceptional blessings. It is folly and insolence, after God has been at such pains to proclaim to us the whole counsel for our salvation, for men to desire a different revelation. The Jews missed their Messiah when he had come among them, full of grace and truth: they were still looking for another. So many in our day miss the clear, urgent and loving call of God in his holy Book: they pretend they would believe a specter from the unseen world rather than the incomparable record of God's righteousness and love in the Bible. How do they know they would?

W. H. T. D.

Childhood

SATURDAY, August 11. Luke 1 :66. "What manner of child shall this be?" When John the Baptist was born, this was the wonder, "What manner of child shall this be?" Is not this the greatest question mortals can ask regarding the little immortal? Generally the child will be what the home influence makes it. The first seven years will probably decide its destiny. What a problem for parental care and guidance!

Eli's children were a sample of mistaken home government. There must be law as well as love in the family life. The children must be governed or they will govern you. Eli's mild expostulation, "Why do you do such things?" was one cause of their ruin. The Word says, "He restrained them not."

At the first, the governing must be through fear: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." And the fear of disobeying the parent must prevail in the little mind before it can be influenced by the affection and the sense of right and wrong. We must mean every word we say to the child. The continued repetition of the word "don't" becomes a familiar sound, losing its effect. Let thy words be few, but full of meaning.

Is it not true that the young people never forget the father's reading the Bible and the family prayers every morning and the kneeling at the mother's knee every night to say the little prayer, and then those never-forgotten songs that were sung around the fireside when friends came in to enjoy the hospitality and social life of the home? These indelible records stored away in the memory are reproduced later in life, like words and music in the phonograph. They are the first impressions, which last the longest, at a time when the mind is plastic and receptive. Let us never leave to the Sunday school and the church what should be accomplished first in the home.

E. W. C.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Secretary of War Baker drawing the first number in the greatest human lottery in history

U-BOAT PROBLEM UNSOLVED. A special cable to the New York Times from their correspondent in London passed by the British censor and published on July 19 disclosed the fact that the submarine campaign, which had been minimized in some quarters, was in fact proving most terribly efficient. The British weekly reports, covering only British commercial losses, which had been reduced considerably in a few months, had misled the American and Allied public into a sense of false security, into the belief that the submarine had failed. The Times correspondent stated that the U-boats were sinking 1,600,000 tons of shipping a month, this total including losses of neutrals and losses in admiralty service as well as losses of all the British Allies. (This number was later shown to be an error in transmission, the correct number being 600,000.) He stated also that this total of sinkings exceeded by nearly three times, the world's production. The correspondent stated that there was no possibility of construction overtaking the present rate of loss in time to prevent a peace being forced on the Allies, but what was necessary was to increase largely the destruction of U-boats, and he closed his dispatch with an urgent suggestion for the sending of more American destroyers to British waters. Officials in Washington declared that the actual sinkings were about 600,000 tons a month, while the losses by damage and grounding and the ordinary hazards of the sea increased the total to about a million tons a month. The losses from August, 1914, to July, 1917, are given by the correspondent of the Times as 7,706,291 tons, of which nearly half was sunk in the first six months of 1917. British new construction, which is impeded by the necessity of repairing the vessels that are damaged but not sunk, is said to be 1,500,000 tons a year. America plans to produce about 3,000,000 tons in eighteen months. The execution of the American plans was held up during the whole week of July 22 by a demand of Chairman Denman of the Shipping Board for the submission of details from General Goethals. Chairman Denman announced on July 20 that the plans initiated by General Goethals would be put into operation at an early date. Meanwhile men of the American navy urged an aggressive war on the sea.

THE NATIONAL ARMY. At ten minutes to ten on the morning of July 20, in a room in the Senate office building, Secretary of War Baker drew the first number in the great lottery which was to decide the fate and call to service ten million citizens registered under the selective draft act. He drew number 258, which called the men holding that number in all of the 4,577 exemption districts in the United States and Porto Rico. The last of the 10,500 numbers was drawn at 2 A. M. the following morning. All over the country men crowded the newspaper offices and the offices of the Exemption Boards, to see whether the numbers on their cards had been drawn. No disorder was reported from any part of the country, such expressions as "That's mine" or "There's my number," or "It's France for me!" showing the temper of the crowds.

A Look Ahead

YOU'LL read it, every word! "The Witness," the strong and strikingly written new serial by Grace Livingston Hill Lutz, author of "A Voice in the Wilderness," which will begin in the Christian Herald early in September. In this story a real man grapples with doubt and with temptation and conquers both.

Events in Russia, where democracy is seeking to find itself amid unrest and armed conflict, move almost faster than the story can be written down; but in next week's Christian Herald the latest chapter will be told.

The womanhood of China has suffered many things, but Christianity and liberty between them bring a new day. Maynard Owen Williams next week shows the womanhood of China in process of emancipation.

How Shall the Church Reach the Masses? Next week's sermon shows the way.

Pictures, yes; two whole pages.

SENATE FOR FOOD BOARD. The Senate on July 19 adopted an amendment to the Food Administration Bill limiting the scope of the measure to the control of feed, food and fuel, and providing for a board of food administrators consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President and to draw a salary of $7,500 a year each. An amendment aimed at Herbert Hoover and introduced by Senator Reed to provide that members of the board must be voting residents of the country was defeated. Senator Hollis severely criticized Senator Reed for his attacks upon Mr. Hoover in committee and on the floor of the Senate. The Senate also fixed the price of wheat at $2.00 a bushel and wrote into the bill authority for the President to sell fuel, wheat, flour, meal, beans and potatoes whenever market conditions justified such control. The Senate passed the bill, 81 to 6, on Saturday, July 21, the bill then going to conference. The bill as passed creates a bipartisan committee of five senators and five congressmen, which is to "safeguard the expenditure of appropriations bearing upon the war as made by Congress."

CHANCELLOR ADDRESSES REICHSTAG. The German Reichstag on July 20 passed by a vote of 214 to 116 the peace resolution outlined in last week's Christian Herald. Following this vote Chancellor Michaelis addressed the Reichstag repeating the declaration of his predecessor that the war had been forced upon Germany and the use of the submarine also. He declared that the submarine "impaired England's economic life and the conduct of war month to month in a growing degree." He reported the military situation as very good and declared that the great Anglo-French spring offensive had been shattered. Referring to America he said: "We look without serious concern upon the optimistic sentiment in the Entente countries caused by America's intervention." Turning to the question of peace he said: "Germany did not desire the war in order to make violent conquests and would not continue the war a day longer merely for the sake of such conquests if it could obtain honorable peace." He indicated that Germany would make peace only as a victor and said "no parley is possible with the enemy demanding possession of German soil." He declared his sympathy with the Reichstag peace resolution, admitted the serious food situation in the empire, which he expected to be relieved by the coming crop, and declared his adherence to the Emperor's new program of reform. He closed with the statement: "What we long to attain is a new and splendid Germany, not a Germany which wishes, as our enemies believe, to terrorize the world; no, the morally purified, God-fearing, loyal, peaceable and mighty Germany which we all love; . . . for this Germany we shall fight our way through despite all force."

Continued on page 823

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are, Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second class Matter

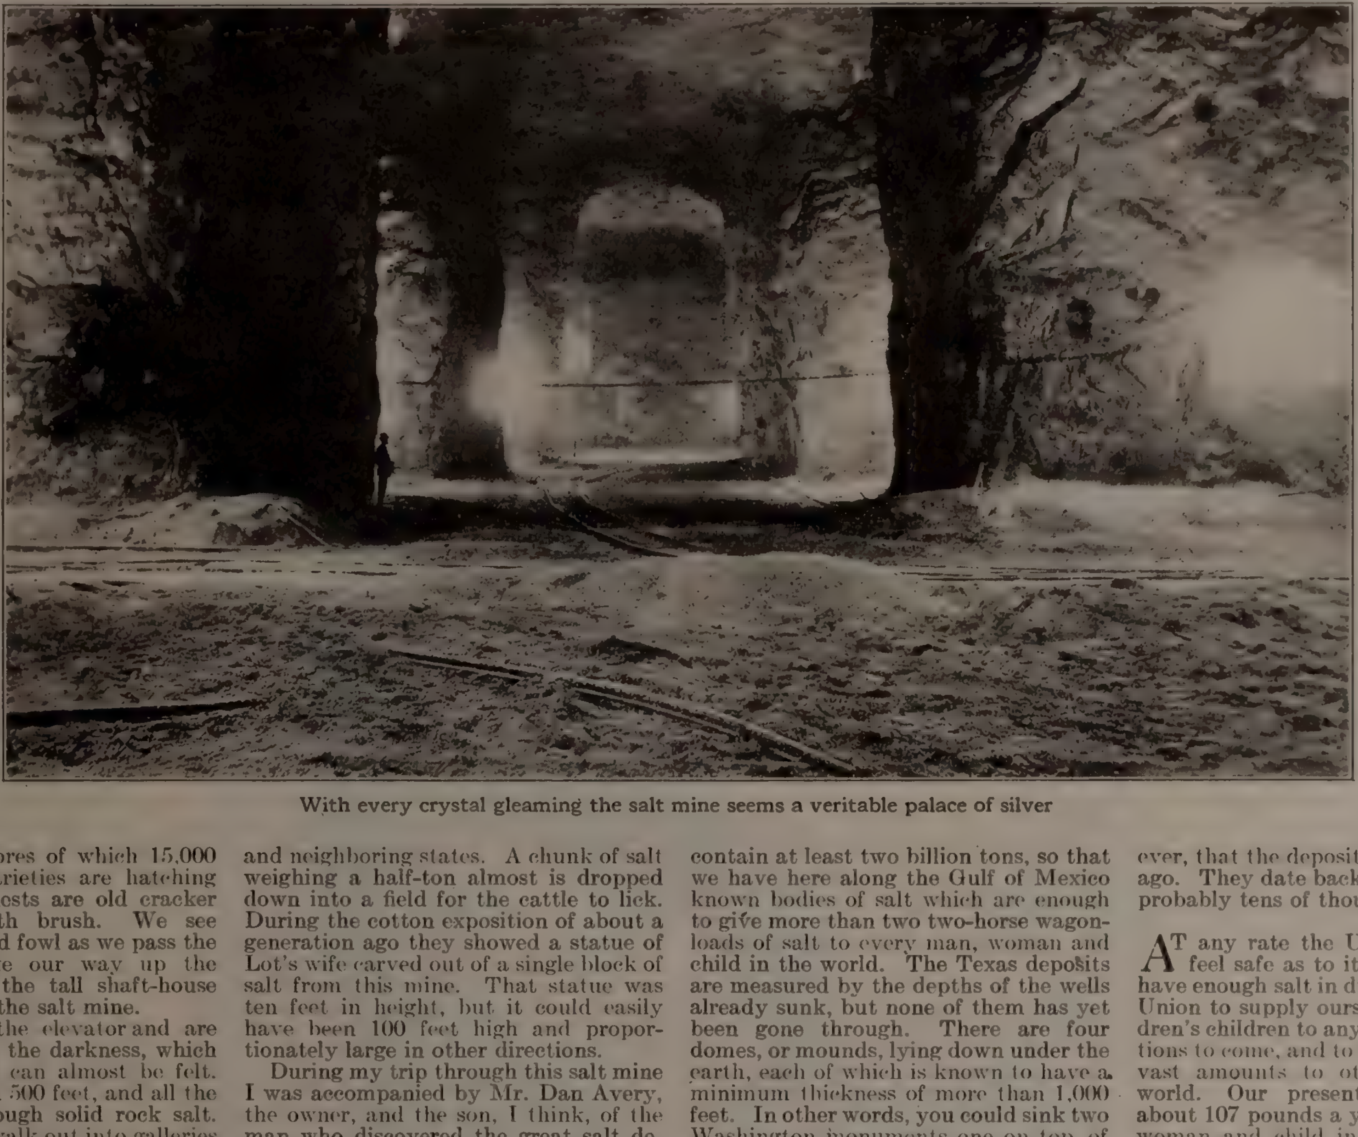
Entered as Second class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Uncle Sam's Huge Salt Supply

Underground Caves That Gleam Like Palaces of Silver—By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

CLIMB into the airplane of your imagination and fly with me to the northern coast of the Gulf of Mexico. Sight your machine for a point about 125 miles west of New Orleans and about eight miles south of New Iberia, on the Southern Pacific Railway. Pick out of the marshy plain the hill known as Avery Island and drop gently down so as not to frighten the birds. We are now in Longfellow's "Evangeline" country, and in one of the great bird homes of the world. What is more important, we are right above a mountain of the purest rock salt. It contains enough of the mineral to salt the tails of all the birds upon earth, to preserve all the meat and fish and other food products we shall send to our Allies in Europe. It contains enough to furnish all the salt we need for munitions and fertilizers and other industrial uses.



With every crystal gleaming the salt mine seems a veritable palace of silver

We leave our airplane at McIlhenny Station and go by great ponds inclosed in wire netting, on the shores of which 15,000 ducks of many varieties are hatching their eggs. The nests are old cracker boxes covered with brush. We see geese and other wild fowl as we pass the preserve and make our way up the mound or hill to the tall shaft-house which stands over the salt mine.

Here we enter the elevator and are dropped down into the darkness, which is so thick that it can almost be felt. We have descended 500 feet, and all the way has been through solid rock salt. At the bottom we walk out into galleries walled with salt and make our way through one vast chamber after another, all cut out of this crystal white rock. The galleries are so wide that two Pullman trains could be run through any one of them without touching. The ceilings are sixty feet high, and each of the great rooms has a cubic capacity equal to that of a five-story house. There are scores of such rooms, and they are connected by railroads, upon which the pure salt, which has been blasted down with dynamite and broken up with picks, chisels and sledges, is carried upon cars to the shaft.

THERE comes a car now. It contains three tons of this crystal white rock. The white shows out in contrast with the bare brown skin of the half-naked negro who is driving the mule. More than one million tons of salt have already been taken out of this mine. It has been blasted out of these mighty chambers, the roofs of which are upheld by posts of solid salt forty feet thick. The mine is a vast checker-board of such rooms, the squares of which are these chambers with the posts at the corners.

Now stop and look about you. We seem to be in a palace of silver, the walls of which sparkle with diamonds. The white crystals throw back the light and everywhere we look the walls glisten and shine. We walk slowly. The carpet of this vast subterranean palace is this thick layer of ground salt. It is like walking over a dry sandy beach. We sink into the salt half-way to our shoe tops. We cannot walk fast.

Here is a spot where they have just finished blasting. Some of the lumps are as big as a cart. There is one that weighs a half dozen tons. Some of these lumps are sold to the ranchers of Texas and neighboring states. A chunk of salt weighing a half-ton almost is dropped down into a field for the cattle to lick. During the cotton exposition of about a generation ago they showed a statue of Lot's wife carved out of a single block of salt from this mine. That statue was ten feet in height, but it could easily have been 100 feet high and proportionately large in other directions.

During my trip through this salt mine I was accompanied by Mr. Dan Avery, the owner, and the son, I think, of the man who discovered the great salt deposit. He tells me that they have already gone down through the salt with diamond drills to a depth of more than 2,000 feet without reaching the bottom. The island is underlaid with a great block of salt which is about two miles long, half a mile wide and almost half a mile deep. This salt is joined together in one great rock and by chemical analysis it is more than 99.8 per cent. pure. I have chipped off pieces of it. They look like the finest quartz and much like rock candy. The salt crystals are of different sizes. Some are as large as a marrowfat pea, others as big as my fist and larger.

THIS is only one of the great salt mounds of southern Louisiana. Four others are known to exist, the five forming a great row of mounds, which begin at the mouth of the Atchafalaya River and run westward through the marshes at wide intervals apart. The first is Belle Isle, the next Cote Blanche, the third Avery Island, the fourth Weeks Island, and the last the one which Joseph Jefferson owned and where he had his winter home. They are now mining salt on Weeks Island, and the block there is said to contain something like six billion tons of pure white rock. The depth of the deposit is unknown. The shafts have already gone down six or seven hundred feet and the bottom is still to be reached.

There are vast deposits of similar salt just across the boundary of Louisiana in Texas. I have before me a report made by Professor E. T. Dumble, who was formerly the state geologist. He has investigated the salt deposits near the Southern Pacific Railroad, and he estimates that they alone contain more than 1,500 million tons of pure salt. The Avery Islands deposit is supposed to contain at least two billion tons, so that we have here along the Gulf of Mexico known bodies of salt which are enough to give more than two two-horse wagonloads of salt to every man, woman and child in the world. The Texas deposits are measured by the depths of the wells already sunk, but none of them has yet been gone through. There are four domes, or mounds, lying down under the earth, each of which is known to have a minimum thickness of more than 1,000 feet. In other words, you could sink two Washington monuments one on top of the other into these salt beds, and they would not reach the bottom.

THE salt mines here at Avery Island were first known when George Washington was still serving as President of the United States. It was in 1791 that a hunter and trapper named John Hays found here a salt spring, the brine of which was so thick that it could be boiled down into salt.

It was during the war of 1812, when salt was high on account of our war with Great Britain, that a small salt works was erected near the salt spring. Almost fifty years later, when Judge D. D. Avery was the owner of the Island, another big rise in salt occurred on account of the Civil War. This caused Mr. Avery to make salt by boiling the water. The salt rose as high as $15 a barrel, and both Confederates and Federals depended upon Louisiana for a part of their supply.

It was at this time that John M. Avery sent negro workmen to deepen the wells, and one of them came back saying he had stuck a sunken log and could go no farther. Mr. Avery investigated and the solid bed of rock salt was discovered. Since then they have been mining salt here more or less continuously, and as a result have outlined the great block of salt which I have described. During the excavation they have discovered the bones of mastodons here and there in the salt, and with them Indian crockery ornamented with circles and an imitation of basket work.

There are different theories as to the origin of the salt. Dr. Dumble says that for a long time it was supposed that it came from large lagoons lying along the Gulf of Mexico. These lagoons were protected from the tides by low sandbars, but the storms filled them with sea water. The hot sun evaporated the water and thus built up layer after layer of salt, until this enormous thickness was reached. One objection to this theory is that sea water is not pure sodium chloride, or common salt, and there is a great deal of lime and gypsum on top of the salt deposits. Another theory is that the mounds were caused by currents of hot saline solutions forced up through the earth. These solutions cooled as they came in contact with the colder strata and the salt crystals were formed. There is no doubt, however, that the deposits were formed ages ago. They date back for thousands and probably tens of thousands of years.

AT any rate the United States may feel safe as to its salt supply.' We have enough salt in different parts of the Union to supply ourselves and our children's children to any number of generations to come, and to enable us to export vast amounts to other parts of the world. Our present consumption is about 107 pounds a year for every man, woman and child in the country. It amounts to about ten pounds per week for every family, and a large part of this goes into manufactures such as the packing of meat and in other preservative works which are now important on account of the war. The salt mined in 1915 was valued at the average price of 31 cents a barrel, or in the neighborhood of one-tenth of a cent per pound. We used a little less than $12,000,000 worth that year.

That salt came from fourteen different states, and it was sold in all grades, from the big lumps used for the salting of cattle to the finest of dairy and table salts. More than two-thirds of the product came from the salt wells of Michigan and New York. Almost 6,000,000 barrels came from Ohio, while the mines of Kansas supplied almost 3,000,000. More than a million tons came from California, and there was quite a lot manufactured on the shores of the Great Salt Lake.

THE Great Salt Lake is six times as salty as the oceans, and the Dead Sea has far more saline matter than the Great Salt Lake. Nevertheless, the waters of the oceans have so much mineral salt that the amount is beyond human comprehension. The scientists who have made chemical analyses of sea water estimate that every 100

Continued on page 825

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER Author of "Pollyanna"

Copyright, 1917, by Eleanor H. Porter

CHAPTER XX

THE CURTAIN RISES

IT was, indeed, quite "easy"—surprisingly so, as the doctor soon found out. Not without some trepidation, however, had he taken the train for Dalton the next morning and presented his proposition to the master of Denby House.

"I think I've found your private secretary," he began blithely, hoping that his pounding heart-throbs did not really sound like a drum.

"You have? Good! What's her name? Somebody you know?" questioned Burke Denby, with a show of interest.

"Yes. She's a Miss Darling, and I've known her family for years." (The doctor gulped and swallowed a bit convulsively. The doctor was feeling that the very walls of the room must be shouting aloud his secret—but he kept bravely on.) "She doesn't know shorthand, but she can typewrite, and she's very quick at taking dictation in long hand, I fancy; and she knows several languages, I believe. I'm sure you'll find her capable and trustworthy in every way."

"Very good! Sounds well, sure," smiled Burke. "And here, for my needs, speed and shorthand are not so necessary. I do only personal business at the house. What salary does she want?"

So unexpected and disconcerting was this quite natural question that the doctor, totally unprepared for it, nearly betrayed himself by his confusion.

"Eh? Er—ah—oh, why didn't they—I might have known—" he floundered. Then, sharply, he recovered himself. "Well, really," he laughed lightly, "I quite forgot to ask what salary she did expect. But I don't believe that will matter materially. She'll come for what is right, I'm sure; and you'll be willing to pay that."

"Oh, yes; it doesn't matter. I'll be glad to give her a trial, anyway; and if she's all you crack her up to be I'll pay her more than what's right. When can she come? Where does she live?"

"Well, she's going to live here in Dalton," evaded the doctor cautiously. "She's not here yet; but she and her mother are coming—er—next week, I believe. Better not count on her beginning work till the first, though, perhaps. That'll be next week Thursday. I should think they ought to be—er—settled by that time." The doctor drew a long breath, much after the fashion of a man who has been crossing a bit of particularly thin ice.

"All right. Send her along. The sooner the better," nodded Burke, the old listless weariness coming back to his eyes. "I certainly need—some one to help me."

"Oh, well, I reckon you'll have—some one, now," caroled the doctor, so jubilantly that it brought a frown of mild wonder to Burke Denby's face.

Later, the doctor, still jubilant and confident, hurried down the Denby walk intent on finding the "modest little apartment" for Helen.

Finding a satisfactory little furnished apartment, not too far from the Denby home, proved to be no small task. But by sacrificing a little on the matter of distance, the doctor was finally enabled to engage one that he thought would answer.

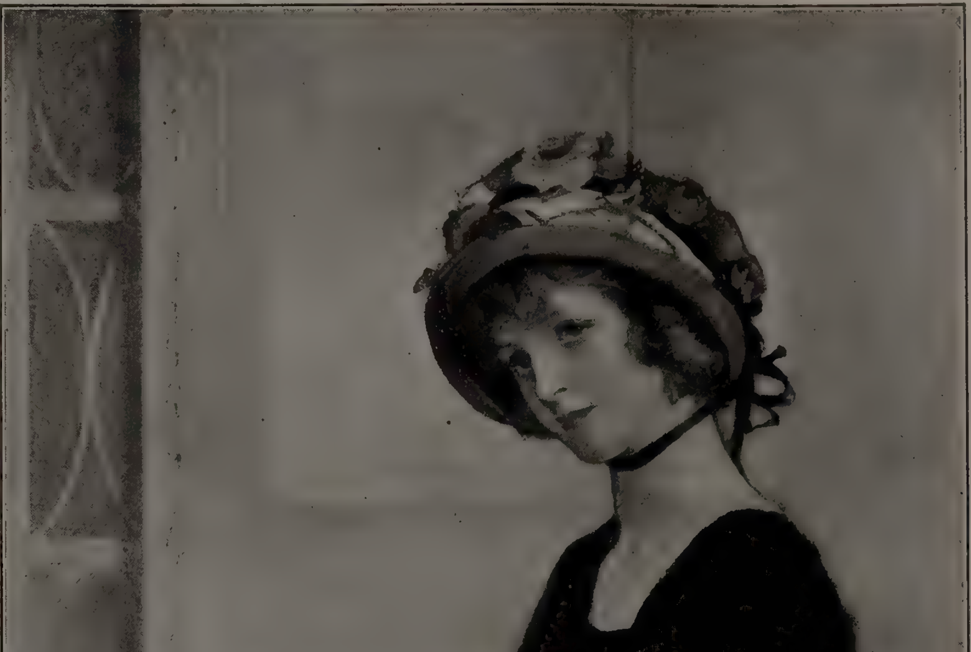
"Only she'll have to ride back and forth, I'm afraid," he muttered to himself, as he started for the station to take his train.

On Monday Helen Denby and her daughter went to Dalton. At Helen's urgent insistence the doctor refrained from accompanying them.

"I don't want you to be seen with us," Helen had protested.

"But why not?" he had argued rebelliously. "I thought I was a friend of your family for years."

"I know; but I—I just feel that I'd rather not have you with us. I prefer to go alone, please," she had begged. And perforce he had let her have her own way.



"So I rang the bell"

IT was on a beautiful day in late September that Helen Denby and her daughter arrived at the Dalton station. Helen, fearful either that her features would be recognized, or that she would betray by word or look her knowledge of the place, and so bring an amazed question to Betty's lips, had drawn a heavy veil over her face. Betty, cheerily interested in everything she saw, kept up a running fire of comment.

"And so this is Dalton! What a funny little station—and for so big a place, too! It seemed to be big, as we came into it. Is Dalton a large town, mother?"

"Why, rather large. It used to be —that is, it must be a good deal over fifteen thousand now, I suppose," murmured the mother, speaking very unconcernedly.

"Then you've been here before?"

Helen, realizing that already she had made one mistake, suddenly became convinced that safety—and certainly tranquillity of mind—lay in telling the truth—to a certain extent.

"Oh, yes, I was here years ago. But the place is much changed, I fancy," she answered lightly. "Come, dear, we'll take a taxi. But first I want a paper. I want to look at the advertisements for a maid, and——"

She had almost reached the news-stand when, to Betty's surprise, she turned sharply about and walked the other way.

"Why, mother, I thought you said you wanted a paper!" cried Betty, hurrying after her and plucking at her arm.

"But I didn't—I don't—I've changed my mind. I won't get it, after all, just now. I'd rather hurry right home."

She spoke rapidly, almost feverishly; and Betty noticed that she engaged the first cabby she saw, and seemed impatiently anxious to be off. What Betty did not know was that, as the taxi started, her mother whispered frenziedly to herself:

"That was—that was—Mrs. Cobb. She's older and grayer, but she's got Mrs. Cobb's eyes and nose. And the wart! I'd know that wart anywhere. And to think how near I came to speaking to her!"

It was a short drive, and Helen and her daughter were soon in the apartment the doctor had found for them. To Helen it looked like a haven of refuge, indeed. Her near encounter with Mrs. Cobb at the station had somewhat unnerved her. But with four friendly walls to protect her, and with no eyes but her daughter's in sight, Helen drew a long breath of relief, and threw off her veil, hat, and coat.

"Oh, isn't this dear!" she exclaimed, sinking into a chair, and looking admiringly about the pretty rooms. "And just think—this is home, our home! Oh, dearie, we're going to be happy here, I'm sure."

"Of course we are! And it is lovely here." The words were all right, but voice and eyes showed a trace of uneasiness.

"Why, dearie, don't you like it?" asked the girl's mother anxiously.

"Yes, oh, yes; I like it all—here. It's only that I was thinking, all of a sudden, about that Mr. Denby. I was wondering if I should like it there—with him."

"I think you will, dear."

"But it'll all be so new and—and different from what I've been used to. Don't you see?"

"Of course, my dear; but that's the way we grow—by encountering things new and different, you see. But come, we've got lots of things new and different right here that we haven't even seen yet. I'm going hunting for a wardrobe," finished the mother lightly, springing to her feet and picking up her hat and coat.

It was a pretty little apartment of five rooms up one flight, convenient, and tastefully furnished.

"I don't think even Burke could find fault with this," thought Helen, a bit wistfully, as her eyes lingered on the soft colorings and harmonious blendings of rugs and hangings. Aloud she said:

"Dear me! I feel just like a little girl with a new doll-house, don't you?"

"Yes; and when our trunks come, and we get our photographs and things out, it will be lovely, won't it?"

Helen, at one of the windows, gave a sudden exclamation.

"Why, Betty, from this window we can see——"

"See what?" cried Betty, hurrying to the window, as her mother's words came to an abrupt halt.

"The city, dear, so much of it, and—and all those beautiful houses over there," stammered Helen. "See that church with the big dome, and the tall spire next it; and all those trees—that must be a park," she hurried on, pointing out anything and everything but the one big old colonial house with its tall pillars that stood out so beautifully fine and clear against the green of a wide lawn on the opposite hill.

"Oh-h! what a lovely view!" exclaimed Betty, at her side. "Why, I hadn't noticed it at all before, but we're on a hill ourselves, aren't we?"

"Yes, dear,—West Hill. That's what I think they used to call it."

HELEN was not at the window now. She had turned back into the room with almost an indifferent air. But afterwards, when Betty was busy elsewhere, she went again to the window and stood for long minutes motionless, her eyes on the big old house on the opposite hill.

Getting settled was much the same thing that getting settled is always apt to be. There were the same first scrappy, unsatisfying meals, the same slow-emerging order from seemingly hopeless confusion, the same shifting of one's belongings from shelf to drawer and back again.

Much to Betty's disapproval, her mother early announced her intention of doing without a maid.

"Oh, but, mother, dear, you shouldn't. Besides, I thought you said you were going to have one."

"I thought at first I would, but I've changed my mind. There will be just us two, and I'd rather have a stout woman come twice a week for the laundry and cleaning. With you gone all day I shall need something—to take up my mind."

Betty said more, much more; but to no purpose. It was then that into Betty's mind came a shrewd suspicion, but she did not give it voice. When evening came, however, she did ask some questions.

"Mother, how did we happen to come up here, to Dalton?"

"Happen to come up—here?" Helen was taken by surprise.

"Yes. What made us come here?"

"Why, I—I wanted to be near to make a home for you, of course, while you were at work."

"But why am I going to work?"

Helen stirred restlessly.

"Why, my dear, I've told you. I think every girl should have something whereby she could earn her bread, if it were necessary. And when this chance came, through Dr. Gleason, I thought it was just the thing for you to do."

Indifferently Betty asked two or three other questions. Then, as if still casually, she uttered the one question that had been the purpose of the whole talk.

"Mother, have we very much—money?"

"Why, no, dear, not so very much. But I wouldn't worry about the money."

The answer had come promptly and with a reassuring smile. But Betty tossed both the promptness and the reassuring smile into the limbo of disdain. Betty had her answer. She was convinced now. Her mother was poor—very poor. That was why there was to be no maid. That was why she herself was to go as secretary to this Mr. Denby the next day. Mother, poor, dear mother, was poor! As if now she cared whether she liked the place or not! As if she would not be glad to work her fingers off for her mother!"

CHAPTER XXI

The Play Begins

"I SHALL take you over, myself," said Helen to her daughter as they rose from the breakfast table that first day of October. "And I shall show you carefully just how to come back this afternoon; but I'm afraid I shall have to let you come back alone, dear. In the first place, I shouldn't know when you were ready; and in the second place, I shouldn't want to go and wait for you."

"Of course not!" cried Betty. "You don't even have to go with me. I can find out by asking."

"No, I shall go with you." Betty noticed that her mother's cheeks were very pink and her eyes very bright. "Don't forget the doctor's letter; and remember, dear, just be—be your own dear sweet self."

"Why, mother, you're—crying!" exclaimed the dismayed Betty.

"Crying? Not a bit of it!" The head came proudly erect.

"But does it mean so much to you that I—that I—that he—likes me?" asked Betty softly.

The next moment, alarmed and amazed, she found her mother's convulsive arms about her, her mother's trembling voice in her ears.

"It'll mean all the world to me, Betty—oh, Betty, my baby!"

"Why, mother!" exclaimed the girl, aghast and shaken.

But already her mother had drawn herself up, and was laughing through her tears.

"Dear, dear, but only look at the fuss this old mother-bird is making for the first flight of her young one!" she chattered gayly. "Come, no more of this! We'll be late. We'll get ready right away. You say you have the letter from the doctor. Don't forget that."

"No, I won't. I have it all safe," tossed the girl over her shoulder, as she hurried away for her hat and coat. A minute later she came back to find her mother shrouding herself in the black veil. "Oh, mother, dear, please! You aren't going to wear that horrid veil to-day, are you?" she remonstrated.

"Why, yes, dear. Why not?"

"I don't like it a bit. And it's so thick! I can't see a bit of you through it."

"Can't you? Good!" (Vaguely Betty wondered at the almost gleeful tone of the voice.) "Then nobody can see my eyes—and know that I've been crying."

"Ho! they wouldn't, anyway," frowned Betty. "Your eyes aren't red at all, mother."

But the mother only laughed again gleefully—and fastened the veil with still another pin.

IT was not a long ride to the foot of the street that led up the hill to Burke Denby's home. With carefully minute directions as to the return home at night, Helen left her daughter halfway up the hill, with the huge wrought-iron gates of the Denby driveway just before her.

"And now remember everything—everything, dear," she faltered, clinging a little convulsively to her daughter's arm. "Dear, dear, but I'm not sure I ought to let you go—after all," she choked.

"Nonsense, mumsey! Of course you ought to let me go!"

"Then you must remember to tell me everything—when you come home to-night—everything. I shall want to know every single little thing that's happened!"

"I will, dear, I will. And don't worry. I'm sure I'm going to do all right," comforted the girl, plainly trying to quiet the fear in her mother's voice. "Now, don't worry!" she finished with a gay wave of her hand as she turned and sped up the hill.

The mother, with a last lingering look and a sob fortunately smothered in the enshrouding veil, turned and hurried away in the opposite direction.

Many times before Betty's return late that afternoon, Helen wondered that a day, just one little day, could be so long. It seemed to her that each minute was an hour, and each hour a day, so slowly did the clock tick the time away. She tried to work, to sew, to read. But there seemed really nothing that she wanted to do except to stand at one of the windows, her eyes on the massive, white-pillared old house set in its wide sweep of green on the opposite hill.

What was happening over there? Was there a possible chance that Burke would question, suspect, discover—anything? How would he like—Betty? How would Betty like him? How would Betty do, anyway, in such a position? It was Betty's first experience in—in working for any one; and Betty had something of the Denby will and temper, as her mother had long since discovered. If she did not like—but what was happening over there?

And what would the outcome be? After all, perhaps, as the doctor had said, it was something of a comic opera and farce all in one—this thing she was doing. It was a fearsome thing—to take matters in her own hands as she had done, and attempt to twist the thread in Fate's hands, and wrest it away from what she feared was destruction—as if her own puny fingers could deal with Destiny!

And might it not be, after all, that she had been chasing a will-o'-the-wisp of fancied "culture" all these years? True, she no longer said "swell" and "grand," and she knew how to eat her soup quietly; but was that going to make Burke—love her? She realized that during these intervening years there had come to her a very real sense of what love, marriage, and a happy home ought to mean—and what they must mean if she were ever to be happy with Burke, or to make him happy.

But what was taking place—over there?

AT ten minutes before five Betty reached home. Her mother met her half-way down the stairs.

"Oh, Betty, you—you are here!" she panted. "Now, tell me everything—every single thing," she reiterated, almost dragging the girl into the apartment, in her haste and excitement. "Don't skip anything—not the least little thing; for a little thing might mean so much—to me."

"Why, mother!" exclaimed Betty, her laughing eyes growing vaguely troubled. "Do you really care so much?"

With a sudden tightening of the throat Helen pulled herself up sharply. She gave a light laugh.

"Care? Of course I care! Don't you suppose I want to know what my baby has been doing all the long day away from me? Now, tell me. Sit right down and tell me from the beginning."

"All right, I will," smiled Betty. To herself she said: "Poor mother! As if I wouldn't work my fingers off before I'd fail her, when she cares so much—when she needs so much—what I earn!" Then, aloud, cheerily, she began:

"Well, first, I walked up that long, long walk through that beautiful lawn to the house; but for a minute I didn't ring the bell. It was so beautiful—the view from that veranda, with the sun on the reds and browns and yellows of the trees everywhere! Then I remembered suddenly that I hadn't come to make a call and admire the view, but that I was a business woman now. So I rang the bell."

"Yes, yes. And were you—frightened, dear?"

"Well, 'nervous,' we'll call it. Then, as I was planning just what to say, the door opened and the oldest little old man I ever saw stood before me."

"Yes, go on!"

"He was the butler, I found out afterward. They called him Benton. He seemed surprised, somehow, to see me, or frightened, or something. Anyway, he started queerly, as his eyes met mine, and he muttered a quick something under his breath: but all I could hear was the last: 'No, no, it couldn't be!'"

"Yes—yes!" breathed Helen, her face a little white.

"The next minute he became so stiff and straight and dignified that even his English cousin might have envied him. I told him I was Miss Darling, and that I had a note to Mr. Denby from Dr. Gleason.

"'Yes, Miss. The master is expecting you. He said to show you right in. This way, please,' he said then, pompously. And then I saw that great hall. Oh, mother, if you could see it! It's wonderful, and so full of treasures! I could hardly take off my hat and coat properly, for devouring a superb specimen of old armor right in front of me. Then Benton took me into the library, and I saw—something even more wonderful."

"You mean your—er—Mr. Denby?" The mother's face was aglow.

Betty gave a merry laugh.

"Indeed, I don't! Oh, he was there, but he was no wonder, mother, dear. The wonder was cabinet after cabinet filled with jades and bronzes and carved ivories and Babylonian tablets and—But I couldn't begin to tell you! I couldn't even begin to see for myself, for, of course, I had to say something to Mr. Denby."

"Of course! And tell me—what was he—he like?"

"Oh, he was just a man, tall and stern-looking, and a little gray. He's old, you know. He isn't young at all"—spoken with all the serene confidence of Betty's eighteen years. "He has nice eyes, and I imagine he'd be nice, if he'd let himself be. But he won't."

"Why, Betty, what—what do you mean?"

Betty laughed and shrugged her shoulders.

"Oh, mother, dear, you'd have to see him really to know. It's just that—that he's so used to having his own way that he takes it as a matter of course."

"Oh, my dear!"

"But he does. It shows up in everything that everybody in that house does. I could see that, even in this one day I was there. Benton, Sarah (the maid), Mrs. Gowing (the old cousin housekeeper) even the dog and the cat show that they've stood at attention for Master Burke Denby all their lives. You just wait till I get my chance. I'll show him somebody that isn't standing at salute all the time."

"Betty!" There was real horror in the woman's voice this time.

Again Betty's merry laugh rang out.

"Don't look so shocked, dearie. I shan't do anything or say anything to imperil my—my job." (Betty's eyes twinkled even more merrily over the last word.) "It's just that I don't think any living man has a right to make everybody so afraid of him as Mr. Denby very plainly has done. And I only mean that if the occasion ever came up, I should let him know that I am not afraid of him."

"Oh, Betty, Betty, be careful, be careful. I beg of you, be careful!"

"Oh, I will. Don't worry," laughed the girl. "But, listen, don't you want me to go on with my story?"

"Yes—oh, yes!"

"Well, where was I? Oh, I know—just inside the library door. Very good, then. Ruthlessly suppressing my almost overwhelming longing to pounce on one of those alluring cabinets, I advanced properly and held out my note to Mr. Denby. As I came near I fancied that he, too, gave a slight start as he looked sharply into my face; and I thought I caught a real gleam of life in his eyes. The next instant it was gone, however (if indeed it had ever been there!), and he had taken my note and waved me politely to a chair."

"Yes, go on, go on!"

"Yes; well, do you know?—that's exactly what I felt like saying to him," laughed Betty softly. "He just glanced at the note with a low ejaculation; then he sat there staring at nothing for so long that I began to think I should scream from sheer nervousness. Then, perhaps I stirred a little. At all events, he turned with a start, and then is when I saw, for just a minute, how kind his eyes could be.

"'There, there, my child, I beg your pardon,' he cried. 'I quite forgot you were here. Something—your eyes, I think—set me to dreaming. Now to business! Perhaps you'll be good enough to take some letters for me. You'll find pencils, pen, and paper there at your right.' And I did. And I began. And that's all."

"All! But surely there was more!"

"Not much. I took dictation in long hand for perhaps a dozen letters—most of them short ones. He said he was behind on his personal correspondence. Then he went away and left me. He goes down to his office at the Denby Iron Works every forenoon, I understand.

"At one o'clock he came back. I had the letters all done, and they looked lovely. I was rather proud of them. I passed them over for him to sign, and waited expectantly for a nice little word of commendation—which I didn't get."

"Oh, but I'm sure he didn't—didn't realize that—that——"

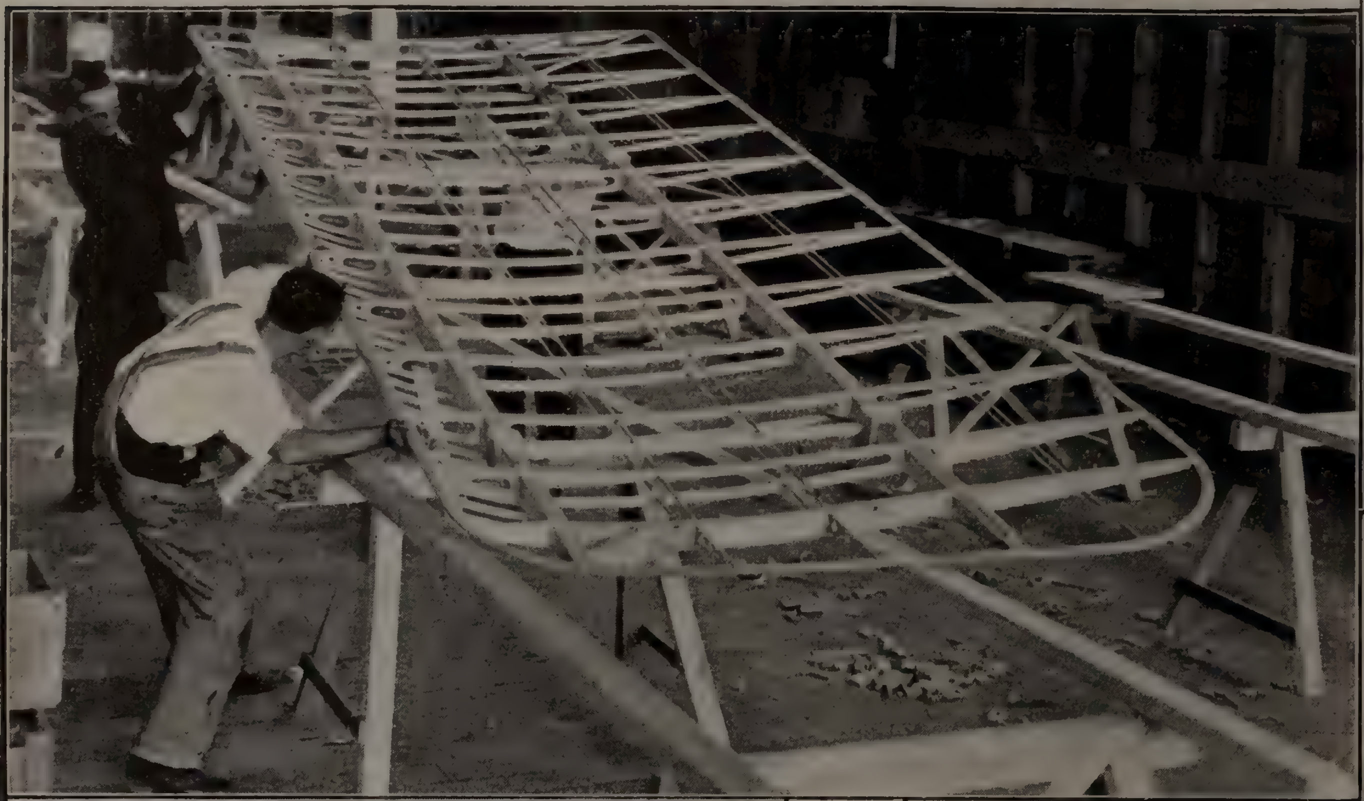
"Oh, no, he didn't realize, of course, that this was my maiden effort at private secretarying," laughed Betty, a little ruefully, "and that I wanted to be patted on the head with a 'Well done, little girl!' He just shoved them back for me to fold and put in the envelopes; and just then Benton came to announce luncheon."

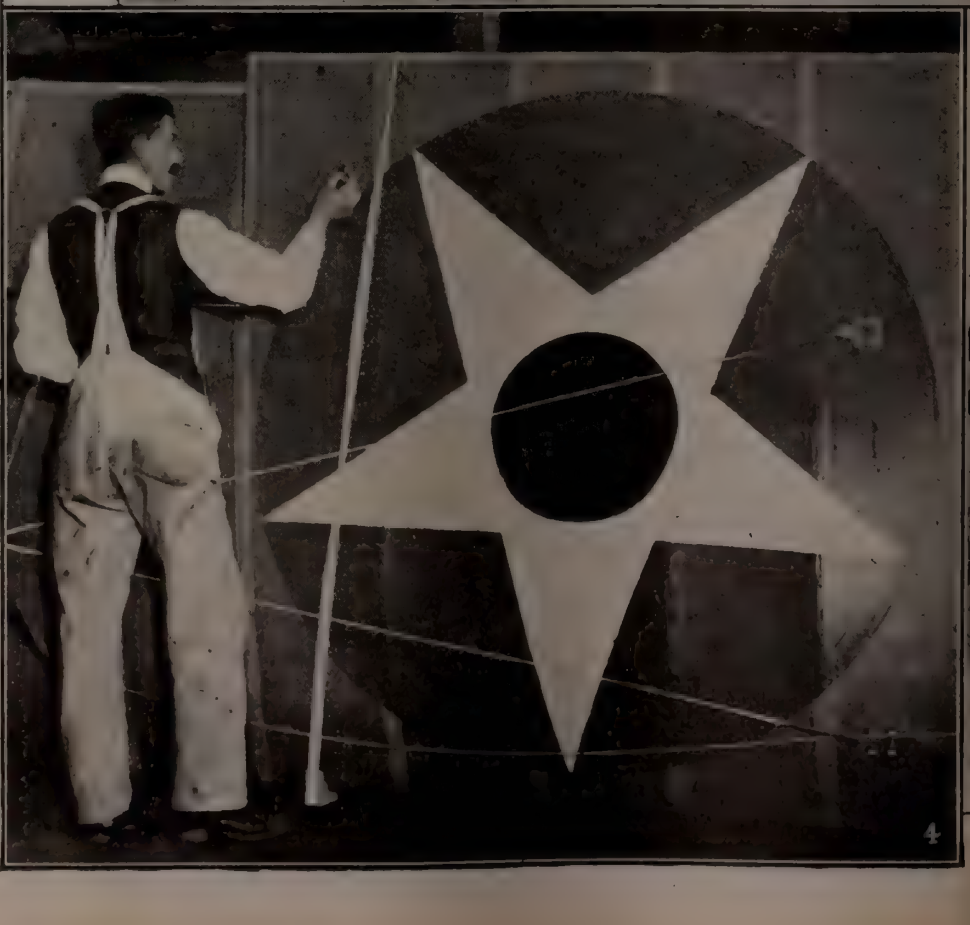
"But tell me about the luncheon."

"There isn't much to tell. There

Continued on page 825

Uncle Sam Prepares for Aerial Warfare





IN NO service connected with the world conflict is competition so fierce as in the air service. Military experts appear to agree that the contender who gains and holds supremacy in the air will have an advantage that will make victory possible. The United States is planning a great air fleet of many thousands of swift machines and is training men to make it effective. We don't know how big this fleet will be, but they promise it will be big enough. These pictures show parts of the process of building machines and men into an aero corps.

6

DESCRIPTION OF THE PHOTOGRAPHS

No. 1. The strong but delicate skeleton of the wing which supports the entire weight of the airplane. No. 2. The compact body or "fuselage" ready to be crated for shipment. No. 3. The rudder, striped red, white and blue, to show to friend or foe that the machine is American. No. 4. The great star on the wing, the insignia used to distinguish American from allied machines. No. 5. Students learning the semaphore signals, an important item in their equipment as "eyes for the army." No. 6. A student leaving in a seaplane for a trial flight, with instructor. No. 7. Activities we will combat. A German airman going aboard a submarine in the North Sea to make a report. No. 8. An aeroplane instructor explaining to students the correct way to overcome tilting

7

8

ht. rnational Film Service, Inc., New York City, all the others are from Kadel and Herbert, New York City

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The World for Democracy

A WAR that will make the world safe for democracy is not to be won by merely overthrowing enemy autocracies.

A change in the German and Austrian governments by which "empire" would be spelled "republic" and "kaiser" and "emperor" pronounced "president" would not democratize the world. Mere changes of forms and titles mean little. Anyway, there are more kings and emperors among the Entente than among the Teuton allies. Democracy in name and claim is one thing, but democracy in fact is quite another.

There are two great essentials to the true democratization of the world.

One is the assured freedom of speech and press among all the peoples.

The other is restraint from declaration of aggressive war by any nation except by a majority vote of its people.

Change the kaiser's title to that of president, but if he retains the power to declare war and to suppress the public voice and will, he remains an autocrat still, a tyrant to his people and a menace to the peace of the world.

The British Prime Minister in his telegram to the Russian democracy said: "There can be no lasting peace until the responsibility of governments to their peoples is clearly established from one end of Europe to the other."

That is a good statement. "Responsibility of governments to their peoples," if it can be realized in fact and not merely in phrases high-sounding but empty, will mean world-liberation, with unbroken peace and unhindered progress. It is a welcome reversal of the phrase, "responsibility of the people to the government," of which the world has had a sickening surfeit for three dreadful years. The one means war, with all its injustices and censored horrors. The other means peace, with all its liberties and boundless blessings.

In the midst of all the current talk of war for democracy it is rather startling to think that not a single one of the nations in the war is in it by the expressed consent of its people. In most there is the clearly expressed dissent of the people. The anti-conscription riots of our nearest neighbor, Canada, are but one form of expression of popular feeling which in some form or other is finding expression from every people involved. The peace talk of the people of Germany and Austria is the same peace talk that comes from the people of every other nation.

The peoples of the world want peace. They never wanted war. If the peoples today could speak and enforce their will the trenches would be deserted. If, even in the nations calling themselves democratic, democracy had expression and effect on this question, there would be peace.

Nothing else democracy stands to gain in this war is so important as the abolition of all power to declare war except by vote of the people. When that power ends, autocracy and war will end together. When wars can be declared only by the people themselves, neither war nor autocracy can be.

Prospect and Retrospect

AS the third anniversary of the great war approaches, men look eagerly to discern behind the murky storm-clouds a gleam of the silver lining. There are times when it would almost seem as if this most terrible visitation the world has ever known were destined to go on indefinitely. Yet in the heart of every Christian there is the knowledge that God is over all; that he is still able, as of old, to make "the wrath of man to praise him," and that he can make of this war, which is a punishment the nations brought upon themselves, a path to repentance and moral and spiritual restoration.

All war is wickedness and the fruit of sin. If the world had not lost its faith in God; if it had not forgotten the teachings of the blessed Redeemer; if the church and the nations had been Christian in truth and not in name only, there would not have been today the sound of universal lamentation in the earth.

Looking back over these three terrible years of unexampled suffering and horror, we find evidences that the minds of men everywhere are undergoing a change. In all the lands there is deep spiritual, social, political unrest. The peoples feel more than at any previous time the vital need of Christ and Christianity. And they are beginning to realize that if the principles taught by the Master were applied in the affairs of real life, and not regarded as beautiful but impracticable theories, they would forever banish war. Jesus was the great Peacemaker.

They have a deepening conviction, too, that there is need of the international mind and the cultivation of international thinking. We are learning from these years of bitter experience that all men are our neighbors, and that we should love them as we love our own, and hold them in as broad, generous, liberal regard. Selfishness is at the root of all wars. The age-long antagonism of races and nationalities is now an exploded error. Men feel that it is a duty to do the deeds of repentance and to plant the seeds of world-friendship. All are alike human brethren, and only through friendly cooperation and international goodwill can any nation expect to deserve future peace and happiness.

The war is stripping war, tyranny, despotism and autocracy of their fine trappings and theatrical veneer. It is revealing the cruel and arbitrary character of many of the world's rulers, who, "dressed in a little brief authority," do not hesitate to treat human life and human rights as things to be used, abused or sacrificed at will. If the nations profit by the terrible experience of human suffering and wrong in these three years, endured by the many at the behest of the few, the dawn of the new era of human rights will have begun. It's a long, hard road to man's freedom, but, if men learn well the lesson, we may reach the turning-point where the day of the rule of the few and the heartless and degrading subjugation of the multitudes will at last come to an end.

The human race is one. Its unity should be incontestable. "He hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth. . . . That they should seek after God, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being."

We pray that the church, in passing through the furnace of the war may be reborn to a higher plane of spiritual life, and that she may no longer have the narrow vision, but increase her usefulness and enlarge her borders. The church has had her lesson in the war, and it is a severe one; but it may prove salutary if it should energize her to her loyal mission of lifting up Christ as the world's only Hope.

The Anthem of the Flowers

IT must have been July or August when the seer of Bible times sang, "My beloved is gone down into his garden to gather lilies." What better time can there be to go into a garden, a field, a wood, or along the roadside, to see not only lilies but many other flowers at their best? Spring took away from us the formal tulip and hyacinth; the thickening lawn grasses now hide even the stem of the faded crocuses and snowdrops; but midsummer has brought us full recompense in the glory and colors of the old-fashioned favorites, the love of which is a blessed heritage. Here and there a few late roses, mainly of the lighter tints, are disappearing, so that with a resembling face the daughter buds may arise. Iris, in many shades of white and purple, holds its head proudly high, and defies the sun and sudden showers to ruffle the curved beauty of its petals. Marigolds of wild Arabian lineage blend their golden brown with many-hued sweet-williams. Where but in a sweet pea, or possibly in the newly developed snowdrop, would one expect a pinkish purple or a yellowish pink! What carmine compares with that of the hollyhock, and what purple is more deep and colorful! And midsummer brings us larkspur and foxglove and tall-spiked veronicas, blue as though the blue skies were reflected in their faces; with white candytuft and sweet alyssum, nestling at the foot of taller warm-red sweet-balm, and the roseate brownish yellow of gaillardia and coreopsis. Cannas begin to show color in the leafage, from coppery hue to lightest green, while dahlias are fully in bud, anxious to burst and add one more artistic touch to the setting of a midsummer garden.

Who that has ever reveled in a garden after a shower, or in the early morning, when leaf and bloom are heavy with dew, and has watched the bee industriously carry pollen, and the humming-bird drinking nectar out of nasturtium cups, or from sweet-balm and honeysuckle, does not realize the truth of the old saying that "Flowers preach to us if we will but hear"—preach of order, of grace, of grandeur, of loveliness? Yet the garden after all is merely the development and rearrangement on formal lines of the floral order of nature which we see in field and woodland. What gardener, be he successful as he may, could hope to rival those magnificent banked masses of verdure and blossom, the profusion of which appeals to the senses as no laboriously cultivated garden ever can? A bed of wild tiger-lilies, a hedge of wild roses, a daisy field, set by nature into the landscape, is an indispensable part of it and adds to its beauty. Our midsummer flowers, in spreading out their profusion of color and exhaling their varied perfumes, are lifting up an an anthem of bloom and fragrance which is acceptable to the Creator, who has blessed the earth so abundantly with their presence.

Home

IT may be mortgaged to grinding Poverty; the door may be unlatched to Anxiety, Want and Pain; sullen Sorrow may sit brooding at the hearthstone; but home is home!

In the middle Atlantic, about halfway on a straight line between Cape Town and Montevideo, there was heaved up in remote times by volcanic action a huge rock, the little island of Tristan da Cunha, bleak and barren, the vortex of fierce storms, the center of almost incessant rains, always enveloped by cloud, and shunned by ships, and yet for the last hundred years inhabited by a strange race made up of English, Dutch, Irish, Italians, Americans, cast ashore from time to time in shipwreck, or driven there by weariness of the busy world, and living on fish and the spoils of the wrecks that strew its coast.

These people, now about eighty in number, men, women and children, suffer hardships and deprivations almost inconceivable to residents of more favored lands.

Having no useful timber, their huts are unmortared piles of rough stones, thatched with grass.

The isle is so infested with rats from wrecked ships that any grain planted is eaten in the ground; and the only source of flour is passing vessels, which may be intercepted only by rowing many miles to sea.

There is no government of any sort, no school, no church.

The island has no future; the people have no prospect but of entombment there.

One would suppose that these unfortunates, intelligent, industrious, thrifty and temperate, as they are described to be, would gladly leave their rude huts, their terrible hardships, their barren fields, their pitiable poverty and hopelessness, to rejoin the comfortable world.

But no!

The British government has renewed its offers to remove them and their few possessions from the bleak island to any British soil they may choose and to give them means to start life anew.

Not one will consent to go.

There on the bleak island are their homes, and there they will stay.

Maybe, after all, one lot in life is not much better or worse than another, so far as real happiness goes; but there are some things that seem very necessary to us, and that little corner in God's creation we call home is one of them.

Plenty, comfort, luxuries, culture are good to have. But there is not enough of all these in all the world to recompense the loss of the simplest joys of the humblest home that is lit and warmed by love.

Prosperity is a precious blessing to those worthy of it and able to stand it. But all the wealth of mines and farms and factories cannot give such genuine and enduring satisfaction to the soul as does the wealth of love and faith and sacrifice that makes the home the heart's true haven.

The stately mansion, with its rich carpets, its rare pictures, and all the luxuries and baubles that money buys, cannot make a true home, unless love is its hearth-glow, fidelity the stout door that shuts out the world's coldness and wrongs, and faith the stanch roof that defies its storms.

Love, fidelity and faith are the only treasures indispensable to the real home of any heart. These in the humblest cottage—these, houseless beneath the bleak sky—these, shelterless, naked, starving—these make a happy home anywhere.

The real life is not outside ourselves, but within.

The real possessions are not what the hands may grasp, but what the heart holds.

A New Parable

A CERTAIN man had much land and many flocks. At the season of the year, he called his steward and said unto him: "Come thou with me and we will overlook the flocks; for behold all the flocks and behold all the young of the flocks. Let us see that the young are well fed, well bred and well led in right paths. For, lo, our wealth is with the young." So the master and his steward gave much time and many days to the care of the young, and they grew in strength and numbers until they filled the pastures of the valleys.

So must the young be cared for, if the Lord and Master is to rejoice over them. E. R. W.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Bumble Bee Stops U. S. Mail

THE United States mail was obstructed the other day, not by a submarine nor by robbers holding up a train, nor by bandits on the mountain trail, but by a bumble bee, which stunned the rural free delivery carrier in one of the towns in New York. The poison sank deep so suddenly that the carrier lapsed into insensibility and had to be hurried to the hospital, where the most strenuous efforts were necessary to save his life. The letter-carrier is one of the most useful and benevolent servants of the government, and it was a mean thing for the bee to wreak its vengeance on him. There were stinging insects among the Israelites that were very dangerous and deadly. God used the hornet to drive their enemies out before them. There is this reference to that fact: "And I sent the hornet before you, which drove them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; but not with thy sword, nor with thy bow." (Joshua 24 : 12.)

Saved 250,000 Babies

THE Metropolitan Board of Aldermen adopted a preamble and resolutions the other day, commending Nathan Straus for his establishment of milk stations in New York City. They stated that during the twenty-five years they have been in operation, the milk stations have saved the lives of 250,000 babies in the city. The resolutions are as follows: "Whereas this work has been so fruitful in results that it is estimated that a quarter of a million of babies have been saved from death in twenty-five years in this city alone, therefore be it resolved: That the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York congratulates the Hon. Nathan Straus on the rounding out of a full quarter of a century of his work of maintaining pasteurized milk depots in this city and felicitates him and the babies he has saved upon the beneficent results of this far-seeing philanthropy." Cities have bestowed honors upon men of bravery and military renown or upon those who have made some discovery in science or achieved some great success. But nothing is more beautiful and honorable than the recognition of twenty-five years of continuous devotion to the child. One of the most sublime and beautiful pictures in the history of Christ's life is the love he manifested for children when "he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them." (Mark 10 : 16.)

Airplane Fire Extinguishers

ALL the seven wonders of the world are exceeded by the marvelous scientific inventions of our own beloved America. Those who are three or four score years old often go back in their memories to the times when they were children and mark the wonderful progress made in every field of human endeavor. The oldest men of today remember when fires were extinguished by buckets of water handed up by chains of neighbors. Then came the little engine with the wooden bars on either side which the volunteers pumped up and down frantically to throw a stream through a tiny hose on the fire. A fire well under way used to laugh at those primitive fire-extinguishers and apparently fed on the water which it licked up from them. Then came the steam engine drawn by horses with the big hose and the heavy stream that would knock a man down. The horses knew they were going to the fire and were as anxious as men behind them to get there. And now comes the latest thing: An airplane fire-extinguisher, which has its illustration in Aero-truck No. 1, of the San Diego, Calif., fire department. It is a flying boat equipped with fire-extinguishers. It is said that the Municipal Aero Fire Brigade of San Diego is the only one in the United States. San Diego spreads out along a considerable expanse of water, with wharves and docks and amusement places on islands and bars in the harbor. The flying boat can go directly to the seat of trouble, and if it can not keep the air it can skim the surface of the bay. No department of progress is more important than that of saving life, as the firemen so often have to do, and in saving property, the result of human enterprise and labor. The Bible speaks of spiritual fires that do not go out. There are spiritual fires that can be extinguished. There is no conflagration that sin ever started in the human soul, however fierce, that cannot be extinguished by Christ's blood. Its agency is secured by faith which the worthies had, which "quenched the violence of fire." (Heb. 11 : 34.)

Left Workmen $1,000,000

THE other day Mr. John B. Pierce, of Peabody, Mass., said to have been the founder of the radiator business in the United States, died leaving an estate of $5,000,000. He left $1,000,000 outright to 400 of his employees who had been working for him continuously for the past fourteen years. To his associates and employees his will paid tribute for their "keen business ability, combined with a fine sense of honor, a high quality of integrity, and a conscientious and loyal devotion to the performance of duty," and for "their splendid spirit of co-operation." The residuary estate of $2,500,000 is left in trust, 40 per cent. of the income to go to the widow and two half-sisters and 60 per cent. to be distributed among the employees in the same ratio as the outright million-dollar bequest. After the deaths of the widow and sisters the principal of the trust fund is to be distributed among the employees. The will also provides a fund which is to be used for the John B. Pierce Foundation for technical research in heating, ventilating, and sanitation, "to the end that the general hygiene and comforts of human beings and their habitations may be advanced." There would be fewer strikes or labor troubles of any kind if employers treated their men with the same spirit, and few strikes or labor troubles if the employees everywhere were as loyal and competent, energetic and constant as those in Mr. Pierce's factory. Capital and labor are both necessary in the production of wealth, and the right spirit, and the fair adjustment between them will be the measure of the success and happiness of the industrial world. It is seldom that an employer puts so high an estimate on the relation of labor to amassing his fortune as Mr. Pierce. He recognized this law, which is underneath the material and the spiritual world: "For the laborer is worthy of his hire." (Luke 10 : 7.)

Did You Like the Sermon?

THE Epworth Outlook, organ of the Epworth Methodist Church of Cleveland, Ohio, has a caustic criticism on the question generally asked after church service: "Well, how did you like the sermon?" Among other things it says: "Asking that question has become a habit which it will probably take centuries to eradicate. It is a demon which can be cast out only by prayer and fasting. No wonder spiritual results of preaching are so meager. What can be expected from preaching unless laymen realize that they are to follow up the work of persuasion by driving home the word set forth by the preacher?"

The question, "How did you like the sermon?" is a perfectly legitimate one, and is generally asked not as an excuse to find fault, but as a reason for commendation and congratulation. There might be one sour-spirited individual that would ask the question as an excuse to growl and obstruct the influence of the sermon and the preacher, but there would be five others who would ask the question to say, "I think the sermon was excellent and it did me a world of good." Besides, the preacher is no Pope and no Czar that everything he might say from the pulpit is to be taken without any right of judgment or even of honest, friendly criticism. People in the pews, as a rule, are just as pious and loyal as the minister in the pulpit, and instead of undertaking to muzzle free speech in the church, the most successful minister is very glad to have the judgment of his most sensible and devoted friends as to the ability and availability, and real spiritual value of the sermon. When it comes to a moral issue and special courage is needed for the message, the true minister often has to look up to God instead of even his best friends in the congregation for the things he ought to say. The person who goes to church merely to criticize the sermon may deserve all the harsh things the article in the church paper has to say, but we would enter a protest against including in that class those who ask the question, "Well, how did you like the sermon?" The most important question to ask is, "What did the sermon have in it as a message of God to me, and how can I make practical use of it in my daily life?" The pastor might do well to preach a sermon every now and then from the text, "Be ye doers of the Word, not hearers only." (James 1 : 22.)

Nine Hundred Saved

THE Norwegian-American passenger liner Kristianiafjord went down on the rocks off Newfoundland in a fog early on July 15, but the 906 passengers and the crew were landed safely at St. John's, N. F., and immediate action was taken for the refloating of the steamer. It is strange that during the period of the most disastrous wreckage of ships in the history of the world so few have been destroyed by natural causes. And it is fortunate that this wreck on the rocks with its precious freight of humanity did not suffer the loss of a single life. There is this reference to the sinking of a ship in a storm in which not a single life was lost: "And we were in all in the ship two hundred three score and ten souls. And so it came to pass that they escaped all safe to land." (Acts 27 : 37, 44.)

FROM ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER

Conducted by MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

What Can I Do?

"I DON'T want my boys to go to war," writes a mother of five. "I hate the thought of war. I hate the idea of my children killing other mothers' children almost as much as I hate to think of the danger that they will be going into. . . . But, no matter how much I hate the thought of it, there is a war. And, despite my unhappiness, I fear that my boys may be called to the colors. Two of them already have left home with military organizations.

"I hate war. But my boys, it seems, must go —have gone. And so I, at home, am wondering what I can do to make the hard road they travel a bit easier."

Many women, like the Mother of Five, hate war. But many women, with that loathing of bloodshed in their hearts, are watching their boys march away. And many women, with lonely hands folded, are wondering what they may do to make the road to France a bit smoother.

It isn't always the great gift, the huge sacrifice, the expensive present, that brings a bit of happiness to the boy who is away from home. Oftentimes it's the thoughtful remembrance made by careful fingers; oftentimes it's the little thing sent from the fulness of a loving heart that really makes the way easier. Three of my pen-and-ink friends have offered suggestions that may be helpful to the Mother of Five—and to other mothers. I will quote directly from their letters.

"I," writes E. S., "have been knitting comforts for our sailors according to the directions of the 'Navy League of the United States.' I will enclose directions for making the three garments that our men will particularly need this winter—a sleeveless jacket, a muffler, and wristlets.

"The Sleeveless Jacket.—Cast on 80 stitches. Knit two, purl two stitches for 4 inches. Knit plain until sweater measures 23 inches. Knit 28 stitches, bind off 24 stitches for neck. Knit 28 stitches. Knit seven ribs on each shoulder, cast on 24 stitches. Knit plain for 19 inches. Purl two, knit two for 4 inches. Sew up the sides, leaving 9 inches for armholes. (In making this jacket one and a half pound gray knitting yarn and No. 5 celluloid needles are used.)

"Muffler.—Cast on 50 stitches. Plain knitting for 58 inches. (No. 5 celluloid needles and one-half pound of dark blue wool are used.)

"Wristlets.—Cast on 52 stitches. Knit two, purl two for 12 inches. Sew up, leaving a two-inch space for thumb 3 inches from top. (No. 2 bone needles and one hank of gray knitting yarn are used.)"

"My brother is at an officers' training camp," N. F. R. tells us, "and because I thought that he must need many things I wrote and asked him what I could send to make him more comfortable and contented. I expected him to ask me for books or magazines or khaki tent pockets or a blanket; but no.

DUSK

WE often sit upon the porch on sultry August nights,
When fireflies out upon the lawn are soft enchanted lights
From Fairyland; when, far away, a vagrant nightingale
Is sobbing from a bursting heart his tragic untold tale.
We often sit upon the porch, quite silently, for we Are seeing golden wonder-worlds that no one else may see.

My mother sighs; I feel her hand upon my ruffled hair,
The while I know she thinks of one, of one who is not there. .
And grandma with her down-bent head is dreaming of the day
When to the strains of "Dixie Land" her sweetheart marched away.
And brother stares into the dusk with vivid eyes aflame,
And hears the stirring call to arms, to battle and to fame!

My little sister, half asleep, holds tight against her breast
A battered doll with china eyes that she herself has dressed;
And baby brother holds my hand, and thinks of cakes and toys
That grow on trees in some fair land for perfect little boys.
And auntie holds her head erect, and seems to dare the fates
With eyes that hold the glowing look of one who hopes and waits.

We often sit upon the porch on sultry August nights,
When fireflies out upon the lawn are vague enchanted lights,
And no one speaks, for each one dreams and plans, perhaps, and strays
A wanderer through years to come, a ghost through bygone days.
And as the stars far in the sky come shining softly through,
My heart and soul are all one prayer—one silver prayer for you.

"'Fudge, and plenty of it,' came his swift, enthusiastic answer; 'a good-sized box of the kind of candy that I used to beat hard—and then lick the spoon. I can remember more than one baseball game broken up in the fifth inning by a whiff of your fudge. I can remember, even before my baseball days, how its delicious aroma came out to meet me as I ran up the lane toward the house.'

"Well, he got the fudge—a big box of it. And I'm enclosing the recipes that he loves. Perhaps you can use them.

"Chocolate Fudge.—Two cups of granulated sugar two cups of brown sugar; one-half cake of bitter chocolate; one cup of milk; a pinch of salt; two tablespoonfuls of butter; one cup of chopped nut meats. Mix the sugar and milk, drop in the chocolate (whole), and add a pinch of salt. Boil slowly, stirring constantly until the chocolate is melted. Cook until the syrup, dropped into a cup of cold water, forms a soft ball. Add the butter and let the candy boil up. Remove from the fire and beat until it becomes thick and creamy—then add the vanilla and nut meats and pour into buttered dishes.

"Panoches.—Three cups of brown sugar; one cup of milk; half-pound of nut meats; two tablespoonfuls of butter; one tablespoonful of vanilla. Cook the milk and sugar together slowly, stirring all the while until it becomes a thin syrup. (To test it beat a tablespoonful in a saucer. If it creams it has been cooked enough.) Remove from the fire, add the vanilla, butter and nuts. Beat until it becomes thick and then pour into buttered plates.

"Cocoanut Candy.—One pound of granulated sugar; one cup of cream (or milk); one cocoanut (grated); one teaspoonful of vanilla. Boil the sugar and milk gently until a spoonful of the syrup forms a soft ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the fire, add the vanilla and grated cocoanut and beat. When thick, drop in spoonfuls upon a buttered platter."

And K. E. J. says, "Ever since we entered the war, my mind has been busy wondering what I can do for our dear boys besides just praying for them. Not being a practical woman, I cannot knit and am not at all clever with my needle, but I was determined to do my bit. And then at last an idea came to me. 'Why not supply Testaments,' I thought, 'to every man who will see active service?' I know that this is not an original idea, but if each one would look after his own community it would give him a share in this blessed work of spreading the Word of God, and not leave so much for a single organization to do. I therefore talked it over with our Good Will Society, and all the members agreed to help. We lost no time in purchasing pocket Testaments and presenting one to each man leaving our town.

"And so, now, we have the satisfaction and joy of knowing that in the midst of war our boys are in possession of the only book that points the way to the 'peace of God, which passeth understanding.'"

Volunteering to Stop Waste in New York City

NOW that President Wilson and Food Administrator Hoover are pleading for economy in the home, the housewives of New York City—ready, as always, to coöperate in anything for the public good—are beginning to notice and call attention to the gigantic waste of food at the city terminals.

I wonder if many people realize how much good food is wasted—not only in New York City, but in every large city. I wonder if many people know that, when sixty per cent. of a shipment of food is condemned as unfit by the government, the commission merchant often lets the other forty per cent. spoil rather than go to the trouble and expense of having it sorted out. I wonder if many people guess that in New York City alone 400,000 pounds of food go to waste every week through lack of organization at the food terminals? Four hundred thousand pounds! And all over the city poor folk are hungry, and people in moderate circumstances are conscious of a vast drain on their incomes.

The Department of Health naturally dislikes being held responsible for the loss occasioned when an embargo is placed on a shipment of foodstuffs and the dealer refuses to save the good part. They are quite willing to listen to any plan for putting a stop to the needless and, in these times, heart-breaking waste.

And so the housewives of New York have formed a plan which they have already put into practice in a very small way. They propose to can and dehydrate all foods that would otherwise be thrown away, and they have opened a City Kitchen under the Williamsburg Bridge, where they have already begun to put their plans into good working order.

The City Kitchen under the Williamsburg Bridge is doing a comparatively small work. Although at a glance the jars of food stored away for the winter-time seem multitudinous, they are really like the proverbial drop in the bucket. For one kitchen, run principally by volunteer workers, can handle only the minutest fraction of the food that is being thrown away.

Volunteer workers receiving material for the dehydrating plant

And yet, although unable to do a great work themselves, the housewives of New York are pointing the way to a great work that the city and other cities may do.

No city—no country, in fact—can expect its housekeepers to be economical when upon every side they are witnessing a gigantic waste of food. It's up to the city and the country to set its housekeepers a good example—an example of prudence and economy and efficiency.

At any rate, that's what the women of New York are saying. And, because they want to be more than fair, they are showing the city government and the national government a way to set that example.

Some Proven Recipes

PINEAPPLE JAM

1 pineapple.
1 cup of water.
½ lb. of sugar to even pound of fruit.
Peel and grate the pineapple.
Add sugar and water and boil.
Boil separately the skin and heart of the pineapple in enough water to cover them.
Strain and add to the juice one-half pound of sugar.
Mix this with the cooking jam and boil until it begins to thicken.

WATERMELON PRESERVES (as made in Jamaica).

Pith of one watermelon.
½ lb. of sugar.
1 stick of cinnamon.
1 tablespoonful of rosewater.
1 cup of water.
Cut the watermelon pith into small pieces without removing the rind.
Put it into a saucepan with sugar and water.
Add the cinnamon and the rosewater and cook until the liquid becomes a syrup.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MRS. E. P. C., McRae, Ga. 1. Please explain in the Mail-Bag why Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land and divide it among the twelve tribes, according to the divine promise? 2. Also, what is meant by "Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one, whom thou didst prove at Massah, and with whom thou didst strive at the waters of Meribah."

1. The sin for which Moses was told that he should see but should not possess the "good land" beyond the Jordan is referred to in different Bible passages. The most direct statement is that in Num. 20 : 12, relative to Moses' and Aaron's sin against God when they "believed him not to sanctify him." Moses spoke "inadvisedly with his lips," hastily and passionately, in a manner unworthy of a great leader. Further, he had been told only to speak to the rock (verse 8), but instead he addressed the people angrily and struck the rock twice. His language and action betrayed a doubt, not of God's power but of his will, indicating a spirit of unbelief. It is possible that all the incidents connected with the episode are not given in Scripture.

2. The subject of the passage in Deut. 33 : 8 is the blessing to the Levites, to whom the sacred office of the priesthood was given as a reward for their zeal in God's cause and their unswerving opposition to idolatry. The reference to the Urim and Thummim is a prayer or invocation that the consecrated breastplate, with all the gifts it includes, should remain with the tribe—His "holy one"—which God had sanctified to himself.

N. A. S., Brownsdale, Minn., doesn't think favorably of the daylight saving idea. He writes: "I see by your paper of June 20 an item about turning the clock ahead an hour to save daylight. I do not think it is needed to do that, for we are getting about fifteen hours of daylight now, which I think is long enough to put in eight hours' work; as for saving a million tons of coal, you may need that to keep New York from freezing up, but we in the Middle West do not need much fuel to keep us warm, especially when the thermometer stands from 60 to 100 in the shade. So I would not worry much about Old Father Time, but let him go on the same old way."

T. A. M., Medora, Ill. It has been claimed by certain commentators that the closing verses of Mark 16, from 9 to 20, were added by a different hand, or by Mark himself at a later period than the rest of his Gospel. The portion referred to is found in all the important codices and is quoted without question by early writers from the time of Irenæus, and it appears in the ancient Syriac Version, but it is absent from the Vatican and Sinaitic MSS. Jerome spoke of it as being found in but few copies of the Gospels, and especially of its absence from the Greek MSS. Eusebius also noted its absence. Some very eminent later critics, however, pronounce for its genuineness. It has been a subject of controversy and is still an open question.

J. L., Berwyn, Ill. The "preparation," mentioned in John 19 : 31, was the evening before the commencement of the Sabbath. The "preparation" was devoted to preparing food and arranging generally for the Sabbath. Among the Jews, every feast, like the Sabbath, had a preparation day before it, which is often mentioned by Talmudical writers.

Reader, Boulder, Colo. We cannot form any conclusion without knowing all the facts. Any pastor is liable to be misjudged if only an extract from his sermon be considered, whereas the whole discourse, viewed in its proper proportions, might give a very different impression.

C. F., Richmond, Ind. 1. We have no data relative to climatic changes resulting from the present war, which is the greatest and most devastating conflict in history. 2. Write to Rev. I. M. Haldeman, 389 West End Avenue, New York City, for booklet on the cult you mention. 3. We note what you say relative to your state going "dry" and also of its having given the women the franchise, all within six months. Certainly, a notable record!

Enquirer, Lockport, N. Y. It is quite true that in a very large proportion of churches midsummer witnesses a spiritual slacking up. This may be due to the absence of a considerable part of the congregation, officers included, or to the pastor's vacation. It is often difficult, under such conditions, to find a suitable leader for the prayer-meeting. Not every one, however consecrated, can do this special work acceptably. In a well-organized church, however, it should not be possible to say that, outside of the pulpit, there is no one capable of taking charge of the weekly prayer-meeting. As the prayer-meeting is the vitalizer of the church, it should unfailingly be provided for. In these days of grave national issues, all the churches need to keep a closer walk with God.

Anxious, Philadelphia. "Pay that thou owest. . . Owe no man anything," is sound Christian teaching. A man who deliberately neglects to pay his just and lawful debts, if he is able to do so, may be smart according to certain worldly estimates, but he is not honest. The creditor of such a man has the legal right of recovery, but the man is wise who avoids litigation, if he can do so.

To A Little Chicken

By Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

MY, you're awful little,
  Nothin' much at all
But a fluff o' feathers,
  Like a tiny ball
Painted white an' yellow—
  Are you scared o' me?
There, now, lil' chicken,
  You don' need to be!

Do you s'pose I'd hurt you?
  Well, I wouldn't—there!
You're so soft an' downy
  I'll take bestest care
Of you—Don't get frightened,
  Don't yer shiver so;
See, I'll hold you gentle,
  I won't let you go!

Some folks act so mean-like,
  To a bird 'at's small;
Jus' because it's little,
  An' can't speak or call.
But I don't—I love 'em—
  This is what I do,
I say, awful softly,
  "God made chickens, too!"

Amelia O., Stone Ridge, N. Y. Can a person of sane mind have a desire for cremation, and yet be a child of God? Some one informs me that a person is cremated so the evil one cannot capture him. In this section, one who was cremated was an Episcopalian, and said he had no fear of death, as his faith was strong. Possibly he feared the worms, destroying his body.

Cremation is not necessarily considered un-Christian. It was practiced among the Greeks and Romans, and in many lands it is quite common today. It is regarded as the most sanitary method of disposing of the dead. To some extent it has been adopted in the United States, and it is gaining adherents, although there is much prejudice against it. The old, time-honored interment of the dead committing the soul to God and the body to the earth is still the preferred form of burial among Christian nations, and will doubtless so continue. In the days of the early martyrs, many passed away in the fire. Paul, in I Cor. 13 : 3 refers to this when he speaks of making the ultimate sacrifice.

O. W., Pittsford, N. Y., sends this timely letter: "We hear and read much about how all depends on the farmer, how he should plant every corner and try his best to feed our country and help feed the other warring countries too. There is a big 'but' in the way. The last of June, many potatoes were not planted that should have been in the ground a month ago. Those that are planted have stood in water for days, and many had to be planted over again. We have a few nice days, and when we think we can plant, it rains again. Three weeks ago, we had hail that damaged the wheat and fruit crops in a long stretch along the Genesee Valley. Hailstones fell here and west of us that weighed twenty-two to the pound. If the Lord send us good weather, we shall have food, 'but' if not our work is for nothing, like last year's. I have lived on this farm fifty-one years, and last year was the first time I had to buy what we usually raise ourselves."

L. V. S., Washington, D. C. The report is current that several thousand persons will come here to take positions in the government service during the war, most of whom, it is said, will be young ladies. I wish there might be some way for the churches of Washington to realize their great responsibility in connection with these persons, many of them coming here for the first time, perhaps. They will live mostly in rooming houses, which do not afford the comforts and associations of home life. Could there not be some organized movement whereby the churches could endeavor to get in touch with these persons and so influence them as to spare them from some of the dangers of the conditions into which it seems that they will be thrown?

The suggestion is timely. We have laid it before the Washington Y. W. C. A. as the organization best fitted to deal with such conditions as L. V. S. describes. It is a kindly and considerate thought, which should bear fruit.

C. O. W., Troy, N. Y., writes, apropos of the widespread discussion of prophecy and its relation to the war: "I would ask you if it be not the time now to get to work for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God? The harvest is ripe to be cut, and very few are the workers. We hear much now about traitors to the country; but how about being traitors to God and his beloved Son, Jesus Christ? Please do your part in telling the people that we live in the times of Noah, now!"

Reader, Peabody, Kan. The whole amusement question is one to be largely decided by the individual conscience. Any well-balanced mind must recognize that there are amusements which are pernicious and others that are elevating. There is a wide difference between games. Some are pernicious, many are not. Any games played by young church people on public lawns are very likely to be decidedly innocent. If in the course of the games the young folks swing each other by their hands, as they do in some of the games mentioned by you, where is the harm? By all means, let the young people play on the lawns to their hearts' content. Let them play all the old-fashioned and newfangled games that they will play in the presence of their elders.

M. M. M., Plattsburg, N. Y., writes: "If your magazine and others would appeal to the Women's Civic Leagues and other women's clubs, and awaken them to the fact that Saturday is usually the poorest day at the 'movies,' when it should be the cleanest, most instructive and most pleasant, then gradually a higher class of pictures would be shown. One man who is much interested in moving pictures has suggested that the fault lies with our exhibitors in not knowing or caring what the children need. Also, on Saturday, mothers and nursemaids take the children to keep them quiet and out of mischief, many times creating more lasting mischief than if they stayed at home. Again, the exhibitors know they will get a big crowd on Saturday, no matter what is put up on the screen. The fault is not only local; I have been in many towns and cities and found the same trouble. As children and young people are to be the influencing powers later on, and as the 'movies' play a big part in developing and influencing their minds, I believe a movement should be started to agitate the women to see to it that local exhibitors put on the kind of pictures that children of impressionable ages should see."

Josiah's Good Reign

International Sunday School Lesson for August 12. II. Chron. 34 : 1-13

The Story of a Young Reformer

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

THE life of Josiah reads strangely like that of his great-grandfather Hezekiah. The same abuses met and the same idolatries overthrown. So it goes in human life; there is always call for the reformer and the prophet. Eternal vigilance is the price of religion as well as liberty.

The extreme youthfulness of Josiah is notable and furnishes us with suggestive thoughts for our own dealing with the children of the church. Those who teach this lesson have a rare chance to drive home an appeal for definite, increasing consecration to God's cause, by using these epoch-making dates in the story of Josiah's reformation in Judah.

At Sixteen Years—a Turning Point

Of early influences upon the boy king we are not informed. The quiet character-building work was not noted in the chronicles of the state, but it counted throughout the nation later on. We have to work humbly, unrecognized, but God sees and rewards. Some one taught Josiah to know and fear the Lord. Perhaps it was his mother, Jedidah, who is mentioned in the book of Kings. George Herbert, the saintly rector of Bemerton, said: "One good mother is worth a hundred schoolmasters." Maybe it was she who counteracted the influence of Amon his wicked father, who was murdered when Josiah was but a child.

Doubtless, also, the good and bad elements at court competed for the favor of the young sovereign. The main point is that at sixteen years of age he definitely and permanently took his stand with the worshipers of Jehovah. Undoubtedly this was the time when his tutelage was over and he took the reins of government for himself. One might call it Josiah's conversion, or, better, his act of dedication to the service of God. He made the decision of his life.

At about sixteen our own youngsters reach a critical point. It is the period where we have the smallest numbers in the Bible school. That means a failure somewhere to realize the present-day call of God. At that age this successful man "began to seek after the God of David his father." That is, he deliberately, consciously consecrated himself to finding out what things God would have him to do. It was four years before he entered upon the great reform. It was a time of learning and praying by a youth on the threshold of his career.

Help the boys decide. Commentators claim that they see the hand of Hilkiah, the great high priest, here. Quite likely he helped the boy decide. At sixteen a youth is just finding himself. He does not yet know what he wants to do. He is in the mood for high and noble things. His pastor, his teacher, his friends, can put him in the way of success. Perhaps, like Josiah, he needs four more years of study. Send him to college and he may become a mighty leader. Or give him a task in the way of teaching lads younger than he, and he will still be a learner himself.

Around our boys are the same competing factors that beckoned Josiah: the idolatrous and the spiritual, the vile and the pure, the pleasure-lovers and the seekers of righteousness.

At Twenty—Religion a Man's Job

As Josiah left his 'teens he felt that the time had come for him to strike a blow for the Lord. He was a man now, and four years of study and preparation had shown him that entrenched idolatry was the greatest menace to the nation. What should he do? Prominent leaders, members of the royal family, were involved in the shameful practices that custom had made common.

He resolved on a thoroughgoing, uncompromising attitude. Doubtless he made a proclamation calling for a return to the worship of Jehovah. Then he started a nation-wide housecleaning. He declared for no quarter in dealing with evil. The images were smashed "in his presence"; he personally superintended the removal of the Baal altars and made a tour of Judah, suppressing the shrines which had been the scenes of unbridled indulgence and cruelty.

Whole-souled for God. Our young men cannot be moral neutrals. The decision between right and wrong must be clear-cut. Here is our lesson from Josiah's methods. Nothing else would have saved the day; weak-kneed tolerance had led thousands astray. And in this enthusiastic endeavor for social reform his own soul was safe. The young man who is pouring out his energy in a crusade does not have to be nursed and coddled to keep himself straight.

Enlist, then, for service. Fight drink as Josiah fought Baal. Stand up for Jesus in the presence of his enemies. That is moral warfare. It calls for heroes. It makes religion a man's job.

At Twenty-Six — Constructive Endeavor

At twenty Josiah's main idea was to smash evil; by the time he was twenty-six, he devoted himself to building up the good. The Chronicler signalizes the change by a new division in the text. To the very young, the appeal of spectacular, warlike Christian enterprises is overwhelming. Political reform, foreign missions, social problems claim their strength. Rightly so, too; for, as in the days of Paul, Christians may be thought of as "those who have turned the world upside down." A witty commentator remarks that the world needed it; it was wrong side up.

By the time our experience becomes riper, we realize that whether our task be along lines of reform or of evangelization of the heathen, we must take a long look ahead and begin patiently to build. The social reformer becomes the settlement worker, or the friendly visitor in a downtown church, and starts a lifelong task of daily ministering. The missionary becomes the translator of the Bible and the pioneer of kindergartens and schools. The eager convert, who wanted redhot revivals all the while, sees the value of a Bible class and a midweek meeting for prayer and conference.

So it was with Josiah. The second phase of his reign began. It necessitated money and brick and stone. He started to enlist workmen and to study plans. The great temple, which had seen so many vicissitudes, must be rebuilt.

The Place of the Church

Thus we see Josiah restoring the temple to its dominant place as the supreme influence for good in the city of Jerusalem and the little kingdom of Judah. We find him assembling trained singers for its services, and scribes, officers and porters for its varied ministry to the people. He was strengthening an institution to take the place of the unworthy system that his father and grandfather had allowed to grow up.

So must we do likewise. Whether we like it or not, the church is the dominant factor in religion. When it is strong and pure, the life of the community is clean and wholesome, and approximates the standards of the Kingdom. When it is weak and divided, the neighborhood deteriorates. Where there is no church, conditions rapidly become intolerable.

Yet in our day, multitudes live as though there were no social manifestation of religion. They never think of attending divine worship. Let us call upon our boys to be young Josiahs, to smash evil hard when they can, to build up the church at all times, in all ways.

The Physical Well-Being of the Church

But what can young men do for the advancement of the church? "If they had a task we could hold them." How about the physical house of the church to begin with? That is where Josiah began. And I want to say that thousands of our small churches are in a disgraceful condition today. A clean-up of grounds and building, inside and out, would give Christianity a new feeling of respect in many a town. Weedy yards, broken fences, littered closets and corners, torn and stained wallpaper, no wonder the unchurched are not drawn!

I know where a group of young men constructed a mighty concrete wall which kept the church grounds from gullies and landslides that had always been an eyesore. I know where a class kept a genuine lawn instead of a plantain patch, and planted some of our beautiful native shrubs around the bare foundations of the church. I know where they made a tennis court of a general dumping-place.

From this it is but a step to putting in good home-made tables for the classes of children. How much better the young teacher can hold the wandering attention of the ten-year-olds with all around a table, where books and pictures and object lessons can be spread!

Pictures, maps, new Bibles in the pews—well, you know best what your church may need. Get to work "to repair the house of Jehovah" like this young king. It brought him a greater name than raising armies. "And the men did the work faithfully." I believe they will in the United States today.

Cooperation Essential to Success

Good as he was, Josiah could not have accomplished much alone. We must learn the great word TOGETHER. One feels, from the account in Chronicles, that Josiah was surprised and encouraged when he found the numbers of faithful men. Maybe we too shall learn with delight that our neighbors are only needing the inspiration of a little leadership and enthusiasm to become builders of the temple of God. There are many tasks for the diversely gifted children of men.

A Worthy Religious Leader. The high priest rose to the occasion. Perhaps he had suffered agonies of mind in the days of Amon, but now he had a chance to lead the community nearer to God. Next week we study the work he accomplished. Hilkiah may be for us a type of the minister of our own church, handicapped and distressed by lack of response. With new loyalty and consecration from a few young men, maybe, as here from one, he will take the leadership that is his by right, and transform the situation. In most cases it is the laymen who hold back the pastor.

Office-bearers and Workers. As soon as Josiah and Hilkiah showed a little energy and determination, they were besieged with offers of help. The wonderful Psalms of David had for a long time been unsung, only preserved by the providence of God in the rubbishy temple library. Now the sons of Merari and the Kohathites came forward to offer their voices in the worship of Jehovah. The gates had long been closed and the faithful few could not bring their sacrifices to the desecrated altar; but now there were willing porters who would rather be doorkeepers in the house of God than dwell in the tents of unrighteousness. The scribes and officers ("dispute-settlers") resumed their places for the instruction of the people.

Happy worshipers, happy workers in the temple of their Lord! Will you not try to begin such an era in your church and Sunday school? Let it begin with you.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association.

The Question Box

PLEASE tell me where I can obtain information concerning the teaching of a beginners' class, how to illustrate lessons, and also how to teach those sixteen to twenty to make them interested.—M. C.

You will find real help in "Teachers of Beginners" (Danielson), 75c, "Lessons for Teachers of Beginners' Department" (Wray), 50c, and "The Elementary Worker and His Work" (Jacobs-Lincoln), 50c. You will obtain aid in telling Bible and other stories from "How to Tell Stories to Children" (Bryant), $1, "Telling Bible Stories" (Houghton), $1.25, "Stories and Story-Telling" (St. John), 50c. And as collateral help for the beginners' class, there is "Beginners' and Primary Songs" (Heidelberg Press), 25c, "Object Lessons for Little Children" (Danielson), $1, and "Prayers for Children" (Dietz), 5c.

As to the question of how to interest those of sixteen to twenty years, you cannot do better than to follow the Senior Graded Lessons of the International Lesson Committee. These lessons touch upon life and preparation for life service in a way that grips young people. Their own life-problems are treated and there are suggestions as to subjects for class dicussion which enable the teacher to guide the pupils' interest and arouse their thinking powers.

Will you please inform me what are the duties of the president of the Loyal Temperance Legion? What book can I get about the work, and where can I get it?

If you will write to the headquarters of the Legion, Ruby I. Smith, Silversmiths' Building, Chicago, Ill., you can secure the information you want. I would suggest that you write the Women's Christian Temperance Union (Evanston, Ill.), and the White Shield Temperance League (Board of Sunday Schools, 58 East Washington Street, Chicago), for temperance programs and suggestions.

In maintaining interest much will depend upon the variety of your programs. Interest the Legion in cutting out newspaper or magazine clippings showing the effect of alcohol upon individuals, the attitude of corporations as to liquor drinking by employees, national and state legislation, opinions of prominent people, the war and alcohol. You could have character programs dealing with the life stories of Miss Willard, Gough, Murphy, Lady Somerset, Dow, etc. Have a "map" program, the members coloring a map of the United States to show the wet and dry territory. Use slides and charts to illustrate facts. These can be obtained from the National Temperance Society, New York, or the Anti-Saloon League, Westerville, Ohio.

A correspondent asks help to meet the problems and discouragements of his work as superintendent of a school of thirty attending members in a county community of fifty families, twenty of them not being church attendants. These families are divided between two Protestant churches. He has in average attendance two out of four teachers, one of them attending only fifteen Sundays out of the year. A meeting of the church called by him in the interest of Sunday school work was attended by one teacher and one member. The pastor preaches but that is the end of his service. There is no prayer meeting and only six at revival services.

This situation can be duplicated in many country communities where one church could do the work which two are now struggling to do. A good revival in that community that would merge these two churches into one is the first need. Then a program should be made that would reach the last child and older person within a radius of three miles, including weekday recreational life as well as a prayer meeting.

In the Sunday school, plainly the teachers need some vision of their task to bring them out more faithfully. That superintendent could well afford to invest a few dollars in such books as "Living Teachers" (Slattery), 50c, "The Teachers' Candlestick" (Slattery), 35c, "The Seed, the Soil and the Sower" (Slattery), 35c, "How to Plan a Lesson" (Brown), 50c, "The Teacher, the Child and the Book" (Schauffler), $1, "The Pupil and the Teacher" (Weigle), 50c, "The Teacher That Teaches" (Wells), 50c. These books should be placed in the hands of the teachers. It would be helpful if the superintendent and teachers could meet often—once a week if possible—and have several chapters of one of these books read and discussed and prayer offered for the scholars and homes. Christ's disciples were slow in getting a mastering love for him and a vision of his service. But when that came, success was theirs.

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 812

Our Men in France. A cablegram from the American training camp in France July 16 stated that the troops of the first expedition were nearly all at the camp, and that the French troops who were to act as instructors in the intensive training of the Americans were ready to proceed. It was announced from Washington on the same day that many of the National Guard units mobilized on July 15 were considered as ready now for the final training behind the firing line, and that some units would soon go to France.

Reorganized Chinese Republic. President Li Yuan Hung, after the final defeat of General Chang Hsun, announced that he would not resume office. Vice-President Feng Kuo Chang became acting president. A cabinet was formed with Tuan Chi Jui as premier.

Canadians Fight Conscription. The struggle in Canada against conscription is becoming bitter. In Montreal 15,000 people who had assembled to hear the mayor express his views against conscription turned and mobbed Colonel Rexford, who interrupted the meeting. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has said that he would not undertake to keep his followers within bounds if the government forced conscription into effect without an appeal to the country at the polls.

The Administration's Aviation Bill appropriating $640,000,000 passed the House in one day. It was taken up in the Senate at ten o'clock on July 18, where opposition developed because of the provision for the drafting of men into this service, which many senators held should be made up wholly of volunteers, and held over until the vote had been taken on the Food Bill. The bill was passed without amendment, 66 to 12, on July 21. It was announced that 22,000 airplanes would be built as rapidly as possible. . . . A Norwegian tank steamer was overhauled in New York harbor on July 14, inspected and found to be carrying in her petroleum tanks more than ten thousand feet of copper wire cable. It is thought that this discovery explains one source by which Germany has been getting copper. . . . The government during the week of July 22 arranged for the strict censorship of all outgoing cablegrams.

The Progress of the War

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THERE has been a very general feeling throughout the world in the past week—although such feeling seems to have nothing tangible on which to base itself—that the end of the war is drawing reasonably near.

In Greece a new crisis seems approaching, which may involve either the deposition of the young King Alexander or the elimination of Venizelos who has officially announced that the Greek government considers itself in a state of war with the Central Powers and their allies, though it will issue no formal declaration of war.

The Canadian conscription bill has not as yet become law.

After their capture of Halicz, the Russians, under General Korniloff, moved forward to the westward first on a north and south line about fifteen miles long, and succeeded in forcing the Austrians to fall back to the westerly bank of the Lomnica, which runs southwesterly from the Dniester, beginning at a point two or three miles west of Halicz.

North of Halicz the Russians had succeeded in forcing the passage of the Dniester and in possessing themselves of a couple of villages on its northern bank, but were unable to hold these positions.

On July 19 German troops attacked in force, both north and south of Dniester River in Galicia. South of the river, the attacks gained little ground; north of the river, several Russian regiments mutinied, debating the question as to whether or not they should fight, and quitting their trenches in the face of the enemy. The mutiny and disaffection spread northward and southward with the result that by July 22, the German troops were advancing beyond the Sereth River on a front of about fifty miles, to a depth of from six to ten miles, the Russians withdrawing, burning villages, but offering no serious resistance. The Germans claimed many prisoners and much booty. On that date the Germans were approaching Tarnopol, which was reported on fire. Frantic efforts were being made by Prime Minister Kerensky to end mutinies and to restore the fighting spirit of his troops. The Kaiser and Kerensky were both reported rushing to this front. At this writing, July 23, it was apparent that a most critical situation had arisen, one pregnant with possibilities of disaster.

The Finnish Diet, after some weeks spent in considering relations between Russia and Finland, voted on July 19, by 136 to 55, for complete autonomy, rejecting by 184 to 86 an amendment providing for the submission of the pending measure to the Russian provisional government for approbation.

Considerable feeling has been excited in Holland by what the Dutch claim was a violation of Dutch territorial waters by the British. It seems that fourteen German ships set sail from Rotterdam northward and were proceeding on their course within three miles of the Dutch coast and had reached a point opposite the Dutch town of Bergen-aan-Zee, when a fleet of British destroyers appeared and began shelling the German ships, sinking several, capturing four and forcing the remainder to return to Rotterdam. In this attack, however, a number of shells fell in the town of Bergen and even farther inland. The Dutch government has officially declared its territory violated.

On the British portion of the western front, the week passed without any really important events taking place, although there were numbers of trench raids, considerable hand-grenade fighting, and very active artillery practice. The French portion of the front was much more active. On Saturday, July 14, on the Chemin des Dames, west of Cerny, the Germans attacked the French lines after heavy artillery preparation, and after a fight which lasted all Saturday night succeeded in establishing themselves in the French first line trenches, on a front of about 1,000 yards, taking about 400 prisoners. On Sunday, however, the French revenged themselves for this loss by taking powerfully organized German trenches in Champagne, to the east of Rheims, capturing 350 men with the position. Next day the Germans made a determined effort to recapture this lost position, and a violent battle followed, which lasted a day and a half, and in which both sides suffered heavily. After a day's respite fighting again broke out here and this time the Germans recaptured the position completely. On Wednesday they made an advance farther to the west, on the road between Laon and Soissons, and captured French trenches on a rather wide front, as well as 700 prisoners.

On Wednesday the French made a determined attack on the western front of Verdun and succeeded in penetrating the German first and second lines on a front of a mile and a half, to a depth of two-thirds of a mile on both sides of the road between Esnes and Malancourt. Besides some artillery, the French took about 500 prisoners in this fight.

The French Senate met in secret session on July 19 to discuss the French offensive on the Aisne and in Champagne. Some of the Deputies contended that the offensive had been checked. Premier Ribot acknowledged that the offensive had been costly, but declared it had not been checked; that it was a real success. The Minister of War acknowledged that serious faults had been committed, and said that responsible chiefs, among them the commander-in-chief, General Nivelle, had been relieved of command.

Lake Louise—in the Canadian Rockies

Quality That Is Uniform and Unusual

The motorist using Goodyear Tires for the first time experiences something in the nature of a revelation.

Accustomed to the service delivered by ordinary tires, he notes the superior excellence of Goodyears with mingled admiration and wonder.

He finds no parallel in his experience for the superb character of their performance, and for the slow reluctance with which they wear.

The thought takes form in his mind that no tires he has ever used compare with these in lasting efficiency and value.

The initial satisfaction felt by Goodyear users is repeated over and over again, with every Goodyear Tire they purchase.

For the tire-quality responsible for their satisfaction is absolutely uniform and unvarying.

That this quality is unequaled in any other tire is shown by the fact that more Goodyears are sold in America than any other brand.

That it is unvarying in Goodyear Tires is shown by the fact that the Goodyear margin of leadership is constantly growing.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

Keds

The Shoes Your Feet Have Been Waiting For

NOW there's a new summer shoe with a new name and a new comfort—Keds. Every summer day is a Keds day. These neat, shapely shoes are for work or sport, vacation or outing, home or party.

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY US RUBBER SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

And there are styles for every member of the family. Comfortable for weary, pavement-pounded, business feet; perfect ease with fashionable appearance for morning-till-night household feet; room to grow and wear to romp for tireless little play feet.

Keds have light, cool tops of finest canvas and resilient, flexible soles and heels of new rubber. Ask your dealer for Keds under these names:

NATIONAL Keds From $1.50 up
CAMPFIRE Keds $1.25 to $2.00
CHAMPION Keds $1.00 to $1.50

Each grade carries with it the reputation of the largest rubber manufacturer in the world. Each pair carries with it comfort, satisfaction, style and economy.

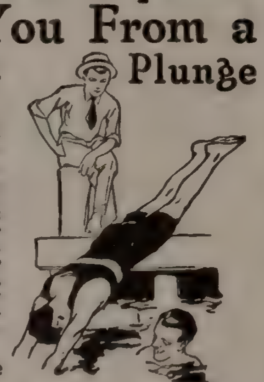
United States Rubber Company
New York

STEWART'S IRON FENCE

IMPROVE YOUR PROPERTY WITH AN IRON FENCE
Write today for catalogue of designs for residences, country estates, parks, cemeteries and all other purposes. Artistic, indestructible. Local Representatives Wanted.
The Stewart Iron Works Co., 720 Stewart Bl., Cincinnati, O.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Don't Let Rupture Keep You From a Plunge



At a resort last summer, a group of men decided to take a swim. In a jiffy they were splashing and frolicking in the surf—all except one. He was ruptured. He wore a steel band truss and dared not venture in the water because he feared his truss would slip or rust. This unsmiling man was needlessly robbed of a healthful, invigorating dip. Had he worn a

Brooks Rupture Appliance

he could have joined his friends in their sport. The Brooks Appliance is made of soft rubber, unaffected by water. It will not slip because the automatic air cushion clings closely and follows every body movement. Draws and binds the parted muscular tissues together; gives Nature a chance to knit them. This wonderful new scientific treatment of hernia has helped thousands and will help you.

SENT ON FREE TRIAL

to prove its worth. A straight business proposition in which you are the sole judge. If the Brooks Rupture Appliance does not comfortably retain your rupture at all times, send the appliance back to us and get your money. Durable–cheap. Write for catalogue and measure blanks today.

TRADE MARK C.E.BROOKS

BROOKS APPLIANCE CO.
398C State St. Marshall, Mich.

AGENTS—KEROSENE (COAL OIL) BURNER
Makes Any Stove a Gas Stove

Free Sample to Workers

Makes its own gas from Kerosene (coal oil). Gives every home a gas stove. Absolutely safe. Cheapest fuel known. Agents just coining money. Wonderful Labor Saver Women wild about it. No coal or ashes to carry. No more danger from gasoline. Safe, Clean, Odorless, Cheap Every home a prospect. Low price makes quick sales. Easy to carry and demonstrate. Big profits. Your territory is open. Write today. Thomas Burner Co. 3524 Gay St., Dayton, Ohio

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it. Write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

GREAT BARGAINS IN AUTO TIRES

We have made good rubber goods since 1904 and every year we have made more tires and better tires. We have the largest factory in the world devoted exclusively to the manufacture of Automobile Tires sold direct to car owners. You have nothing to risk in ordering

BUCKSKIN PLAIN & NON-SKID Guaranteed TIRES

You positively can save 30% of your present tire expense by using our tires. We have no agencies, no salesmen; thus we can save you money. We make all sizes, plain and non-skid; also both gray and red tubes. Every tire is guaranteed for 4000 MILES. Write for our special offer and free illustrated booklet.

THE L. AND M. RUBBER CO. 18 East St., Carrollton, O.
West. Dist. Office, 1436 S. Mich. Av., Chicago

LOWEST PRICES IN AMERICA

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

SOMETIMES it is necessary to go away from home for a while in order to find out what the extent of your being missed may testify to the regard in which you are held. During the past two months it has been necessary occasionally on account of pressure of other material to omit the Prayer League column. The result has been a number of earnest letters which have shown the deep regard in which the column is held in hundreds of hearts, and which have been a certain indication of the strength of purpose and loyal devotion of the members of the League. The following letter has come from one member who signs herself "A Constant Reader":

"For many months I've enjoyed the Prayer League in the Christian Herald, and for the past three weeks have missed it very much. I hope we will soon see it in its accustomed place in the Christian Herald. Many and many days I take my hands out of the dishwater at the stroke of 12 (for I have early dinner and am always through eating by 11:30) and retire to my bedroom to join my prayers to the hundreds of Christians who pray to God at this hour. I consider it such a privilege to be one of that big family. How my faith has been strengthened by reading how wonderfully God our Father has answered prayer!"

Twelve o'clock is a very arbitrary time. Perhaps it doesn't find us all washing dishes, but it finds us doing something which might easily be permitted to seem more important than the few minutes of prayer. But if we let the prayer be crowded out and close the window of our soul toward heaven, the spiritual light of our days will soon be extinguished by such omissions. If, however, we say to the important thing "it is prayer time; you must wait," we will find our lives strengthened and our days brightened, our cares lessened and our joys multiplied.

An Old Subscriber acknowledges God's goodness in the conversion of relatives and friends, especially two young men victims of drink; and asks the prayers of the League for divine guidence in change of position.

T. D. F. testifies to answer to prayer for the cure of a little daughter of pneumonia and measles, and asks prayer for the removal of a polypous growth in the head, and relief from hernia.

Mrs. K. E. W. asks prayer for the conversion of her oldest son and her only daughter, and joins in the universal prayer of God's people for the success of the Billy Sunday campaign in New York. She also asks for divine comfort in her grief over the loss of her son, who died at his post of duty in the ill-fated submarine F-4, which was lost in Hawaiian waters on March 25, 1914. She thanks God for the conversion of two sons in answer to prayer.

H. S. M. also writes of the conversion of a young girl whose sin was drink, and for whom prayer was asked.

Rev. William Reul, Kirkwood, Mo., expresses his gratitude to the League. "The dear Lord answered our prayers and gave me a new pastorate." He asks especially that a dear friend, a very able man, may be saved from the liquor habit.

Mrs. E. requests prayer that her husband, a backslider, may be cured of the liquor habit and become an upright church member.

Mrs. T. A. R. asks prayer that a neighbor who has backslidden may be restored; E. B. asks prayer to be reconciled to a daughter.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Kings Mountain, N. C.; North Andover, Wis.; Goffstown, N. H.; Lemert, Ohio; Ringwood, N. C.; Myrtle, Miss. (at the Mount Pisgah Church); Wauconda, Wash. (at the Toroda Meadows Church); Fort Deposit, Ala. (that many may be saved at the Sandy Ridge Church); Muskogee, Okla. (pray for Sunday observance laws for Oklahoma); Milwaukee, Wis. (pray for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit into the hearts of the members of the "Home for the Aged").

Mrs. A. L. H. asks prayer that a minister may be sent to the Methodist Church at Glenville, N. Y.; Mrs. A. R., Frankfort, Ind., asks prayer for Mount Pleasant Church and for spiritual and financial blessings.

Three parents ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; K. C. B. asks prayer that daughter's mind may be restored; Mrs. N. N. asks prayer that husband's mind may be restored; twelve friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

J. B. S. asks prayer that the sight of left eye may be restored and right eye strengthened; Mrs. J. D. E., that cataracts may be removed and sight restored; Mrs. S. J. C., that two brothers' sight may be restored; twelve friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives, friends or themselves.

Eight friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing.

Thirteen readers ask prayer for special blessings for others.

Forty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Five parents ask prayer that their sons may be cured of the liquor habit; A Broken-hearted Wife, that husband may be cured of the liquor habit; five friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be cured of the liquor habit.

Seventy-two ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including A Sister, that a mother and daughter may be restored to health and strength; Mrs. B. W., that mother may be cured of headaches; Mrs. J. R. B., that son may pass safely through an operation; fifty-five friends ask prayer for healing for themselves; including Mrs. C. H. B., to be cured of cancer; another, Mrs. P. L. P., to be healed without an operation.

Eighteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; ten wives, their husbands; including Mrs. G. W. H., that husband may be saved and reunited to family; thirty-one, for other relatives or friends.

Thirty friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters; including L. M. A., that church may receive financial help.

Thirty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including seven friends requesting prayer for world-wide peace.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

H. J. W., Long Branch, Wash.; A Subscriber, Hackensack, N. J.; F. S., Austin, Texas; Mrs. G. S., Richmond, Mo.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa; Mrs. R. W., North Clarendon, Vt.; Mrs. J. S., Lowell, Mass.; J. B. P., Chillicothe, Texas; Miss M. M., Woodruff, S. C.; T. W., Greensboro, N. C.; A Reader, Emmett, Idaho; Mrs. C. P. K., Leesburg, Ohio; G. E. W., Kremlin, Mont.; Mrs. J. M. H., Corpus Christi, Texas; C. B. F., Fultonham, Ohio; A Reader, Logansport, Ind.; Mrs. M. E. O., Broken Arrow, Okla.; Mrs. H. E. S., Portland, Me.; M. E. L., Minneapolis, Minn.; Mrs. J. H., Armour, S. D.; Mrs. T. A. R., Frankfort, Ind.; M. H., Granton, Wis.; Mrs. E. B., Bloomville, Ohio; Miss M. B., Lexington, Ky.; Anxious Reader, Merlin, Ore.; M. T., Alpine, Texas.

◆

Called Higher

Mr. H. G. Day, Randolph, Vt.; Mrs. Jane F. B. Smith, Washington, D. C., 91 years; Mrs. Sophronia H. White, New Sharon, Me., 101 years; Mrs. B. B. Handrick, Hallstead, Pa., 74 years; Miss Emma C. Nason, Omena, Mich.; Mrs. Mary C. Hoagland, Stanton, N. J., 73 years; Mrs. A. J. Julian, Gainesville, Ga., 78 years; Mrs. Oliver Smith, Canton, N. Y., 97 years; Mrs. Rebecca Merrick, Xenia, Ohio; Mrs. M. C. Caldwell, Courtland, Miss., 86 years; Mrs. Mary J. Neilson, Mayville, N. Y.; Mrs. E. M. DeGroff, Charlotte, Mich., 84 years; Rev. Frank Read, Jacksonville, Fla., 76 years; Sister Catherine Griffith, Thomasville, Ind., 85 years; Mrs. S. V. Douglass Slayton, Evanston, Ill., 78 years; John Fort, Watervliet, N. Y.; Mrs. Edna C. Wilton, Lyman, N. H., 48 years; Mrs. Lovina Schaffer Scott, Ellensburg, Wash., 94 years; Willis Sperry, Garden City, L. I., N. Y., 90 years; Mrs. V. A. Payne, Deposit, Ala., 80 years; Mrs. Martha J. Cook, Portsmouth, Ohio, 76 years; Mrs. D. Pease, Bevier, Mo., 79 years; Joseph R. Raynard, Scollard, Alberta, Canada, 59 years; Charles H. Ridgway, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. Herman A. Borgers, North Yakima, Wash., 72 years; Miss Eliza Webb, Kelso, Tenn., 71 years; Mrs. M. J. Cooley, Hulferton, N. Y., 85 years; Mrs. Florence S. Holladay, Cooksville, Miss., 41 years; William P. Grainger, Santa Paula, Calif., 95 years; Mrs. Margaret Morrison, Winthrop, Mass.; Mrs. Sarah Parrott, Pollock, S. D., 84 years; Mrs. Mary E. Gibson, Corydon, Ind.; Mrs. Emma A. Saylor, Ithaca, N. Y., 91 years; Mrs. Sarah Y. Evans, Minneapolis, Minn., 87 years.

Hoover Arraigned as Food Gambler

THE extreme powers asked for Food Administrator Hoover are opposed in a substitute bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Reed of Missouri, providing for a board of five to be appointed by the President, one of whom would be the Secretary of Agriculture, ex-officio. The others, the amendment provides, must all be "resident civilians," which restriction Senator Reed intends to apply to Mr. Hoover, whom he criticized as having lived away from America nearly his entire life.

Senator Reed called upon the Senate not to pass legislation that would "make a food controller out of a gambler." The Missourian maintained that Mr. Hoover had used Belgian relief funds to "rig" wheat and other markets in America, with the effect of putting up prices to American consumers. "I don't charge Mr. Hoover with having gambled with this money for his own profit, but I do say that what he did was wrong, despicably wrong. He ran up prices on our people here to get food cheaper for the Belgians."

Senator Reed started his attack on Mr. Hoover by comparing him with the fiction character J. Rufus Wallingford, and characterized him as "the foremost war gambler in the wheat market." When Belgium needed wheat, he said, Mr. Hoover, with $250,000,000 of the Belgian relief funds, manipulated the Chicago market so that the price, as a result of his operations, went away up.

"He started in to speculate on beans," said Mr. Reed. "He bought 1,000 tons of beans at a low price, then, when the market went up, dumped them in. Later on he did it again. He made money on his own manipulation, but the people of this country had to pay for the fun he had out of it. America paid more for beans than the price Mr. Hoover got for Belgium through his rigging the market.

"Those in this Senate who got black-faced with enthusiasm over Mr. Hoover's threat of the torch, scaffold, and thumbscrew for the food gamblers would do well to ponder over the fact that his own gambling in the wheat and bean market shot up prices in the American market, while he was carrying on abroad. The same was true with articles of clothing, everything he gambled in.

"I charge that Mr. Hoover himself is the author of that very condition of which he complains, and now, having brought it about, he asks this great power to meet it. He admitted in his evidence before the House Committee that competitive bidding between the Allies in our markets was one of the prime causes of our high prices. He failed to say he had been one of the bidders, or the head of the syndicate that did the bidding."

There were excuses and denials in favor of Hoover by Senators Lewis and Phelan and by J. B. White of the American Committee for Belgian Relief. Senator Reed challenged the "doubting Thomases of this Senate" to join him in a demand for an investigation, "and put Mr. Hoover on the stand and get at the bottom of this matter. Let them see if Mr. Hoover is not one of the chief instruments in having brought about that deplorable condition which is now offered as the reason for this food legislation."

The Road to Understanding

Continued from page 815

were just us three at the table, Mr. Denby, Mrs. Gowing, and myself. There was plenty to eat, and it was very nice. But, dear, dear, the dreariness of it! With the soup Mrs. Gowing observed that it was a nice day. With the chicken patties she asked if I liked Dalton; and with the salad she remarked that we had had an unusually cold summer. Dessert was eaten in utter silence."

"But didn't Mr. Denby say—anything?"

"Oh, yes. He asked me for the salt, and he gave an order to Benton. Oh, he's such fascinating company—he is!"

At the disturbed expression on her mother's face, Betty gave a playful shrug. "Oh, I know, he's my respected employer, and all that," she laughed; "and I shall be very careful to do his bidding. Never fear! But that doesn't mean that I've got to love him."

Helen Denby flushed a painful red.

"But I wanted—I hoped you would—er—l-like him, my dear," she faltered.

"Maybe I shall—when I get him—er—trained," retorted Betty, flashing a merry glance into her mother's dismayed eyes. "Don't worry, dear. I was a perfect angel to him to-day. Truly I was. Listen! After luncheon Mr. Denby brought me three or four newspapers which he had marked here and there; and for an hour then I read to him. And what do you think?—when I had finished he said, in that crisp short way of his: 'You have a good voice, Miss Darling. I hope you won't mind if I ask you to read to me often.' And of course I smiled and said, no."

"Of course!" beamed the mother, with so decided an emphasis that Betty exclaimed warningly:

"Tut, tut, now! Don't you go to tumbling down and worshiping him."

"W-worshiping him!" Helen Denby's cheeks were scarlet.

"Yes," nodded Betty, with tranquil superiority. "It isn't good for him, I tell you."

"Oh, Betty! Betty!"—

But Betty only went on with a merry toss of her head:

"Well, after the reading there were other letters, then some work on a card-index record of his correspondence. After that I came home. But, mother, oh, mother, only think what it'll be when we begin to catalogue all those treasures in his cabinets. And we're going to do it. He said we were. It seems as if I just couldn't wait!"

"But you will be careful what you say to him, dear," begged the mother again, anxiously.

Betty stooped to give a playful kiss.

"Careful? Why, mumsey, dear!"

To be continued

◆

Uncle Sam's Huge Salt Supply

Continued from page 813

pounds of it contain nearly 3½ pounds of salt. They estimate that a cubic mile of ocean water contains salt to a weight of 150,000,000 tons. They have figured out what would happen if the salts were all taken out of the ocean; that is, if it were evaporated and laid down on the bottom of the sea. The result would be that the seabed would be built up with salt to a height of 175 feet, or to a height something like that of a sixteen or seventeeen story flat. Now, the surface of the land is only about one-third that of the oceans, so that if the salt in the oceans were spread out over the land, the earth would be buried in salt to a depth of over 500 feet, or as deep almost as the Washington Monument is high. If it were dropped down on the United States it would cover every bit of this country—mountains, valleys and plains—to a depth of between one and two miles, and leave enough to form a deep salt bed on all of our outlying possessions.

There are mines in Europe where they have been taking out salt for seven or eight centuries. I visited some at Salzburg, on the frontier between Germany and Austria, where they have been getting out salt since the days of the Romans. There is a great mine at Wieliczka, near Cracow, where the deposit is more than 1,000 feet deep. It is twenty miles wide and as long as from New York to Pittsburg. They have been mining that salt for more than 700 years, and it is said that the miners have established a village away down under the surface of the earth, the houses being made of salt rock.

The "button" tread on Fisk Tires gives you real anti-skid protection ALL ways

ADDITIONAL SAFETY against side slipping is supplied by a rib of rubber extending around the whole tread, on both sides. Fisk Non-Skids are the only automobile tires that furnish such complete protection.

This graphic illustration explains Fisk Non-Skid features protection from every direction

Fig. 1 is the outside rib that makes an uninterrupted counter against direct side slipping or skidding— Fig. 5 is the same protection on the other side of the tread.

Fig. 2 is the outside row of buttons, connected by a second rib of solid rubber. The buttons, which are slightly higher than the connecting rib, offer perfect resistance against skidding and because they grip the road so firmly, make the pull forward in soft ground ever so much more positive and certain— Fig. 4 has these identical qualities, but from the opposite directions.

Fig. 3 is the master button around which the Fisk Non-Skid tread is constructed. It supplies resistance against slipping in any direction—no matter which way there is a tendency to skid there is always a flat resisting surface to prevent that skidding and to assist the sure forward movement of the wheel.

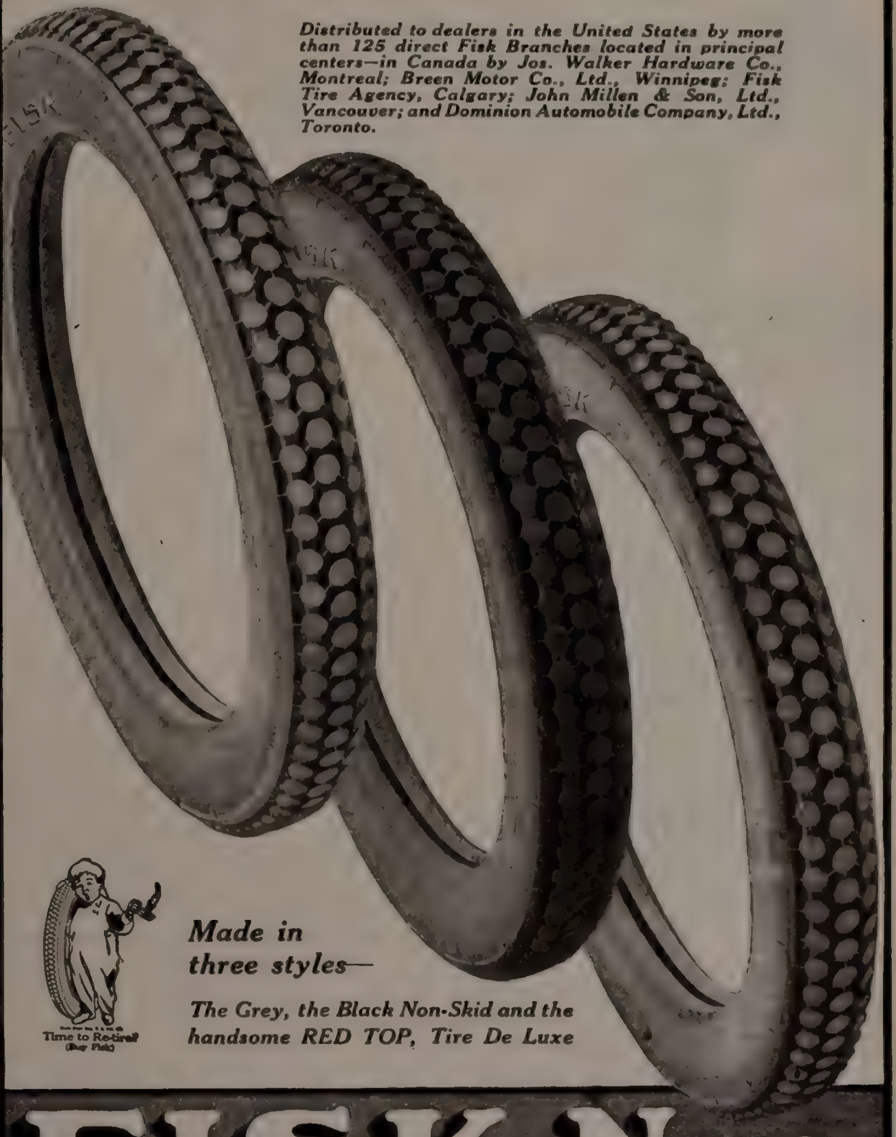
Buy Fisk Tires and get the real protection. Price and mileage are right. You can't buy greater dollar-for-dollar value in tire quality—and no other tire offers such safety. You can buy them everywhere.

Distributed to dealers in the United States by more than 125 direct Fisk Branches located in principal centers—in Canada by Jos. Walker Hardware Co., Montreal; Breen Motor Co., Ltd., Winnipeg; Fisk Tire Agency, Calgary; John Millen & Son, Ltd., Vancouver; and Dominion Automobile Company, Ltd., Toronto.



Made in three styles—

The Grey, the Black Non-Skid and the handsome RED TOP, Tire De Luxe

FISK Non-Skid TIRES

Lift Corns out with Fingers

A few drops of Freezone applied directly upon a tender, aching corn stops the soreness at once and soon the entire corn or callus loosens and can be lifted off with the fingers without even a twinge of pain.

Freezone

Removes hard corns, soft corns, also corns between the toes and hardened calluses. Does not irritate or inflame the surrounding skin or tissue. You feel no pain when applying it or afterward.

Women! Keep a small bottle of Freezone on your dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Small bottles can be had at any drug store in the U. S. or Canada

THE EDWARD WESLEY CO. Cincinnati, Ohio

EAT SKINNER'S THE BEST MACARONI

MY SIGNATURE
Paul F. Skinner
ON EVERY PACKAGE
SKINNER'S
SKINNER MFG CO OMAHA U S A
MACARONI

Bring Out the Hidden Beauty
Beneath the soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon. Mercolized Wax gradually, gently absorbs the devitalized surface skin, revealing the young, fresh, beautiful skin underneath. Used by refined women who prefer complexions of true naturalness. Have you tried it?
Mercolized Wax in one ounce package, with directions for use, sold by all druggists.

Church Organs

LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.

Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass.

Hook & Hastings Co.
BRANCHES
Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dallas

GORDON
A RELIGIOUS COLLEGE
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
SCHOOL OF MISSIONS
National, Evangelical, Interdenominational, Vocational, Cultural. New fireproof building, with dormitories in Boston's finest educational district. Catalog. Address Dean NATHAN R. WOOD, GORDON BIBLE COLLEGE, Boston, Mass.

NEW-CHURCH THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL
48 Quincy St., Cambridge, Mass.
Established 1866. Three years course. College preparation desired. The curriculum includes systematic study of the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg and spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures. Courses by correspondence when desired.
For catalogue and information, address
WILLIAM L. WORCESTER, President.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

YOU CAN AFFORD A NEW SONG BOOK. FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL. No. 1 or 2. Round or Shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 88 songs, words and music. No. 1 and 2 combined $5 per hundred, 10c a copy. E. A. K. HACKETT, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Lutherans Define Their Loyalty

Leaders of Various Bodies of the Church Answer Nebraska State Council of Defense

IN a convention at Omaha, Neb., twenty-six ministers of the Lutheran Church in Nebraska, representing seven of the nine distinct branches of the Church in the state, have entered most solemn protest against the manifest injustice on the part of the Nebraska State Council of Defense contained in the Council's reference to the Lutheran Church in its July 11 charges of disloyalty in Nebraska.

There were prominent pastors, professors, editors, and presidents of Lutheran bodies in the state, representing the following branches of the Church: The Augustana Synod of America, the Nebraska Synod of the General Synod, the Missouri Synod, the United Danish Lutheran Church in America, the German Nebraska Synod, the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, and the Danish Lutheran Church.

Rev. Professor P. H. Buehring, President of the Hebron Academy of the Joint Synod of Ohio, sent this message: "Sympathize with the movement, Lutherans law-abiding."

Rev. G. H. Michelmann, president of the German Nebraska Synod, sent this message: "My motto is the words of Carl Schurz, "My country, right or wrong; if right, to be kept right; if wrong, to be set right."

The meeting was held in Immanuel, Swedish Lutheran Church, July 17. Complete harmony ruled in the meeting. Rev. Luther M. Kuhns, editor of the Luther League Review, was made chairman, and Rev. A. T. Lorimer, secretary. A large American flag decorated the chairman's table. "A mighty Fortress is Our God," and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" were sung. The meeting was manifestly patriotic. Chairman Kuhns said in his opening address: "This is the most remarkable gathering of Lutherans of the various branches of the Church ever held in Nebraska, possibly in America."

CHAIRMAN KUHNS recognized Rev. E. G. Chinlund of the Augustana Synod, who offered resolutions, which he moved be referred to a committee consisting of a member of each Lutheran body represented at the meeting, together with the chairman of the meeting as chairman of the committee. The following were appointed as a committee: Rev. Luther M. Kuhns; M. W. Halverson, representing the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America; C. F. Sandahl, president of the Nebraska Conference of the Augustana Synod of America; A. M. Andersen, pastor of the United Evangelical Lutheran Church and editor of "Danskeren"; Alfred Sorensen, representative of the Danish Lutheran Church; E. T. Otto, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, representing the Synod of Missouri, Ohio and Other States; I. Gertsen, vice-president of the United Danish Lutheran Church in America; H. F. Schmidt, representing the German Nebraska Synod; C. B. Harmon, president of the Synod of Nebraska of the General Synod.

The committee retired, and after deliberation presented the following, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, The Nebraska State Council of Defense, in a statement given to the public, have assailed the loyalty of the Lutheran Church,

"Therefore, as officials and representatives of the various branches of the Lutheran Churches in Nebraska, we reply to these aspersions by giving the public the following statement:

"The doctrinal basis of the Lutheran Church, as expressed in its great symbol known as the Augsburg Confession, to which the ministry of the church is obligated, in express terms commands loyalty to the government, and:

"The small catechism in which the laity is instructed in preparation for confirmation or membership in the church, in its Table of Duties, enjoins obedience unto the higher powers, saying: 'Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the "Lord's sake, whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors as to them that are sent by him."' (I Peter 2 : 13.)

"The Lutheran Church stands not only in Nebraska, but before the world, committed by its fundamental teachings, without equivocation or mental reservation, to unquestioned loyalty to the government, and in this respect requires no defense from us.

"It is singular that the Nebraska State Council of Defense, because of cases of indiscreet conduct or speech upon the part of individuals, has particularized our church for the mark of odium, when undoubtedly among all creeds there have been those likewise guilty, and yet these creeds have been passed unnoticed. To this evident injustice on the part of the Nebraska State Council of Defense we take exception and enter most solemn protest.

"Further, that the public may be reassured of the loyalty to the government of the Lutheran Church in Nebraska, in harmony with the declaration of all our general bodies already made public, we, representatives of the Lutheran bodies in the state of Nebraska, declare our honor andthe loyalty of both our ministry and laity as a whole in unswerving devotion to our common country, the protection of whose flag we enjoy and with whose destiny we have cast our lives and our all, and in defense of whose welfare and to secure whose triumph our people are responding."

Rev. E. T. Otto, of the Missouri Synod, moved the meeting be made a permanent organization, with Rev. Luther M. Kuhns as chairman, to be called together in case of necessity by the chairman.

This convention has brought the Lutherans of Nebraska closer together in harmony, and the Lutheran Church in Nebraska officially as a Church has purged itself of the charge brought against it of disloyalty to the government.

LUTHER M. KUHNS.

◆

Life is what we make it—a garden or a desert.

Are you classed as a radiator or as a refrigerator?

He who would link arms with happiness must first woo usefulness.

Words are either the handmaiden of thought, or the confession of foolishness.

Great people find springs of learning where common folk see only a thirsty land.

No man is truly rich save he who has seeing eyes, hearing ears, and a responsive heart.

No man's influence stops when the brown earth covers his body—you can't kill influence.

Some church-members expect their pastor to be a saint—let them blaze the way for him.

Young People's Topics for August 12

The Sin of Gossip and Slander

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topics. Ps. 120 : 1–7; Ex. 20 : 16

PERHAPS no one of the Ten Commandments is more often broken than the one that forbids the bearing of false witness. Oh, how we do delight in savory tales! Nothing is news that is only "good." We arch our brows and lay our finger beside our lips and pledge the hearer to eternal secrecy, as we say, "Did you hear this about So and So?" And then we retail the latest piece of gossip which we have not verified and of the truth of which we know nothing, and the other says, "Ain't it awful!" or something to that effect, and promptly proceeds to retell the story at the first opportunity, with appropriate variations according to the power of the teller's imagination. Thus, before we know it, a great scandal has arisen, and the one who started the tale would hardly recognize his own story. Character is the most priceless possession of mankind, yet character may be smirched beyond repair by an idle word. It is singularly true, and even more sad on that account, that the bearer of evil tales is usually conscious of some personal guilt which renders delightful the thought that another is also subject to suspicion. Turning from sin is not half so attractive as proving some one else to be a sinner. Most scandal, when traced to its source, is found to have its origin in an unclean heart that is given up to envy or hatred. There is only one other source, and that is the occasional chance remark of a well-meaning, thoughtless person, which may be turned by the artful tongue of the gossip into the channels of scandal. There is only one cure for scandal, and that is purity of heart, supported by a careful watch upon the tongue.

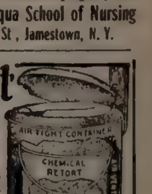
Cowardice Makes Weaklings

Epworth League Topic. John 18 : 15–27

IT seems almost unnecessary to discuss this topic, it is so obvious. All of us occasionally have been weak, at the time when we should have been strongest, and most of us have been conscious that the source of our weakness was fear. Sometimes we have called it ignorance, or have blamed the time as being inopportune; but nevertheless it is probable that fear of doing wrong, perhaps, or of showing ourselves ignorant, or some other form of fear has made us weak. Peter had a fiery spirit and was ready to fight in the garden, but the spirit within him lacked fuel to maintain the fire, and a short hour later, at the high priest's house, he made a most pitiful spectacle as he denied his Lord with oaths and shaking knees. Peter's weakness ended some time between the day of the Resurrection and the day of Pentecost, when, having prayed, the disciples received the Holy Ghost and the baptism of fire from on high, which purged their souls of weakness and their hearts of fear. The Peter of Pentecost is the Peter of the denial, plus the spirit of God. The same cure for cowardice is ours today.

WANTED— Women to become nurses. The need was never so great as now. We have trained thousands of women in their own homes. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—with actual experiences.
Specimen lesson pages free.
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St, Jamestown, N. Y.

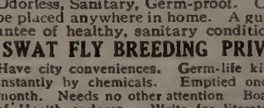
Comfort Indoor Closet



Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Can be placed anywhere in home. A guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions.
SWAT FLY BREEDING PRIVY
Have city conveniences. Germ-life killed instantly by chemicals. Emptied once a month. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse. Write for literature.
Agents wanted—exclusive territory.
COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
548 Factories Bldg., TOLEDO, OHIO

THE LURE OF THE DANCE
By T. A. FAULKNER
This is the very best as well as the strongest book dealing with the evils of the dance that has yet been issued. Written, as it was, by a former dancing school teacher, who, when he was so engaged, had no conscientious scruples against aiding in the downfall of his pupils, this book reveals secrets of the dancing school and dance hall that could not be known other than by personal participation in the scenes and events described. Actual happenings only are recorded. This is the book you want to read and put into the hands of all your young friends if you wish to save them from lives of possible misery and shame. 148 pages of actual facts about "The Lure of the Dance," by mail postpaid 50 cents. Send your order to-day.
The Biola Book Room, Bible Institute, Los Angeles, Cal.

What is Better for that Birthday?



A BIRTHDAY GARDEN of FLOWERS

than one of these beautiful "Chase" Flower cards? Every flower has a message. 35c complete.
For Sale Everywhere or Direct
Send for Catalog 222
Ernest Dudley Chase, 251 Causeway St., Boston, Mass.

TOOLS for the shop, factory, garage and home. Many high class tools attractively priced in our Odds and Ends pamphlet, which is mailed free on request by MONTGOMERY & CO., Inc.,
109 Fulton Street, New York City

Additional Gifts to the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Mrs. W E Pingle	$2.00
W D Rannells	2.00
Miss Mattie A Iams	2.00
E F Snow	2.00
Mary F McClelland	2.00
Mrs Kate R Sloan	2.00
C H M, Cherry Field, Me	2.00
Mrs L L Danforth	2.00
Margaret Hughes	2.00
Friend, Susquehanna, Pa	2.00
Julia S Mairs	2.00
Mr & Mrs J L Mulder	2.00
Mr & Mrs Abner Towne	2.00
Nona Edgerton	2.00
Mrs C C Trevett	2.00
Mr and Mrs G M Welch	2.00
Axel T Johnson	2.00
Mrs E L Chase	2.00
Mrs Edith L Beaton	2.00
Miss Mattie Irwin	2.00
Mr. Bernhard Nikkel	2.00
Antioch U B S S, Montgomery Co, Ohio	2.00
Subscriber, Spokane, Wash	2.00
Mrs S E & E C Carrington	2.00
Margaret Gordon	2.00
Friend, Wolcott, N Y	2.00
W H Boulter	2.00
F O X	2.00
E P Stevens	2.00
S S Club No. 5, Vermontville, Mich	2.00
Mrs C J Bailey	2.00
Floyd E Brenner	2.00
A E Nutt	2.00
Rev & Mrs James H Rogers	2.00
Mrs E H Alden	2.00
Miss C T Meigs	2.00
George Lyon	2.00
Walter Swan	2.00
Mrs Addie Clifford	2.00
A Y Van Eps	2.00
E R K, Hettinger, N D	2.00
Friend, Canonsburg, Pa	2.00
John Koster	2.00
Mr & Mrs J L Sutton	2.00
Keith Sime	2.00
Russell Sime	2.00
Mrs H Vial & daughter	1.50
Beginners & Primary Depts, Fairpoint S S, Mill Hall, Pa	1.50
Jas Huddleson	1.50
John L Hoffman	1.50
Mrs J E Hughes	1.50
Mrs F A Wheeler	1.50
Mrs R J Truax	1.50
Mrs John Lish	1.00
Friend, Indianapolis, Ind	1.00
Geo S Gass	1.00
Friend, Waterloo, Iowa	1.00
Calvin W Price	1.00
Mrs G Wilcox	1.00
Mrs Dora Flanagan	1.00
Reader, N Y C, N Y	1.00
Mrs Ida Pilker	1.00
——, Summit Hill, Pa	1.00
Miss Nannie McLean	1.00
Class, Central Presby Ch, W Lafayette, Ind	1.00
George Jack	1.00
——, Adamston, W Va	1.00
Harriet L Morehouse	1.00
Miss N S Taylor	1.00
Mrs A M Earle	1.00
Mrs Jane Fitch	1.00
Mrs John G Edward	1.00
Mrs W H Willey	1.00
Frank Ashby	1.00
Olive Ashby	1.00
Rev F K Fowler	1.00
Estella M Lacy	1.00
Leona Bloom	1.00
Florence M Perry	1.00
Mrs E L Covell	1.00
"A Baptist Brother"	1.00
Mrs A W Giddens	1.00
Wm McNeely	1.00
Mrs S D Strang	1.00
Mrs Etta Knott	1.00
A K Kintz	1.00
Jos L Black	1.00
Mrs Lizzie C Nicholas	1.00
C Hininger	1.00
Addie James	$1.00
Bessie Damery	1.00
M E Pease	1.00
Mrs Ellen Holbrook	1.00
O M Hampton	1.00
Friend, Dunn's Sta, Pa	1.00
H R Staight	1.00
Mrs Mary Lane	1.00
Eliza J Nagle	1.00
Mrs M A E Maggard	1.00
Mrs I J Tipler	1.00
R H Moore	1.00
S I Keeler	1.00
Agnes Dickson	1.00
Mrs Otto Colborg	1.00
Mrs A A Dinsdale	1.00
Wm Roberts	1.00
G W Leeper	1.00
A M Gibson	1.00
Mrs W E Jones	1.00
Friend, S Bend, Ind	1.00
Widow, Jersey City, N J	1.00
——, Stockton, Calif	1.00
Ida Trullinger	1.00
Edith Finster	1.00
Mrs J M Ingalls	1.00
Maggie Miller	1.00
Bethel A M E S S, Detroit, Mich	1.00
Nels Tousan	1.00
F W Doster	1.00
Rev Giles B Cooke	1.00
W A Eaheart	1.00
"People of Ivanhoe, Okla"	1.00
Mrs John Krueger	1.00
Friend, Canonburg, Pa	1.00
Marion Razey	1.00
Mrs J H Zimmer	1.00
Miss E L Russell	1.00
Mr Elmer Rohleder	1.00
Mrs L C Dick	1.00
Julia S Mairs	1.00
Mrs Samuel Harper	1.00
Primary Dept, Warren Ave Bapt Tabernacle, S S, Boston, Mass	1.00
Friend, Bethel, Vt	1.00
Mrs Ed Ijames	1.00
Friend, Monroe, Mich	1.00
Brother, Monson, Mass	1.00
Mrs F A Bartlett	1.00
Mrs Geo Bulmore	1.00
Mrs H F Winchester	1.00
J H C	1.00
Mrs H A Voelz	1.00
Mrs J Biesecker	1.00
Mrs Ella Roush	1.00
Mrs A H Smithson	1.00
Mr & Mrs Graham Morgan	1.00
Mrs N S Fiscus	1.00
Mr & Mrs W B Eastman	1.00
Mrs Anna Freeman	1.00
Mrs A C Staples	1.00
Mrs O G Wilson	1.00
Martha Grigsby	1.00
Friend, Donnellson, Iowa	1.00
Anna C Gulden	1.00
Reader, Princeton, Ill	1.00
Miriam C Comerford	1.00
Mrs G C Marshall	1.00
Mrs M McCrae	1.00
"Friend, Enosburg Fall, Vt	1.00
Helen Graham	.50
Mrs F Beaumont	.50
——, Rockford, Ill	.50
Mrs Geo W Smith	.50
Ray Rash	.50
Louis Trimm	.50
——, Northfield, N J	.50
Mrs Toole	.50
Mrs Laura Woodward	.50
E A Hammett	.50
J A Matson	.50
I X L	.50
Friend, Pinewood, S Car	.25
Sallie B McMurtry	.25
Dr Mary D Nussey	.25
Mr David Holmes	.25
Mrs Edgar N Quimby	.25
Mrs G Armstrong	.25
Church of God, Maytown, Pa	7.00
A M Stewart	.10
S M Carnahan	$11.00
School Children, Washington, D C	1.56
Patterson W C T U, Atlanta, Ga	1.30
M E S S, St Louisville, Ohio	1.68
A Thornton	2.53
Practical Workers Soc, Leetsdale, Pa	6.00
Mr & Mrs F A Farr	6.00
S S, Hermiston, Ore	6.31
M E Ch & S S, Duvall, Wash	7.50
Two Friends, Windsor, Conn	4.00
Friends, Erin, N Y	8.00
Florence A McNeal	6.00
R D White	1.60
Amer Union S S, Stockholm, Me	3.50
G T Getmann	11.00
Gomer Cong Ch, Wales, Iowa	5.31
The Mogk Family	8.00
Mrs M Brooks Peirson	1.44
P O Wee	7.00
Mrs Mary S Ward	92.50
Clara Moore & Son	10.25
Edwin Parks	6.00
Margaret Thompson	11.00
Mrs William S Elam	4.00
Mrs J E Ort & father	.75
Presby Ch, Kirkwood, Ga	10.34
Wm Young	6.00
Women's Missy Soc'ty, Hopkins, S C	2.35
Mrs L G Todd	1.25
Maud L Miller	6.00
Mrs Mary Hensley	4.00
J H Smith	40.00
Mrs Mary W Holmes	4.00
Mrs James D Tillman	4.00
Mrs John Powley	4.00
——, La Clede, Ill	.10
Mrs M H A Frack	6.00
Friend, Crossett, Ark	3.30
W M Chestnut	7.50
S R Dimick	7.50
Miss Bessie Winger	.75
H D Allen	9.00
Mrs Geo B Whitney	2.25
Mrs M Dutton	4.00
Mrs John McCall & Mrs Geo Carlile	4.00
W S Thompson	.65
Carl Stenwall	4.00
Four Children, Deckerville, Sask, Can	12.00
Mrs A S Wooton	.10
Mrs Grace Kay	9.00
Hope Miller	6.00
Friend, Mount Mitchell, N C	3.10
Emma C Sterrett	35.00
Mrs Emma Leavitt	5.87
Y M C A, Wenatchee, Wash	5.40
Bapt Ch, Onaway, Mich	8.00
Wm F Unruh	.75
Reader, Milford, Va	1.25
S S, Presby Ch, Buffalo, Tenn	20.06
W M Cumming	12.00
Mrs Wm Northcote	12.00
Geo Ravn	80.00
Mrs Cora Caldwell	1.25
Shiloh S S, Codell, Kans	6.35
Beaver Dam Bapt Ch, Autryville, N C	4.29
Rudolph W Meinhardt	16.00
Advent Christian Ch, Salem, Mass	22.00
Mrs M Moon	40.00
Mrs L M Richardson	100.00
John C Wick	100.00
——, Petersburg, Texas	100.00
C A Prevost	100.00
Geo W Gensemer	100.00
Henry Knoche	100.00
Geo Chesson	50.00
Friend, Passaic, N J	$50.00
Mrs S S Noble	50.00
"W," Tidioute	50.00
Mrs Jane M Mallory	50.00
Mr Chas H Garrett	50.00
Peter Baggerly	25.00
Joseph Gledhill	25.00
F P Hobart	25.00
Jacob Doyle	25.00
Mr & Mrs A Bradley	25.00
Olive Harris	25.00
Miss Lydia M Vieth, mother & sister	25.00
M O Gibson	20.00
Geo Ravn	20.00
Edgar A Small	20.00
"I H N," Harper, Ill	20.00
Geo Graham	20.00
Mrs D D Fuller	20.00
J E Roosa	20.00
Wm H Weeks	20.00
——, Talladega, Ala	20.00
Cyrus Gray	20.00
H, Caspiana, La	20.00
Mrs M Sonna	20.00
Joshua Scharf	20.00
Mrs W P Link	20.00
Mrs Vern Weigel	20.00
J J Pounder	15.00
Mrs E C Lee	15.00
Mr & Mrs A H Gilbert	15.00
Mr & Mrs Jo Nederhoed	15.00
T H Turner & family	15.00
W B H Whitten	15.00
Edgar A Small	15.00
James G Duncan	15.00
Luther League, Bethlehem, Ch, Wahoo, Nebr	15.00
——, Salina, Kans	10.00
Friend, Wilmington, Dela	10.00
Mrs Jeff Gillespie	10.00
Mr & Mrs Frank McGranahan	10.00
James J Oson	10.00
Mrs J N Williams	10.00
P R Barkell	10.00
"Friend of Humanity"	10.00
Silver Circle, Graybull, Wyo	10.00
Friend, Adrian, Minn	10.00
Mrs Emily L Hanna	10.00
John R Head	10.00
J I H, Hot Springs, Ark	10.00
A & C Mottaz	10.00
Wm R McNeil	10.00
Grace Mission, St Paul, Minn	10.00
Ladies' Aid, Badger, S Dak	10.00
Sarah E Harwood, Esther, Elizabeth & George Beam	10.00
John M Puhler	10.00
J H Hehn	10.00
F E Armstrong	10.00
David Ellyson	10.00
Minnie Tillson	10.00
Oscar Lowry	10.00
Mrs H B Pierce	10.00
Mrs J M French	10.00
——, Rensselaer Falls, N Y	10.00
H G Buel	10.00
Lucretia B Lacy	10.00
Mrs Virginia F Holmes	10.00
Theo D Haag	10.00
Friend, Storm Lake, Iowa	10.00
J W Spears	10.00
J A Simpson	10.00
Anna E Carlson	10.00
Mr & Mrs S A Skinner	10.00
Mrs Chas Allen	10.00
W C Stuykes	10.00
——, Madison, S Dak	10.00
L Huggins	10.00
C C Cromer	10.00
Mrs W G Kurrley	10.00
——, Wilkinsburg, Pa	10.00
Mrs C R Rand	10.00
Louis Weihe	10.00
Mrs E C Osborn	10.00
J D Van Doren	10.00
John Downs	10.00
D S E	10.00
L W Felter	10.00
Mr & Mrs J Lloyd Hunter	10.00
Mrs Chas H Garrett	10.00
John Dykstra	10.00
Chas Edie	10.00
D C Eberly	10.00
Mary P Whitney	10.00
L H Lord	10.00
Friend, Kingston, N Y	10.00
T P Barber	10.00
Union S S, Loma, N Dak	$10.00
M F Smith	10.00
——, Shoshone, Idaho	10.00
Mrs M E Hilliard	10.00
Mrs Harriet A Leer	10.00
Wm R Duncan	5.00
G W Baker	5.00
F M Williamson	5.00
H J Knickel	5.00
Mrs Julia Hinderman	5.00
W B Jones	5.00
Friend, New York City, N Y	5.00
Reader, Freewater, Ore	5.00
Mrs M E Gazett	5.00
J F Good	5.00
Hulda Elbring	5.00
May Fleming	5.00
Callie B Gish	5.00
C E Roup	5.00
H Anderson	5.00
Miss Belle Pressly	5.00
D C McMillan	5.00
Willing Workers' Club, Grand View, Ida	5.00
Mrs E D Cutler	5.00
——, Ripon, Wisc	5.00
E R Bailey	5.00
E C Prudden	5.00
Ethel Laut	5.00
Friend, Wichita, Kans	5.00
Mrs Ellen D Williams	5.00
S R Dinnick	5.00
C A Ward	5.00
David H Helm	5.00
Mrs J G Glasgow	5.00
Mrs G Frit	5.00
J Sick	5.00
Miss J M Elwin	5.00
W S Duggan	5.00
Mrs E E Burke	5.00
C F L	5.00
Mrs Joseph H Safford	5.00
Theo Price	5.00
Dr R W Frey	5.00
Mrs E E Keene	5.00
F D Tremaine	5.00
Mr & Mrs Wm Talen	5.00
R T	5.00
Mrs R T Crofts	5.00
Ellen G Gray	5.00
Mrs Carrie Noffsinger	5.00
P B Dickeman	5.00
"Madge," Dixon, Ill	5.00
Mrs L Hulin	5.00
Jane Bailey	5.00
Mrs A F Wright	5.00
"Cash," Phila, Pa	5.00
Mrs L W P	5.00
W J Treloar	5.00
Mr & Mrs Flynn	5.00
"I H N," Essex Co	5.00
Mrs Lida Bishop	5.00
Friends' Camp, Crook, S Dak	5.00
Mrs H C Fisher	5.00
Mrs G W Rhoads	5.00
Johanne M Andersen	5.00
Marie Larsen	5.00
W N Llewelyn	5.00
Mrs M A Motycka	5.00
Miss M C Wolcott	5.00
Ida Wing	5.00
Friend, Cedar Rapids, Iowa	5.00
Mrs V S Cook	5.00
Besemer Home, Howard City, Mich	5.00
Mary H Brown	5.00
Hasbrouck Holmes	5.00
Mrs Anne Jensen	5.00
Mrs Elizabeth Alexander	5.00
Mrs Mary A Mehrert	5.00
Mrs J L Schafer	5.00
"A Woburn Friend"	5.00
D B Bardwell	5.00
Wm Hartje	5.00
J E Norris	5.00
M P X	5.00
Conrad Kessemuth	5.00
Emma Woodruff	5.00
Mrs Eva Merrill	5.00
B R A	5.00
E Anderson	5.00
Miss Julia Schober	5.00
A P Patterson	5.00
H S Kenyon	5.00
Charles A Schneider	5.00
Mrs W R H	5.00
Mr & Mrs Wm E Mershon	$5.00
W L Zalman	5.00
Selma Anderson	5.00
J Marie Oswalt	5.00
Martha Landrock	5.00
Friend, Marengo, Iowa	5.00
T E D Turner	5.00
Mrs H A Parks	5.00
Mrs Caroline Dobberstein	5.00
Mrs Annie G Burnham	5.00
T Q Kimmel	5.00
T M Stewart	5.00
E M R F	5.00
Mrs J Weber	5.00
Alice Peterson	5.00
Mrs E E Ames	5.00
Mrs J E Chamblin	5.00
O J Robinson	5.00
Mrs Carrie B Webster	5.00
Mrs R A Conner	5.00
S S, Menlo, Wash	5.00
Mrs R A Henrichs	5.00
Rachel Fraine	5.00
Miss E A Evans	5.00
Lyman Hall	5.00
Lola Griffith	5.00
Mrs Sarah A Smith	5.00
Mrs E Sutphin	5.00
Subscriber, Colton, S Dak	5.00
A Haeberlin	5.00
Emma M Moser	5.00
Milton Labaw	5.00
Emily F Pein	5.00
Miss Elnora Palm	5.00
Imogene Reynolds	5.00
Minnie A Richter	5.00
Friend, Laurel, Ore	5.00
In His Name, Amenia, N Y	5.00
——, Newark, N J	5.00
Mary V H Willcox	5.00
Mrs Aug Ulrich	5.00
E van Domselaar	5.00
Geo Charles	5.00
Miss Jessie F White	5.00
S P Swenson	5.00
Ladies' Aid, Mesic, N C	5.00
C A Hagaman	5.00
Mrs Ruth A Kile	5.00
Mrs E O Beedle	5.00
D H Stebbins	5.00
Miss Emma Meeker	5.00
George T Guard	5.00
F P McKinstry	5.00
A Student, Atlanta, Ga	5.00
——, Harrisburg, Pa	5.00
Elizabeth Ladd	5.00
M J B	5.00
Mrs Herbert W Howe	5.00
Mrs Jennie Moats	5.00
John Wiley	5.00
Friend, Madison, Pa	5.00
Lydia E Herr	5.00
N P Swanson	5.00
Mrs M T McCormick	5.00
Chas Woehrle	5.00
Susan C Clarke	5.00
Stella E Smith	5.00
Wm Y Douglas	5.00
——, N Adams, Mass	5.00
Friend, Stuart, Iowa	5.00
Reader, McClellandtown, Pa	5.00
Mrs Julia Rayot	5.00
——, Los Angeles, Calif	5.00
Mrs Alice Wray	5.00
Mrs J D Musson	5.00
Mary C Hagadorn	5.00
Miss Katie Blaich	3.00
Mrs W F	3.00
Lucy Vanderhoof	3.00
Mrs W J Brooks	3.00
S J Lyle	3.00
Emil Herigstad	3.00
Jay Wormwood	3.00
E & R C	3.00
Annie F Patteson	3.00
Dorcas Horswell	3.00
Miss Marion M Wood	3.00
Ruth E Griffith	3.00
Mrs C I Hudson	3.00
L H Harlow	3.00
Mr & Mrs J G Sluyter	3.00
H A Barker	3.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Send all gifts for this fund to the Christian Herald, 93 Bible House, New York City

Be Dainty—

In these days of delicate laces—of filmy silky underthings—daintiness is at a premium. Never before was the feminine touch so highly prized.

It's the dainty women your brother and your husband pick out to praise.

To look bright and smart and fresh—you must feel bright and smart and fresh.

A refreshing bath and pretty clothes help. But for the quintessence of daintiness—follow the bath with a delightful rub with Mennen's.

Then shake it generously over your linen—and see the effect!

It's the big secret with many a fascinating woman.

Yes—it is lovely dusted between the sheets (especially on summer nights).

Just try it and see! Don't borrow the baby's can (he'll miss it). Get one for yourself. And as the proper Borating of Talcum is part of the reason it's so soothing—be sure you get the original by asking for Mennen's.

William Gerhard Mennen

MENNEN'S

BORATED TALCUM

TRADEMARK

MENNEN
BORATED

Now in the new large-size economical can

MENNEN'S TALCUMS—all with the original borated formula that has never been bettered—include a variety to satisfy every need; Borated, Violet, Sen Yang with a delicate Oriental perfume; Flesh Tint and Cream Tint, each charmingly perfumed; and the new Talcum for Men, a boon after shaving, with a neutral color that leaves the face free from the pallor of a pure white powder. Send 5 cents for a trial can of any one brand or 25 cents for any five.

GERHARD MENNEN CHEMICAL CO

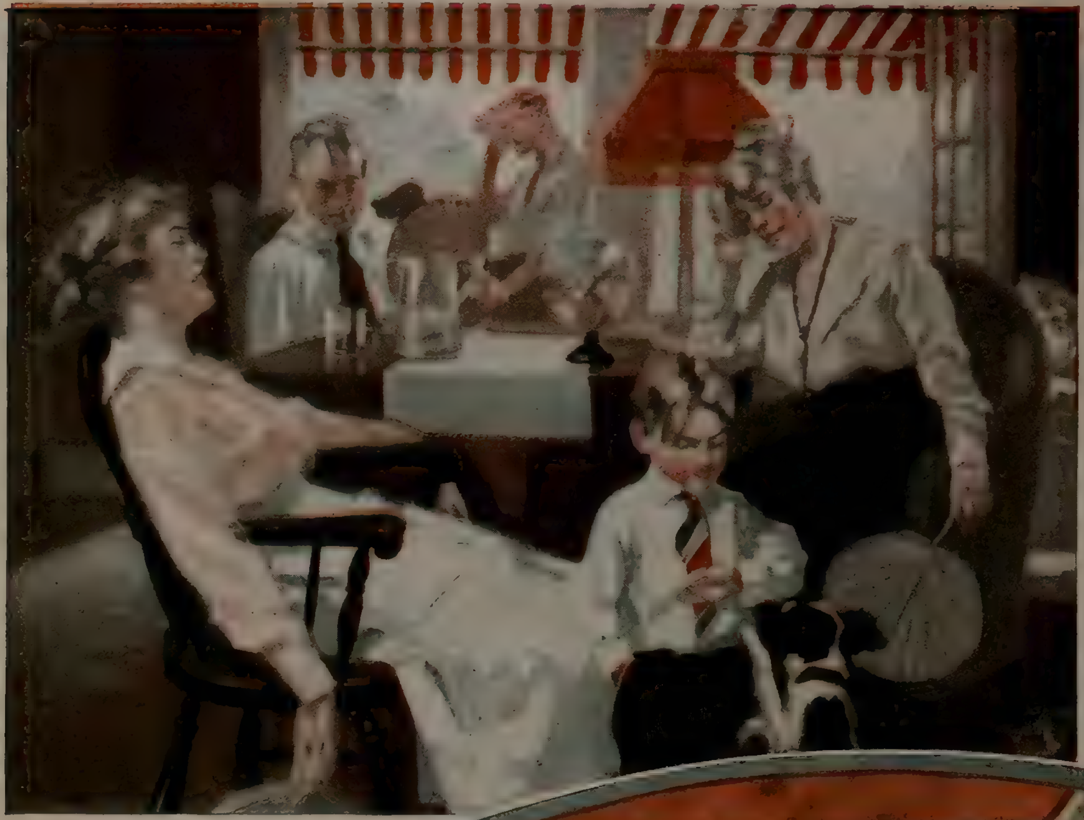
Laboratories

928 Orange Street, Newark, New Jersey

Canadian Factory, Montreal, Quebec

Sales Agents for Canada:

Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.



THEN

Willys SIX

L Head Type of High Power

Seven Passenger

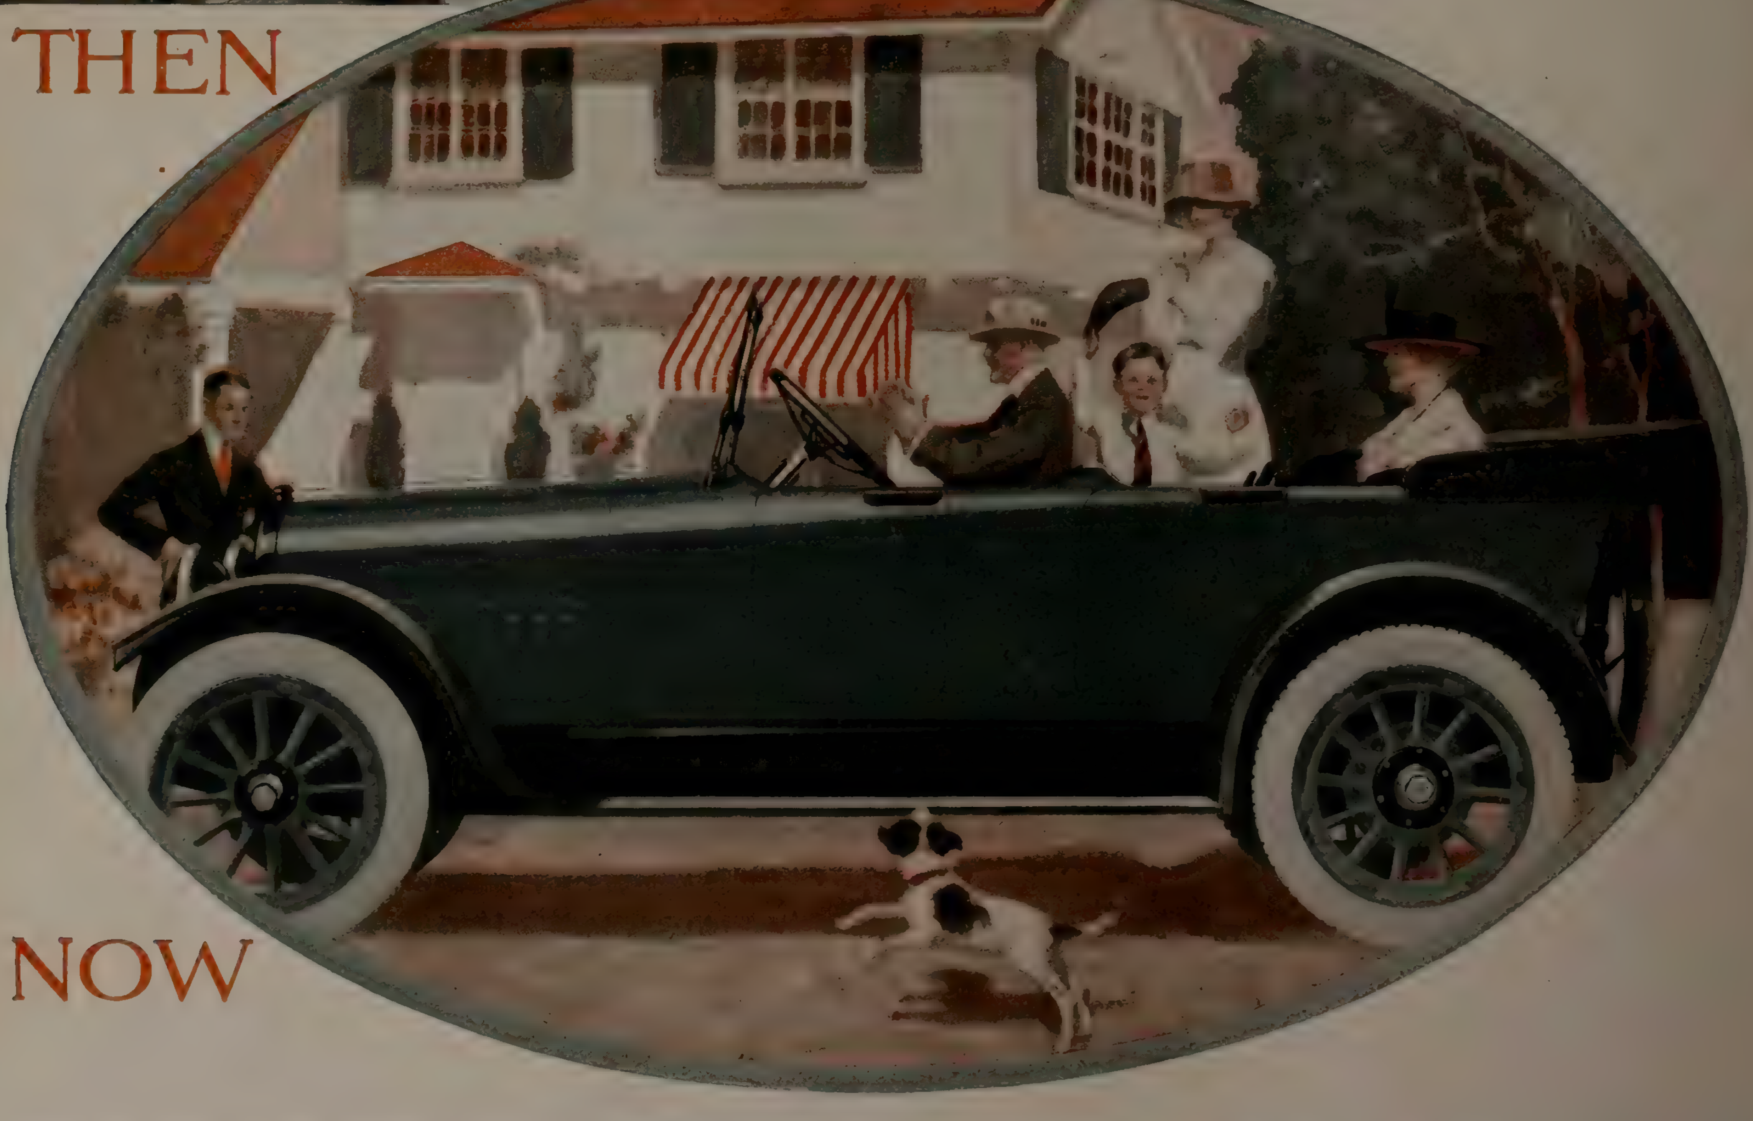
$1295

FOUR PASSENGER

Club Six $1295

Sedan Body also furnished on this chassis

All prices f. o. b. Toledo
Subject to change without notice



NOW

Then—a hot, sultry day was something to be endured, since it could not be cured.

Now—there is a cure.

The motor car has turned the "cross" days into days of comfort for the whole family.

And here is a car—the new light weight Willys Six—which will gladden the hearts of the six-cylinder enthusiasts—and of the discriminating who have not yet found just the car they have wanted.

This announces a scientific development in Sixes.

Heretofore the great problem most manufacturers had to contend with was the all important factor of proper and perfect balance.

Either the car was too heavy and consequently underpowered, or else too light, and as a result overpowered.

In both cases this meant poor performance, costly upkeep and a short life.

So it is with considerable gratification that we announce what we believe to be one of the most scientifically balanced, popular priced Sixes on the market.

In a word, this means better performance, lower upkeep and longer life.

The motor is 45 horsepower. It is a wonder for work; quick as a flash on the getaway; speedy; surprisingly economical, and develops excess power for all purposes.

Scientific designing has done more.

For now, by scientific designing, in the light of our great experience in building sixes, we have produced a lighter car without sacrificing sturdiness.

Reduced weight means additional gasoline economy, greater tire mileage and an easier car to handle.

The body design also is new. Long, sweeping, graceful lines distinguish it as one of the year's advanced models. It's a perfect beauty.

Your wife will fall in love with it on sight. Don't let her see it until you have made up your mind to buy. For after one look she'll give you no peace until you do buy.

The Willys Six is the Six for you.

It has greater power; lighter weight; is unusually roomy, very economical and extremely handsome.

You'll be surprised at its wonderful performance, but its price will be even a greater surprise.

$1295—complete!

See the Willys-Overland dealer now for early delivery.

Willys-Overland Inc., Toledo, Ohio
Willys-Knight and Overland Motor Cars

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, AUGUST 8, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 32. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

The hills have screened the sun's departing trail,
But cloud and shimmering lake take up the tale.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

E. A., Decatur, Ill. Why was the punishment of the guest who came without a wedding garment so severe?

The passage referred to in Matt. 22 : 11 has caused much discussion. The parable indicates an Oriental custom by which a king or other dignitary provides the garments for his guests at high functions, such as weddings. Wardrobes filled with many thousand garments formed part of the wealth of every Eastern prince, and he took pride in bringing them out for use on state occasions. When a guest refused to accept one of these garments, but insisted on appearing at the feast in his own clothes—which of necessity could not be compared in splendor and costliness to those furnished by a princely host—he was regarded as guilty of an offense to his host for which no punishment was too severe, as ingratitude and presumption are always severely punishable. This was the case with the guest at our Lord's wedding feast in the parable. He who refuses to don the robe of righteousness, so freely offered, unadorned with which any one is offensive to the Bridegroom, must pay the penalty of being ordered out of the warmth and comfort of the banquet hall into the cold night and outside darkness.

Mrs. J. T., Milwaukee, Wis. Fasting being no part of the Mosaic injunction, how did it come to be common custom among the Jews?

The only probable reference to fasting in the Mosaic law is in Lev. 23 : 27, 29—"On the tenth day of this seventh month, ye shall afflict your souls." It can be argued that this affliction of the soul must have been accompanied with fasting, because people in trouble are abstemious in food. In Judges 20 : 26 we find the earliest direct Biblical reference to fasting. Examination of other passages in the Old Testament bearing upon it leaves the impression that it was a national and not a religious rite, and therefore one having relation to temporal troubles, and not to those of the spirit and soul. The Jews in the captivity observed annual fasts, and later weekly fasts were initiated. The rabbis developed fasting into a religious ordinance, largely for the purpose of putting men under certain set restraints. New Testament teachings do not require fasting. If any one desires to fast, he may do so; but when he does, he is to observe Christ's injunction not to fast as the hypocrites of sad countenance do, or as required of one in bondage, but willingly and purely, to the glory of God. (Matt. 6 : 16.)

Reader, New York City. Please explain Matt. 8 : 4.

The difficulty in this passage lies in the problem how, if leprosy be an incurable disease, any one could arrange for a certificate of cure. The difficulty is removed, however, by the knowledge that not all forms of leprosy were incurable, and that every leprosy had its curable stage. That certain kinds were curable is indicated by the setting forth of the process to be gone through by a known leper professing to have been cured. In Lev. 16 this is given in detail. The necessity for the priestly certificate recommended by Jesus lay in the fact that without it the leper could not be restored to the temple, or even to synagogue worship.

Student of the Bible. Was it right for Jesus to pluck corn as he went through the field?

In reading the passage in Matt. 12 : 1, we must bear in mind the limitations set forth in Deut. 23 : 25: "When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbor, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbor's standing corn." It was the custom for travelers in the East to help themselves to an ear or so of corn, if caught unawares on a journey, and in need of some little sustenance to appease a gnawing hunger. To the present day, the natives pluck ears of wheat, and after rubbing them between their hands eat the grain unroasted as did the apostles. The custom cannot do much damage to the farmers' crops, since travel is very light and the plucking of fruit negligible. We must also remember that the Jews consider the land the Lord's and the produce his; therefore the fruit should be at the command of any of his people who might find themselves in sudden need. The disciples and Jesus, according to their conception, took not the grower's but Jehovah's corn.

E. R., Tallahassee, Fla. Evil associations will corrupt and ultimately destroy the fairest nature. A friend showed us the other day a beautiful rose, perfect to look upon, which he had plucked a few moments before, while it was still wet with dew. "A fine flower," he said, "but spoiled. Look." And he pushed aside the leaves, revealing a bug which had been feeding on the rose's heart!

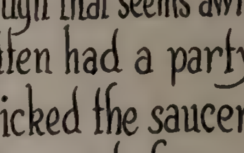
B. F., Denver, Colo. The whole ministry of the world's Saviour was a ministry of love, of persuasion to forgiveness, of kindness, of reconciliation. He taught recognition of and obedience to the state, but he also taught that his followers were members of a kingdom which is not of this world. He rebuked the resort to force for the advancement of this spiritual kingdom. The church can do much in the present emergency, however, to soften the horrors of war. It can help the sick and wounded, care for the destitute and homeless, who are assuredly great sufferers, and it can give the Gospel to all. It can stimulate the nation to deeds of self-denial and of world-wide helpfulness which will be the means of saving multitudes. In this great field of service, the church can perform its task with zeal and assurance.

H. H., Cedar Springs, Mo. "Militarism" is where a state or nation gives undue prominence to military training and military glory, where the military spirit is incessantly cultivated, and where government relies on military force, and makes all other enterprises subservient to the maintenance of a great standing army. "Autocracy" describes a government in which one man is absolute master, exercising unrestricted power and undisputed authority, and acknowledging no responsibility.

FIVE O'CLOCK TEA

Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

Betty, kitten-cat and me,
We had fun terday!
We played ladies havin' tea.
Wif a table an' a tray;
We had tea th' very way
'At real mammas do....
Only Betty ate, an' me,
An', though that seems awful mean,
Kitten had a party, too;
For she licked the saucers clean
When we bofe were frough!



O. T. E., Tropic, Fla. You may be quite right. The passage is open to either interpretation.

X. Y. Z., Iowa. The passage in II Cor. 6 : 14 is very clear on the subject of the union of belief and unbelief. Read also in the same connection I Cor. 7 : 14.

C. T., Vineland, N. J. Dreamland is a realm that defies investigation. No satisfactory explanation of the phenomena of sleep has yet been advanced, although many have attempted it. Some have held that dreams are the shadow of events to come; others that they are the result of the fantasies of the mind in recalling past events, which in our waking moments we may have forgotten. We claim no ability to interpret dreams. Judging from your letter, you must have received, perhaps unconsciously, some very strong impressions concerning the war, which were revived in sleep, when the imaginative faculties have free play.

Mrs. A. W. K., Williams, Calif. The passage you have in mind is Ezek. 39 : 11, 12, 13.

F. R., Scranton, Pa. What is the earliest recorded date of the use of iron?

The best informed sources give the period from 2000 to 2500 B.C. as marking the transition from bronze to iron. Professor J. B. Willson, in a recent article in the Princeton Theological Review, presents pretty nearly all of the available evidence on the subject. The "iron age" seems to have begun earliest in Asia Minor, where iron was used for various purposes as early as 2500 B.C. The people of Nippur used iron knives and arrowheads as early as 2000 B.C., and iron is claimed to have been in use in Babylon five centuries earlier. India is known to have had iron in abundance in 1500 B.C., and the Chinese "Annals" mention it as having been in use there in 2940 B.C., or nearly 5,000 years ago.

Mrs. P. F. K., Union Hill, N. J. (1) The best service you can render to persons of another faith is to give them an attractive example of Christianity in your own life and conduct. It would be well to make them acquainted with the minister of the church to which you belong and also to bring them into contact with some of your Christian friends. (2) God's mercy is boundless. It can save and has saved even at the eleventh hour. But why should any one place his soul's eternal welfare in jeopardy by neglecting, day by day and year by year, any of the steps that are necessary? He may never have another opportunity to carry out his good intentions; why should he not do it now, and thus testify to all men that he accepts Jesus Christ as Saviour? (See Matt. 10 : 32, 33.)

W. L. J., Buffalo, N. Y., writes to the Mail-Bag criticizing the method of dealing with the collection in churches. His letter says: "See what they do over the money taken up in the churches, having the same taken to the farther end of the church, and then having the money paraded up through the aisle, the sound of the organ at the time filling the whole church, the worship of God suspended, the minister and whole congregation waiting, and then the minister taking the money and making a prayer or having a praise service over the money, or both: and this, when our Lord has told us and warned us how not to do our alms. Is there any secrecy in this parade and show over the money?" It is true that in certain churches the collection is made somewhat of a function, in some cases rather too much so. There are other churches which, with better judgment, make the collection a mere incident and avoid any parade or ostentation.

Reader, Florida. In view of the awful war tragedy, could not a proclamation come from our President, asking our people to observe a day of prayer and of humiliation for our sins, individually, socially and nationally? See how long we let the liquor traffic drag its slimy length over our fair nation! Notice our loose divorce laws, contrary to God's Word, our violation of the Sabbath, the oppression of labor on the part of capital, and the erection of heathen temples in a Christian land! We need to humiliate ourselves, and to repent, and pray to be spared the scourging that may come in the train of war. It is not yet too late. He who hath all power in heaven and on earth can overturn and change conditions. How fine, in view of all this, if the President would flash a solemn proclamation asking the nation to observe a day in a manner pleasing to the God of nations, on our knees, asking the Lord to spare us and direct our destiny in his wise, beneficent, and blessed way!

The suggestion of the writer of the foregoing letter is a timely one. It is one of many of similar purport that are reaching us. A proclamation such as he indicates may come later, and will doubtless be generously observed. Meanwhile, the request has been laid before the Christian Herald Prayer League, which will make it a subject of supplication.

J. J. C., Ashland, Ohio. Do you know of any church denomination that believes and puts in practice the doctrines of justice as taught in Matthew, chapters 5, 6 and 7?

Christian churches teach, or are supposed to teach, all of Christ's doctrines and hold his teachings and sayings as models of action and word. But we are only human, and the best of us can but try to be Christlike. We cannot attain fully here below; but if trying be counted, then there are many thousands of earnest Christians whose highest endeavor is to be Christlike in word and deed. If the denominations hold to the essential truths and proclaim them, what need is there for us to judge them?

Mrs. S. K. W., Naches, Wash. Are religion and patriotism really one?

Religion and patriotism are not one. The one is spiritual, the other material. There is no relation between them except that both relate to human brotherhood, but from opposite view-points and feelings. Patriotism is devotion to a part of mankind, in contradistinction to the rest; while religion is devotion to all mankind. Patriotism is love of our particular part of the world, in our own time; but religion is a love for the whole world and all beyond, for all time.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AN ILLUSTRATED NEWS WEEKLY FOR THE HOME

Russia Shaken by Riots and Defeats

RIOTING at her capital and rout of her armies at the front have cast republican Russia back into a state of chaos, from which only an absolute dictatorship, it is decided, can rescue the nation.

War Minister Kerensky has been made premier and vested with extraordinary powers.

"The fateful hour has struck. The German Emperor's armies have broken the front of the national revolutionary army. This terrible operation has been facilitated by the criminal levity and blind fanaticism of some and the treachery of others." This was the startling keynote of the Provisional Government's announcement of the defeats, mutiny and demoralization of the Russian army in Galicia.

This disaster had come upon Russia, already disheartened by a week of rioting in Petrograd, dissension throughout the country and the resignation of Premier Lvoff and two other members of the ministry.

But the government of the new republic was so far from being fatally shaken by the increased ill-fortune that it declared in this same proclamation that it "strongly believes the crisis will lead to recovery, not death." Strong in that belief, the government is ready to act with the energy and resolution the exceptional circumstances demand. The government regards as its "first and capital task the application of its whole strength to the struggle against the foreign foe and to the defense of the new governmental régime against every anarchical and counter-revolutionary attempt, without hesitating to take the most rigorous measures in its power." At the same time the government reiterates that "not a drop of blood of a Russian soldier shall be shed for any foreign end, as already proclaimed to the whole world."

The most important paragraph in this proclamation, because of its far-reaching significance and possibilities, is this:

"In accordance with the declaration of May 19, the government intends to summon the Allies to a conference in August to decide upon a general definition of the Allies' foreign policy and to coordinate their actions with regard to the application of the principles proclaimed by the Russian revolution. At this conference Russia will be represented, in addition to diplomats, by representatives of the Russian democracy."

UNLIMITED powers for the reestablishment of public order, both at the front and at home, were voted to the government of Premier Kerensky by the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates and the Council of Delegates of the Peasants of All Russia, at a joint sitting. The cabinet is designated as "the Government of National Safety." The powers granted to Kerensky are those of a dictator. Thus armed, he has announced that he is prepared, if necessary, to "beat Russia into unity with blood and iron."

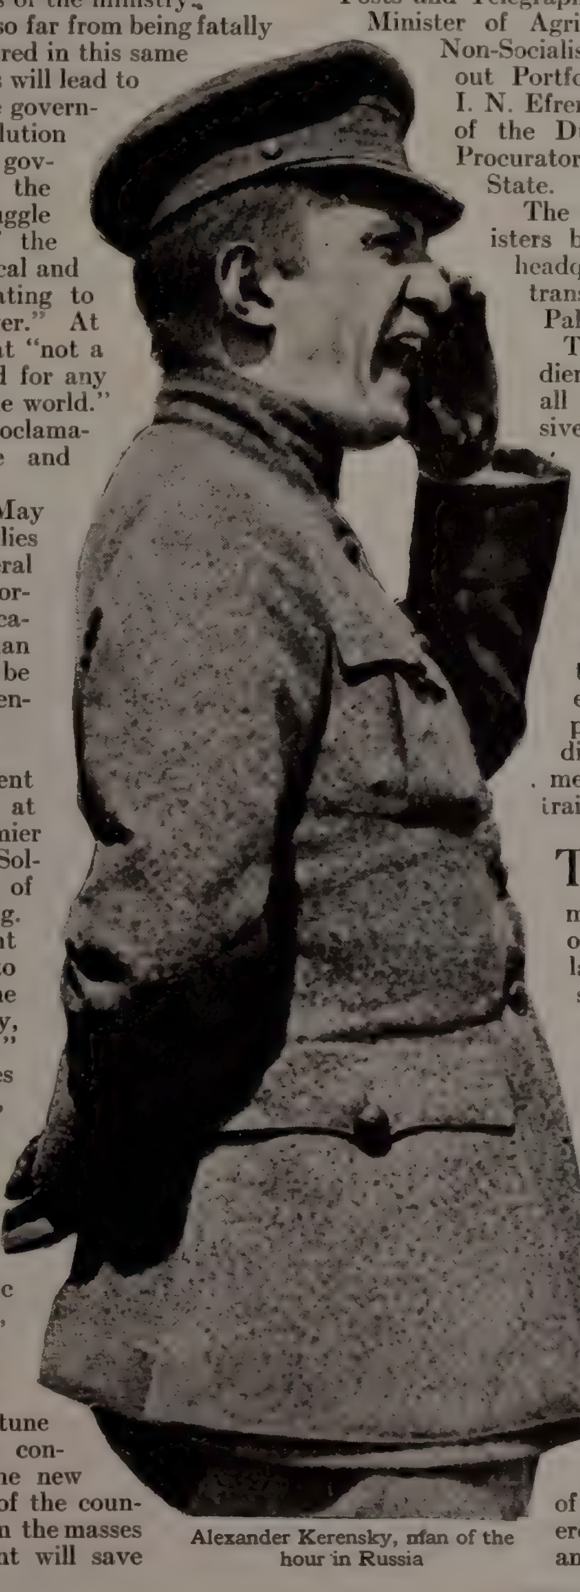
"Relying upon the confidence of the masses and the army," Kerensky said in an interview, "the government will save Russia and Russian unity by blood and iron, if argument and reason, honor and conscience, are not sufficient. The first problem of the present moment, which is exceptionally heroic, is the concentration and unison of power. The desertion of the Constitutional Democratic members of the Prince Lvoff government, which desertion is the cause of the recent revolt, shows how strong are the centrifugal forces and how small is the sum of our political consciousness. But I am convinced the misfortune through which we are going will awaken the conscience and sense of duty in our nation. The new government's fundamental task is the defense of the country from ruin and anarchy. In this we rely upon the masses of the people and the army. My government will save Russia, and if its motive of reason, honor, and conscience prove insufficient, it will beat her into unity with blood and iron."

Regarding conditions on the front, Premier Kerensky said: "The position of our army is serious, requiring heroic measures. But we must not despair. The old régime and certain extremist elements brought much poison into the arms and body. Now the ulcer is cut, and as the state organism is healthier, I am convinced we shall avoid amputation. My new government is resolved to increase and to confirm the conquests of the revolution and resolutely to put an end to the work of the madmen and traitors who would destroy my fatherland."

Kerensky himself has written a constitution to his liking. His cabinet is a coalition, limited to ten members—five Socialists and five non-Socialists—as follows: Socialists: Alexander Kerensky, Minister President and Minister of War and Marine; M. Tseretelli, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs; M. Skobeleff, Minister of Labor; M. Tchernoff, Minister of Agriculture; M. Pieschehonoff, Minister of Supplies. Non-Socialists: N. V. Nebrasoff, Vice-Minister President without Portfolio; M. Terestchenko, Minister of Foreign Affairs; I. N. Efremoff, Minister of Justice (M. Efremoff is a member of the Duma's Temporary Committee); Nicholas Lvoff, Procurator of the Holy Synod; M. Godneff, Controller of State.

The other offices of state will be directed not by ministers but by unpolitical directors of departments. The headquarters of the Provisional Government has been transferred from the Marinsky Palace to the Winter Palace.

There are indications that the Workmen's and Soldiers' Council, after the events of the past week and all circumstances connected therewith, are apprehensive of a counter-revolution. The Central Committee has issued a manifesto calling local organizations of the revolutionary democracy and army to be ready at any moment to rally round their political centers, namely, the Councils of the Workmen and Soldiers. "Enough of words," says a proclamation. "The time has come to act without hesitation. We have acknowledged the Provisional Government. With the government lies the salvation of the revolution. We have acknowledged its unlimited authority and its unlimited power. Its commands must be law. All those who disobey the commands of the Provisional Government in battle will be regarded as traitors. Toward traitors and cowards no mercy will be shown."



Alexander Kerensky, man of the hour in Russia

THE retreat of the Russians in Eastern Galicia was a widespread, headlong rout. The Germans have been taking thousands upon thousands of prisoners, hundreds of guns, and millions of dollars' worth of war supplies. Stanislau, the great stronghold southeast of Lemberg, has been evacuated by the Russians. The Germans have crossed the Sereth River, at Tarnopol, and that great ammunition depot and army base is a mass of ruins. The Russians have fled on a 165-mile front from the Sereth to the wooded Carpathians. South of the Dniester they are retiring eastward. Apparently nothing could check the disorderly flight of the mutinous army. Scores of officers were shot by their own men as they sought to halt the retreat. Petrograd officially states that the Russian troops simply refused to fight and ignored the commands of their officers. Vast war supplies, cannon of all caliber, foodstuffs and munitions are abandoned by the Russians as they run. Their lines of communication have been severed.

There are exceptions in the situation. "Battalions of death" on all fronts battled desperately and suffered unheard-of losses in an effort to instil courage and discipline into the fleeing masses. On several fronts Russian divisions have taken the offensive, only to be deserted in the hour of triumph by their comrades and shot to pieces by the pressing Teutons. Two attempted offensives by the Russians on both ends of the line from the Baltic to the Black Sea were signally put down. In close formation the Muscovites were hurled five times against the Germans southeast of Dvinsk, but the six divisions were cut to pieces with hurricane fire and the bayonet. At the same time eight divisions were driven forward south of Smorgon. "Only remnants of the regiments returned," says an official report. Another attempted offensive in conjunction with the Rumanians was made south of the Dniester. This also was checked by the Teutons. All Russian attacks along the Bystritsa and between the Trotus and Putna valleys failed, ending in rout.

Russian troops at the front being reviewed by Kerensky just before the beginning of the great offensive which ended in a greater defeat

The German War Office reports that the booty and number of prisoners taken by the Teutons has not been counted, it is so great.

There was more than desertion and mutiny, more even than demoralization, in the Russian army; there are many known instances of peace agreements with the Germans. Kerensky reported that he encountered a regiment on the Galician front that, despite his urgings and appeals, deliberately laid down its arms because it had already concluded a written peace with von Hindenburg on the basis of no annexations or indemnities. "When I asked the soldiers what was to be done about it," Kerensky declared, "they replied, 'That is your own business. So far as we are concerned, we are through. We have concluded peace with the enemy.' " This is typical of the common Russian idea of republicanism. Regiments formally debated the wisdom of the commands of the officers and in most cases voted not to obey them.

FAVORABLE responses are said to have been given to the Russian government by the governments of Great Britain and France to the proposal for a conference of the Allied nations in August to define the war aims and the foreign policies of the Allies. It is said in Russian circles in Washington that while the United States and Italy have not been asked to participate, it is probable they will be invited to send representatives. The conference has not yet been formally called, but will be called at an early date, as Russia is determined that the restatement of the war aims of the Allies shall take place, so that every Russian soldier "may know what he is fighting for." Such a declaration of aims, it is asserted, is a political necessity in Russia, the internal situation of that country requiring a renunciation of imperialistic designs. If the United States participates in the conference, a definition of President Wilson's statement relating to the status quo ante, and an outline of the program he had in mind when he addressed the Russian government in June, may be asked. It is problematical whether the Entente's program will be indorsed by Russia, but it is not doubted in Washington that Russia sympathizes with the aspiration of France to recover her two lost provinces and to collect from Germany damages for the destructive work of the German armies in occupied parts of French territory. Great Britain, on the other hand, is not expected to disclaim an intention of keeping captured German colonies in Africa; but it is not known how Russia will view this form of annexation.

The United States has emphasized its faith in the Russian Government by extending it a further credit of $75,000,000. This is the second Russian credit, the first, for $100,000,000, having been established soon after the United States entered the war. It is understood that most of the $100,000,000 already has been spent for railroad supplies, and that much of the $75,000,000 will be used in the same manner.

Sweet Sleep and Pleasant Dreams

By REV. DAVID J. BURRELL, D.D.

THE author of Don Quixote makes his whimsical hero say "Blessings light on him who first invented sleep! It covers a man all over, him and his thoughts, like a cloak. It is meat for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, heat for the cold, and cold for those oppressed by the heat; in short, it is money that buys everything, it is balance and weight that makes the shepherd equal to the king and the fool to the philosopher. Blessings on him who invented it!"

But sleep is not an invention, any more than it is a mere "ordinance of nature," as some say. It is indeed an ordinance of nature; but there is no ordinance without an Ordainer. Wherefore let us "look through nature up to nature's God," and say reverently and gratefully, "The Lord be praised for it."

In the philosophy of David sleep is designated as a divine gift: "For so he giveth his beloved sleep." Nowhere is the divine goodness more manifest than in the kindly hand thus laid upon the weary brow at close of day. It is here, if anywhere, that we behold the mother side of God. At the close of day he draws the curtains, puts out the glaring sunlight, kindles the mild stars, and lulls into silence the turbulence of his children. The workshop is closed; the weary housewife folds her hands; the streets are silent save for belated workmen and noisy brawlers. Birds are in their nests, sheep in their folds, oxen in their stalls. "The general pulse of life stands still and nature makes a pause." The world runs down at nightfall, like a clock, and must needs be wound up again. Otherwise it would revolve on blazing axles. Wherefore let us thank God for sleep.

In the Pilgrim's Progress it is related that, when Christian came to the Palace Beautiful, he was entertained for the night in a "chamber called Peace, whose window opened toward the sunrising." He slept calmly until the morning.

It was in this chamber called Peace that David slept. He had a threefold peace.

To begin with, he was at peace with God, and therefore he had nothing to fear. It is said that when Alexander was asked how he could sleep so calmly amid the perils that surrounded him, he answered, "Parmenio watches." How much more confidently could David rest in the divine watch-care, since God "neither slumbers nor sleeps."

He was also at peace with the world. No real or fancied wrongs disturbed him. There is nothing like an old grudge to break the night's repose. Our worst nightmares are due to envies and jealousies. On the other hand there is no sweeter lullaby than this, "I owe no man anything but to love him."

And furthermore David was at peace with himself, because he had brought his life into harmony with the plans of God. Blessed is the man who can thus lie down in the chamber of Peace. If he cares for a smooth bed, let faith provide it. If he cares for a soft pillow, he shall find it in the assurance of salvation. The night before Ridley was burned at the stake, his brother came to keep the death watch with him; to whom he said "Go your way, dear brother; I need you not. I am sleepy, I shall rest comfortably. I know that I die tomorrow; but I am not afraid. I have put my sins down at the cross of my Saviour; and I know that he has borne them in his own body on the tree. I go thus in calm assurance to the better country. Fear not for me! I shall rest like an infant on its mother's bosom. Good night, dear brother; go thy way." In the morning, when the executioner came, he found him asleep. Why should not a man rest calmly when he knows that all is well with him?

"SWEET sleep and pleasant dreams!" The words carry me back to the old home. The best of mothers—long gone to her heavenly rest—is leading me up the stairway with a candle in her hand. She kneels beside me, and I am saying again "the bairnies' prayer;" the prayer that many of you remember in its old Scotch version:

"When I lie doon this nicht to sleep,
I gie my soul to Christ to keep;
I wake a noo, I wake a never,
I gie my soul to Christ forever."

The dear hands have tucked me in. The loving voice has said, "Good night and pleasant dreams." Now she is gone; and the candle has gone with her. It is dark, and everybody knows how children are afraid of the dark; but this is the chamber called Peace, with its window open toward the break of day.

The City of Emancipated Womanhood

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

FIVE HUNDRED miles up the Yangtse Kiang lies Kiukiang, the city of emancipated womanhood. The leader of them all and the source of inspiration to thousands is an unmarried woman, who, with cheeks that glow with youthful color and eyes that twinkle with vivacity and a keen sense of humor, describes herself as an "old maid." Miss Gertrude Howe, the sweet-faced "old maid" of Nanchang, has given to Christian work two of the most talented women in the medical profession, and two of the busiest. Dr. Mary Stone and Dr. Ida Kahn are a credit to her and a credit to Christian service.

"There is nothing nicer than the smile of a Chinese girl"

